PREFATORY NOTE

THE twenty-eight plays of this collection have been chosen primarily for their merit as masterpieces of English drama, and secondarily to represent the leading Elizabethan playwrights and the main currents of drama in Shakespeare's time and just after. The selection has been made without regard to the contents of similar anthologies; but it is a pleasant duty to acknowledge that the first of these, President Neilson's, remains, in the matter of selection, a monument to his taste and judgment.

Almost every play in the present volume, even the crude but powerful Spanish Tragedy, is in its way a masterpiece. Endymion is an exception; in none of his plays does Lyly manifest either a genuine vis comica, or that indispensable possession of the great serious dramatist, profound sympathy with the inner life of sensitive men and women and with its occasional revelation, under the pressure of circumstance, in the manifestations of human passion. But the court plays must be illustrated; and, superficial as Lyly is, he was one of Shakespeare's teachers. Peele on the other hand was not, and has been omitted without much regret. The Old Wife's Tale has a few charming passages, but most of it is sad stuff; David and Bethsabe opens with one of the age's most amazing bursts of lyrical genius, and then turns into an inferior history play, less dramatic than its source. Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay is at least sustained; and, if not quite a masterpiece, it is thoroughly delightful and shows Greene at his best. Dr. Faustus and The Jew of Malta have come down to us in forms worse than the mutilated statues of antiquity, for they have been debased by the adapter's hand. Yet, mangled as they are, they are mangled masterpieces.

Marlowe, Jonson, and the Beaumont-Fletcher collaboration are illustrated by four plays each; the last two because, except for Webster's masterpiece, their works are nearest Shakespeare's in excellence. And Marlowe's development as a dramatist is so illuminating for the student of Shakespeare's that it seems desirable to afford copious materials for tracing it. Interesting as is Jonson's Sejanus, his mastery was in comedy. Every Man in His Humor is required by historical considerations, and it seems better to give, in addition to that play, all three of the great comedies than to omit one for the sake of a second-rate tragedy. Dekker is perhaps unduly favored. The Shoemakers' Holiday could not be left out, though it is inferior, as a serious work of art, to The Honest Whore; and one part of that strangely beautiful drama is not enough. Part II is the masterpiece, but its power would be impaired without Part I. Toward the end of our period comedy becomes more significant than tragedy, both for its superior vitality, and for its greater influence on the drama of the Restoration and the eighteenth century. The selections from Massinger and Shirley have been made in accordance with this fact. The Editor thought of including less familiar examples of the lighter vein of Fletcher and of Middleton, but was forced to recognize that The Wild-Goose Chase and A Trick to Catch the Old One, while not indisputably the best of their authors' comedies, are clearly best for the purposes this volume is designed to serve.

These are, of course, chiefly to introduce university students and general readers to the riches of the non-Shakespearean drama of the English Renaissance. Yet care has been taken to make the texts as accurate as possible. For only four of these, precisely specified in the introductory notes, has the Editor been obliged to rely on reprints; and even such exceptions to the general rule of first-hand collation of the old editions have been carefully cross-checked, since for each of these four plays at least two scholarly reprints were available. In several cases (chiefly among the works of those dramatists who have not appeared in collected editions for half a century or more) the present texts, granted their "modernization", probably constitute the closest approximation to the authors' original MSS ever printed (under this category Honest Whore is perhaps the most interesting example); in many others they are considerably more faithful to the earliest editions than the texts of similar undertakings; for errors arising from reliance on derivative texts, and the tampering, whether or not acknowledged, by the nineteenth-century editors, have been incorporated in anthologies to a surprising extent, the more surprising because so often silently.

Departures from the basic texts are here enclosed in square brackets. It has not been thought necessary to record such insignificant changes as "re-enter" for "enter", nor the expansion of abbreviations, nor inconsequential variations in the spelling of proper names and in speech-tags, nor altered word-order in stage directions (though in these a special effort has been made to retain the flavor of the Elizabethan theatre), nor the correction of turned letters and similarly obvious printer's blunders. Rearrangement of lines of verse has not always been indicated, nor arrangement of (printed) prose as verse, etc. It is often quite impossible to say that a given passage is one or the other. It would, however, be folly to hope that the pains taken in collation and proof-reading have eliminated error; the Editor will be grateful for corrections from users of the book. No attempt has been made to supply a complete apparatus of variant readings, but the most suggestive are given. Nor have the old texts been violated in order to wrench them into conformity with pedantic conceptions of metrical regularity. Much of the beauty of spoken blank verse depends upon slight deviations from the norm. Though editors have professed the contrary, the practice has been far too general of forcing lines into the mold of strict regularity by indicating the suppression of vowels which were probably slurred or even pronounced distinctly but rapidly on the stage, and of giving too little heed to the metrical value of dramatic pauses by insisting on the pronunciation of syllables that were probably elided. The evidence afforded by the original editions is by no means conclusive on these matters; but it is about all the evidence we have, and the Editor has followed it.

The present texts, then, are notably conservative, save in two particulars: scholars would rather read an exact reprint of an original quarto, with all variants footnoted; but it seems inadvisable to risk distracting the beginner from the plays as plays and as literature by sticking to archaic spelling and punctuation. With the same end in view, and at the cost of making the book considerably larger, a legible type (nine-point Modern Number 8 Monotype on ten-point body) has been used. The Editor hopes that the owner of this book will enjoy it and that, continuing his reading far beyond it, he will permanently join the good company of those who have found delight in these robust old plays.

The Editor has rejected the theory that annotation is necessarily a nuisance and assumed that such active and inquiring minds as choose to read this book will enjoy the plays more if they understand the meaning of the words the dramatists composed them in. It is patently impossible, however, to note within the limits of an anthology that "still" means "always" and that "friend" often means "lover", every time the words occur; such expressions are glossed scatteringly. The same principle has been adopted in noticing unfamiliar accentuation.

It remains to acknowledge the receipt of many courtesies, which have facilitated the labors of collation and annotation, from the staffs of the Harvard College Library, the Boston Public Library, the Library of Congress, and the Library of The Johns Hopkins University; from the Elizabethan Club of Yale University; and from the Supervisor of Research and his assistants at the Folger Shakespeare Library. To the last of these institutions special thanks is due for permission to reproduce its portrait of Jonson; and, as well as to several of the libraries already mentioned, the Editor is indebted for various favors (especially for the facsimiles of the old title pages) to the British Museum, the Bodleian Library, and the Huntington Library. For the constant coöperation of his publishers the Editor is particularly grateful. The format was designed by Arthur F. Williams of their staff. The coat of arms on the cover was redrawn from a copy of the Gospels bound for Queen Elizabeth and now in the British Museum. The ornaments on the shelf-back are details (cuirasses) from the elaborate design of which the coat of arms is the central feature.

So many critical, historical, and lexicographical works have been levied on that to list them is out of the question. Excellent bibliographies for this field are now so numerous and so accessible that it seems inadvisable to sacrifice precious space by including another. Yet special mention ought to be made of the help received from E. K. Chambers's Elizabethan Stage, W. W. Greg's List of English Plays, Skeat and Mayhew's Glossary of Tudor and Stuart Words, and, most constantly, the New English Dictionary. The annotation has been strengthened at a number of points by several of the Editor's colleagues at The Johns Hopkins, who have given him the benefit of their learning in a wide variety of fields. With characteristic liberality the Editor's master, George Lyman Kittredge, entered into a correspondence which continued for several months on certain problems of special difficulty. To Professor Kittredge's incomparable understanding of words and their ways in Elizabethan speech is due the illumination of a number of dark passages which all previous commentators had ignored, given up, or left in confusion worse confounded. Professor Fred N. Robinson kindly lent his aid in the handling of several Gaelic expressions. To the generosity and accuracy of Dr. W. Lee Ustick the Editor is under particular obligations, for the checking of many readings in copies of the early editions which were temporarily out of his reach. These acknowledgments would be incomplete without an allusion to prentice years under Professor John Tucker Murray, as his assistant in his course on these dramatists. The most general indebtedness, however, is to the noble army of Elizabethan play editors, both the living and the slain, to whom salute and thanks.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

THE production of Tamburlaine, Part I, probably in 1587-88, definitely inaugurated the earlier of the two great ages of British drama. Never before had first-rate genius been devoted to the making of an English play. When Shakespeare came to London, a few years later, he found a highly imaginative drama, bold and passionate, and couched in a ringing blank verse, in possession of the boards. In his tragedies and histories he applied himself to perfecting what Marlowe had begun.

Though a university man, Marlowe succeeded in freeing his work from the smell of the lamp which spoils most tragedies of the 1580's. Taking his theme from the past, he swings it straight into the main current of the Renaissance; Tamburlaine personifies and voices its boundless aspiration. In fact, the form of the play suffers from the author's preoccupation with his hero; Marlowe's later works are better dramas. Outwardly, Tamburlaine is a ten-act history play; essentially, it is a soaring piece of almost epical poetry, often wildly extravagant, but adorned with moments of dazzling lyric beauty.<sup>1</sup> In Part II the hero extends his conquests, though he is somewhat shaken by the loss of Zenocrate and the cowardice of one of their sons. At last, glutted with blood, intoxicated with success, and broken in health, he madly orders an assault on the powers of Heaven. But now his armies are helpless; he is beaten at last; Death is the final victor.

Marlowe read widely for his materials; in Tamburlaine he is something of the scholar, as well as poet. His chief sources are Pedro Mexía's Silva de Varia Lección and Petrus Perondinus' Magni Tamerlanis Scytharum Imperatoris Vita. But there are many others, both geographic and historical, as Miss Ethel Seaton has shown (see introduction to Miss Ellis-Fermor's edition for references and summaries). Marlowe's great contribution is his crediting the brutal conqueror with the "undeviating pursuit of a vision"; at least this is true of Part I, though in the sequel there is more recognition of the horrible futility of what the hero has done.

The gigantic Edward Alleyn was famous in the title rôle, but little is known of the early stage history of the play. It was being acted with great success by the Admiral's Men in 1594 and 1595, and there are many literary allusions up to the closing of the theatres in 1642. The standard editions of Marlowe's works are those of Tucker Brooke (1910), and R. H. Case as general editor (1930- ). Tamburlaine was edited for the latter by Miss U. M. Ellis-Fermor (1930). Albrecht Wagner published an edition in 1885. Part I originally appeared, in octavo, in 1590 (reprinted 1593?, 1597, 1605); on that text, as given by Brooke and Miss Ellis-Fermor, the present edition is based. None of the old editions ascribes the play to Marlowe, but his authorship is certain both from internal evidence and in the light of Thomas Heywood's plain statement in a prologue (1633) to The Jew of Malta.

<sup>1</sup> It may seem to a reader new to Marlowe that the opening lines do not bear out this statement; if so, he is advised to whet his appetite by turning to I, ii, 87, ff., or V, ii, 72, ff.

THE PROLOGUE

FROM jiggling veins of rhyming mother wits,
And such conceits as clownage keeps in pay,
We'll lead you to the stately tent of war,
Where you shall hear the Scythian Tamburlaine
Threat'ning the world with high astounding terms,
And scourging kingdoms with his conquering sword.
View but his picture in this tragic glass,
And then applaud his fortunes as you please.

ACT I — SCENE I<sup>3</sup>

Enter MYCETES, COSROE, MEANDER, THERIDAMAS, ORTYGIUS, CENEUS, [MENAPHON,] with others.

MYC. Brother Cosroe, I find myself aggriev'd, et insufficient to express the same,
for it requires a great and thund'ring speech.
Good Brother, tell the cause unto my lords;
I know you have a better wit than I.

<sup>1</sup> Some of these names are invented, some historical though unrelated to Tamburlaine, and some (like Bajazeth) both historical and related.

Cos. Unhappy Persia, that in former age
Hast been the seat of mighty conquerors,
That, in their prowess and their policies,
Have triumph'd over Afric and the bounds
Of Europe,<sup>4</sup> where the sun dares scarce

10

For freezing meteors and congealed cold,
Now to be rul'd and governed by a man
At whose birthday Cynthia with Saturn
join'd,
And Jove, the Sun, and Mercury denied
To shed [their] <sup>5</sup> influence in his fickle brain.

<sup>5</sup> Emend. Dyce; old eds. his, which may possibly be right, referring to Jove, whose agents are the Sun and Mercury.

Now Turks and Tartars shake their swords at thee,

Meaning to mangle all thy provinces.

MYC. Brother, I see your meaning well enough,

And thorough your planets I perceive you think I am not wise enough to be a king ; 20

But I refer me to my noblemen,

That know my wit and can be witnesses.

I might command you to be slain for this ;

Meander, might I not ?

MEAND. Not for so small a fault, my sovereign Lord.

MYC. I mean it not, but yet I know I might ;

Yet live ; yea, live ; Mycetes wills it so. —

Meander, thou, my faithful counsellor,

Declare the cause of my conceived grief,

Which is, God knows, about that Tamburlaine, 30

That, like a fox in midst of harvest time,

Doth prey upon my flocks of passengers,

And, as I hear, doth mean to pull my plumes ;

Therefore 't is good and meet for to be wise.

MEAND. Oft have I heard your Majesty complain

Of Tamburlaine, that sturdy Scythian thief,

That robs your merchants of Persepolis

[Trading] <sup>6</sup> by land unto the Western Isles,

And in your confines with his lawless train

Daily commits incivil <sup>7</sup> outrages, 40

Hoping (misled by dreaming prophecies)

To reign in Asia, and with barbarous arms

To make himself the monarch of the East ;

But ere he march in Asia, or display

His vagrant ensign in the Persian fields,

Your Grace hath taken order by Theridamas,<sup>8</sup>

Charg'd with a thousand horse, to apprehend

And bring him captive to your Highness' throne.

MYC. Full true thou speak'st, and like thyself, my Lord,

Whom I may term a Damon for thy love. 50

Therefore 't is best, if so it like you all,

To send my thousand horse incontinent <sup>9</sup>

To apprehend that paltry Scythian.

How like you this, my honorable Lords ?

Is it not a kingly resolution ? <sup>10</sup>

<sup>10</sup> "Is it not" forms the first foot of this line; "resolution" has five syllables. The suffix is common as a dissyllable.

Cos. It cannot choose, because it comes from you.

MYC. Then hear thy charge, valiant Theridamas,

The chiefest captain of Mycetes' host,

The hope of Persia, and the very legs

Whereon our state doth lean as on a staff, 60

That holds us up, and foils our neighbor foes :

Thou shalt be leader of this thousand horse,

Whose foaming gall with rage and high disdain

Have sworn the death of wicked Tamburlaine.

Go frowning forth ; but come thou smiling home,

As did Sir Paris with the Grecian dame ;

Return with speed : time passeth swift away ;

Our life is frail, and we may die to-day.

THER. Before the moon renew her borrowed light,

Doubt not, my lord and gracious sovereign, 70

But Tamburlaine and that Tartarian rout

Shall either perish by our warlike hands,

Or plead for mercy at your Highness' feet.

MYC. Go, stout Theridamas ; thy words are swords,

And with thy looks thou conquerest all thy foes.

I long to see thee back return from thence,

That I may view these milk-white steeds of mine

All loaden with the heads of killed men,

And from their knees even to their hoofs below

Besmeared with blood that makes a dainty show. 80

THER. Then now, my Lord, I humbly take my leave.

MYC. Theridamas, farewell ten thousand times. — Exit [THERIDAMAS].

Ah, Menaphon, why stayest thou thus behind,

When other men press forward for renown ?

Go, Menaphon, go into Scythia ;

And foot by foot follow Theridamas.

Cos. Nay, pray you let him stay ; a greater [task] <sup>11</sup>

Fits Menaphon than warring with a thief.

Create him Prorex <sup>12</sup> of <sup>13</sup> Africa,

That he may win the Babylonians' hearts, 90

Which will revolt from Porsyian government

Unless they have a wiser king than you.

MYC. "Unless they have a wiser king than you !"

These are his words ; Meander, set them down.

Cos. And add this to them : that all Asia Lament to see the folly of their king.

MYC. Well, here I swear by this my royal seat —

COS. You may do well to kiss it then.

MYC. Emboss'd with silk as best beseems my state,

To be reveng'd for these contemptuous words.

Oh, where is duty and allegiance now? 101

Fled to the Caspian or the Ocean main?

What shall I call thee? Brother? No, a foe,

Monster of nature, shame unto thy stock,

That dar'st presume thy sovereign for to mock. —

Meander, come; I am abus'd, Meander.

[Exeunt all but] COSROE and MENAPHON.

MEN. How now, my Lord? What, mated <sup>14</sup> and amaz'd

To hear the King thus threaten like himself?

COS. Ah, Menaphon, I pass not for <sup>15</sup> his threats;

The plot is laid by Persian noblemen 110

And captains of the Median garrisons

To crown me Emperor of Asia;

But this it is that doth excruciate

The very substance of my vexed soul:

To see our neighbors, that were wont to quake

And tremble at the Persian monarch's name,

Now sits and laughs our regiment <sup>16</sup> to scorn;

And, that which might resolve <sup>17</sup> me into tears,

Men from the farthest equinoctial line

Have swarm'd in troops into the Eastern India, 120

Lading their ships with gold and precious stones,

And made their spoils from all our provinces.

MEN. This should entreat your Highness to rejoice,

Since Fortune gives you opportunity

To gain the title of a conqueror

By curing of this maimed empery.

Afric and Europe bordering on your land,

And continent to your dominions,

How easily may you, with a mighty host,

Pass into Græcia, <sup>18</sup> as did Cyrus once, 130

And cause them to withdraw their forces home,

Lest you subdue the pride of Christendom!

COS. But, Menaphon, what means this trumpet's sound?

MEN. Behold, my Lord, Ortygius and the rest

Bringing the crown to make you emperor.

ORTY. Magnificent and mighty Prince Cosroe,

We, in the name of other Persian states <sup>19</sup>

And commons of this mighty monarchy,

Present thee with th' imperial diadem.

CEN. The warlike soldiers and the gentlemen, 140

That heretofore have fill'd Persepolis

With Afric captains taken in the field,

Whose ransom made them march in coats of gold,

With costly jewels hanging at their ears,

And shining stones upon their lofty crests,

Now living idle in the walled towns,

Wanting both pay and martial discipline,

Begin in troops to threaten civil war,

And openly exclaim against the King.

Therefore, to stay all sudden mutinies, 150

We will invest your Highness emperor;

Whereat the soldiers will conceive more joy

Than did the Macedonians at the spoil

Of great Darius <sup>20</sup> and his wealthy host.

COS. Well, since I see the state of Persia droop

And languish in my brother's government,

I willingly receive th' imperial crown,

And vow to wear it for my country's good,

In spite of them shall malice my estate. 159

ORTY. And in assurance of desir'd success,

We here do crown thee monarch of the East,

Emperor of Asia and Persia, <sup>21</sup>

Great Lord of Media and Armenia;

Duke of Africa and Albania, <sup>22</sup>

Mesopotamia and of Parthia,

East India and the late-discovered isles;

Chief Lord of all the wide, vast Euxine sea,

And of the ever-raging Caspian lake.

Long live Cosroe, mighty emperor!

COS. And Jove may <sup>23</sup> never let me longer live 170

Than I may seek to gratify your love,

And cause the soldiers that thus honor me

To triumph over many provinces;

By whose desires of discipline in arms

I doubt not shortly but to reign sole king,

(Whither we presently will fly, my Lords)
To rest secure against my brother's force.

ORTY. We knew, my Lord, before we brought the crown,
Intending your investiture<sup>24</sup> so near 180
The residence of your despised brother,
The lords would not be too exasperate
To injure or suppress your worthy title;
Or, if they would, there are in readiness
Ten thousand horse to carry you from hence,
In spite of all suspected enemies.

Cos. I know it well, my Lord, and thank you all.

ORTY. Sound up the trumpets then. God save the King! Exeunt.

SCENE II<sup>25</sup>

[Enter] TAMBURLAINE leading ZENOCRATE;
TECHELLES, USUMCASANE, [AGYDAS, MAG-
NETES, and] other Lords, and Soldiers loaden with treasure.

TAMB. Come, lady, let not this appall your thoughts;
The jewels and the treasure we have ta'en
Shall be reserv'd, and you in better state
Than if you were arriv'd in Syria,
Even in the circle of your father's arms,
The mighty Soldan of Egyptia.

ZENO. Ah, shepherd, pity my distressed plight,
If, as thou seem'st, thou art so mean a man,
And seek not to enrich thy followers
By lawless rapine from a silly<sup>26</sup> maid, 10
Who, travelling with these Median lords
To Memphis, from my uncle's country of Media,
Where all my youth I have been governed,
Have pass'd the army of the mighty Turk,
Bearing his privy signet and his hand
To safe conduct us thorough Africa.

MAG. And since we have arriv'd in Scythia,<sup>27</sup>
Besides rich presents from the puissant Cham,
We have his Highness' letters to command
Aid and assistance if we stand in need. 20

TAMB. But now you see these letters and commands
Are countermanded by a greater man;
And through my provinces you must expect
Letters of conduct from my Mightiness,
If you intend to keep your treasure safe.

tween the upper Tigris and the Caspian.

But, since I love to live at liberty,
As easily may you get the Soldan's crown
As any prizes out of my precinct;
For they are friends that help to wean<sup>28</sup> my state

Till men and kingdoms help to strengthen it, [30
And must maintain my life exempt from servitude.

But, tell me, madam, is your Grace betroth'd?
ZENO. I am, my Lord, — for so you do import.

TAMB. I am a lord, for so my deeds shall prove,
And yet a shepherd by my parentage.

But, lady, this fair face and heavenly hue
Must grace his bed that conquers Asia,
And means to be a terror to the world,
Measuring the limits of his empery
By east and west, as Phœbus doth his course. —
Lie here, ye weeds that I disdain to wear; 41
This complete<sup>29</sup> armor and this curtle-axe<sup>30</sup>
Are adjuncts more befitting Tamburlaine.
And, madam, whatsoever you esteem
Of this success and loss unvalued,<sup>31</sup>
Both may invest you Empress of the East;
And these that seem but silly<sup>32</sup> country swains
May have the leading of so great an host
As with their weight shall make the mountains
quake,

Even as when windy exhalations 50
Fighting for passage, tilt within the earth.

TECH. As princely lions, when they rouse themselves,
Stretching their paws, and threat'ning herds of beasts,

So in his armor looketh Tamburlaine.
Methinks I see kings kneeling at his feet,
And he, with frowning brows and fiery looks,
Spurning their crowns from off their captive heads.

USUM. And making thee and me, Techelles,
kings,
That even to death will follow Tamburlaine.

TAMB. Nobly resolv'd, sweet friends and<sup>33</sup> followers. 60

These lords, perhaps, do scorn our estimates,
And think we prattle with distempered spirits;
But since they measure our deserts so mean,
That in conceit<sup>33</sup> bear empires on our spears,
Affecting thoughts coequal with the clouds,

They shall be kept our forced followers,
Till with their eyes they view us emperors.

ZENO. The gods, defenders of the innocent,
Will never prosper your intended drifts,
That thus oppress poor friendless passengers.
Therefore at least admit us liberty, 71
Even as thou hop'st to be eternized
By living Asia's mighty emperor.

AGYD. I hope our lady's treasure and our own

May serve for ransom to our liberties.
Return our mules and empty camels back,
That we may travel into Syria,
Where her betrothed lord, Alcidas, 80
Expects th' arrival of her Highness' person.

MAG. And wheresoever we repose ourselves, 80
We will report but well of Tamburlaine.

TAMB. Disdains Zenocrate to live with me?
Or you, my Lords, to be my followers?
Think you I weigh this treasure more than
you?

Not all the gold in India's wealthy arms
Shall buy the meanest soldier in my train. —
Zenocrate, lovelier than the love of Jove,
Brighter than is the silver Rhodope,<sup>34</sup>
Fairer than whitest snow on Scythian hills,
Thy person is more worth to Tamburlaine 90
Than the possession of the Persian crown, Which gracious stars have promis'd at my birth.

A hundred Tartars shall attend on thee,
Mounted on steeds swifter than Pegasus;
Thy garments shall be made of Median silk,
Enchas'd with precious jewels of mine own,
More rich and valurous<sup>35</sup> than Zenocrate's.
With milk-white harts upon an ivory sled,
Thou shalt be drawn amidst the frozen pools,
And scale the icy mountains' lofty tops, 100
Which with thy beauty will be soon resolv'd.<sup>36</sup>
My martial prizes with five hundred men,
Won on the fifty-headed Volga's waves,
Shall all we offer to Zenocrate,
And then myself to fair Zenocrate.

TECH. What now? in love?

TAMB. Techelles, women must be flattered;
But this is she with whom I am in love.

Enter a Soldier.

SOLD. News! news!

TAMB. How now, what's the matter? 110

SOLD. A thousand Persian horsemen are at hand,

Sent from the King to overcome us all.

TAMB. How now, my Lords of Egypt, and Zenocrate!

Now must your jewels be restor'd again,

And I that triumph'd so be overcome —

How say you, lordings, is not this your hope?

AGYD. We hope yourself will willingly restore them.

TAMB. Such hope, such fortune, have the thousand horse.

Soft ye, my Lords, and sweet Zenocrate.

You must be forced from me ere you go. 120

A thousand horsemen! We five hundred foot!

An odds too great for us to stand against.

But are they rich? And is their armor good?

SOLD. Their plumed helms are wrought with beaten gold,

Their swords enamell'd, and about their necks

Hangs massy chains of gold down to the waist,
In every part exceeding brave<sup>37</sup> and rich.

TAMB. Then shall we fight courageously with them,

Or look you I should play the orator?

TECH. No; cowards and faint-hearted run-aways 130

Look for orations when the foe is near.

Our swords shall play the orators for us.

USUM. Come, let us meet them at the mountain foot,<sup>38</sup>

And with a sudden and an hot alarm,

Drive all their horses headlong down the hill.

TECH. Come, let us march.

TAMB. Stay, Techelles, ask a parley first.

The Soldiers enter.

Open the mails,<sup>39</sup> yet guard the treasure sure;

Lay out our golden wedges to the view, 139

That their reflections may amaze the Persians;

And look we friendly on them when they come.

But if they offer word or violence,

We'll fight five hundred men at arms to one,

Before we part with our possession;

And 'gainst the general we will lift our swords,

And either lance his greedy thirsting throat,

Or take him prisoner, and his chain shall serve

For manacles, till he be ransom'd home.

TECH. I hear them come; shall we encounter them?

TAMB. Keep all your standings and not stir a foot ; 150
Myself will bide the danger of the brunt.

Enter THERIDAMAS with others.

THER. Where is this Scythian Tamburlaine?

TAMB. Whom seek'st thou, Persian? I am
Tamburlaine.

THER. [aside] Tamburlaine! A Scythian shepherd so embellished
With nature's pride and richest furniture,
His looks do menace Heaven and dare the gods!

His fiery eyes are fix'd upon the earth,
As if he now devis'd some stratagem,
Or meant to pierce Avernus' darksome vaults
To pull the triple-headed dog from hell. 160

TAMB. [aside] Noble and mild this Persian seems to be,
If outward habit judge the inward man.

TECH. [aside] His deep affections<sup>40</sup> make him passionate.

TAMB. [aside] With what a majesty he rears his looks! —

In thee, thou valiant man of Persia,
I see the folly of thy emperor.
Art thou but captain of a thousand horse,
That by characters<sup>41</sup> graven in thy brows,
And by thy martial face and stout aspect,
Deserv'st to have the leading of an host? 170
Forsake thy king, and do but join with me,
And we will triumph over all the world.
I hold the Fates bound fast in iron chains,
And with my hand turn Fortune's wheel about ;

And sooner shall the sun fall from his sphere<sup>42</sup>
Than Tamburlaine be slain or overcome.
Draw forth thy sword, thou mighty man at
arms,

Intending but to raze my charmed skin,
And Jove himself will stretch his hand from Heaven

To ward the blow and shield me safe from harm. 180

See how he rains down heaps of gold in showers,

As if he meant to give my soldiers pay ;
And as a sure and grounded argument
That I shall be the monarch of the East,
He sends this Soldan's daughter, rich and brave,<sup>43</sup>

To be my queen and portly<sup>44</sup> emperess.
If thou wilt stay with me, renowned man,
And lead thy thousand horse with my conduct,<sup>45</sup>

Besides thy share of this Egyptian prize,
Those thousand horse shall sweat with martial
spoil 190

Of conquered kingdoms and of cities sack'd.
Both we will walk upon the lofty cliffs,<sup>46</sup>
And Christian merchants<sup>47</sup> that with Russian stems

Plough up huge furrows in the Caspian sea,
Shall vail<sup>48</sup> to us, as lords of all the lake.
Both we will reign as consuls of the earth,
And mighty kings shall be our senators.
Jove sometimes masked in a shepherd's weed,

And by those steps that he hath scal'd the Heavens

May we become immortal like the gods. 200
Join with me now in this my mean estate
(I call it mean because, being yet obscure,
The nations far remov'd admire me not),
And when my name and honor shall be spread

As far as Boreas claps his brazen wings,
Or fair Boötes sends his cheerful light,
Then shalt thou be competitor<sup>49</sup> with me,
And sit with Tamburlaine in all his majesty.

THER. Not Hermes, prolocutor to the gods,

Could use persuasions more pathetic.<sup>50</sup> 210

TAMB. Nor are Apollo's oracles more true
Than thou shalt find my vaunts substantial.

TECH. We are his friends, and if the Persian
King

Should offer present dukedoms to our state,<sup>51</sup>
We think it loss to make exchange for that
We are assured of by our friend's success.

USUM. And kingdoms at the least we all expect,

Besides the honor in assured conquests,
Where kings shall crouch unto our conquering
swords,

And hosts of soldiers stand amaz'd at us, 220
When with their fearful tongues they shall confess

These are the men that all the world admires.

THER. What strong enchantments 'tice my yielding soul?

Are these resolved [nobles]<sup>52</sup> Scythians?
But shall I prove a traitor to my king?

TAMB. No, but the trusty friend of Tamburlaine.

THER. Won with thy words, and conquered with thy looks,

I yield myself, my men and horse, to thee,
To be partaker of thy good or ill,
As long as life maintains Theridamas. 230

TAMB. Theridamas, my friend, take here my hand,

Which is as much as if I swore by Heaven
And call'd the gods to witness of my vow.
Thus shall my heart be still combin'd with thine

Until our bodies turn to elements,
And both our souls aspire celestial thrones.
Techelles and Casane, welcome him.

TECH. Welcome, renowned Persian, to us all.

USUM. Long may Theridamas remain with us.

TAMB. These are my friends, in whom I more rejoice 240

Than doth the King of Persia in his crown;
And by the love of Pylades and Orestes,
Whose statutes<sup>53</sup> we adore in Scythia,
Thyself and them shall never part from me
Before I crown you kings in Asia.
Make much of them, gentle Theridamas,
And they will never leave thee till the death.

THER. Nor thee nor them, thrice noble Tamburlaine,
Shall want my heart to be with gladness pierc'd

To do you honor and security. 250

TAMB. A thousand thanks, worthy Theridamas. —

And now fair madam, and my noble Lords,
If you will willingly remain with me
You shall have honors<sup>54</sup> as your merits be;
Or else you shall be forc'd with slavery.

AGYD. We yield unto thee, happy Tamburlaine.

TAMB. For you then, madam, I am out of doubt.

ZENO. I must be pleas'd, perforce.
Wretched Zenocrate! Exeunt.

ACT II — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] COSROE, MENAPHON, ORTYGIUS, CENEUS, with other Soldiers.

Cos. Thus far are we towards Theridamas,
And valiant Tamburlaine, the man of fame,
The man that in the forehead of his fortune
Bears figures of renown and miracle.

But tell me, that hast seen him, Menaphon,
What stature wields he, and what personage?

MEN. Of stature tall, and straightly fashioned,

Like his desire, lift upwards and divine;
So large of limbs, his joints so strongly knit,
Such breadth of shoulders as might mainly bear 10

Old Atlas' burden; 'twixt his manly pitch,<sup>2</sup>
A pearl, more worth than all the world, is plac'd,

Wherein by curious sovereignty of art
Are fix'd his piercing instruments of sight,
Whose fiery circles bear encompassed
A heaven of heavenly bodies in their spheres,
That guides his steps and actions to the throne,
Where honor sits invested royally;
Pale of complexion, wrought in him with passion,

His lofty brows in folds do figure death,
And in their smoothness amity and life;
About them hangs a knot of amber hair,
Wrapped in curls, as fierce Achilles' was,
On which the breath of heaven delights to play,

Making it dance with wanton majesty;
His arms and fingers long and [sinewy],<sup>4</sup>
Betokening valor and excess of strength:
In every part proportioned like the man
Should make the world subdued to Tamburlaine. 30

Cos. Well hast thou portray'd in thy terms of life

The face and personage of a wondrous man;
Nature doth strive with Fortune and his stars
To make him famous in accomplish'd worth;
And well his merits show him to be made
His fortune's master and the king of men,
That could persuade at such a sudden pinch,
With reasons of his valor and his life,

A thousand sworn and overmatching foes.
Then, when our powers in points of swords are
join'd 40

And clos'd in compass of the killing bullet, Though strait the passage and the port<sup>5</sup> be made

That leads to palace of my brother's life,
Proud is his fortune if we pierce it not.
And when the princely Persian diadem
Shall overweigh his weary, witless head,
And fall like mellowed fruit with shakes of
death,

In fair Persia noble Tamburlaine<sup>6</sup>
Shall be my regent and remain as king.

ORRY. In happy hour we have set the crown 50

Upon your kingly head, that seeks our honor
In joining with the man ordain'd by Heaven,
To further every action to the best.

CEN. He that with shepherds and a little
spoil

Durst, in disdain of wrong and tyranny,
Defend his freedom 'gainst a monarchy,
What will he do supported by a king,
Leading a troop of gentlemen and lords,
And stuff'd<sup>7</sup> with treasure for his highest
thoughts!

Cos. And such shall wait on worthy Tamburlaine. 60

Our army will be forty thousand strong,
When Tamburlaine and brave Theridamas
Have met us by the river Araris;<sup>8</sup>
And all conjoin'd to meet the witless King,
That now is marching near to Parthia,
And with unwilling soldiers faintly arm'd,
To seek revenge on me and Tamburlaine,
To whom, sweet Menaphon, direct me straight.

MEN. I will, my Lord.

Exeunt.

SCENE II<sup>9</sup>

[Enter] MYCETES, MEANDER, with other Lords and Soldiers.

MYC. Come, my Meander, let us to this gear.<sup>10</sup>

I tell you true, my heart is swoln with wrath

On this same thievish villain, Tamburlaine,
And of that false Cosroe, my traitorous
brother.

Would it not grieve a king to be so abus'd
And have a thousand horsemen ta'en away?
And, which is worst, to have his diadem
Sought for by such scald<sup>11</sup> knaves as love him
not?

I think it would; well then, by Heavens I swear,

Aurora shall not peep out of her doors, 10
But I will have Cosroe<sup>12</sup> by the head,
And kill proud Tamburlaine with point of sword.

Tell you the rest, Meander; I have said.

MEAND. Then having pass'd Armenian deserts now,
And [pitch'd]<sup>13</sup> our tents under the Georgian hills,

Whose tops are covered with Tartarian<sup>14</sup>
thieves,

That lie in ambush, waiting for a prey,
What should we do but bid them battle
straight,

And rid the world of those detested troops,
Lest, if we let them linger here awhile, 20
They gather strength by power of fresh supplies?

This country swarms with vile, outrageous
men

That live by rapine and by lawless spoil,
Fit soldiers for the wicked Tamburlaine;
And he that could with gifts and promises
Inveigle him that led a thousand horse,
And make him false his faith unto his king,
Will quickly win such as are like himself.
Therefore cheer up your minds; prepare to fight;

He that can take or slaughter Tamburlaine 30
Shall rule the province of Albania.

Who brings that traitor's head, Theridamas,
Shall have a government in Media,
Beside the spoil of him and all his train.
But if Cosroe as our spials<sup>15</sup> say,
And as we know, remains with Tamburlaine,
His Highness' pleasure is that he should live,
And be reclaim'd with princely lenity.

[Enter a Spy.]

A SPY. An hundred horsemen of my com-

Scouting abroad upon these champaign plains
Have view'd the army of the Scythians, 41
Which make reports it far exceeds the King's.

MEAND. Suppose they be in number infinite,

Yet, being void of martial discipline,
All running headlong after greedy spoils
And more regarding gain than victory,
Like to the cruel brothers of the earth,
Sprung of the teeth of dragons venomous,
Their careless swords shall lance their fellows' throats,

And make us triumph in their overthrow. 50

MYC. Was there such brethren, sweet Meander, say,

That sprung of teeth of dragons venomous?

MEAND. So poets say, my Lord.

MYC. And 't is a pretty toy to be a poet.

Well, well, Meander, thou art deeply read;

And, having thee, I have a jewel sure.

Go on, my Lord, and give your charge, I say;
Thy wit will make us conquerors to-day.

MEAND. Then, noble soldiers, to entrap these thieves,

That live confounded in disordered troops, 60

If wealth or riches may prevail with them,

We have our camels laden all with gold,

Which you that be but common soldiers

Shall fling in every corner of the field;

And while the baseborn Tartars take it up,

You, fighting more for honor than for gold,

Shall massacre those greedy-minded slaves;

And when their scattered army is subdu'd,

And you march on their slaughtered carcases,

Share equally the gold that bought their lives, 70

And live like gentlemen in Persia.

Strike up the drum and march courageously;

Fortune herself doth sit upon our crests.

MYC. He tells you true, my masters,<sup>16</sup> so he does. —

Drums, why sound ye not, when Meander speaks?

Exeunt.

SCENE III <sup>17</sup>

[Enter] COSROE, TAMBURLAINE, THERIDAMAS, TECHELLES, USUMCASANE, ORTYGIUS, with others.

COS. Now, worthy Tamburlaine, have I repos'd

In thy approved <sup>18</sup> fortunes all my hope.

What think'st thou, man, shall come of our attempts?

For, even as from assured oracle,

I take thy doom for satisfaction.

TAMB. And so mistake you not a whit, my Lord;

For fates and oracles [of] <sup>19</sup> Heaven have sworn
To royalize the deeds of Tamburlaine,
And make them blest that share in his attempts.

And doubt you not but, if you favor me 10
And let my fortunes and my valor sway

To some direction in your martial deeds,
The world will strive with hosts of men at arms,

To swarm unto the ensign I support.

The host of Xerxes, which by fame is said

To drink the mighty Parthian Araris,

Was but a handful to that we will have.

Our quivering lances, shaking in the air,

And bullets, like Jove's dreadful thunderbolts, Enroll'd in flames and fiery smoldering mists,

Shall threat the gods more than Cyclopians <sup>20</sup> wars; 21

And, with our sun-bright armor as we march,
We'll chase the stars from Heaven and dim their eyes

That stand and muse at our admired arms.

THER. You see, my Lord, what working words he hath;

But when you see his actions [top] <sup>21</sup> his speech,
Your speech will stay or so extol his worth

As I shall be commended and excus'd

For turning my poor charge to his direction.

And these his two renowned friends, my Lord, 30

Would make one thrust and strive to be retain'd

In such a great degree of amity.

TECH. With duty [and] <sup>22</sup> with amity we yield

Our utmost service to the fair Cosroe.

COS. Which I esteem as portion of my crown.

Usumcasane and Techelles both,
When she that rules in Rhamn[us]' <sup>23</sup> golden gates,

And makes a passage for all prosperous arms,
Shall make me solely Emperor of Asia,

Then shall your meeds and valors be advanc'd
To rooms of honor and nobility. 41

TAMB. Then haste, Cosroe, to be king alone,
That I with these, my friends, and all my men
May triumph in our long-expected fate.
The King, your brother, is now hard at hand ;
Meet with the fool, and rid your royal shoulders
Of such a burden as outweighs the sands
And all the craggy rocks of Caspia.

[Enter a Messenger.]

MES. My Lord, we have discovered the enemy
Ready to charge you with a mighty army. 50 Cos. Come, Tamburlaine, now whet thy winged sword,
And lift thy lofty arm into the clouds,
That it may reach the King of Persia's crown,
And set it safe on my victorious head.

TAMB. See where it is, the keenest cu[r]tleaxe
That e'er made passage thorough Persian
arms.

These are the wings shall make it fly as swift

As doth the lightning or the breath of Heaven,
And kill as sure <sup>24</sup> as it swiftly flies.

Cos. Thy words assure me of kind success ; 60

Go, valiant soldier, go before and charge
The fainting army of that foolish king.

TAMB. Usumcasane and Techelles, come ;
We are enough to scare the enemy,
And more than needs to make an emperor.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE IV] <sup>25</sup>

To the battle, and MYCETES comes out alone with his crown in his hand, offering <sup>26</sup> to hide it.

MYC. Accurs'd be he that first invented
war !

They knew not, ah, they knew not, simple
men,

How those <sup>27</sup> were hit by pelting cannon shot
Stand staggering like a quivering aspen leaf
Fearing the force of Boreas' boist'rous blasts.

In what a lamentable case were I
If Nature had not given me wisdom's lore !
For kings are clouts <sup>28</sup> that every man shoots

was the peg at the dead centre of the target.

Our crown the pin that thousands seek to cleave ;

Therefore in policy I think it good 10
To hide it close, a goodly stratagem,
And far from any man that is a fool.
So shall I not be known ; or, if I be,
They cannot take away my crown from me. —
Here will I hide it in this simple hole.

Enter TAMBURLAINE.

TAMB. What fearful coward, straggling from the camp,
When kings themselves are present in the field ?

MYC. Thou liest.

TAMB. Base villain, dar'st thou give the lie ?

MYC. Away ; I am the King ; go, touch me not.

Thou break'st the law of arms unless thou kneel 20

And cry me, "Mercy, noble King."

TAMB. Are you the witty <sup>29</sup> King of Persia ?

MYC. Ay, marry am I ; have you any suit to me ?

TAMB. I would entreat you speak but three wise words.

MYC. So I can when I see my time.

TAMB. Is this your crown ?

MYC. Ay, didst thou ever see a fairer ?

TAMB. You will not sell it, will ye ?

MYC. Such another word and I will have thee executed. Come, give it me. <sup>30</sup> 30

TAMB. No ; I took it prisoner.

MYC. You lie ; I gave it you.

TAMB. Then 't is mine.

MYC. No ; I mean, I let you keep it.

TAMB. Well, I mean you shall have it again.
Here, take it for a while ; I lend it thee,
Till I may see thee hemm'd with armed
men.

Then shalt thou see me pull it from thy head ;
Thou art no match for mighty Tamburlaine.

[Exit.]

MYC. O gods ! Is this Tamburlaine the thief ? 40

I marvel much he stole it not away.

Sound trumpets to the battle, and he runs in.

picious. We may have here a fragment of a longer comic scene, perhaps not composed by Marlowe ; or perhaps we have merely actors' gags here. The publisher of O<sub>1</sub> states that he has "left out some fond and frivolous gestures" which "were showed upon the stage in their graced deformities."

[SCENE V]<sup>31</sup>

[Enter] COSROE, TAMBURLAINE, THERIDAMAS, MENAPHON, MEANDER, ORTYGIUS, TECHELLES, [and] USUMCASANE, with others.

TAMB. Hold thee, Cosroe; wear two imperial crowns.

Think thee invested now as royally,
Even by the mighty hand of Tamburlaine,
As if as many kings as could encompass thee<sup>32</sup>
With greatest pomp, had crown'd thee emperor.

Cos. So do I, thrice renowned man at arms,
And none shall keep the crown but Tamburlaine:

Thee do I make my regent of Persia,
And general-lieutenant of my armies. —
Meander, you, that were our brother's guide,
And chiefest counsellor in all his acts, 11
Since he is yielded to the stroke of war,
On your submission we with thanks excuse,
And give you equal place in our affairs.

MEAND. Most happy Emperor, in humblest terms,

I vow my service to your Majesty,
With utmost virtue of my faith and duty.

Cos. Thanks, good Meander; then, Cosroe, reign
And govern Persia in her former pomp.
Now send embassy to thy neighbor kings, 20
And let them know the Persian king is chang'd —

From one that knew not what a king should do,
To one that can command what 'longs thereto.
And now we will to fair Persepolis,
With twenty thousand expert soldiers.
The lords and captains of my brother's camp
With little slaughter take Meander's course
And gladly yield them to my gracious rule.
Ortygius and Menaphon, my trusty friends,<sup>33</sup>
Now will I gratify<sup>34</sup> your former good, 30
And grace your calling with a greater sway.

ORTY. And as we ever [aim'd]<sup>35</sup> at your behoof,

And sought your state<sup>36</sup> all honor it deserv'd,
So will we with our powers and our lives
Endeavor to preserve and prosper it.

Cos. I will not thank thee, sweet Ortygius;
Better replies shall prove my purposes.

And now, Lord Tamburlaine, my brother's camp

I leave to thee and to Theridamas,
To follow me to fair Persepolis. 40

Then will we march to all those Indian mines
My witless brother to the Christians lost,
And ransom them with fame and usury.
And till thou overtake me, Tamburlaine,
Staying to order all the scattered troops,
Farewell, Lord Regent and his happy friends!
I long to sit upon my brother's throne.

MEAND. Your Majesty shall shortly have your wish,

And ride in triumph through Persepolis.

Exeunt [all but] TAMBURLAINE, TECHELLES, THERIDAMAS, [and] USUMCASANE.

TAMB. "And ride in triumph through Persepolis!" 50

Is it not brave to be a king, Techelles?

Usumcasane and Theridamas,

Is it not passing brave to be a king,

"And ride in triumph through Persepolis"?

TECH. Oh, my Lord, 't is sweet and full of pomp.

USUM. To be a king is half to be a god.

THER. A god is not so glorious as a king.

I think the pleasure they enjoy in Heaven

Can not compare with kingly joys in earth.

To wear a crown enchas'd with pearl and gold,
Whose virtues carry with it life and death; 61

To ask and have, command and be obeyed;
When looks breed love, with looks to gain the prize —

Such power attractive shines in princes' eyes.

TAMB. Why say, Theridamas, wilt thou be a king?

THER. Nay, though I praise it, I can live without it.

TAMB. What says my other friends? Will you be kings?

TECH. Ay, if I could, with all my heart, my Lord.

TAMB. Why, that's well said, Techelles; so would I,

And so would you, my masters, would you not? 70

USUM. What then, my Lord?

TAMB. Why then, [Casane,]<sup>37</sup> shall we wish for aught

The world affords in greatest novelty,

And rest attemptless, faint, and destitute?

Methinks we should not: I am strongly mov'd
That, if I should desire the Persian crown,
I could attain it with a wondrous ease.

And would not all our soldiers soon consent,
If we should aim at such a dignity?

ThER. I know they would with our persuasions. 80

TAMB. Why then, Theridamas, I'll first assay

To get the Persian kingdom to myself;
Then thou for Parthia, they for Scythia and Media;

And, if I prosper, all shall be as sure
As if the Turk, the Pope, Afric, and Greece,
Came creeping to us with their crowns apace.<sup>38</sup>

TECH. Then shall we send to this triumphing<sup>39</sup> king,

And bid him battle for his novel crown?

USUM. Nay, quickly, then, before his room be hot.

TAMB. 'T will prove a pretty jest, in faith,
my friends. 90

ThER. A jest to charge on twenty thousand
men?

I judge the purchase<sup>40</sup> more important far.

TAMB. Judge by thyself, Theridamas, not
me;

For presently Techelles here shall haste
To bid him battle ere he pass too far,
And lose more labor than the gain will quit.<sup>41</sup>
Then shalt thou see the Scythian Tamburlaine
Make but a jest to win the Persian crown.
Techelles, take a thousand horse with thee,
And bid him turn [him]<sup>42</sup> back to war with us,
That only made him king to make us sport. 101
We will not steal upon him cowardly,
But give him warning and more warriors.
Haste thee, Techelles; we will follow thee.
What saith Theridamas?

ThER. Go on, for me.<sup>43</sup>
Exeunt.

SCENE VI<sup>44</sup>

[Enter] COSROE, MEANDER, ORTYGIUS, MENA-PHON, with other Soldiers.

Cos. What means this devilish shepherd to aspire

With such a giantly<sup>45</sup> presumption
To cast up hills against the face of Heaven,
And dare the force of angry Jupiter?
But as he thrust them underneath the hills

And press'd out fire<sup>46</sup> from their burning jaws,
So will I send this monstrous slave to hell,
Where flames shall ever feed upon his soul.

MEAND. Some powers divine, or else infernal, mix'd

Their angry seeds at his conception; 10

For he was never sprung of human race,
Since with the spirit of his fearful pride
He dares so doubtlessly resolve of rule,
And by profession be ambitious.

ORTY. What god or fiend or spirit of the earth,

Or monster turned to a manly shape,
Or of what mold or mettle he be made,
What star or state soever govern him,
Let us put on our meet encount'ring minds
And, in detesting such a devilish thief, 20
In love of honor and defence of right,
Be arm'd against the hate of such a foe,
Whether from earth, or hell, or Heaven, he grow.

Cos. Nobly resolv'd, my good Ortygius;
And since we all have suck'd one wholesome
air,

And with the same proportion of elements
Resolve,<sup>47</sup> I hope we are resembled,
Vowing our loves to equal death and life.
Let's cheer our soldiers to encounter him,
That grievous image of ingratitude, 30
That fiery thirster after sovereignty,
And burn him in the fury of that flame,
That none can quench but blood and empery.
Resolve, my Lords and loving soldiers, now
To save your king and country from decay.
Then strike up, drum; and all the stars that make

The loathsome circle of my dated life,
Direct my weapon to his barbarous heart
That thus opposeth him against the gods
And scorns the powers that govern Persia. 40
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE VII]<sup>48</sup>

Enter to the battle; and after the battle, enter COSROE wounded, THERIDAMAS, TAM-BURLAINE, TECHELLES, USUMCASANE, with others.

Cos. Barbarous and bloody Tamburlaine,
Thus to deprive me of my crown and life!
Treacherous and false Theridamas,
Even at the morning of my happy state,

into the same elements.

Scarce being seated in my royal throne,
To work my downfall and untimely end !
An uncouth pain torments my grieved soul,
And Death arrests the organ of my voice,
Who, ent'ring at the breach thy sword hath
made,

Sacks every vein and artier of my heart, 10
Bloody and insatiate Tamburlaine !

TAMB. The thirst of reign and sweetness of a crown,

That caus'd the eldest son of heavenly Ops
To thrust his doting father from his chair
And place himself in the imperial Heaven,
Mov'd me to manage arms against thy state.
What better precedent than mighty Jove ?
Nature that fram'd us of four elements,
Warring within our breasts for regiment,<sup>49</sup>
Doth teach us all to have aspiring minds. 20
Our souls, whose faculties can comprehend
The wondrous architecture of the world
And measure every wand'ring planet's course,
Still climbing after knowledge infinite,
And always moving as the restless spheres,
Wills us to wear ourselves and never rest
Until we reach the ripest fruit of all,
That perfect bliss and sole felicity,
The sweet fruition of an earthly crown.

TECH. And that made me to join with Tam-
burlaine ; 30

For he is gross and like the massy earth
That moves not upwards, nor by princely deeds

Doth mean to soar above the highest sort.

TECH. And that made us the friends of Tamburlaine,

To lift our swords against the Persian king.

USUM. For as, when Jove did thrust old
Saturn down,

Neptune and Dis gain'd each of them a crown,
So do we hope to reign in Asia,
If Tamburlaine be plac'd in Persia.

Cos. The strangest men that ever nature
made ! 40

I know not how to take their tyrannies.
My bloodless body waxeth chill and cold,
And with my blood my life slides through my
wound ;

My soul begins to take her flight to hell,
And summons all my senses to depart.
The heat and moisture, which did feed each
other,

For want of nourishment to feed them both,
Is dry and cold ; and now doth ghastly death
With greedy talents<sup>50</sup> gripe my bleeding heart,

And like a harpy<sup>51</sup> tires<sup>52</sup> on my life. 50
Theridamas and Tamburlaine, I die ;
And fearful vengeance light upon you both !

[COSROE dies. TAMBURLAINE] takes the crown and puts it on.

TAMB. Not all the curses which the Furies
breathe

Shall make me leave so rich a prize as this.

Theridamas, Techelles, and the rest,
Who think you now is King of Persia ?

ALL. Tamburlaine ! Tamburlaine !

TAMB. Though Mars himself, the angry god
of arms,

And all the earthly potentates, conspire
To dispossess me of this diadem, 60
Yet will I wear it in despite of them,
As great commander of this eastern world,
If you but say that Tamburlaine shall reign.

ALL. Long live Tamburlaine and reign in Asia !

TAMB. So now it is more surer on my head,
Than if the gods had held a parliament
And all pronounc'd me King of Persia.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] BAJAZETH, the KINGS of FEZ, MOROCCO, and ARGIER,<sup>2</sup> with others, in great pomp.

BAJ. Great Kings of Barbary and my portly bassocs,<sup>3</sup>

We hear the Tartars and the eastern thieves,
Under the conduct of one Tamburlaine,
Presume a bickering with your emperor,
And thinks to rouse us from our dreadful siege
Of the famous Grecian Constantinople.

You know our army is invincible ;
As many circumcised Turks we have,
And warlike bands of Christians renied,<sup>4</sup>
As hath the ocean or the Terrene<sup>5</sup> sea 10
Small drops of water when the moon begins
To join in one her semicircled horns.

Yet would we not be brav'd with foreign power,

Nor raise our siege before the Grecians yield,
Or breathless lie before the city walls.

K. of Fez. Renowned Emperor, and mighty general,

What if you sent the bassocs of your guard

To charge him to remain in Asia,
Or else to threaten death and deadly arms
As from the mouth of mighty Bajazeth? 20

BAJ. Hie thee, my basso, fast to Persia ;
Tell him thy lord, the Turkish Emperor,
Dread Lord of Afric, Europe, and Asia,
Great King and conqueror of Græcia,
The ocean, Terrene, and the Coal-black sea,
The high and highest monarch of the world,
Wills and commands (for say not I entreat),
Not once to set his foot in Africa,
Or spread his colors <sup>6</sup> in Græcia,
Lest he incur the fury of my wrath. 30

Tell him I am content to take a truce,
Because I hear he bears a valiant mind.
But if, presuming on his silly power,
He be so mad to manage arms with me,
Then stay thou with him ; say I bid thee so.
And if, before the sun have measured heaven
With triple circuit, thou regret us not,
We mean to take his morning's next arise
For messenger he will not be reclaim'd,
And mean to fetch thee in despite of him. 40

BAS. Most great and puissant monarch of the earth,
Your basso will accomplish your behest
And show your pleasure to the Persian,
As fits the legate of the stately Turk.

Exit Basso.

K. OF ARG. They say he is the King of Persia ;
But, if he dare attempt to stir your siege,
'T were requisite he should be ten times more,
For all flesh quakes at your magnificence.

BAJ. True, Argier, and tremble <sup>7</sup> at my looks.

K. OF MOR. The spring is hind'ed by your smothering host, 50
For neither rain can fall upon the earth
Nor sun reflex his virtuous <sup>8</sup> beams thereon,
The ground is mantled with such multitudes.

BAJ. All this is true as holy Mahomet ;
And all the trees are blasted with our breaths.

K. OF FEZ. What thinks your Greatness best to be achiev'd
In pursuit of the city's overthrow?

BAJ. I will the captive pionsers of Argier
Cut off the water that by leaden pipes 59
Runs to the city from the mountain Carnon.
Two thousand horse shall forage up and down,
That no relief or succor come by land ;

And all the sea my galleys countermand.<sup>9</sup>
Then shall our footmen lie within the trench,
And with their cannons, mouth'd like Orcus'
gulf,<sup>10</sup>

Batter the walls, and we will enter in ;
And thus the Grecians shall be conquered.

Exeunt.

SCENE II <sup>11</sup>

[Enter] AGYDAS, ZENOCRATE, ANIPPE, with
others.

[AGYD.] Madam Zenocrate, may I presume
To know the cause of these unquiet fits,
That work such trouble to your wonted rest?
'T is more than pity such a heavenly face
Should by heart's sorrow wax so wan and pale,
When your offensive rape <sup>12</sup> by Tamburlaine, Which of your whole displeasures should be most,

Hath seem'd to be digested long ago.

ZENO. Although it be digested long ago,
As his exceeding favors have deserv'd, 10
And might content the Queen of Heaven,<sup>13</sup> as well

As it hath chang'd my first conceiv'd disdain,
Yet, since, a farther passion feeds my thoughts
With ceaseless and disconsolate conceits,
Which dyes my looks so lifeless as they are,
And might, if my extremes had full events,
Make me the ghastly counterfeit of death.

AGYD. Eternal Heaven sooner be dissolv'd,
And all that pierceth Phœbe's silver eye,
Before such hap fall to Zenocrate. 20

ZENO. Ah, life and soul, still hover in his breast

And leave my body senseless as the earth ;
Or else unite you to his life and soul,
That I may live and die with Tamburlaine.

Enter [behind] TAMBURLAINE, with TECHELLES and others.

AGYD. With Tamburlaine ! Ah, fair Zeno-
crate,

Let not a man so vile and barbarous,
That holds you from your father in despite
And keeps you from the honors of a queen,
Being suppos'd his worthless concubine,
Be honored with your love but for necessity. 30
So, now the mighty Soldan hears of you,
Your Highness needs not doubt but in short time

He will with Tamburlaine's destruction
 Redeem you from this deadly servitude.

ZENO. [Agydas,] <sup>14</sup> leave to wound me with
 these words,

And speak of Tamburlaine as he deserves.

The entertainment we have had of him

Is far from villainy or servitude,

And might in noble minds be counted princely.

AGYD. How can you fancy <sup>15</sup> one that looks so fierce, 40

Only dispos'd to martial stratagems ;

Who, when he shall embrace you in his arms,

Will tell how many thousand men he slew ;

And, when you look for amorous discourse,

Will rattle forth his facts of war and blood,

Too harsh a subject for your dainty ears ?

ZENO. As looks the Sun through Nilus' flowing stream,

Or when the Morning holds him in her arms,

So looks my lordly love, fair Tamburlaine ;

His talk much sweeter than the Muses' song <sup>50</sup>

They sung for honor 'gainst Pierides,<sup>16</sup>

Or when Minerva did with Neptune strive <sup>17</sup> ;

And higher would I rear my estimate

Than Juno, sister to the highest god,

If I were match'd with mighty Tamburlaine.

AGYD. Yet be not so inconstant in your
 love,

But let the young Arabian live in hope

After your rescue to enjoy his choice.

You see, though first the King of Persia,

Being a shepherd, seem'd to love you much, <sup>60</sup>

Now in his majesty he leaves those looks,

Those words of favor, and those comfortings,

And gives no more than common courtesies.

ZENO. Thence rise the tears that so distain
 my cheeks,

Fearing <sup>18</sup> his love through my unworthiness.

TAMBURLAINE goes to her and takes her away lovingly by the hand, looking wrathfully on AGYDAS, and says nothing. [Exeunt all but AGYDAS.]

AGYD. Betray'd by fortune and suspicious
 love,

Threat'ned with frowning wrath and jealousy,

Surpris'd with fear of hideous revenge,

I stand aghast ; but most astonied <sup>19</sup>

To see his choler shut in secret thoughts, <sup>70</sup>

And wrapp'd in silence of his angry soul.

Upon his brows was portray'd ugly death ;

And in his eyes the fury of his heart,

That shine as comets, menacing revenge,

And casts a pale complexion on his cheeks.

As when the seaman sees the Hyades

Gather an army of Cimmerian <sup>20</sup> clouds,

(Auster and Aquilon with winged steeds,

All sweating, tilt about the watery Heavens,

With shivering spears enforcing thunderclaps,

And from their shields strike flames of lightening.) 81

All fearful folds his sails and sounds the main,

Lifting his prayers to the Heavens for aid

Against the terror of the winds and waves ;

So fares Agydas for the late-felt frowns,

That sent a tempest to my daunted thoughts,

And makes my soul divine her overthrow.

Re-enter TECHELLES with a naked dagger.

TECH. See you, Agydas, how the King salutes you.

He bids you prophesy what it imports. Exit.<sup>21</sup>

AGYD. I prophesied before, and now I prove 90

The killing frowns of jealousy and love.

He needed not with words confirm my fear,

For words are vain where working tools present

The naked action of my threat'ned end :

It says, Agydas, thou shalt surely die,

And of extremities elect the least ;

More honor and less pain it may procure

To die by this resolved hand of thine,

Than stay <sup>22</sup> the torments he and Heaven have sworn. 99

Then haste, Agydas, and prevent the plagues

Which thy prolonged fates may draw on thee.

Go, wander, free from fear of tyrant's rage,

Removed from the torments and the hell

Wherewith he may excruciate thy soul ;

And let Agydas by Agydas die,

And with this stab slumber eternally.

[Stabs himself.] <sup>23</sup>

[Re-enter TECHELLES with USUMCASANE.] <sup>24</sup>

TECH. Usumcasane, see, how right the man
 Hath hit the meaning of my Lord, the King.

USUM. Faith, and, Techelles, it was manly
 done ;

And since he was so wise and honorable, 110

Let us afford him now the bearing hence,
And crave his triple-worthy burial.

TECH. Agreed, Casane ; we will honor him.
[Exeunt bearing out the body.]

SCENE III <sup>25</sup>

[Enter] TAMBURLAINE, TECHELLES, USUMCASANE, THERIDAMAS, BASSO, ZENOCRATE, [ANIPPE,] with others.

TAMB. Basso, by this thy lord and master knows

I mean to meet him in Bithynia.

See how he comes ! Tush, Turks are full of brags,

And menace more than they can well perform.
He meet me in the field, and fetch thee hence ?
Alas, poor Turk, his fortune is too weak
T' encounter with the strength of Tamburlaine.

View well my camp, and speak indifferently ; <sup>26</sup>
Do not my captains and my soldiers look
As if they meant to conquer Africa ? 10

BAS. Your men are valiant, but their number few,

And cannot terrify his mighty host.
My lord, the great commander of the world,
Besides fifteen contributory kings
Hath now in arms ten thousand Janissaries,
Mounted on lusty Mauritanian steeds,
Brought to the war by men of Tripoli ;
Two hundred thousand footmen that have serv'd

In two set battles fought in Græcia ;
And, for the expedition of this war, 20
If he think good, can from his garrisons
Withdraw as many more to follow him.

TECH. The more he brings the greater is the spoil ;

For, when they perish by our warlike hands,
We mean to seat our footmen on their steeds,
And rifle all those stately Janisars.

TAMB. But will those kings accompany your lord ?

BAS. Such as his Highness please ; but some must stay
To rule the provinces he late subdu'd.

TAMB. Then fight courageously : their crowns are yours. 30

This hand shall set them on your conquering heads,

That made me Emperor of Asia.

USUM. Let him bring millions infinite of men,

Unpeopling Western Africa and Greece ;
Yet we assure us of the victory.

THER. Even he that in a trice vanquish'd two kings,

More mighty than the Turkish Emperor,
Shall rouse him out of Europe, and pursue
His scattered army till they yield or die.

TAMB. Well said, Theridamas ; speak in that mood ; 40

For " will " and " shall " best fitteth Tamburlaine,

Whose smiling stars gives him assured hope
Of martial triumph ere he meet his foes.

I that am term'd the scourge and wrath of God,

The only fear and terror of the world,
Will first subdue the Turk, and then enlarge
Those Christian captives, which you keep as slaves,

Burdening their bodies with your heavy chains
And feeding them with thin and slender fare,
That naked row about the Terrene sea, 50
And when they chance to breathe and rest a space,

Are punish'd with bastones <sup>27</sup> so grievously
That they lie panting on the galley's side
And strive for life at every stroke they give.
These are the cruel pirates of Argier,
That damned train, the scum of Africa,
Inhabited with straggling runagates, <sup>28</sup>
That make quick havoc of the Christian blood ;
But, as I live, that town shall curse the time
That Tamburlaine set foot in Africa. 60

Enter BAJAZETH with his Bassoes and contributory KINGS [of Fez, MOROCCO, and ARGIER ; ZABINA and EBEA].

BAJ. Bassoes and Janissaries of my guard,
Attend upon the person of your lord,
The greatest potentate of Africa.

TAMB. Techelles and the rest, prepare your swords ;

I mean t' encounter with that Bajazeth.

BAJ. Kings of Fez, Moroccus, and Argier,
He calls me Bajazeth, whom you call Lord !
Note the presumption of this Scythian slave !
I tell thee, villain, those that lead my horse
Have to their names titles of dignity ; 70
And dar'st thou bluntly call me Bajazeth ?

TAMB. And know, thou Turk, that those which lead my horse

Shall lead thee captive thorough Africa ;
And dar'st thou bluntly call me Tamburlaine ?

BAJ. By Mahomet my kinsman's sepulchre,
And by the holy Alc[o]r[a]n, I swear
He shall be made a chaste and lustless eunuch,
And in my sarell <sup>29</sup> tend my concubines ;
And all his captains, that thus stoutly stand,
Shall draw the chariot of my emperess, 80
Whom I have brought to see their overthrow.

TAMB. By this my sword, that conquer'd
Persia,
Thy fall shall make me famous through the
world.

I will not tell thee how I'll handle thee,
But every common soldier of my camp
Shall smile to see thy miserable state.

K. OF FEZ. What means the mighty Turkish Emperor,

To talk with one so base as Tamburlaine ?

K. OF MOR. Ye Moors and valiant men of Barbary,

How can ye suffer these indignities ? 90

K. OF ARG. Leave words, and let them feel your lances' points,
Which glided through the bowels of the Greeks.

BAJ. Well said, my stout contributory
kings ;

Your threefold army and my hugy host
Shall swallow up these baseborn Persians.

TECH. Puissant, renowned, and mighty
Tamburlaine,

Why stay we thus prolonging all their lives ?

THER. I long to see those crowns won by
our swords,

That we may reign as kings of Africa.

USUM. What coward would not fight for such a prize ? 100

TAMB. Fight all courageously and be you
kings ;

I speak it, and my words are oracles.

BAJ. Zabina, mother of three braver boys
Than Hercules, that in his infancy
Did pash <sup>30</sup> the jaws of serpents venomous ;
Whose hands are made to gripe a warlike lance,
Their shoulders broad for complete armor fit,
Their limbs more large, and of a bigger size,
Than all the brats ysprung from Typhon's loins ;

Who, when they come unto their father's age,
Will batter turrets with their manly fists ; 111
Sit here upon this royal chair of state,
And on thy head wear my imperial crown,

Until I bring this sturdy Tamburlaine
And all his captains bound in captive chains.

ZAB. Such good success happen to Bajazeth.

TAMB. Zenocrate, the loveliest maid alive,
Fairer than rocks of pearl and precious stone,
The only paragon of Tamburlaine,
Whose eyes are brighter than the lamps of
Heaven 120

And speech more pleasant than sweet harmony,

That with thy looks canst clear the darkened
sky,

And calm the rage of thund'ring Jupiter,
Sit down by her, adorned with my crown,
As if thou wert the Empress of the world.

Stir not, Zenocrate, until thou see
Me march victoriously with all my men,
Triumphing over him and these his kings,
Which I will bring as vassals to thy feet.

Till then take thou my crown, vaunt of my worth, 130

And manage words with her, as we will arms.

ZENO. And may my love, the King of Persia,
Return with victory and free from wound.

BAJ. Now shalt thou feel the force of Turkish arms,

Which lately made all Europe quake for fear.
I have of Turks, Arabians, Moors, and Jews,
Enough to cover all Bithynia.

Let thousands die ; their slaughtered carcasses
Shall serve for walls and bulwarks to the rest ;
And as the heads of Hydra, so my power, 140
Subdued, shall stand as mighty as before.

If they should yield their necks unto the sword,
Thy soldiers' arms could not endure to strike
So many blows as I have heads for thee.

Thou knowest not, foolish-hardy Tamburlaine,
What 't is to meet me in the open field,

That leave no ground for thee to march upon.

TAMB. Our conquering swords shall marshal us the way

We use to march upon the slaughtered foe, 149
Trampling their bowels with our horses' hoofs,
Brave horses bred on the white Tartarian hills.

My camp is like to Julius Cæsar's host,
That never fought but had the victory ;
Nor in Pharsalia was there such hot war
As these, my followers, willingly would have.
Legions of spirits fleeting <sup>31</sup> in the air
Direct our bullets and our weapons' points,
And make [your] <sup>32</sup> strokes to wound the senseless [air] ; <sup>33</sup>

And, when she sees our bloody colors spread,
Then Victory begins to take her flight, 160
Resting herself upon my milk-white tent. —
But come, my Lords, to weapons let us fall;
The field is ours, the Turk, his wife, and all.

Exit with his followers.

BAJ. Come, kings and bassoes, let us glut
our swords,
That thirst to drink the feeble Persians' blood.

Exit with his followers.

ZAB. Base concubine, must thou be plac'd
by me,
That am the empress of the mighty Turk?

ZENO. Disdainful Turkess and unreverend boss,<sup>34</sup>

Call'st thou me concubine, that am betroth'd
Unto the great and mighty Tamburlaine? 170

ZAB. To Tamburlaine, the great Tartarian
thief?

ZENO. Thou wilt repent these lavish words
of thine,

When thy great basso-master and thyself
Must plead for mercy at his kingly feet,
And sue to me to be your advocates.

ZAB. And sue to thee! I tell thee, shameless girl,
Thou shalt be laundress to my waiting maid! —

How lik'st thou her, Ebea? Will she serve?

EBEA. Madam, she thinks, perhaps, she is too fine;

But I shall turn her into other weeds, 180
And make her dainty fingers fall to work.

ZENO. Hear'st thou, Anippe, how thy drudge doth talk?

And how my slave, her mistress, menaceth?
Both for their sauciness shall be employed
To dress the common soldiers' meat and drink,
For we will scorn they should come near ourselves.

ANIP. Yet sometimes let your Highness
send for them

To do the work my chambermaid disdains.

They sound the battle within, and stay.

ZENO. Ye gods and powers that govern
Persia,

And made my lordly love her worthy king, 190
Now strengthen him against the Turkish Baj-azeth,

And let his foes, like flocks of fearful roes
Pursu'd by hunters, fly his angry looks,
That I may see him issue conqueror.

ZAB. Now, Mahomet, solicit God himself,

And make him rain down murdering<sup>35</sup> shot from Heaven

To dash the Scythians' brains and strike them dead

That dare to manage arms with him

That offered jewels to thy sacred shrine, 199
When first he warr'd against the Christians.

[They sound] to the battle again.

ZENO. By this the Turks lie welt'ring in their blood,

And Tamburlaine is Lord of Africa.

ZAB. Thou art deceiv'd. I heard the trumpets sound

As when my emperor overthrew the Greeks,
And led them captive into Africa.

Straight will I use thee as thy pride deserves;
Prepare thyself to live and die my slave.

ZENO. If Mahomet should come from Heaven and swear

My royal lord is slain or conquered,
Yet should he not persuade me otherwise 210
But that he lives and will be conqueror.

BAJAZETH flies and [TAMBURLAINE] pursues him. The battle short, and they enter; BAJ- AZETH is overcome.

TAMB. Now, King of bassoes, who is conqueror?

BAJ. Thou, by the fortune of this damned
[foil].<sup>36</sup>

TAMB. Where are your stout contributory
kings?

Re-enter TECHELLES, THERIDAMAS, [and] USUMCASANE.

TECH. We have their crowns; their bodies
strow the field.

TAMB. Each man a crown! Why, kingly fought, i' faith.

Deliver them into my treasury.

ZENO. Now let me offer to my gracious Lord
His royal crown again so highly won.

TAMB. Nay, take the Turkish crown from her, Zenocrate, 220

And crown me Emperor of Africa.

ZAB. No, Tamburlaine; though now thou gat the best

Thou shalt not yet be Lord of Africa.

THER. Give her the crown, Turkess, y<sup>e</sup> were best.

He takes it from her, and gives it
ZENOCRATE.

<sup>35</sup> From "murderers", a species of small cannon used to scatter shot at close range.

1. 235.

ZAB. Injurious villains! thieves! runagates!

How dare you thus abuse my Majesty?

THER. Here, madam, you are Empress; she is none.

TAMB. Not now, Theridamas; her time is past.

The pillars that have bolstered up those terms
Are fall'n in clusters at my conquering feet.

ZAB. Though he be prisoner, he may be ransomed. 231

TAMB. Not all the world shall ransom Bajazeth.

BAJ. Ah, fair Zabina, we have lost the field;
And never had the Turkish emperor
So great a foil by any foreign foe.
Now will the Christian miscreants be glad,
Ringing with joy their superstitious bells
And making bonfires for my overthrow.

But, ere I die, those foul idolaters
Shall make me bonfires with their filthy bones;
For, though the glory of this day be lost, 241
Afric and Greece have garrisons enough
To make me sovereign of the earth again.

TAMB. Those walled garrisons will I subdue,
And write myself great Lord of Africa.
So from the East unto the furthest West
Shall Tamburlaine extend his puissant arm.
The galleys and those pilling<sup>37</sup> brigandines
That yearly sail to the Venetian gulf
And hover in the Straits for Christians' wrack 250

Shall lie at anchor in the isle Asant,<sup>38</sup>
Until the Persian fleet and men-of-war,
Sailing along the oriental sea,
Have fetch'd about the Indian continent,
Even from Persepolis to Mexico
And thence unto the straits of Jubalter;<sup>39</sup>
Where they shall meet and join their force in one,

Keeping in awe the bay of Portingale,<sup>40</sup>
And all the ocean by the British shore; 259
And by this means I'll win the world at last.

BAJ. Yet set a ransom on me, Tamburlaine.

TAMB. What, think'st thou Tamburlaine esteems thy gold?

I'll make the kings of India, ere I die,
Offer their mines, to sue for peace, to me,

<sup>A</sup> I dig for treasure to appease my wrath.
Come, bind them both, and one lead in the Turk;

The Turkess let my love's maid lead away.
They bind them.

BAJ. Ah, villains, dare ye touch my sacred arms?

O Mahomet! O sleepy Mahomet!

ZAB. O cursed Mahomet, that makest us thus 279

The slaves to Scythians rude and barbarous!

TAMB. Come, bring them in; and, for this happy conquest,

Triumph and solemnize a martial feast.

Exeunt.

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter the] SOLDAN of EGYPT, with three or four Lords, CAPOLIN, [and a Messenger].

SOLD. Awake, ye men of Memphis! Hear the clang

Of Scythian trumpets, — hear the basilisks<sup>2</sup>
That, roaring, shake Damascus' turrets down.
The rogue of Volga holds Zenocrate,
The Soldan's daughter, for his concubine,
And with a troop of thieves and vagabonds
Hath spread his colors to our high disgrace;
While you faint-hearted, base Egyptians
Lie slumbering on the flow'ry banks of Nile,
As crocodiles that unafrighted rest 10
While thund'ring cannons rattle on their skins.

MESS. Nay, mighty Soldan, did your Greatness see

The frowning looks of fiery Tamburlaine,
That with his terror and imperious eyes
Commands the hearts of his associates,
It might amaze your royal Majesty.

SOLD. Villain, I tell thee, were that Tamburlaine

As monstrous<sup>3</sup> as Gorgon,<sup>4</sup> prince of hell,
The Soldan would not start a foot from him.
But speak, what power<sup>5</sup> hath he?

MESS. Mighty Lord, 20

Three hundred thousand men in armor clad,
Upon their prancing steeds disdainfully
With wanton paces trampling on the ground;
Five hundred thousand footmen, threat'ning shot,

Shaking their swords, their spears, and iron bills,

Environing their standard round, that stood
As bristle-pointed as a thorny wood.

Their warlike engines and munition
Exceed the forces of their martial men.

SOLD. Nay, could their numbers countervail
the stars, 30
Or ever-drizzling drops of April showers,
Or withered leaves that autumn shaketh
down,

Yet would the Soldan by his conquering power
So scatter and consume them in his rage
That not a man should live to rue their fall.

CAPO. So might your Highness, had you time to sort
Your fighting men and raise your royal host ;
But Tamburlaine, by expedition,
Advantage takes of your unreadiness.

SOLD. Let him take all th' advantages he
can. 40
Were all the world conspir'd to fight for
him,

Nay, were he devil, as he is no man,
Yet in revenge of fair Zenocrate,
Whom he detaineth in despite of us,
This arm should send him down to Erebus,
To shroud his shame in darkness of the night.

Mess. Pleaseth your Mightiness to understand,

His resolution far exceedeth all.
The first day when he pitcheth down his tents,
White is their hue, and on his silver crest 50
A snowy feather spangled white he bears,
To signify the mildness of his mind,
That, satiate with spoil, refuseth blood.
But, when Aurora mounts the second time,
As red as scarlet is his furniture ;
Then must his kindled wrath be quench'd with blood,

Not sparing any that can manage arms.
But if these threats move not submission,
Black are his colors ; black, pavilion ;
His spear, his shield, his horse, his armor, plumes, 60

And jetty feathers menace death and hell :
Without respect of sex, degree, or age,
He razeth all his foes with fire and sword.

SOLD. Merciless villain, peasant, ignorant
Of lawful arms or martial discipline !
Pillage and murder are his usual trades ;
The slave usurps the glorious name of war.
See, Capolin, the fair Arabian king,
That hath been disappointed by this slave
Of my fair daughter and his princely love, 70
May have fresh warning to go war with us,
And be reveng'd for her disparagement.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II <sup>6</sup>

[Enter] TAMBURLAINE, TECHELLES, THERIDAMAS, USUMCASANE, ZENOCRATE, ANIPPE, two Moors drawing BAJAZETH in his cage, and his wife [ZABINA] following him.

TAMB. Bring out my footstool.

They take him out of the cage

BAJ. Ye holy priests of heavenly Mahome.
That, sacrificing, slice and cut your flesh,
Staining his altars with your purple blood,
Make Heaven to frown and every fixed star
To suck up poison from the moorish fens
And pour it in this glorious <sup>7</sup> tyrant's throat.

TAMB. The chiefest God, first mover of that sphere

Enchas'd with thousands ever-shining lamps,
Will sooner burn the glorious frame of Heaven
Than it should so conspire my overthrow. 11
But, villain, thou that wishest this to me,
Fall prostrate on the low disdainful earth,
And be the footstool of great Tamburlaine,
That I may rise into my royal throne.

BAJ. First shalt thou rip my bowels with thy sword

And sacrifice my heart to death and hell,
Before I yield to such a slavery.

TAMB. Base villain, vassal, slave to Tamburlaine,

Unworthy to embrace or touch the ground 20
That bears the honor of my royal weight,
Stoop, villain, stoop ! — Stoop ! for so he bids <sup>8</sup>
That may command thee piecemeal to be torn,

Or scattered like the lofty cedar trees
Struck with the voice of thund'ring Jupiter.

BAJ. Then, as I look down to the damned fiends,
Fiends, look on me ! and thou, dread god of
hell,

With ebon sceptre strike this hateful earth
And make it swallow both of us at once !

[TAMBURLAINE] gets up upon him to his chair.

TAMB. Now clear the triple <sup>9</sup> region of the
air, 30

And let the Majesty of Heaven behold
Their scourge and terror tread on emperors.
Smile, stars that reign'd at my nativity,
And dim the brightness of their neighbor lamps !

Disdain to borrow light of Cynthia ;

For I, the chiefest lamp of all the earth,
First rising in the East with mild aspect,
But fixed now in the meridian line,<sup>10</sup>
Will send up fire to your turning spheres,
And cause the sun to borrow light of you. 40
My sword struck fire from his coat of steel,
Given in Bithynia, when I took this Turk ;
As when a fiery exhalation,

Wrapp'd in the bowels of a freezing cloud,
Fighting for passage, [makes]<sup>11</sup> the welkin crack,

And casts a flash of lightning to the earth.
But, ere I march to wealthy Persia,
Or leave Damascus and th' Egyptian fields,
As was the fame of Clymene's brainsick son,
That almost brent<sup>12</sup> the axletree of Heaven,
So shall our swords, our lances, and our shot 51

Fill all the air with fiery meteors.

Then, when the sky shall wax as red as blood,
It shall be said I made it red myself,
To make me think of naught but blood and
war.

ZAB. Unworthy king, that by thy cruelty
Unlawfully usurpest the Persian seat,
Dar'st thou, that never saw an emperor
Before thou met my husband in the field,
Being thy captive, thus abuse his state, 60
Keeping his kingly body in a cage,
That roofs of gold and sun-bright palaces
Should have prepar'd to entertain his Grace,
And treading him beneath thy loathsome
feet,

Whose feet the kings of Africa have kiss'd?

TECH. You must devise some torment worse, my Lord,
To make these captives rein their lavish
tongues.

TAMB. Zenocrate, look better to your slave.

ZENO. She is my handmaid's slave, and she shall look
That these abuses flow not from her tongue.
Chide her, Anippe. 71

ANIP. Let these be warnings for you then,
my slave,
How you abuse the person of the King ;
Or else I swear to have you whipp'd, stark-nak'd.

BAJ. Great Tamburlaine, great in my overthrow,
Ambitious pride shall make thee fall as low,

<sup>10</sup> I.e., now at my highest (and permanent)

thon.

For treading on the back of Bajazeth,
That should be horsed on four mighty kings.

TAMB. Thy names and titles and thy digni-ties 79
Are fled from Bajazeth and remain with me,
That will maintain it against a world of kings.
Put him in again.

[They put him into the cage.]

BAJ. Is this a place for mighty Bajazeth?
Confusion light on him that helps thee thus!

TAMB. There whiles he lives, shall Bajazeth be kept ;

And where I go, be thus in triumph drawn ;
And thou, his wife, shalt feed him with the scraps

My servitors shall bring thee from my board ;
For he that gives him other food than this Shall sit by him and starve to death himself.
This is my mind and I will have it so. 91

Not all the kings and emperors of the earth,
If they would lay their crowns before my feet,
Shall ransom him or take him from his cage.

The ages that shall talk of Tamburlaine,
Even from this day to Plato's wondrous year,<sup>13</sup>
Shall talk how I have handled Bajazeth ;
These Moors, that drew him from Bithynia
To fair Damascus, where we now remain,
Shall lead him with us wheresoe'er we go. —
Techelles, and my loving followers, 101
Now may we see Damascus' lofty towers,
Like to the shadows of Pyramides,
That with their beauties grac'd the Memphian fields.

The golden stature<sup>14</sup> of their feathered bird,
That spreads her wings upon the city walls,
Shall not defend it from our battering shot.
The townsmen mask in silk and cloth of gold,
And every house is as a treasury.

The men, the treasure, and the town is ours.

THER. Your tents of white now pitch'd before the gates, 111

And gentle flags of amity display'd,
I doubt not but the governor will yield,
Offering Damascus to your Majesty.

TAMB. So shall he have his life, and all the rest.

But if he stay until the bloody flag
Be once advanc'd on my vermilion tent,
He dies, and those that kept us out so long.

<sup>13</sup> Plato (Timæus) refers to a perfect "year", a period at the close of which all the "seven planets" will be relatively in the same positions as at its beginning. 15,000 solar years was Cicero's estimate of its length, according to Macrobius; but computations varied widely.

<sup>14</sup> Oo, 4, statue. The bird was the ibis.

And when they see me march in black array,
With mournful streamers hanging down their heads, 120

Were in that city all the world contain'd,
Not one should scape, but perish by our swords.

ZENO. Yet would you have some pity for my sake,

Because it is my country's, and my father's.

TAMB. Not for the world, Zenocrate, if I have sworn.

Come ; bring in the Turk. Exeunt.

SCENE III <sup>15</sup>

[Enter the] SOLDAN, [the KING OF] ARABIA, CA-POLIN, with streaming colors and Soldiers.

SOLD. Methinks we march as Meleager did,
Environed with brave Argolian knights,
To chase the savage Cal[y]donian boar ;
Or Cephalus with lusty Theban youths
Against the wolf that angry Themis sent
To waste and spoil the sweet Aonian fields,
A monster of five hundred thousand heads,
Compact of rapine, piracy, and spoil.

The scum of men, the hate and scourge of God,
Raves in Egyptia and annoyeth us. 10

My Lord, it is the bloody Tamburlaine,
A sturdy felon and a base-bred thief,
By murder raised to the Persian crown,
That dares control us in our territories.

To tame the pride of this presumptuous beast,
Join your Arabians with the Soldan's power ;
Let us unite our royal bands in one,
And hasten to remove Damascus' siege.

It is a blemish to the majesty
And high estate of mighty emperors, 20
That such a base usurping vagabond
Should brave a king, or wear a princely crown.

K. of ARAB. Renowned Soldan, have ye lately heard

The overthrow of mighty Bajazeth
About the confines of Bithynia ?
The slavery wherewith he persecutes
The noble Turk and his great emperess ?

SOLD. I have, and sorrow for his bad success ; <sup>16</sup>

But, noble Lord of great Arabia,
Be so persuaded that the Soldan is 30
No more dismay'd with tidings of his fall
Than in the haven when the pilot stands
And views a stranger's ship rent in the winds,
And shivered against a craggy rock ;

Yet, in compassion of his wretched state,
A sacred vow to Heaven and him I make,
Confirming it with Ibis' holy name,
That Tamburlaine shall rue the day, the hour,
Wherein he wrought such ignominious wrong
Unto the hallowed person of a prince, 40
Or kept the fair Zenocrate so long
As concubine, I fear, to feed his lust.

K. of ARAB. Let grief and fury hasten on revenge ;

Let Tamburlaine for his offences feel Such plagues as Heaven and we can pour on
him.

I long to break my spear upon his crest,
And prove the weight of his victorious arm ;
For Fame, I fear, hath been too prodigal
In sounding through the world his partial praise.

SOLD. Capolin, hast thou survey'd our powers ? 50

CAPOL. Great Emperors of Egypt and Arabia,

The number of your hosts united is
A hundred <sup>17</sup> and fifty thousand horse ;
Two hundred thousand foot, brave men at
arms,

Courageous, <sup>17</sup> and full of hardiness,
As frolic as the hunters in the chase
Of savage beasts amid the desert woods.

K. of ARAB. My mind presageth fortunate success ;

And, Tamburlaine, my spirit doth foresee
The utter ruin of thy men and thee. 60

SOLD. Then rear your standards ; let your sounding drums

Direct our soldiers to Damascus' walls. —
Now, Tamburlaine, the mighty Soldan comes,
And leads with him the great Arabian King,
To dim thy baseness and obscurity,
Famous for nothing but for theft and spoil ;
To raze and scatter thy inglorious crew
Of Scythians and slavish Persians. Exeunt.

SCENE [IV] <sup>18</sup>

The banquet, and to it cometh TAMBURLAINE
all in scarlet, [ZENOCRATE,] THERIDAMAS, TECHELLES, USUMCASANE, the Turk [BAJA-ZETH in his cage, ZABINA,] with others.

TAMB. Now hang our bloody colors by Damascus,
Reflexing hues of blood upon their heads,
While they walk quivering on their city walls,

Half dead for fear before they feel my wrath.

Then let us freely banquet and carouse
Full bowls of wine unto the god of war
That means to fill your helmets full of gold,
And make Damascus spoils as rich to you
As was to Jason Colchos' golden fleece. —
And now, Bajazeth, hast thou any stomach? <sup>19</sup>

BAJ. Ay, such a stomach, cruel Tam- [11 burlaine, as I could willingly feed upon thy blood-raw heart.

TAMB. Nay, thine own is easier to come by;
pluck out that, and 't will serve thee and thy wife. — Well, Zenocrate, Techelles, and the rest, fall to your victuals.

BAJ. Fall to, and never may your meat digest.

Ye Furies, that can mask invisible,
Dive to the bottom of Avernus' pool <sup>20</sup>
And in your hands bring hellish poison up
And squeeze it in the cup of Tamburlaine.
Or, winged snakes of Lerna, cast your stings,
And leave your venoms in this tyrant's dish.

ZAB. And may this banquet prove as ominous

As Progne's to th' adulterous Thracian king,
That fed upon the substance of his child.

ZENO. My Lord, how can you <sup>20</sup> suffer
these

Outrageous curses by these slaves of yours?

TAMB. To let them see, divine Zenocrate,
I glory in the curses of my foes, <sup>31</sup>
Having the power from the imperial Heaven
To turn them all upon their proper heads.

TECH. I pray you give them leave, madam;
this speech is a goodly refreshing to them.

THER. But if his Highness would let them be fed, it would do them more good.

TAMB. Sirrah, why fall you not to? Are you so daintily brought up, you cannot eat your own flesh? <sup>40</sup>

BAJ. First, legions of devils shall tear thee in pieces.

USUM. Villain, knowest thou to whom thou speakest?

TAMB. O, let him alone. Here; eat, sir; take it from my sword's point, or I'll thrust it to thy heart.

[Bajazeth] takes it and stamps upon it.

THER. He stamps it under his feet, my Lord.

TAMB. Take it up, villain, and eat it; [49

<sup>19</sup> Appetite. Note that the comic passages which follow are in prose. They may be non-Marlovian, or the actors' corruption or amplification of original verse.

or I will make thee slice the brawns of thy arms into carbonadoes <sup>21</sup> and eat them.

USUM. Nay, 't were better he kill'd his wife, and then she shall be sure not to be starv'd, and he be provided for a month's vic-tual beforehand.

TAMB. Here is my dagger; despatch her while she is fat; for, if she live but a while longer, she will fall into a consumption with fretting, and then she will not be worth the eating. <sup>60</sup>

THER. Dost thou think that Mahomet will suffer this?

TECH. 'T is like he will when he cannot let <sup>22</sup>
it.

TAMB. Go to; fall to your meat. — What, not a bit! Belike he hath not been watered today; give him some drink.

They give him water to drink, and he flings it on the ground.

TAMB. Fast, and welcome, sir, while <sup>23</sup> hunger make you eat. — How now, Zenocrate, [69 doth not the Turk and his wife make a goodly show at a banquet?

ZENO. Yes, my Lord.

THER. Methinks 't is a great deal better than a consort <sup>24</sup> of music.

TAMB. Yet music would do well to cheer up Zenocrate. — Pray thee, tell why thou art so sad. If thou wilt have a song, the Turk shall strain his voice. But why is it?

ZENO. My Lord, to see my father's town besieg'd, <sup>79</sup>

The country wasted where myself was born,
How can it but afflict my very soul?
If any love remain in you, my Lord,
Or if my love unto your Majesty
May merit favor at your Highness' hands,
Then raise your siege from fair Damascus'
walls,

And with my father take a friendly truce.

TAMB. Zenocrate, were Egypt Jove's own land,

Yet would I with my sword make Jove to stoop.

I will confute those blind geographers
That make a triple region in the world, <sup>90</sup>
Excluding regions which I mean to trace
And with this pen <sup>25</sup> reduce them to a map,

Calling the provinces, cities, and towns,
After my name and thine, Zenocrate.
Here at Damascus will I make the point
That shall begin the perpendicular ;<sup>26</sup>
And wouldst thou have me buy thy father's
love

With such a loss? Tell me, Zenocrate!

ZENO. Honor still wait on happy Tamburlaine!
99

Yet give me leave to plead for him, my Lord.

TAMB. Content thyself: his person shall be safe

And all the friends of fair Zenocrate,
If with their lives they will be pleas'd to yield,
Or may be forc'd to make me Emperor;
For Egypt and Arabia must be mine. —
Feed, you slave! Thou mayst think thyself happy to be fed from my trencher.

BAJ. My empty stomach, full of idle heat,
Draws bloody humors<sup>27</sup> from my feeble parts,
Preserving life by hasting cruel death. 110
My veins are pale, my sinews hard and dry,
My joints benumb'd; unless I eat, I die.

ZAB. Eat, Bajazeth. Let us live in spite of them, looking<sup>28</sup> some happy power will pity and enlarge us.

TAMB. Here, Turk; wilt thou have a clean trencher?

BAJ. Ay, tyrant, and more meat.

TAMB. Soft, sir; you must be dieted; too much eating will make you surfeit. 120

THER. So it would, my Lord, specially having so small a walk and so little exercise.

Enter a second course of crowns.

TAMB. Theridamas, Techelles, and Casane, here are the cates you desire to finger, are they
not?

THER. Ay, my Lord; but none save kings must feed with these.

TECH. 'T is enough for us to see them, and for Tamburlaine only to enjoy them. 129

TAMB. Well, here is now to the Soldan of Egypt, the King of Arabia, and the Governor of Damascus. — Now take these three crowns, and pledge me, my contributory kings. I crown you here, Theridamas, King of Argier;
Techelles, King of Fez; and Usumcasane,
King of Morocco. — How say you to this,
Turk? These are not your contributory kings.

BAJ. Nor shall they long be thine, I warrant
them.

TAMB. Kings of Argier, Morocco, and of Fez,

You that have march'd with happy Tambur-laine 140

As far as from the frozen [place]<sup>29</sup> of Heaven
Unto the wat'ry morning's ruddy [bower]<sup>30</sup>
And thence by land unto the torrid zone,
Deserve these titles I endow you with
By [valor]<sup>31</sup> and by magnanimity.
Your births shall be no blemish to your fame,
For virtue<sup>32</sup> is the fount whence honor springs,
And they are worthy she investeth kings.

THER. And since your Highness hath so well vouchsaf'd, 149

If we deserve them not with higher meeds
Than erst our states and actions have retain'd,
Take them away again and make us slaves.

TAMB. Well said, Theridamas; when holy fates

Shall 'stablish me in strong Egyptia,
We mean to travel to th' anta[re]ctic pole,
Conquering the people underneath our feet,
And be renown'd as never emperors were. —
Zenocrate, I will not crown thee yet,
Until with greater honors I be grac'd.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] the GOVERNOR of DAMASCO, with three or four Citizens, and four Virgins with branches of laurel in their hands.

Gov. Still doth this man, or rather god, of
war

Batter our walls and beat our turrets down;
And to resist with longer stubbornness
Or hope of rescue from the Soldan's power,
Were but to bring our wilful overthrow
And make us desperate of our threat'ned lives.
We see his tents have now been alter'd
With terrors to the last and cruel'st hue.
His coal-black colors everywhere advanc'd
Threaten our city with a general spoil; 10
And if we should with common rites of arms
Offer our safeties to his clemency,
I fear the custom, proper<sup>2</sup> to his sword,
Which he observes as parcel of his fame,

Intending so to terrify the world,
By any innovation or remorse <sup>3</sup>
Will never be dispens'd with till our deaths.
Therefore, for these our harmless virgins'
sakes,

Whose honors and whose lives rely on him,
Let us have hope that their unspotted prayers,
Their blubbered cheeks, and hearty, humble moans, 21

Will melt his fury into some remorse,
And use us like a loving conqueror.

[1] VIRG. If humble suits or imprecations,<sup>4</sup> (Uttered with tears of wretchedness and blood
Shed from the heads and hearts of all our sex,
Some made your wives and some your children)
Might have entreated your obdurate breasts
To entertain some care of our securities
Whiles only danger beat upon our walls, 30
These more than dangerous warrants of our
death

Had never been erected as they be,
Nor you depend on such weak helps as we.

Gov. Well, lovely virgins, think our country's care,

Our love of honor, loath to be enthrall'd
To foreign powers and rough imperious yokes,
Would not with too much cowardice or fear,
Before all hope of rescue were denied,
Submit yourselves and us to servitude. 39
Therefore in that your safeties and our own,
Your honors, liberties, and lives were weigh'd
In equal care and balance with our own,
Endure as we the malice of our stars,
The wrath of Tamburlaine, and power of wars;
Or be the means the overweighing heavens
Have kept to qualify <sup>5</sup> these hot extremes,
And bring us pardon in your cheerful looks.

2 VIRG. Then here before the Majesty of
Heaven

And holy Patrons of Egyptia,
With knees and hearts submissive we entreat
Grace to our words and pity to our looks, 51
That this device may prove propitious
And through the eyes and ears of Tamburlaine
Convey events of mercy <sup>6</sup> to his heart;
Grant that these signs of victory <sup>7</sup> we yield
May bind the temples of his conquering head,
To hide the folded furrows of his brows,
And shadow his displeased countenance
With happy looks of ruth and lenity. 59
Leave us, my Lord, and loving countrymen;
What simple virgins may persuade, we will.

Gov. Farewell, sweet virgins, on whose safe return
Depends our city, liberty, and lives.
Exeunt [all but the Virgins].

SCENE II <sup>8</sup>

[To the Virgins enter] TAMBURLAINE, TECH-ELLES, THERIDAMAS, USUMCASANE, with others; TAMBURLAINE all in black and very melancholy.

TAMB. What, are the turtles <sup>9</sup> fray'd <sup>10</sup> out of their nests?

Alas, poor fools, must you be first shall feel
The sworn destruction of Damascus?
They know my custom; could they not as well
Have sent ye out when first my milk-white flags,
Through which sweet Mercy threw her gentle beams,
Reflexing them on your disdainful eyes,
As now, when fury and incensed hate Flings slaughtering terror from my coal-black tents, 9

And tells for truth submissions comes too late?

1 VIRG. Most happy King and Emperor of
the earth,

Image of honor and nobility,
For whom the powers divine have made the
world,

And on whose throne the holy Graces sit;
In whose sweet person is compris'd the sum
Of Nature's skill and heavenly majesty;
Pity our plights! O pity poor Damascus!
Pity old age, within whose silver hairs
Honor and reverence evermore have reign'd!
Pity the marriage bed, where many a lord, [20
In prime and glory of his loving joy,
Embraceth now with tears of ruth and blood
The jealous body of his fearful wife,
Whose cheeks and hearts, so punish'd with conceit

To think thy puissant, never-stayed arm
Will part their bodies, and prevent their souls
From heavens of comfort yet their age might bear,

Now wax all pale and withered to the death,
As well for grief our ruthless governor
[Hath] <sup>11</sup> thus refus'd the mercy of thy hand [30
(Whose sceptre angels kiss and Furies dread)

As for their liberties, their loves, or lives !
 O then for these, and such as we ourselves,
 For us, for infants, and for all our bloods,
 That never nourish'd thought against thy rule,
 Pity, O pity, sacred Emperor,
 The prostrate service of this wretched town,
 And take in sign thereof this gilded wreath,
 Whereto each man of rule hath given his hand,
 And wish'd, as worthy subjects, happy means
 To be investors of thy royal brows 41
 Even with the true Egyptian diadem.

TAMB. Virgins, in vain ye labor to prevent That which mine honor swears shall be perform'd.

Behold my sword ! what see you at the point ?
 [1] VIRG. Nothing but fear and fatal steel,
 my Lord.

TAMB. Your fearful minds are thick and misty then ;
 For there sits Death, there sits imperious
 Death,
 Keeping his circuit <sup>12</sup> by the slicing edge.
 But I am pleas'd you shall not see him there ;
 He now is seated on my horsemen's spears, [51
 And on their points his fleshless body feeds. —
 Techelles, straight go charge a few of them
 To charge these dames, and show my servant,
 Death,
 Sitting in scarlet on their armed spears.

OMNES. O pity us !

TAMB. Away with them, I say, and show them Death. — They take them away.
 I will not spare these proud Egyptians,
 Nor change my martial observations
 For all the wealth of Gihon's golden waves, [60
 Or for the love of Venus, would she leave
 The angry god of arms and lie with me.
 They have refus'd the offer of their lives ;
 And know my customs are as peremptory
 As wrathful planets, death, or destiny.

Re enter TECHELLES.

What, have your horsemen shown the virgins
 Death ?

TECH. They have, my Lord, and on Damascus' walls
 Have hoisted up their slaughtered carcases.

TAMB. A sight as baneful to their souls, I think,

As are Thessalian drugs or mithridate. 70
 But go, my Lords ; put the rest to the sword. —

Exeunt [all except TAMBURLAINE].

Ah, fair Zenocrate ! divine Zenocrate !
 Fair is too foul an epithet for thee,

That in thy passion,<sup>13</sup> for thy country's love,
 And fear to see thy kingly father's harm,
 With hair dishevell'd wip'st thy watery cheeks ;

And, like to Flora in her morning's pride
 Shaking her silver tresses in the air, Rain'st on the earth resolved <sup>14</sup> pearl in showers,

And sprinklest sapphires on thy shining face,
 Where Beauty, mother to the Muses, sits 81
 And comments volumes with her ivory pen,
 Taking instructions from thy flowing eyes,
 Eyes when that Ebena <sup>15</sup> steps to Heaven,
 In silence of thy solemn evening's walk,
 Making the mantle of the richest night,
 The moon, the planets, and the meteors, light ;
 There angels in their crystal armors fight
 A doubtful battle with my tempted thoughts
 For Egypt's freedom, and the Soldan's life, [90
 His life that so consumes Zenocrate ;
 Whose sorrows lay more siege unto my soul,
 Than all my army to Damascus' walls,
 And neither [Persia's] <sup>16</sup> sovereign nor the Turk

Troubled my senses with conceit of foil <sup>17</sup>
 So much by much as doth Zenocrate.
 What is beauty, saith my sufferings, then ?
 If all the pens that ever poets held
 Had fed the feeling of their masters' thoughts,
 And every sweetness that inspir'd their hearts,
 Their minds, and muses on admired themes ;
 If all the heavenly quintessence they still <sup>18</sup>
 From their immortal flowers of poesy, 103
 Wherein, as in a mirror, we perceive
 The highest reaches of a human wit ;
 If these had made one poem's period,
 And all combin'd in beauty's worthiness,
 Yet should there hover in their restless heads
 One thought, one grace, one wonder, at the least,

Which into words no virtue <sup>19</sup> can digest. 110
 But how unseemly is it for my sex,
 My discipline of arms and chivalry,
 My nature, and the terror of my name,
 To harbor thoughts effeminate and faint !
 Save only that in beauty's just applause,
 With whose instinct the soul of man is
 touch'd —

And every warrior that is rapt with love

Of fame, of valor, and of victory,
 Must needs have beauty beat on his conceits, —
 I thus conceiving and subduing both 120
 That which hath [stoop'd the temper]<sup>20</sup> of the gods,
 Even from the fiery-spangled veil of Heaven,
 To feel the [lowly]<sup>21</sup> warmth of shepherds'
     flames,
 And [watch]<sup>22</sup> in cottages of strowed [reeds],<sup>23</sup>
 Shall give the world to note, for all my birth,
 That virtue solely is the sum of glory,
 And fashions men with true nobility. —
 Who's within there?

Enter two or three.

Hath Bajazeth been fed to-day?

AN [ATTENDANT]. Ay, my Lord. 130

TAMB. Bring him forth; and let us know if the town be ransack'd. [Exeunt Attendants.]

Enter TECHELLES, THERIDAMAS, USUMCA-SANE, and others.

TECH. The town is ours, my Lord, and fresh supply
 Of conquest and of spoil is offered us.

TAMB. That's well, Techelles; what's the news?

TECH. The Soldan and the Arabian King together

March on us with such eager violence
 As if there were no way but one with us.

TAMB. No more there is not, I warrant thee, Techelles.

They bring in the Turk [and ZABINA].

THER. We know the victory is ours, my
 Lord; 140

But let us save the reverend Soldan's life,
 For fair Zenocrate that so laments his state.

TAMB. That will we chiefly see unto, Theri-damas,

For sweet Zenocrate, whose worthiness
 Deserves a conquest over every heart.
 And now, my footstool, if I lose the field,
 You hope of liberty and restitution! —
 Here let him stay, my masters, from the tents,
 Till we have made us ready for the field. —

Pray for us, Bajazeth; we are going. 150
Exeunt [all but BAJAZETH and ZABINA].

BAJ. Go, never to return with victory!
 Millions of men encompass thee about,

And gore thy body with as many wounds!
 Sharp, forked arrows light upon thy horse!
 Furies from the black Cocytus lake
 Break up the earth, and with their firebrands
 Enforce thee run upon the baneful pikes!
 Volleys of shot pierce through thy charmed skin,

And every bullet dipp'd in poisoned drugs,
 Or roaring cannons sever all thy joints, 160
 Making thee mount as high as eagles soar!

ZAB. Let all the swords and lances in the field

Stick in his breast as in their proper rooms!
 At every pore let blood come dropping forth,
 That ling'ring pains may massacre his heart
 And madness send his damned soul to hell!

BAJ. Ah, fair Zabina, we may curse his
 power,

The heavens may frown, the earth for anger
 quake,

But such a star hath influence in his sword 169
 As rules the skies and countermands the gods,
 More than Cimmerian Styx or Destiny;
 And then shall we in this detested guise,
 With shame, with hunger, and with horror
 aye

Gripping our bowels with retorqued<sup>24</sup> thoughts,
 And have no hope to end our ecstasies?

ZAB. Then is there left no Mahomet, no
 God,

No Fiend, no Fortune, nor no hope of end
 To our infamous,<sup>25</sup> monstrous slaveries!
 Gape, earth, and let the fiends infernal view
 [A]<sup>26</sup> hell as hopeless and as full of fear 180
 As are the blasted banks of Erebus,
 Where shaking ghosts with ever-howling groans

Hover about the ugly ferryman,
 To get a passage to Elysium.<sup>27</sup>

Why should we live? O, wretches, beggars, slaves!

Why live we, Bajazeth, and build up nests
 So high within the region of the air
 By living long in this oppression,
 That all the world will see and laugh to scorn
 The former triumphs of our mightiness 190
 In this obscure, infernal servitude?

BAJ. O life, more loathsome to my vexed
 thoughts

Than noisome parbreak<sup>28</sup> of the Stygian snakes,

<sup>20</sup> Old eds. stopt the tempest, certainly corrupt;
 the reading of this ed. combines guesses of Dyce and

Which fills the nooks of hell with standing
air,

Infesting all the ghosts with cureless griefs !
O dreary engines <sup>29</sup> of my loathed sight,
That sees my crown, my honor, and my name
Thrust under yoke and thralldom of a thief,
Why feed ye still on day's accursed beams
And sink not quite into my tortur'd soul? [200
You see my wife, my queen, and emperess,
Brought up and propped by the hand of Fame,
Queen of fifteen contributory queens,
Now thrown to rooms of black abjection,
Smear'd with blots of basest drudgery,
And villeiness <sup>30</sup> to shame, disdain, and misery.
Accursed Bajazeth, whose words of ruth,
(That would with pity cheer Zabina's heart,
And make our souls resolve in ceaseless tears ;)
Sharp hunger bites upon, and gripes the root
From whence the issues of my thoughts do break. 211

O poor Zabina, O my queen, my queen,
Fetch me some water for my burning breast,
To cool and comfort me with longer date ;
That in the short'ned sequel of my life
I may pour forth my soul into thine arms
With words of love, whose moaning intercourse
Hath hitherto been stay'd with wrath and hate
Of our expressless bann'd inflictions.

ZAB. Sweet Bajazeth, I will prolong thy life,
As long as any blood or spark of breath 221
Can quench or cool the torments of my grief.
She goes out.

BAJ. Now, Bajazeth, abridge thy baneful days,
And beat thy brains out of thy conquer'd head,
Since other means are all forbidden me
That may be ministers of my decay.
O highest lamp of ever-living Jove,
Accursed day, infected with my griefs,
Hide now thy stained face in endless night,
And shut the windows of the lightsome
heavens ! 230
Let ugly Darkness with her rusty coach, Engirt with tempests, wrapp'd in pitchy clouds,
Smother the earth with never-fading mists,
And let her horses from their nostrils breathe
Rebellious winds and dreadful thunderclaps,
That in this terror Tamburlaine may live,
And my pin'd soul, resolv'd in liquid [air],<sup>31</sup>
May still excruciate his tormented thoughts !
Then let the stony dart of senseless cold

Pierce through the centre of my withered
heart, 240
And make a passage for my loathed life !
He brains himself against the cage.

Re-enter ZABINA.

ZAB. What do mine eyes behold, my husband dead?
His skull all riven in twain, his brains dash'd
out?
The brains of Bajazeth, my lord and sovereign !
O Bajazeth, my husband and my lord,
O Bajazeth, O Turk, O Emperor !
Give him his liquor? Not I. Bring milk and fire, and my blood I bring him again. — Tear me in pieces ! Give me the sword with a ball of wildfire upon it. — Down with him ! Down with him ! — Go to, my child ! Away ! [251 away ! away ! Ah, save that infant ! save him, save him ! — I, even I, speak to her. — The sun was down. Streamers white, red, black, here, here, here ! — Fling the meat in his face
— Tamburlaine, Tamburlaine ! — Let the soldiers be buried. — Hell ! Death ! Tambur-laine ! Hell ! — Make ready my coach, my chair, my jewels ; I come, I come, I come !
She runs against the cage and brains herself.

[Enter] ZENOCRATE with ANIPPE.

[ZENO.] Wretched Zenocrate ! that livest to
see 260
Damascus' walls dy'd with Egyptian blood,
Thy father's subjects and thy countrymen ;
Thy streets strowed with dissevered joints of
men
And wounded bodies gasping yet for life.
But most accurs'd, to see the sun-bright troop
Of heavenly virgins and unspotted maids,
Whose looks might make the angry god of
arms
To break his sword and mildly treat of love,
On horsemen's lances to be hoisted up
And guiltlessly endure a cruel death ; 270
For every fell and stout Tartarian steed,
That stamp'd on others with their thund'ring hoofs
When all their riders charg'd their quivering spears,
Began to check the ground and rein themselves,
Gazing upon the beauty of their looks.
Ah, Tamburlaine, wert thou the cause of this
That term'st Zenocrate thy dearest love?
Whose lives were dearer to Zenocrate

Than her own life, or aught save thine own love. —

But see, another bloody spectacle ! 280
Ah, wretched eyes, the enemies of my heart,
How are ye glutted with these grievous objects,
And tell my soul more tales of bleeding ruth !
See, see, Anippe, if they breathe or no.

ANIPPE. No breath, nor sense, nor motion in them both ;
Ah, madam, this their slavery hath enforc'd,
And ruthless cruelty of Tamburlaine.

ZENO. Earth, cast up fountains from thy entrails,<sup>32</sup>
And wet thy cheeks for their untimely deaths !
Shake with their weight in sign of fear and grief ! 290

Blush, Heaven, that gave them honor at their birth

And let them die a death so barbarous.
Those that are proud of fickle empery
And place their chiefest good in earthly pomp,
Behold the Turk and his great Emperess !
Ah, Tamburlaine, my love, sweet Tambur-
laine,

That fights for sceptres and for slippery
crowns,

Behold the Turk and his great Emperess !
Thou, that in conduct of thy happy stars Sleep'st every night with conquest on thy brows, 300

And yet wouldst shun the wavering turns of
war,

In fear and feeling of the like distress,
Behold the Turk and his great Emperess !
Ah, mighty Jove and holy Mahomet,
Pardon my love ! O, pardon his contempt
Of earthly fortune and respect of pity,
And let not conquest, ruthlessly pursu'd,
Be equally against his life incens'd
In this great Turk and hapless Emperess !
And pardon me that was not mov'd with ruth
To see them live so long in misery ! 311
Ah, what may chance to thee, Zenocrate ?

ANIPPE. Madam, content yourself, and be resolv'd<sup>33</sup>

Your love hath Fortune so at his command,
That she shall stay and turn her wheel no

Enter [PHILEMUS,] a Messenger.

ZENO. What other heavy news now brings

<sup>33</sup> Assured.

PHIL. Madam, your father, and th' Arabian
King,

The first affecter<sup>34</sup> of your excellence, 320
Comes now, as Turnus 'gainst Æneas did,
Armed with lance into the Egyptian fields,
Ready for battle 'gainst my Lord, the King.

ZENO. Now shame and duty, love and fear, presents

A thousand sorrows to my martyred soul.
Whom should I wish the fatal victory,
When my poor pleasures are divided thus
And rack'd by duty from my cursed heart ?
My father and my first-betrothed love 329
Must fight against my life and present love ;
Wherein the change I use condemns my faith,
And makes my deeds infamous through the
world.

But as the gods, to end the Troyans' toil,
Prevented Turnus of Lavinia
And fatally enrich'd Æneas' love,
So, for a final issue to my griefs,
To pacify my country and my love
Must Tamburlaine by their resistless powers
With virtue of a gentle victory
Conclude a league of honor to my hope ; 340
Then, as the Powers divine have preordain'd,
With happy safety of my father's life
Send like defence of fair Arabia.

*They sound to the battle : and TAM-BURLAINE enjoys the victory. After,
[the KING OF] ARABIA enters wounded.*

K. of ARAB. What cursed power guides the murdering hands
Of this infamous tyrant's soldiers ;
That no escape may save their enemies,
Nor fortune keep themselves from victory ?
Lie down, Arabia, wounded to the death,
And let Zenocrate's fair eyes behold
That, as for her thou bear'st these wretched
arms, 350

Even so for her thou diest in these arms,
Leaving thy blood for witness of thy love.

ZENO. Too dear a witness for such love, my
Lord.

Behold Zenocrate, the cursed object,
Whose fortunes never mastered her griefs ;
Behold her wounded, in conceit, for thee,
As much as thy fair body is for me.

K. of ARAB. Then shall I die with full contented heart,
Having beheld divine Zenocrate, 359
Whose sight with joy would take away my life
As now it bringeth sweetness to my wound,

<sup>34</sup> Lover.

If I had not been wounded as I am.
 Ah, that the deadly pangs I suffer now
 Would lend an hour's license to my tongue,
 To make discourse of some sweet accidents
 Have chanc'd thy merits in this worthless bondage ;

And that I might be privy to the state
 Of thy deserv'd contentment, and thy love ;
 But, making now a virtue of thy sight
 To drive all sorrow from my fainting soul, 370
 Since death denies me further cause of joy,
 Depriv'd of care, my heart with comfort dies,
 Since thy desired hand shall close mine eyes.

[He dies.]

*Re-enter TAMBURLAINE leading the SOLDAN, TECHELLES, THERIDAMAS, USUMCASANE, with
 others.*

TAMB. Come, happy father of Zenocrate,
 A title higher than thy Soldan's name ;
 Though my right hand have thus enthralled
 thee,

Thy princely daughter here shall set thee free ;
 She that hath calm'd the fury of my sword,
 Which had ere this been bath'd in streams of
 blood

As vast and deep as Euphrates<sup>35</sup> or Nile. 380
 ZENO. O sight thrice welcome to my joyful
 soul,

To see the King, my father, issue safe
 From dangerous battle of my conquering love !

SOLD. Well met, my only dear Zenocrate,
 Though with the loss of Egypt and my crown.

TAMB. 'T was I, my Lord, that gat the victory,

And therefore grieve not at your overthrow,
 Since I shall render all into your hands,
 And add more strength to your dominions
 Than ever yet confirm'd th' Egyptian crown.
 The god of war resigns his room to me, 391
 Meaning to make me general of the world.
 Jove, viewing me in arms, looks pale and wan, Fearing my power should pull him from his throne.

Where'er I come the Fatal Sisters sweat,
 And grisly Death, by running to and fro,
 To do their ceaseless homage to my sword ;
 And here in Afric, where it seldom rains,
 Since I arriv'd with my triumphant host,
 Have swelling clouds, drawn from wide-gasping wounds, 400

Been oft resolv'd in bloody purple showers,
 A meteor that might terrify the earth
 And make it quake at every drop it drinks.

<sup>35</sup> Accented on first syllable here.

Millions of souls sit on the banks of Styx,
 Waiting the back return of Charon's boat ;
 Hell and Elysium<sup>36</sup> swarm with ghosts of men
 That I have sent from sundry foughten fields,
 To spread my fame through hell and up to Heaven.

And see, my Lord, a sight of strange import,
 Emperors and kings lie breathless at my feet :
 The Turk and his great Emperess, as it seems,
 Left to themselves while we were at the fight,
 Have desperately despatch'd their slavish
 lives ; 413

With them Arabia, too, hath left his life —
 All sights of power to grace my victory !
 And such are objects fit for Tamburlaine ;
 Wherein, as in a mirror, may be seen
 His honor, that consists in shedding blood,
 When men presume to manage arms with him.

SOLD. Mighty hath God and Mahomet made thy hand, 420

Renowned Tamburlaine, to whom all kings
 Of force must yield their crowns and emperies ;
 And I am pleas'd with this my overthrow,
 If, as befits a person of thy state,
 Thou hast with honor us'd Zenocrate.

TAMB. Her state and person wants no pomp, you see ;

And for all blot of foul inconstancy
 I record Heaven her heavenly self is clear.
 Then let me find no further time to grace 429
 Her princely temples with the Persian crown.
 But here these kings that on my fortunes wait,
 And have been crown'd for proved worthiness,
 Even by this hand that shall establish them,
 Shall now, adjoining all their hands with mine,
 Invest her here my Queen of Persia.

What saith the noble Soldan and Zenocrate ?

SOLD. I yield with thanks and protestations
 Of endless honor to thee for her love.

TAMB. Then doubt I not but fair Zenocrate
 Will soon consent to satisfy us both. 440

ZENO. Else should I much forget myself, my
 Lord.

THER. Then let us set the crown upon her head,

That long hath ling'ring for so high a seat.

TECH. My hand is ready to perform the deed,

For now her marriage time shall work us rest.

USUM. And here's the crown, my Lord ;
 help set it on.

TAMB. Then sit thou down, divine Zeno-
 crate ;

And here we crown thee Queen of Persia

THE TRAGICALL

History of D. Faustus.

As it hath bene Acted by the Right Honorable the Earle of Nottingham his servants.

Written by Ch. Marl.

LONDON

Printed by V. S. for Thomas Bushnell. 1604.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

As Tamburlaine aspired to the world's mastery by force of arms, Faustus sought it through knowledge; thus Marlowe exhibits in this play another aspect of the Renaissance will to freedom. In its original form Doctor Faustus must have been a sublime poem, and it still retains what Tamburlaine lacks, scenes of primarily dramatic power. Unfortunately, though the play was probably produced about 1589 (Boas inclines to 1592 but minimizes the significance of a ballad on Faustus licensed in 1589 and presumably inspired by the play), the first edition appeared only in 1604. By that time, eleven years after the author's death, the piece had been mangled by stage alterations.

In 1602 Henslowe, whose company, the Admiral's (or Nottingham's) Men, acted it, paid £4 to William Bird and Samuel Rowley for additions. And doubtless, both before and after their work, there was fairly constant tampering. The Quarto of 1616 gives us a version widely different from the first edition, and the Quarto of 1663 contains grotesque additions partly adapted from The Jew of Malta. The tendency of the early stage was to treat the Devil as a comic character; and as new material was successively introduced for the low comedians, the original was repeatedly pared down to make room for it. Doctor Faustus, then, is to be approached like a temple of the antique world; we are the losers if we allow partial collapse, inartistic restoration, and unauthentic and impudent addition to obscure the surviving traces of its beauty. (For a sketch of the probable process of corruption see Percy Simpson's article in Essays and Studies by Members of the English Association, VII, 143-155.) Aside from interpolation and excision, the most notable changes are the mangling of metre and the substitution of prose paraphrases for the original verse.

Marlowe's source was evidently not the German Historia Von D. Johann Fausten (Frankfurt am Main, 1587), but the not very faithful English translation of it, the Historie of Doctor Iohn Faustus (London, 1592), which Marlowe (unless we are to date the play after its appearance) must have read in MS or in an earlier edition. The moral application of the story is a prominent feature of the source, which also shows an anti-Papal bias. The play closely follows selected materials of the English Faust Book; but, as Boas remarks, "it is the questing spirit of the youthful Marlowe that transfigures it." The core of the legend is the compact with the Devil and the consequent retribution. The interval of twenty years is replete in the Faust Book with a great variety of experiences, including the episodes with the Pope, the horse-courser, and the clowns. It is generally believed that Marlowe's soaring pen was incapable of the comic scenes and that a collaborator furnished them. Marlowe was clearly more interested in the aspiration of Faustus, and with that fact in mind the reader must attempt as best he may to hold in his mind's eye the noble outlines of the original structure. "How greatly," said Goethe, "is it all planned."

Whatever the date of the original production, Henslowe records performances of Doctor Faustus by the Admiral's Men, with Edward Alleyn in the title rôle, in 1594-97. It continued to be acted, in more and more degraded versions, till well into the eighteenth century. The Case edition of this play is the work of F. S. Boas (1932).<sup>1</sup> Among other editions are Hermann Breymann's parallel texts of Qq 1604 and 1616 (vol. II of the Historisch-Kritische Ausgabe of Marlowe's Works, 1889); modernized editions by A. W. Ward (fourth edition, 1901), and I. Gollancz (1897); and a facsimile of Q 1604 by J. S. Farmer (1920). Professor Brooke (Philological Quarterly, January, 1933) has supplemented these editions with several valuable bibliographical and exegetical notes.

Faustus was first printed, in quarto, in 1604 (reprinted 1609, 1611). In 1616 (reprinted 1619, 1620, 1624, 1628, 1631) a new version added about 550 lines and rewrote much of the play. Since Q 1616 evidently rests in part, not on an earlier quarto, but on independent MS authority, an extremely difficult textual problem is presented. Boas thinks Q 1616 more authentic; but the present edition is based on Breymann's and Brooke's reprints of Q 1604, though with indicated restorations and rearrangements from Q 1616 as given by them; for Q 1604 presents a badly cut and garbled stage version. Q 1616, on the contrary, constantly betrays, in the opinion of the present editor, the hand of an "improver", who smooths out difficult expressions; and it contains a number of new passages that are certainly not Marlovian.

As for the authorship of the version of 1604, Boas's conclusions seem reasonable and may be applied as follows. Marlowe probably wrote the first two acts, through II, ii (the episode of the Seven Deadly Sins is a possible exception); the chorus and the next fifty-three lines of Act III; Act IV, chorus, i, ii (1-9), iii; and Act V. The prose comic scenes may be a collaborator's, subsequently modified, in any case, by the steady pressure of theatrical conditions.

FAUST. Settle thy studies, Faustus, and begin

Bid [ὅν καὶ μὴ ὅν]<sup>18</sup> farewell, Galen come :
Seeing *Ubi desinit philosophus, ibi incipit

Be a physician, Faustus, heap up gold,
And be eterniz'd for some wondrous cure.
Summum bonum medicinæ sanitas :
The end of physic is our body's health.
Why, Faustus, hast thou not attain'd that

Is not thy common talk sound Aphorisms? <sup>20</sup>
Are not thy bills <sup>21</sup> hung up as monuments, 20
Whereby whole cities have escap'd the plague,
And thousand desp'rate maladies been eas'd?
Yet art thou still but Faustus and a man.
Wouldst thou make man <sup>22</sup> to live eternally,
Or, being dead, raise them to life again?
Then this profession were to be esteem'd.
Physic, farewell. Where is Justinian?

Brooke suggests that "the German Valdes" is a complimentary title for a mythical character, in allusion to the sixteenth-century Spanish humanist, Juan de Valdes.

And chase the Prince of Parma <sup>44</sup> from our
land,

And reign sole king of all our provinces;
Yea, stranger engines for the brunt of war
Than was the fiery keel <sup>45</sup> at Antwerp's bridge,
I'll make my servile spirits to invent
Come, German Valdes and Cornelius,
And make me blest with your sage conference.

berge*. Brooke suggests that Marlowe thought of the university town as the capital of Württemberg.

bridge regulations which forbade the wearing of silk by the students.

<sup>44</sup> The Spanish governor-general (1579-1592) of the Netherlands, nominally a part of the Empire.

which damaged Parma's bridge at the siege of Antwerp.

Enter VALDES and CORNELIUS.

Valdes, sweet Valdes, and Cornelius, Know that your words have won me at the last 100

To practise magic and concealed arts;
Yet not your words only, but mine own fantasy,

That will receive no object; <sup>46</sup> for my head
But ruminates on necromantic skill.

Philosophy is odious and obscure;

Both law and physic are for petty wits;

Divinity is basest of the three,

Unpleasant, harsh, contemptible, and vild; <sup>47</sup>

'T is magic, magic, that hath ravish'd me.

Then, gentle friends, aid me in this attempt;

And I that have with concise syllogisms 111

Gravell'd the pastors of the German church,

And made the flow'ring pride of Wittenberg
Swarm to my problems, <sup>48</sup> as the infernal spirits

On sweet Musæus, when he came to hell,

Will be as cunning as Agrippa was,

Whose shadows <sup>49</sup> made all Europe honor
him.

VALD. Faustus, these books, thy wit, and our experience

Shall make all nations to canonize us.

As Indian Moors <sup>50</sup> obey their Spanish lords,

So shall the subjects <sup>51</sup> of every element 121

Be always serviceable to us three;

Like lions shall they guard us when we please;

Like Almain rutters <sup>52</sup> with their horsemen's staves,

Or Lapland giants, trotting by our sides;

Sometimes like women or unwedded maids,

Shadowing <sup>53</sup> more beauty in their airy <sup>54</sup>
brows

Than in [the] <sup>55</sup> white breasts of the Queen of
Love:

[From] <sup>56</sup> Venice shall they drag huge argosies, <sup>57</sup>

And from America the golden fleece 130

<sup>46</sup> I.e., my own fancy, which will entertain no regular academic subject — nor anything else but necromancy. Brooke differs from mod. eds., who insert the semicolon and omit the old texts' comma after "head"; but the antithesis is between "words" and "fantasy."

That yearly stuffs <sup>58</sup> old Philip's treasury ;
If learned Faustus will be resolute.

FAUST. Valdes, as resolute am I in this
As thou to live ; therefore object it not.

CORN. The miracles that magic will perform

Will make thee vow to study nothing else.

He that is grounded in astrology,
Enrich'd with tongues, well seen <sup>59</sup> [in] <sup>60</sup> minerals,

Hath all the principles magic doth require.

Then doubt not, Faustus, but to be renown'd,

And more frequented for this mystery 141

Than heretofore the Delphian oracle.

The spirits tell me they can dry the sea

And fetch the treasure of all foreign wracks,

Ay, all the wealth that our forefathers hid

Within the massy entrails of the earth ;

Then tell me, Faustus, what shall we three want ?

FAUST. Nothing, Cornelius. O, this cheers
my soul !

Come, show me some demonstrations magical,

That I may conjure in some lusty <sup>61</sup> grove,

And have these joys in full possession. 151

VALD. Then haste thee to some solitary grove,

And bear wise Bacon's <sup>62</sup> and Albanus' <sup>63</sup>
works,

The Hebrew Psalter and New Testament ;

And whatsoever else is requisite

We will inform thee ere our conference cease.

CORN. Valdes, first let him know the words of art ;

And then, all other ceremonies learn'd,

Faustus may try his cunning by himself.

VALD. First I'll instruct thee in the rudiments, 160

And then wilt thou be perfecter than I.

FAUST. Then come and dine with me, and after meat

We'll canvass every quiddity <sup>64</sup> thereof ;

For ere I sleep I'll try what I can do :

This night I'll conjure though I die therefore.

Exeunt.

Enter two Scholars.

1 SCHOL. I wonder what's become of Faustus, that was wont to make our schools ring with sic probo ? <sup>66</sup>

2 SCHOL. That shall we know, for see here comes his boy.

Enter WAGNER.

1 SCHOL. How now, sirrah ! Where's thy master ?

WAG. God in Heaven knows.

2 SCHOL. Why, dost not thou know ?

WAG. Yes, I know ; but that follows not. 10

1 SCHOL. Go to, sirrah ; leave your jesting, and tell us where he is.

WAG. That follows not necessary by force of argument, that you, being licentiate, <sup>67</sup> should stand upon 't ; therefore acknowledge your error and be attentive.

2 SCHOL. Why, didst thou not say thou knew'st ?

WAG. Have you any witness on 't ?

1 SCHOL. Yes, sirrah, I heard you. 20

WAG. Ask my fellow if I be a thief.

2 SCHOL. Well, you will not tell us ?

WAG. Yes, sir, I will tell you ; yet if you were not dunces, you would never ask me such a question ; for is not he corpus naturale ? <sup>68</sup> and is not that mobile ? Then wherefore should you ask me such a question ? But that I am by nature phlegmatic, slow to wrath, and prone to lechery — to love, I would say, — it were not for you to come within forty foot [30 of the place of execution, <sup>69</sup> although I do not doubt to see you both hang'd the next sessions. Thus having triumph'd over you, I will set my countenance like a precisian, <sup>70</sup> and begin to speak thus :—Truly, my dear brethren, my master is within at dinner, with Valdes and Cornelius, as this wine, if it could speak, it would inform your Worships ; and so the Lord bless you, preserve you, and keep you, my dear brethren, my dear brethren. Exit. 40

1 SCHOL. O, but I fear me nothing can reclaim him.

2 SCHOL. Yet let us try what we can do. 50
Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>72</sup>

Enter FAUSTUS to conjure.

FAUST. Now that the gloomy shadow of the earth,<sup>73</sup>

Longing to view Orion's drizzling look,
Leaps from th' antar[c]tic world unto the sky

And dims the welkin with her pitchy breath,
Faustus, begin thine incantations,
And try if devils will obey thy hest,
Seeing thou hast pray'd and sacrific'd to them.

Within this circle is Jehovah's name,
Forward and backward anagrammatiz'd,
The breviated names of holy saints, 10
Figures of every adjunct to <sup>74</sup> the Heavens,
And characters of signs and erring stars,<sup>75</sup>
By which the spirits are enforc'd to rise.
Then fear not, Faustus, but be resolute,
And try the uttermost magic can perform.

Sint mihi Dei Acherontis propitii! Valeat numen triplex Iehovae! Ignei, aerii, aquatani <sup>76</sup>
spiritus, salve! Orientis Princeps Belzebub, inferni ardentis monarcha, et Demogorgon, propitiamus vos, ut appareat et surgat Mephis- [20

<sup>77</sup> Conj. Schröder; old eds. quod tumeraris. For Mephistophilis of the earlier eds., Qq 1616 et seq. have Mephistophilis Dragon. Boas conj. Enter Dragon above. This is unlikely, but there may have been a note anticipatory of some feature of the entrance of "a Devil" immediately after this speech. The whole question is discussed by Root, Englische Studien, XLIII, 144-149.

vota nostra, ipse nunc surgat nobis dicatus <sup>78</sup>

Enter [MEPHISTOPHILIS,] <sup>80</sup> a Devil.

I charge thee to return and change thy shape;
Thou art too ugly to attend on me.
Go, and return an old Franciscan friar;
That holy shape becomes a devil best.

Exit Devil.

I see there's virtue in my heavenly words;
Who would not be proficient in this art? 31
How pliant is this Mephistophilis,
Full of obedience and humility!
Such is the force of magic and my spells.
[Now,] <sup>81</sup> Faustus, thou art conjuror laureate;
Thou canst command great Mephistophilis:
Quin regis Mephistophilis fratris imagine. <sup>82</sup>

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS [like a Franciscan Friar].

MEPH. Now, Faustus, what wouldst thou have me do?

FAUST. I charge thee wait upon me whilst I live,
To do whatever Faustus shall command, 40
Be it to make the moon drop from her sphere
Or the ocean to overwhelm the world.

MEPH. I am a servant to great Lucifer,
And may not follow thee without his leave;
No more than he commands must we perform.

FAUST. Did he not charge thee to appear to me?

MEPH. No, I came now hither of mine own accord.

FAUST. Did not my conjuring speeches raise thee? Speak!

MEPH. That was the cause, but yet per accidens;

For when we hear one rack <sup>83</sup> the name of God, 50

<sup>79</sup> Unto me be the gods of Acheron propitious. May the triple name of Jehovah prevail. Spirits of fire, air, and water, hail! Belzebub, Prince of the East, Sovereign of burning Hell, and Demogorgon, we propitiate you, that Mephistophilis may appear and rise. Why delayest thou? By Jehovah, Gehenna, and the holy water which now I sprinkle, and the sign of the cross which now I make, and by our prayer, may Mephistophilis, by us summoned, now arise.

Abjure the Scriptures and his Savior Christ,
We fly, in hope to get his glorious soul ;
Nor will we come, unless he use such means
Whereby he is in danger to be damn'd.
Therefore the shortest cut for conjuring
Is stoutly to abjure the Trinity,
And pray devoutly to the Prince of Hell.

FAUST. So Faustus hath Already done, and holds this principle :
There is no chief but only Belzebub, 60
To whom Faustus doth dedicate himself.
This word " damnation " terrifies not him,
For he confounds hell in <sup>84</sup> Elysium ;
His ghost be with the old philosophers !
But, leaving these vain trifles of men's souls,
Tell me what is that Lucifer, thy lord ?

MEPH. Arch-regent and commander of all spirits.

FAUST. Was not that Lucifer an angel once ?

MEPH. Yes, Faustus, and most dearly lov'd of God.

FAUST. How comes it then that he is prince of devils ? 70

MEPH. Oh, by aspiring pride and insolence,
For which God threw him from the face of Heaven.

FAUST. And what are you that live with Lucifer ?

MEPH. Unhappy spirits that fell with Lucifer,
Conspir'd against our God with Lucifer,
And are for ever damn'd with Lucifer.

FAUST. Where are you damn'd ?

MEPH. In hell.

FAUST. How comes it then that thou art out of hell ? 79

MEPH. Why this is hell, nor am I out of it !
Think'st thou that I, who saw the face of God,
And tasted the eternal joys of Heaven,
Am not tormented with ten thousand hells
In being depriv'd of everlasting bliss ?
O Faustus, leave these frivolous demands,
Which strike a terror to my fainting soul.

FAUST. What, is great Mephistophilis so passionate <sup>85</sup>
For being depriv'd of the joys of Heaven ?
Learn thou of Faustus manly fortitude,
And scorn those joys thou never shalt possess.
Go bear [these] <sup>86</sup> tidings to great Lucifer : 91
Seeing Faustus hath incurr'd eternal death
By desp'rate thoughts against Jove's <sup>87</sup> deity,

Say he surrenders up to him his soul,
So <sup>88</sup> he will spare him four-and-twenty years,
Letting him live in all voluptuousness,
Having thee ever to attend on me,
To give me whatsoever I shall ask,
To tell me whatsoever I demand,
To slay mine enemies, and aid my friends, 100
And always be obedient to my will.
Go, and return to mighty Lucifer,
And meet me in my study at midnight,
And then resolve <sup>89</sup> me of thy master's mind.

MEPH. I will, Faustus. Exit.

FAUST. Had I as many souls as there be stars,

I'd give them all for Mephistophilis.
By him I'll be great emp'r of the world,
And make a bridge through <sup>90</sup> the moving air,
To pass the ocean with a band of men ; 110
I'll join the hills that bind the Afric shore,
And make that [country] <sup>91</sup> continent to <sup>92</sup> Spain,
And both contributory to my crown.
The Emperor shall not live but by my leave,
Nor any potentate of Germany.
Now that I have obtain'd what I desire,
I'll live in speculation <sup>93</sup> of this art
Till Mephistophilis return again. Exit.

[SCENE IV] <sup>94</sup>

Enter WAGNER and the Clown.

WAG. Sirrah boy, come hither.

CLOWN. How, " boy " ! Swowns, <sup>95</sup> " boy " !
I hope you have seen many boys with such pickadevaunts <sup>96</sup> as I have. " Boy," quotha !

WAG. Tell me, sirrah, hast thou any comings in ?

CLOWN. Ay, and goings out too. You may see else.

WAG. Alas, poor slave ! See how poverty jesteth in his nakedness ! The villain is [10 bare and out of service, and so hungry that I know he would give his soul to the Devil for a shoulder of mutton, though it were blood-raw.

CLOWN. How ? My soul to the Devil for a shoulder of mutton, though 't were blood-raw !
Not so, good friend. By'r Lady, I had need

WAG. Well, wilt thou serve me, and I'll make thee go like Qui mihi discipulus?<sup>97</sup> 20

CLOWN. How, in verse?

WAG. No, sirrah; in beaten silk<sup>98</sup> and stavesacre.<sup>99</sup>

CLOWN. How, how, Knave's acre! 100 Ay, I thought that was all the land his father left him. Do ye hear? I would be sorry to rob you of your living.

WAG. Sirrah, I say in stavesacre.

CLOWN. Oho! Oho! Stavesacre! Why, then, belike, if I were your man I should be full of vermin. 31

WAG. So thou shalt, whether thou beest with me or no. But, sirrah, leave your jesting, and bind yourself presently unto me for seven years, or I'll turn all the lice about thee into familiars, and they shall tear thee in pieces.

CLOWN. Do you hear, sir? You may save that labor; they are too familiar with me already. Swowns! they are as bold with my flesh as if they had paid for my meat and [40 drink.

WAG. Well, do you hear, sirrah? Hold, take these guilders.

CLOWN. Gridirons! what be they?

WAG. Why, French crowns.

CLOWN. Mass, but for the name of French crowns, a man were as good have as many English counters. And what should I do with these?

WAG. Why, now, sirrah, thou art at an [50 hour's warning, whensoever or wheresoever the Devil shall fetch thee.

CLOWN. No, no. Here, take your gridirons again.

WAG. Truly, I'll none of them.

CLOWN. Truly, but you shall.

WAG.<sup>101</sup> Bear witness I gave them him.

CLOWN. Bear witness I give them you again.

WAG. Well, I will cause two devils presently to fetch thee away — Baliol<sup>102</sup> and Belcher. 61

WAG. Baliol and Belcher! (Enter two Devils and the Clown runs up and down crying.) Spirits, away! Exeunt [Devils]. [70

CLOWN. What, are they gone? A vengeance on them; they have vild long nails! There was a he-devil, and a she-devil; I'll tell you how you shall know them: all he-devils has horns, and all she-devils has clifts and cloven feet.

WAG. Well, sirrah, follow me.

CLOWN. But, do you hear — if I should serve you, would you teach me to raise up Banios and Belcheos? 80

WAG. I will teach thee to turn thyself to anything; to a dog, or a cat, or a mouse, or a rat, or anything.

CLOWN. How? a Christian fellow to a dog or a cat, a mouse, or a rat? No, no, sir; if you turn me into anything, let it be in the likeness of a little pretty frisking flea, that I may be here and there and everywhere. O, I'll tickle the pretty wenches' plackets<sup>105</sup>; I'll be amongst them, i' faith. 90

WAG. Well, sirrah, come.

CLOWN. But, do you hear, Wagner?

WAG. How! — Baliol and Belcher!

CLOWN. O Lord! I pray, sir, let Banio and Belcher go sleep.

WAG. Villain, call me Master Wagner, and let thy left eye be diametarily fix'd upon my right heel, with quasi vestigias nostras institere.<sup>106</sup> Exit.

CLOWN. God forgive me, he speaks [100 Dutch fustian!<sup>107</sup> Well, I'll follow him; I'll serve him; that's flat. Exit.

[ACT II — SCENE I]

Enter FAUSTUS in his study.

FAUST. Now, Faustus, must Thou needs be damn'd,<sup>1</sup> and canst thou not be saved!

What boots it then to think of God or Heaven? Away with such vain fancies, and despair Despair in God, and trust in Belzebub.

Now go not backward; no, Faustus, be resolute.
Why waverest thou? O, something soundeth in mine ears,

"Abjure this magic; turn to God again."

Ay, and Faustus will turn to God again.

To God? — He loves thee not; 10

The God thou servest is thine own appetite,

Wherein is fix'd the love of Belzebub;

To him I'll build an altar and a church,

And offer lukewarm blood of newborn babes.

Enter Good Angel and Evil [Angel].

G. ANG. Sweet Faustus, leave that execrable
art.

[E. ANG. Go forward, Faustus, in that famous art.<sup>2</sup>]

FAUST. Contrition, prayer, repentance!
What of them?

G. ANG. O, they are means to bring thee unto Heaven.

E. ANG. Rather illusions, fruits of lunacy,
That makes men foolish that do trust them
most. 20

G. ANG. Sweet Faustus, think of Heaven, and heavenly things.

E. ANG. No, Faustus, think of honor and<sup>3</sup> wealth. Exeunt [Angels].

FAUST. Of wealth!

Why, the signiory of Emden<sup>4</sup> shall be mine.

When Mephistophilis shall stand by me,

What God can hurt thee, Faustus? Thou art
safe;

Cast<sup>5</sup> no more doubts. Come, Mephistophilis,

And bring glad tidings from great Lucifer! —

Is 't not midnight? — Come, Mephistophilis:
Veni, veni, Mephistophile!

Enter MEPHISTOPHILIS.

Now tell [me],<sup>6</sup> what says Lucifer, thy lord? 30

MEPH. That I shall wait on Faustus while [he lives],<sup>7</sup>

So<sup>8</sup> he will buy my service with his soul.

FAUST. Already Faustus hath hazarded that for thee.

MEPH. But, Faustus, thou must bequeath
it solemnly

And write a deed of gift with thine own blood,
For that security craves great Lucifer.

If thou deny it, I will back to hell.

FAUST. Stay, Mephistophilis! and tell me what good

Will my soul do thy lord.

MEPH. Enlarge his kingdom.

FAUST. Is that the reason [why]<sup>9</sup> he tempts us thus? 40

MEPH. Solamen miseris socios habuisse doloris.<sup>10</sup>

FAUST. [Why],<sup>11</sup> have you any pain, that tortures others?

MEPH. As great as have the human souls of
men.

But tell me, Faustus, shall I have thy soul?

And I will be thy slave, and wait on thee,

And give thee more than thou hast wit to ask.

FAUST. Ay, Mephistophilis, I give it thee.

MEPH. Then, [Faustus],<sup>12</sup> stab thine arm courageously,

And bind thy soul that at some certain day

Great Lucifer may claim it as his own; 50

And then be thou as great as Lucifer.

FAUST. Lo, Mephistophilis, for love of thee

I cut mine arm, and with my proper blood

Assure my soul to be great Lucifer's,

Chief lord and regent of perpetual night.

View here the blood that trickles from mine arm,

And let it be propitious for my wish.

MEPH. But, Faustus, thou must

Write it in manner of a deed of gift.

FAUST. Ay, so I will. [Writes.] But, Mephistophilis, 60

My blood congeals, and I can write no more.

MEPH. I'll fetch thee fire to dissolve it straight. Exit.

FAUST. What might the staying of my blood portend?

Is it unwilling I should write this bill?

Why streams it not that I may write afresh?

"Faustus gives to thee his soul." Ah, there it stay'd.

Why shouldst thou not? Is not thy soul thine own?

Then write again, "Faustus gives to thee his
soul."

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with a chafer of coals.

MEPH. Here's fire. Come, Faustus, set it<sup>13</sup> on.

FAUST. So; now the blood begins to clear
again; 70

<sup>10</sup> I.e., misery loves company.

Now will I make an end immediately. [Writes.]

MEPH. [aside] O, what will not I do to obtain his soul?

FAUST. Consummatum est: this bill is ended,

And Faustus hath bequeath'd his soul to Lucifer.

But what is this inscription on mine arm?

Homo, fuge! Whither should I fly?

If unto God, he'll throw thee down to hell.

My senses are deceiv'd; here's nothing writ! —

I see it plain; here in this place is writ

Homo, fuge! Yet shall not Faustus fly. 80

MEPH. [aside] I'll fetch him somewhat to delight his mind. Exit.

Re-enter [MEPHISTOPHILIS] with Devils, giving crowns and rich apparel to FAUSTUS, and dance, and then depart.

FAUST. Speak, Mephistophilis; what means this show?

MEPH. Nothing, Faustus, but to delight thy mind withal,

And to show thee what magic can perform.

FAUST. But may I raise up spirits when I please?

MEPH. Ay, Faustus, and do greater things than these.

FAUST. Then there's enough for a thousand souls.

Here, Mephistophilis, receive this scroll,

A deed of gift of body and of soul;

But yet conditionally that thou perform 90
All articles prescrib'd between us both.

MEPH. Faustus, I swear by hell and Lucifer
To effect all promises between us made.

FAUST. Then hear me read them: "On these conditions following. First, that Faustus may be a spirit in form and substance. Secondly, that Mephistophilis shall be his servant, and at his command. Thirdly, that Mephistophilis shall do for him and bring him whatsoever. Fourthly, that he shall be in [100 his chamber or house invisible. Lastly, that he shall appear to the said John Faustus, at all times, in what form or shape soever he please. I, John Faustus, of Wittenberg, Doctor, by these presents do give both body and soul to Lucifer, Prince of the East, and his minister, Mephistophilis; and furthermore grant unto them, that four-and-twenty years being expired, the articles above written inviolate, full power to fetch or carry the said John [110 Faustus, body and soul, flesh, blood, or goods, into their habitation wheresoever. By me, John Faustus."

MEPH. Speak, Faustus; do you deliver this as your deed?

FAUST. Ay, take it, and the Devil give thee good on 't.

MEPH. Now, Faustus, ask what thou wilt.

FAUST. First will I question with thee about hell.

Tell me, where is the place that men call hell?

MEPH. Under the Heavens.

FAUST. Ay, [so are all things else;] <sup>14</sup> but whereabout? 120

MEPH. Within the bowels of these elements, Where we are tortur'd and remain for ever;

Hell has no limits, nor is circumscrib'd

In one self place; for where we are is hell,

And where hell is [there] <sup>14</sup> must we ever be;

And, to conclude, when all the world dissolves,
And every creature shall be purified,

All places shall be hell that is not Heaven.

FAUST. Come, I think hell's a fable.

MEPH. Ay, think so still, till experience change thy mind. 130

FAUST. Why, think'st thou then that Faustus shall be damn'd?

MEPH. Ay, of necessity; for here's the scroll
Wherein thou hast given thy soul to Lucifer.

FAUST. Ay, and body too; but what of that?
Think'st thou that Faustus is so fond <sup>15</sup> to imagine

That after this life there is any pain?

Tush! these are trifles, and mere old wives' tales!

MEPH. But, Faustus, I am an instance to prove the contrary,

For I am damn'd, and am now in hell.

FAUST. How! now in hell! 140

Nay, an this be hell, I'll willingly be damn'd here;

What, <sup>16</sup> walking, disputing, etc?

But, leaving off this, let me have a wife,

The fairest maid in Germany;

For I am wanton and lascivious,

And cannot live without a wife.

MEPH. How! a wife?

I prithee, Faustus, talk not of a wife.

FAUST. Nay, sweet Mephistophilis, fetch me one, for I will have one.

MEPH. Well, thou wilt have one. Sit there till I come; 150

I'll fetch thee a wife in the Devil's name.

Re-enter [MEPHISTOPHILIS] with a Devil dress'd like a woman, with fireworks.

MEPH. Tell, Faustus, how dost thou like thy wife?

FAUST. A plague on her for a hot whore!

MEPH. Tut, Faustus,

Marriage is but a ceremonial toy;

If thou lovest me, think [no]<sup>17</sup> more of it.

I'll cull thee out the fairest courtesans

And bring them ev'ry morning to thy bed;

She whom thine eye shall like, thy heart shall have,

Be she as chaste as was Penelope, 160

As wise as Saba,<sup>18</sup> or as beautiful

As was bright Lucifer before his fall.

Hold, take this book; peruse it thoroughly:

The iterating of these lines brings gold;

The framing of this circle on the ground

Brings whirlwinds, tempests, thunder and lightning;

Pronounce this thrice devoutly to thyself,

And men in armor shall appear to thee,

Ready to execute what thou desir'st.

FAUST. Thanks, Mephistophilis; yet [170] fain would I have a book wherein I might behold all spells and incantations, that I might raise up spirits when I please.

MEPH. Here they are, in this book.

There turn to them.

FAUST. Now would I have a book where I might see all characters and planets of the Heavens, that I might know their motions and dispositions.

MEPH. Here they are too. Turn to them.

FAUST. Nay, let me have one book [180] more — and then I have done — wherein I might see all plants, herbs, and trees that grow upon the earth.

MEPH. Here they be.

FAUST. O, thou art deceived.

MEPH. Tut, I warrant thee. Turn to them.
[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II]<sup>19</sup>

[Enter FAUSTUS in his study, and MEPHISTOPHILIS.]<sup>20</sup>

FAUST. When I behold the Heavens, then I repent,

<sup>20</sup> Add. Q 1616, which prefaces the entrance with a short version of Wagner's speech at the opening of Act III. Q<sub>1</sub> has no break. Evidently the end of Sc. i was tampered with before 1604; it may originally have been followed by a comic scene.

And curse thee, wicked Mephistophilis,
Because thou hast depriv'd me of those joys.

MEPH. Why, Faustus,
Think'st thou Heaven is such a glorious thing?
I tell thee 't is not half so fair as thou,
Or any man that breathes on earth.

FAUST. How provest thou that?

MEPH. It was made for man; therefore is man more excellent.

FAUST. If it were made for man, 't was made for me! 10

I will renounce this magic and repent.

Enter Good Angel and Evil Angel.

G. ANG. Faustus, repent; yet God will pity thee.

E. ANG. Thou art a spirit; God cannot pity thee.

FAUST. Who buzzeth in mine ears I am a spirit?

Be I a devil, yet God may pity me;

Ay, God will pity me if I repent.

E. ANG. Ay, but Faustus never shall repent.

Exeunt [Angels].

FAUST. My heart's so hard'ned I cannot repent.

Scarce can I name salvation, faith, or Heaven,
But fearful echoes thunder in mine ears 20

"Faustus, thou art damn'd!" Then swords and knives,

Poison, guns, halters, and envenom'd steel
Are laid before me to despatch myself;
And long ere this I should have slain myself,
Had not sweet pleasure conquer'd deep despair.
Have I not made blind Homer sing to me
Of Alexander's<sup>21</sup> love and Cænon's death?
And hath not he that built the walls of Thebes
With ravishing sound of his melodious harp
Made music with my Mephistophilis? 30

Why should I die then, or basely despair?

I am resolv'd; Faustus shall ne'er repent.

Come, Mephistophilis, let us dispute again,
And argue of divine astrology.

Tell me, are there many heavens above the moon?

Are all celestial bodies but one globe,
As is the substance of this centric earth?

MEPH. As are the elements, such are the spheres

Mutually folded in each other's orb,

And, Faustus,

40

All jointly move upon one axletree,

Whose terminine is term'd the world's wide pole;

Nor are the names of Saturn, Mars, or Jupiter Feign'd, but are erring stars.

FAUST. But tell me, have they all one motion, both situ et tempore? <sup>22</sup>

MEPH. All jointly move from east to west in four-and-twenty hours upon the poles of the world, but differ in their motion upon the poles of the zodiac. 50

FAUST. Tush! These slender trifles Wagner can decide.

Hath Mephistophilis no greater skill?
Who knows not the double motion of the planets?

The first is finish'd in a natural day;
The second thus: as Saturn in thirty years;
Jupiter in twelve; Mars in four; the Sun, Venus, and Mercury in a year; the moon in twenty-eight days. Tush, these are freshmen's suppositions. But tell me, hath every sphere a dominion or intelligenti[a]? 60

MEPH. Ay.

FAUST. How many heavens, or spheres, are there?

MEPH. Nine: the seven planets, the firmament, and the empyreal heaven.

FAUST. Well, resolve me in this question:
Why have we not conjunctions, oppositions, aspects, eclipses, all at one time, but in some years we have more, in some less?

MEPH. Per inæqualem motum respectu totius. <sup>23</sup> 70

FAUST. Well, I am answered. Tell me who made the world.

MEPH. I will not.

FAUST. Sweet Mephistophilis, tell me.

MEPH. Move me not, for I will not tell thee.

FAUST. Villain, have I not bound thee to tell me anything?

MEPH. Ay, that is not against our kingdom; but this is.

Think thou on hell, Faustus, for thou art damn'd.

FAUST. Think, Faustus, upon God that made the world.

MEPH. Remember this. Exit. 80

FAUST. Ay, go, accursed spirit, to ugly hell;
'Tis thou hast damn'd distressed Faustus' soul.
Is't not too late?

Re-enter Good Angel and Evil [Angel].

E. ANG. Too late.

G. ANG. Never too late, if Faustus can repent.

E. ANG. If thou repent, devils shall tear thee in pieces.

G. ANG. Repent, and they shall never raze thy skin.

Exeunt [Angels].

FAUST. Ah, Christ, my Savior,
Seek to save distressed Faustus' soul.

Enter LUCIFER, BELZEBUB, and MEPHISTOPHILIS.

LUC. Christ cannot save thy soul, for he is just; 90

There's none but I have int'rest in the same.

FAUST. O, who art thou that look'st so terrible?

LUC. I am Lucifer,

And this is my companion prince in hell.

FAUST. O Faustus, they are come to fetch away thy soul!

LUC. We come to tell thee thou dost injure us;

Thou talk'st of Christ, contrary to thy promise;

Thou shouldst not think of God: think of the Devil,

And of his dam, too.<sup>24</sup>

FAUST. Nor will I henceforth; pardon me in this, 100

And Faustus vows never to look to Heaven,
Never to name God, or to pray to Him,
To burn his Scriptures, slay his ministers,
And make my spirits pull his churches down.

LUC. Do so, and we will highly gratify thee.
Faustus, we are come from hell to show thee some pastime. Sit down, and thou shalt see all the Seven Deadly Sins appear in their proper shapes.

FAUST. That sight will be pleasing unto me
As Paradise was to Adam the first day [111
Of his creation.

LUC. Talk not of Paradise nor creation, but mark this show; talk of the Devil, and nothing else. — Come away!

Enter the Seven Deadly Sins.

Now, Faustus, examine them of their several names and dispositions.

FAUST. What art thou — the first?

PRIDE. I am Pride. I disdain to have any

<sup>24</sup> Evidently an actor's gag.

<sup>22</sup> In both the direction and the duration of their revolutions.

<sup>23</sup> On account of their unequal motion in relation to the whole. — After l. 65 Q 1616 adds:

Faust. But is there not Cælum igneum, & Cristallinum?

Meph. No Faustus they be but Fables.

parents. I am like to Ovid's flea<sup>25</sup>: I can [120] creep into every corner of a wench; sometimes, like a periwig, I sit upon her brow;<sup>26</sup> or like a fan of feathers, I kiss her lips;<sup>27</sup> indeed I do — what do I not? But, fie, what a scent is here! I'll not speak another word, except the ground were perfum'd, and covered with cloth of arras.

FAUST. What art thou — the second?

COVET. I am Covetousness, begotten of an old churl in an old leathern bag; and might I have my wish, I would desire that this [130] house and all the people in it were turn'd to gold, that I might lock you up in my good chest. O, my sweet gold!

FAUST. What art thou — the third?

WRATH. I am Wrath. I had neither father nor mother: I leap'd out of a lion's mouth when I was scarce half an hour old; and ever since I have run up and down the world with this case<sup>28</sup> of rapiers, wounding myself when I had nobody to fight withal. I was born in [140] hell; and look to it, for some of you shall be<sup>29</sup> my father.

FAUST. What art thou — the fourth?

ENVY. I am Envy, begotten of a chimney sweeper and an oyster-wife. I cannot read, and therefore wish all books were burnt. I am lean with seeing others eat. O, that there would come a famine through all the world, that all might die, and I live alone! Then thou shouldst see how fat I would be. But [150] must thou sit and I stand? Come down with a vengeance!

FAUST. Away, envious rascal! — What art thou — the fifth?

GLUT. Who, I, sir? I am Gluttony. My parents are all dead, and the devil a penny they have left me, but a bare pension, and that is thirty meals a day and ten bevers<sup>30</sup> — a small trifle to suffice nature. O, I come of a royal parentage! My grandfather was a [160] gammon of bacon, my grandmother a hogs-head of claret wine; my godfathers were these: Peter Pickleherring and Martin Martlemas-beef.<sup>31</sup> O, but my godmother, she was a jolly gentlewoman, and well beloved in every good town and city; her name was Mistress Margery March-beer. Now, Faustus, thou hast heard all my progeny,<sup>32</sup> wilt thou bid me to supper?

FAUST. No, I'll see thee hanged; thou [170] wilt eat up all my victuals.

GLUT. Then the Devil choke thee!

FAUST. Choke thyself, glutton! — Who art thou — the sixth?

SLOTH. I am Sloth. I was begotten on a sunny bank, where I have lain ever since; and you have done me great injury to bring r from thence. Let me be carried thither again by Gluttony and Lechery. I'll not see another word for a king's ransom.

FAUST. What are you, Mistress Minx, the seventh and last?

LECH. Who, I, sir? I am one that loves a' inch of raw mutton<sup>33</sup> better than an ell of fried stockfish;<sup>34</sup> and the first letter of my name begins with Lechery.

LUC. Away! to hell, to hell!

Exeunt the Sins.

— Now, Faustus, how dost thou like this?

FAUST. O, this feeds my soul!

LUC. Tut, Faustus, in hell is all manner of delight. 189

FAUST. O might I see hell, and return again, How happy were I then!

LUC. Thou shalt; I will send for thee at midnight.

In meantime take this book; peruse it thoroughly, And thou shalt turn thyself into what shape thou wilt.

FAUST. Great thanks, mighty Lucifer!

This will I keep as chary as my life.

LUC. Farewell, Faustus, and think on the Devil.

FAUST. Farewell, great Lucifer! — Come, Mephistophilis.

Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE III]<sup>35</sup>

Enter ROBIN the Ostler with a book in his hand.

<sup>28</sup> An inn-yard. Q<sub>1</sub> places this scene, erroneously, after the chorus which opens Act IV, and immediately before the comic scene, III, ii. Q<sub>1</sub> 1616

and i' faith I mean to search some circles<sup>36</sup> for my own use! Now will I make all the maidens in our parish dance at my pleasure, stark naked before me; and so by that means I shall see more than e'er I felt or saw yet.

RA<sup>38</sup>PH. Robin, prithee come away; there's a gentleman tarries to have his horse, and he would have his things rubb'd and made [10] clean. He keeps such a chafing with my mistress about it; and she has sent me to look<sup>39</sup> thee out. Prithee come away.

ROBIN. Keep out, keep out, or else you are<sup>40</sup> w<sup>n</sup> up, you are dismemb'rd, Ralph; keep<sup>41</sup> out, for I am about a roaring piece of work.

RA<sup>42</sup>PH. Come, what doest thou with that same book? Thou canst not read.

ROBIN. Yes, my master and mistress shall find that I can read, he for his forehead,<sup>43</sup> she [20] for her private study; she's born to bear with me, or else my art fails.

RA<sup>44</sup>PH. Why, Robin, what book is that?

ROBIN. What book! Why, the most intolerable book for conjuring that e'er was invented by any brimstone devil.

RA<sup>45</sup>PH. Canst thou conjure with it?

ROBIN. I can do all these things easily with it: first, I can make thee drunk with ippocras<sup>46</sup> at any ta[v]ern in Europe for nothing, that's one of my conjuring works.

RA<sup>47</sup>PH. Our Master Parson says that's nothing.

ROBIN. True, Ralph; and more, Ralph, if thou hast any mind to Nan Spit, our kitchen-maid, then turn her and wind her to thy own use, as often as thou wilt, and at midnight.

RA<sup>48</sup>PH. O brave, Robin, shall I have Nan Spit, and to mine own use? On that condition I'll feed thy devil with horsebread as [40] long as he lives, of free cost.

ROBIN. No more, sweet Ralph; let's go and make clean our boots, which lie foul upon our hands, and then to our conjuring in the Devil's name. Exeunt.

correctly places II, iii, though in an altered version; Ralph becomes Dick, a hostler, and Robin seems to be the clown of I, iv. Brooke suggests that the appearance of II, iii, and III, iii, consecutively in Q<sub>1</sub> "is presumably due to the fact that they were not in the original MS, but formed a supplement on separate sheets."

<sup>39</sup> A drink made of wine, sugared and spiced.

[ACT III]

Enter WAGNER, solus [as Chorus].<sup>1</sup>

WAGNER. Learned Faustus, to know the secrets of astronomy
Graven in the book of Jove's high firmament,
Did mount himself to scale Olympus' top,
Being seated in a chariot burning bright,
Drawn by the strength of yoky dragons'<sup>2</sup> necks.

[He views the clouds, the planets, and the stars,

The tropic zones, and quarters of the sky,
From the bright circle of the horned moon
Even to the height of Primum Mobile;<sup>3</sup>
And, whirling round with this circumference,
Within the concave compass of the pole, 11
From east to west his dragons swiftly glide
And in eight days did bring him home again.
Not long he stayed within his quiet house,
To rest his bones after his weary toil;
But new exploits do hale him out again,
And, mounted then upon a dragon's back,
That with his wings did part the subtle air,]
He now is gone to prove cosmography, [That measures coasts and kingdoms of the
earth:] 20

And, as I guess, will first arrive at Rome,
To see the Pope and manner of his court,
And take some part of holy Peter's feast,
That to this day is highly solemniz'd.

Exit WAGNER

[SCENE II]<sup>4</sup>

Enter FAUSTUS and MEPHISTOPHILIS.

FAUST. Having now, my good Mephistophilis,
Pass'd with delight the stately town of Trier,<sup>5</sup>
Environ'd round with airy mountain-tops,
With walls of flint, and deep entrenched lakes,
Not to be won by any conquering prince;
From Paris next, coasting the realm of France,
We saw the river Maine fall into Rhine,

<sup>1</sup> In Q<sub>1</sub> this speech, assigned to Wagner, and cut for the stage, comes between II, ii, and III, i. In Q 1616 it appears, incorrectly, between II, i and ii, and again (assigned to Chorus) to open Act III, with the addition of the bracketed lines.

<sup>2</sup> Among properties for this play Henslowe lists a dragon. Wagner suggests that Faustus may have alighted from it at the opening of III, i. But see, also, on s. d. following I, iii, 25.

Whose banks are set with groves of fruitful
vines ;

Then up to Naples, rich Campania,<sup>6</sup>

Whose buildings fair and gorgeous to the eye,
The streets straight forth, and pav'd with finest brick, 11

Quarters the town in four equivalents.

There saw we learned Maro's<sup>7</sup> golden tomb,
The way he cut, an English mile in length,
Thorough a rock of stone in one night's space ;
From thence to Venice, Padua, and the rest,
In midst of which a sumptuous temple stands ;<sup>8</sup>
That threatens the stars with her aspiring top, [Whose frame is paved with sundry-colored stones

And roof'd aloft with curious work in gold.]
Thus hitherto hath Faustus spent his time : 21
But tell me, now, what resting-place is this ?
Hast thou, as erst I did command,
Conducted me within the walls of Rome ?

MEPH. [I have, my Faustus ; and, for proof thereof,

This is the goodly palace of the Pope ;
And 'cause we are no common guests,
I choose his privy-chamber for our use.]<sup>9</sup>

FAUST. I hope his Holiness will bid us welcome.

MEPH. [All's one, for we'll be bold with his ven'son.] 30

And now, my Faustus, that thou mayst perceive

What Rome containeth to delight thee with,
Know that this city stands upon seven hills
That underprops the groundwork of the same.
[Just through the midst runs flowing Tiber's stream,

With winding banks that cut it in two parts,]<sup>10</sup>
Over the which four stately bridges lean,

<sup>8</sup>St. Mark's, at Venice ; not, as Brooke suggests, a "composite structure in a nameless city." Though in the Faust Book Padua is visited and St. Anthony's there is admired, "sumptuous" occurs in the E. F. B.'s description of St. Mark's, and any great church may be said to be lofty. For "and the rest", Q 1616 misunderstandingly reads "and the East", and for "in midst of which" it despairingly reads "in one of which," another indication of its inferiority. Padua is here taken as a Venetian possession ; "the rest" are the other territories of Venice. Ll. 19, 20, unquestionably genuine, are added (i.e., preserved) by Q 1616.

<sup>10</sup>Add. Q 1616.

That makes safe passage to each part of Rome.
Upon the bridge call'd Ponto Angelo

Erected is a castle passing strong, 40
Within whose walls such store of ordnance are,
And double cannons, fram'd of carved brass,
As match the days within one complete year ;
Besides the gates and high pyramides,
Which Julius Cæsar brought from Africa.

FAUST. Now by the kingdoms of infernal rule,

Of Styx, Acheron, and the fiery lake
Of ever-burning Phlegethon, I swear
That I do long to see the monuments
And situation of bright-splendent Rome : 50
Come, therefore ; let's away.

MEPH. Nay, Faustus, stay ; I know you'd fain see the Pope,
And take some part of holy Peter's feast,
<sup>11</sup>Where thou shalt see a troop of bald-pate friars,

Whose sumum bonum is in belly-cheer.

FAUST. Well, I am content to compass,
then, some sport,
And by their folly make us merriment.

Then charm me, that I may be invisible, to do what I please,
Unseen of any whilst I stay in Rome.

[MEPHISTOPHILIS charms him.]

MEPH. So, Faustus ; now 60
Do what thou wilt, thou shalt not be discerned.

Sound a sennet.<sup>12</sup> Enter the POPE and the CAR-DINAL of LORRAINE to the banquet, with Friars attending.

POPE. My Lord of Lorraine, wilt please you draw near ?

FAUST. Fall to, and the Devil choke you an<sup>13</sup> you spare !

POPE. How now ! Who's that which spake ? — Friars, look about.

[1] FRIAR. Here's nobody, if it like your Holiness.

POPE. My Lord, here is a dainty dish was sent me from the Bishop of Milan.

FAUST. I thank you, sir. Snatch it.

POPE. How now ! Who's that which [70
snatch'd the meat from me ? Will no man look ? — My Lord, this dish was sent me from the Cardinal of Florence.

<sup>13</sup>ll.

FAUST. You say true ; I'll ha't.

[Snatches it.]

POPE. What, again? — My Lord, I'll drink to your Grace.

FAUST. I'll pledge your Grace.

[Snatches the cup.]

C. of LOR. My Lord, it may be some ghost newly crept out of purgatory, come to beg a pardon of your Holiness. 80

POPE. It may be so. — Friars, prepare a dirge to lay the fury of this ghost. — Once again, my Lord, fall to.

The POPE crosseth himself.

FAUST. What, are you crossing of yourself? Well, use that trick no more, I would advise you. — (Cross again.) Well, there's the second time. Aware the third, I give you fair warning.

Cross again, and FAUSTUS hits him a box of the ear; and they all run away.

Come on, Mephistophilis, what shall we do?

MEPH. Nay, I know not. We shall be curs'd with bell, book, and candle. 91

FAUST. How! bell, book, and candle, — candle, book, and bell,

Forward and backward to curse Faustus to hell!

Anon you shall hear a hog grunt, a calf bleat, and an ass bray,

Because it is Saint Peter's holiday.

Re-enter all the Friars to sing the dirge.

[1] FRIAR. Come, brethren, let's about our business with good devotion.

Sing this:

Cursed be he that stole away his Holiness' meat from the table! Maledicat Dominus! 14

Cursed be he that struck his Holiness a 100 blow on the face! Maledicat Dominus!

Cursed be he that took Friar Sandelo a blow on the pate! Maledicat Dominus!

Cursed be he that disturbeth our holy dirge! Maledicat Dominus!

Cursed be he that took away his Holiness' wine! Maledicat Dominus! Et omnes sancti! 15 Amen!

[MEPHISTOPHILIS and FAUSTUS] beat the Friars, and fling fireworks among them. and so exeunt.

[SCENE II] 16

Enter ROBIN and RALPH 17 with a silver goblet.

ROBIN. Come, Ralph, did not I tell thee we were for ever made by this Doctor Faustus book? Ecce signum, here's a simple purchase 18 for horsekeepers; our horses shall eat no hay as long as this lasts.

Enter the Vintner.

RALPH. But, Robin, here comes the vintner.

ROBIN. Hush! I'll gull him supernaturally. — Drawer, I hope all is paid; God be with you. — Come, Ralph.

VINT. Soft, sir; a word with you. I [10 must yet have a goblet paid from you, ere you go.

ROBIN. I, a goblet, Ralph; I, a goblet! I scorn you, and you are but a &c. 19 I, a goblet! Search me.

VINT. I mean so, sir, with your favor.

[Searches him.]

ROBIN. How say you now?

VINT. I must say somewhat to your fellow. You, sir! 19

RALPH. Me, sir! me, sir! Search your fill. [Vintner searches him.] Now, sir, you may be ashamed to burden honest men with a matter of truth. 20

VINT. Well, t' one of you hath this goblet about you.

ROBIN. [aside] You lie, drawer; 't is afore me. — Sirrah you, I'll teach ye to impeach honest men; stand by; I'll scour you for a goblet! Stand aside you had best, I charge you in the name of Belzebub. — [aside to RALPH] Look to the goblet, Ralph. 31

VINT. What mean you, sirrah?

ROBIN. I'll tell you what I mean. (He reads [from the book.] Sanctobulorum, Periphrasticon — Nay, I'll tickle you, vintner. — [aside to RALPH] Look to the goblet, Ralph. — [Reads.] Polypragmos Belseborams framanto pacostiphos tostus, Mephistophilis, etc.

Enter MEPHISTOPHILIS, sets squibs at their backs, [and then exit]. 21 They run about.

16 An inn. In Q 1616 this scene, as here, follows III. i. In Q, the order is III. i; chorus to IV: II, iii; III. ii. The scene in Q 1616 differs widely.

17 Old eds. Rafe throughout.

18 Piece of loot.

19 The low comedian was expected to supply a string of racy invectives.

20 A question of honesty.

21 Add. Dyce, in view of Mephistophilis's re-entry. The double entrance indicates textual corruption. The squibs were "an afterthought." (Simpson.)

14 May the Lord curse him.

15 And all the Saints.

VINT. O nomine Domine!<sup>22</sup> what mean'st thou, Robin? Thou hast no goblet. 40

RALPH. Peccatum peccatorum!<sup>23</sup> Here's thy goblet, good vintner.

ROBIN. Misericordia pro nobis!<sup>24</sup> What shall I do? Good Devil, forgive me now, and I'll never rob thy library more.

Re-enter to them MEPHISTOPHILIS.

MEPH. Vanish, villains!
Th' one like an ape, another like a bear, the third an ass, for doing this enterprise. —<sup>25</sup>

[Exit Vintner.]

Monarch of hell, under whose black survey
Great potentates do kneel with awful fear, 50
Upon whose altars thousand souls do lie,
How am I vexed with these villains' charms!
From Constantinople am I hither come
Only for pleasure of these damned slaves.

ROBIN. How? from Constantinople? You have had a great journey. Will you take sixpence in your purse to pay for your supper, and be gone?

MEPH. Well, villains, for your presumption, I transform thee into an ape, and thee into [60 a dog; and so, begone! Exit.

ROBIN. How, into an ape? That's brave! I'll have fine sport with the boys. I'll get nuts and apples enow.

RALPH. And I must be a dog.

ROBIN. I' faith thy head will never be out of the pottage pot. Exeunt.

[ACT IV]

Enter Chorus.<sup>26</sup>

CHORUS. When Faustus had with pleasure
ta'en the view
Of rarest things and royal courts of kings,
He stay'd his course and so returned home;
Where such as bear his absence but with grief,
I mean his friends and near'st companions,
Did gratulate his safety with kind words,
And in their conference of what befell,
Touching his journey through the world and
air,

<sup>25</sup> Mod. eds. omit this speech; it may be an alternative ending for the scene. The double transformation indicates corruption.

<sup>26</sup> Q 1616 om. this speech; in Q<sub>1</sub> it appears, misplaced, after III, i.

They put forth questions of astrology,
Which Faustus answer'd with such learned
skill 10

As they admir'd and wond'ered at his wit.
Now is his fame spread forth in every land;
Amongst the rest the Emperor is one;
Carolus the Fifth, at whose palace now
Faustus is feasted 'mongst his noblemen.
What there he did in trial of his art,
I leave untold — your eyes shall see perform'd. Exit.

[SCENE I]<sup>27</sup>

Enter EMPEROR, FAUSTUS, [MEPHISTOPHILIS, and a Knight, with attendants.

EMP. Master Doctor Faustus, I have heard strange report of thy knowledge in the black art, how that none in my empire nor in the whole world can compare with thee for the rare effects of magic; they say thou hast a familiar spirit, by whom thou canst accomplish what thou list. This, therefore, is my request, that thou let me see some proof of thy skill, that mine eyes may be witnesses to confirm what mine ears have heard reported; and here I [10 swear to thee, by the honor of mine imperial crown, that, whatever thou doest, thou shalt be no ways prejudiced or endamaged.

KNIGHT. (aside) I' faith he looks much like a conjuror.

FAUST. My gracious Sovereign, though must confess myself far inferior to the reports men have published, and nothing answerable to the honor of your imperial Majesty, yet for that love and duty binds me thereunto, I [20 am content to do whatsoever your Majesty shall command me.

EMP. Then, Doctor Faustus, mark what I shall say.

As I was sometime solitary set
Within my closet, sundry thoughts arose
About the honor of mine ancestors,
How they had won by prowess such exploits,
Got such riches, subdued so many kingdoms,
As we that do succeed, or they that shall Hereafter possess our throne, shall 30
(I fear me) ne'er attain to that degree
Of high renown and great authority;
Amongst which kings is Alexander the Great,
Chief spectacle of the world's preëminence,

<sup>28</sup> In no respect adequate.

The bright shining of whose glorious acts
 Lightens the world with his <sup>29</sup> reflecting beams,
 As, when I heard but motion <sup>30</sup> made of him,
 It grieves my soul I never saw the man.
 If, therefore, thou by cunning of thine art
 Canst raise this man from hollow vaults below,
 Where lies entomb'd this famous conqueror, [41
 And bring with him his beauteous paramour,
 Both in their right shapes, gesture, and attire
 They us'd to wear during their time of life,
 Thou shalt both satisfy my just desire
 And give me cause to praise thee whilst I live.

FAUST. My gracious Lord, I am ready to accomplish your request so far forth as by art, and power of my spirit, I am able to perform.

KNIGHT. (aside) I faith that's just nothing
 at all. 51

FAUST. But, if it like your Grace, it is not in my ability to present before your eyes the true substantial bodies of those two deceased princes, which long since are consumed to dust.

KNIGHT. (aside) Ay, marry, Master Doctor, now there's a sign of grace in you, when you will confess the truth.

FAUST. But such spirits as can lively resemble Alexander and his paramour shall [60 appear before your Grace in that manner that they best liv'd in, in their most flourishing estate; which I doubt not shall sufficiently content your imperial Majesty.

EMP. Go to, Master Doctor; let me see them presently.<sup>31</sup>

KNIGHT. Do you hear, Master Doctor?
 You bring Alexander and his paramour before the Emperor!

FAUST. How then, sir? 70

KNIGHT. I' faith that's as true as Diana turn'd me to a stag!

FAUST. No, sir, but when Actæon died, he left the horns for you. Mephistophilis, begone. Exit MEPHISTOPHILIS.

KNIGHT. Nay, an you go to conjuring, I'll be gone. Exit Knight.

FAUST. I'll meet with you anon for interrupting me so. — Here they are, my gracious
 Lord. 80

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with [Spirits in the shapes of] ALEXANDER and his Paramour.

EMP. Master Doctor, I heard this lady while she liv'd had a wart or mole in her neck.
 How shall I know whether it be so or no?

FAUST. Your Highness may boldly go and see. [Exeunt Spirits.]

<sup>31</sup> At once.

EMP. Sure these are no spirits, but the true substantial bodies of those two deceased princes.

FAUST. Will't please your Highness now to send for the knight that was so pleasant with me here of late? 91

EMP. One of you call him forth.

[Exit Attendant.]

Re-enter the Knight with a pair of horns on his head.

How now, Sir Knight! Why I had thought thou hadst been a bachelor; but now I see thou hast a wife, that not only gives thee horns, but makes thee wear them. Feel on thy head.

KNIGHT. Thou damned wretch and execrable dog,

Bred in the concave of some monstrous rock,
 How dar'st thou thus abuse a gentleman?

Villain, I say, undo what thou hast done! [100

FAUST. O, not so fast, sir; there's no haste;
 but, good, are you rememb'rd how you crossed me in my conference with the Emperor? I think I have met with you for it.

EMP. Good Master Doctor, at my entreaty release him; he hath done penance sufficient.

FAUST. My gracious Lord, not so much for the injury he off'rd me here in your presence, as to delight you with some mirth, hath [110
 Faustus worthily requited this injurious knight; which being all I desire, I am content to release him of his horns; and, Sir Knight, hereafter speak well of scholars. — Mephistopphilis, transform him straight. [MEPHIS-TOPHILIS removes the horns.] Now, my good Lord, having done my duty I humbly take my leave.

EMP. Farewell, Master Doctor; yet, ere you go,

Expect from me a bounteous reward. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II] <sup>32</sup>

[Enter FAUSTUS and MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

FAUST. Now, Mephistophilis, the restless course

That Time doth run with calm and silent foot,
 Short'ning my days and thread of vital life,
 Calls for the payment of my latest years;

<sup>32</sup> A green; afterwards Faustus's house. The wreckage of several scenes probably confronts us here; most of this is rubbish, but note the Marlovian column still standing in ll. 45–50. Two additional scenes precede this in Q 1616, which reduces our
 Sc. ii.

Therefore, sweet Mephistophilis, let us
Make haste to Wittenberg.

MEPH. What, will you go on horseback or on foot?

FAUST. Nay, till I am past this fair and pleasant green,
I'll walk on foot.

Enter a Horse-Courser.

HORSE-C. I have been all this day seek- [10 ing one Master Fustian; mass, see where he is! — God save you, Master Doctor!

FAUST. What, horse-courser! You are well met.

HORSE-C. Do you hear, sir? I have brought you forty dollars for your horse.

FAUST. I cannot sell him so; if thou lik'st him for fifty, take him.

HORSE-C. Alas, sir, I have no more. — I pray you speak for me. 20

MEPH. I pray you let him have him; he is an honest fellow, and he has a great charge, neither wife nor child.

FAUST. Well, come, give me your money.
[Horse-Courser gives FAUSTUS the money.]
My boy will deliver him to you. But I must tell you one thing before you have him: ride him not into the water at any hand.

HORSE-C. Why, sir, will he not drink of all waters? 29

FAUST. O yes, he will drink of all waters, but ride him not into the water; ride him over hedge or ditch, or where thou wilt, but not into the water.

HORSE-C. Well, sir. — [aside] Now am I made man for ever. I'll not leave my horse for forty.<sup>34</sup> If he had but the quality of hey ding ding, hey ding ding, I'd make a brave living on him; he has a buttock as slick as an eel. — Well, God buy, sir; your boy will [39 deliver him me. But hark ye, sir; if my horse be sick or ill at ease, if I bring his water to you, you'll tell me what it is?

Exit Horse-Courser.

FAUST. Away, you villain; what, dost think I am a horse-doctor? —
What art thou, Faustus, but a man condemn'd to die?

Thy fatal time doth draw to final end;
Despair doth drive distrust unto my thoughts.
Confound these passions with a quiet sleep.
Tush, Christ did call the thief upon the cross;
Then rest thee, Faustus, quiet in conceit. 50
Sleep in his chair.

<sup>35</sup> I.e., any number of others. (Boas.)

Re-enter Horse-Courser, all wet, crying.

HORSE-C. Alas, alas! Doctor Fustian, quotha? Mass, Doctor Lopus<sup>34</sup> was never such a doctor. Has given me a purgation has purg'd me of forty dollars; I shall never see them more. But yet, like an ass as I was, I would not be ruled by him, for he bade me I should ride him into no water. Now I, thinking my horse had had some rare quality that he would not have had me known of, I, like a [59 vent'rous youth, rid him into the deep pond at the town's end. I was no sooner in the middle of the pond, but my horse vanish'd away, and I sat upon a bottle<sup>35</sup> of hay, never so near drowning in my life. But I'll seek out my Doctor, and have my forty dollars again, or I'll make it the dearest horse — O, yonder is his snipper-snapper.<sup>36</sup> — Do you hear? You hey-pass,<sup>37</sup> where's your master?

MEPH. Why, sir, what would you? You cannot speak with him. 70

HORSE-C. But I will speak with him.

MEPH. Why, he's fast asleep. Come some other time.

HORSE-C. I'll speak with him now, or I'll break his glass windows about his ears.

MEPH. I tell thee he has not slept this eight nights.

HORSE-C. An he have not slept this eight weeks, I'll speak with him.

MEPH. See where he is, fast asleep. 80

HORSE-C. Ay, this is he. — God save ye,
Master Doctor! Master Doctor, Master Doctor Fustian! — Forty dollars, forty dollars for a bottle of hay!

MEPH. Why, thou seest he hears thee not.

HORSE-C. So ho, ho! — so ho, ho! (Holla in his ear.) No, will you not wake? I'll make you wake ere I go. (Pull him by the leg, and pull it away.) Alas, I am undone! What shall I do? 90

FAUST. O my leg, my leg! Help, Mephis-tophilis! Call the officers. My leg, my leg!

MEPH. Come, villain, to the constable.

HORSE-C. O Lord, sir, let me go, and I'll give you forty dollars more.

MEPH. Where be they?

HORSE-C. I have none about me. Come to my ostry<sup>38</sup> and I'll give them you.

<sup>34</sup> Queen Elizabeth's physician, Roderigo Lopez, a Spanish Jew, charged with conspiring to poison her and executed in 1594 — nearly a year after Marlowe's
death!

MEPH. Begone quickly.

Horse-Courser runs away.

FAUST. What, is he gone? Farewell he! [100 Faustus has his leg 'again, and the horse-courser, I take it, a bottle of hay for his labor. Well, this trick shall cost him forty dollars more.

Enter WAGNER.

How now, Wagner, what's the news with thee?

WAG. Sir, the Duke of Vanholt doth earnestly entreat your company.

FAUST. The Duke of Vanholt! an honorable gentleman, to whom I must be no niggard [110 of my cunning. Come, Mephistophilis, let's away to him. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>39</sup>

Enter <sup>40</sup> the DUKE [of VANHOLT], the DUCHESS, [FAUSTUS, and MEPHISTOPHILIS.]

DUKE. Believe me, Master Doctor, this merriment hath much pleased me.

FAUST. My gracious Lord, I am glad it contents you so well. — But it may be, madam, you take no delight in this. I have heard that great-bellied women do long for some dainties or other. What is it, madam? Tell me, and you shall have it.

DUCHESS. Thanks, good Master Doctor; and for I see your courteous intent to please [10 ure me, I will not hide from you the thing my heart desires; and were it now summer, as it is January and the dead time of the winter, I would desire no better meat than a dish of ripe grapes.

FAUST. Alas, madam, that's nothing. Mephistophilis, begone. (Exit MEPHISTOPHILIS.) Were it a greater thing than this, so it would content you, you should have it.

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with the grapes.

Here they be, madam; wilt please you taste on them? 21

DUKE. Believe me, Master Doctor, this makes me wonder above the rest, that being in the dead time of winter and in the month of January, how you should come by these grapes.

FAUST. If it like your Grace, the year is divided into two circles over the whole world, that, when it is here winter with us, in the contrary circle it is summer with them, as in India, Saba,<sup>41</sup> and farther countries in the East; [30 and by means of a swift spirit that I have, I had them brought hither, as ye see. — How do you like them, madam; be they good?

DUCHESS. Believe me, Master Doctor, they be the best grapes that e'er I tasted in my life before.

FAUST. I am glad they content you so, madam.

DUKE. Come, madam, let us in, where you must well reward this learned man for the great kindness he hath show'd to you. 41

DUCHESS. And so I will, my Lord; and, whilst I live, rest beholding for this courtesy.

FAUST. I humbly thank your Grace.

DUKE. Come, Master Doctor, follow us and receive your reward. Exeunt.

[ACT V — SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter WAGNER, solus.

WAG. I think my master means to die shortly,
For he hath given to me all his goods;
And yet, methinks if that death were near,
He would not banquet and carouse and swill
Amongst the students, as even now he doth,
Who are at supper with such belly-cheer
As Wagner ne'er beheld in all his life.
See where they come! Belike the feast is ended. [Exit.]

Enter FAUSTUS, with two or three Scholars [and MEPHISTOPHILIS].

1 SCHOL. Master Doctor Faustus, since our conference about fair ladies, which was the [10 beautiful'st in all the world,<sup>2</sup> we have determined with ourselves that Helen of Greece was the admirablest lady that ever lived. Therefore, Master Doctor, if you will do us that favor, as to let us see that peerless dame of Greece, whom all the world admires for majesty, we should think ourselves much beholding unto you.

FAUST. Gentlemen,
For that I know your friendship is unfeigned,
And Faustus' custom is not to deny 21

<sup>40</sup> Q<sub>1</sub> adds to them, indicating corruption, since Faust and Mephistophilis have just left the stage.

The just requests of those that wish him well,
 You shall behold that peerless dame of Greece,
 No otherways for pomp and majesty
 Than when Sir Paris cross'd the seas with her
 And brought the spoils to rich Dardania.
 Be silent, then ; for danger is in words.

Music sounds, and HELEN passeth over the stage.

2 SCHOL. Too simple is my wit to tell her
 praise,
 Whom all the world admires for majesty.

3 SCHOL. No marvel though the angry
 Greeks pursu'd 30
 With ten years' war the rape <sup>3</sup> of such a queen,
 Whose heavenly beauty passeth all compare.

1 SCHOL. Since we have seen the pride of Nature's works
 And only paragon of excellence,
 Let us depart ; and for this glorious deed
 Happy and blest be Faustus evermore.

FAUSTUS. Gentlemen, farewell ; the same I wish to you.

Exeunt Scholars.

Enter an Old Man.

OLD MAN. Ah, Doctor Faustus, that I might prevail
 To guide thy steps unto the way of life,
 By which sweet path thou mayst attain the goal 40
 That shall conduct thee to celestial rest !
 Break heart, drop blood, and mingle it with
 tears,
 Tears falling from repentant heaviness
 Of thy most vild and loathsome filthiness,
 The stench whereof corrupts the inward soul
 With such flagitious crimes of heinous sins
 As no commiseration may expel,
 But mercy, Faustus, of thy Savior sweet,
 Whose blood alone must wash away thy guilt.

FAUST. Where art thou, Faustus ? Wretch, what hast thou done ? 50
 Damn'd art thou, Faustus, damn'd ; despair and die !

Hell calls for right, and with a roaring voice Says " Faustus, come ; thine hour is [almost] <sup>4</sup>
 come ! "

And Faustus [now] <sup>4</sup> will come to do thee
 right.

MEPHISTOPHILIS gives him a dagger.

OLD MAN. Ah, stay, good Faustus, stay thy desperate steps !
 I see an angel hovers o'er thy head,

And, with a vial full of precious grace,
 Offers to pour the same into thy soul ;
 Then call for mercy, and avoid despair.

FAUST. Ah, my sweet friend, I feel 60
 Thy words do comfort my distressed soul.
 Leave me awhile to ponder on my sins.

OLD MAN. I go, sweet Faustus, but with heavy cheer,

Fearing the ruin of thy hopeless soul. [Exit.]

FAUST. Accursed Faustus, where is mercy
 now ?

I do repent, and yet I do despair ;
 Hell strives with grace for conquest in my
 breast.

What shall I do to shun the snares of death ?

MEPH. Thou traitor, Faustus, I arrest thy
 soul

For disobedience to my sovereign lord ; 70
 Revolt, or I'll in piecemeal tear thy flesh.

FAUST. [I do repent I e'er offended him ;] <sup>5</sup>
 Sweet Mephistophilis, entreat thy lord
 To pardon my unjust presumption,
 And with my blood again I will confirm
 My former vow I made to Lucifer.

MEPH. Do it now then quickly, with unfeigned heart,
 Lest danger do attend thy drift.

FAUST. Torment, sweet friend, that base and crooked age <sup>6</sup>
 That durst dissuade me from my Lucifer, 80
 With greatest torments that our hell affords.

MEPH. His faith is great ; I cannot touch his soul ;

But what I may afflict his body with
 I will attempt, which is but little worth.

FAUST. One thing, good servant, let me crave of thee,

To glut the longing of my heart's desire,
 That I might have unto my paramour
 That heavenly Helen, which I saw of late, Whose sweet embracings may extinguish clean

These thoughts that do dissuade me from my vow, 90

And keep mine oath I made to Lucifer.

MEPH. Faustus, this or what else thou shalt desire

Shall be perform'd in twinkling of an eye.

Re-enter HELEN.

FAUST. Was this the face that launch'd a thousand ships,
 And burnt the powerless <sup>7</sup> towers of Ilium ?

<sup>6</sup> Old man.

<sup>7</sup> Incomparably lofty.

Sweet Helen, make me immortal with a kiss. —
Her lips sucks forth my soul; see where it flies! —

Come, Helen, come, give me my soul again.
Here will I dwell, for Heaven be in these lips,
And all is dross that is not Helena. 100
I will be Paris, and for love of thee,
Instead of Troy shall Wittenberg be sack'd;
And I will combat with weak Menelaus,
And wear thy colors on my plumed crest;
Yea, I will wound Achilles in the heel,
And then return to Helen for a kiss.
O, thou art fairer than the evening air
Clad in the beauty of a thousand stars;
Brighter art thou than flaming Jupiter
When he appear'd to hapless Semele; 110
More lovely than the monarch of the sky
In wanton Arethusa's azur'd arms;<sup>8</sup>
And none but thou shalt be my paramour.

Re-enter Old Man.<sup>9</sup> Exeunt [the others].

OLD MAN. Accursed Faustus, miserable
man,
That from thy soul exclud'st the grace of Heaven,
And fliest the throne of his tribunal seat!

Enter the Devils.

Satan begins to sift<sup>10</sup> me with his pride.<sup>11</sup>
As in this furnace God shall try my faith,
My faith, vile hell, shall triumph over thee.
Ambitious fiends, see how the Heavens smiles
At your repulse, and laughs your state to scorn! 121

Hence, hell! for hence I fly unto my God.
Exeunt.

[SCENE II]<sup>12</sup>

Enter FAUSTUS with the Scholars.

FAUST. Ah, gentlemen!

1 SCHOL. What ails Faustus?

FAUST. Ah, my sweet chamber-fellow, had I lived with thee, then had I lived still! but now I die eternally. Look, comes he not?
comes he not?

2 SCHOL. What means Faustus?

<sup>8</sup> No such episode is known to classical mythology. (Boas.) Brooke suggests that Arethusa may be a slip (or possibly an intentional alteration) for Leucothoe, beloved by Apollo. (See Ovid's Metamorphoses, IV, 230, ff.)

3 SCHOL. Belike he is grown into some sickness by being oversolitary.

1 SCHOL. If it be so, we'll have physicians to cure him. — 'T is but a surfeit; never fear, man.

FAUST. A surfeit of deadly sin that hath damn'd both body and soul.

2 SCHOL. Yet, Faustus, look up to Heaven; remember God's mercies are infinite.

FAUST. But Faustus' offence can ne'er be pardoned; the serpent that tempted Eve may be sav'd, but not Faustus. Ah, gentlemen, hear me with patience, and tremble not at [20 my speeches. Though my heart pants and quivers to remember that I have been a student here these thirty years, oh, would I had never seen Wittenberg, never read book! And what wonders I have done, all Germany can witness, yea, all the world; for which Faustus hath lost both Germany and the world, yea, Heaven itself, Heaven, the seat of God, the throne of the blessed, the kingdom of joy; and must remain in hell for ever, hell, [30 ah, hell, for ever! Sweet friends, what shall become of Faustus, being in hell for ever?

3 SCHOL. Yet, Faustus, call on God.

FAUST. On God, whom Faustus hath abjur'd! on God, whom Faustus hath blasphemed! Ah, my God, I would weep, but the Devil draws in my tears. Gush forth blood instead of tears! Yea, life and soul — Oh, he stays my tongue! I would lift up my hands, but see, they hold them, they hold them! [40

ALL. Who, Faustus?

FAUST. Lucifer and Mephistophilis.<sup>13</sup> Ah, gentlemen! I gave them my soul for my cunning.<sup>14</sup>

ALL. God forbid!

FAUST. God forbade it indeed; but Faustus hath done it. For vain pleasure of four-and-twenty years hath Faustus lost eternal joy and felicity. I writ them a bill with mine own blood; the date is expired, the time [50 will come, and he will fetch me.

1 SCHOL. Why did not Faustus tell us of this before, that divines might have prayed for thee?

FAUST. Oft have I thought to have done so; but the Devil threat'ned to tear me in pieces if I nam'd God; to fetch both body and soul if I once gave ear to divinity; and now 't is too late. Gentlemen, away ! lest you perish with me. 60

<sup>14</sup> Knowledge.

2 SCHOL. Oh, what shall we do to [save] <sup>15</sup>
Faustus ?

FAUST. Talk not of me, but save yourselves, and depart.

3 SCHOL. God will strengthen me. I will stay with Faustus.

1 SCHOL. Tempt not God, sweet friend ; but let us into the next room, and there pray for him.

FAUST. Ay, pray for me, pray for me ! and what noise soever ye hear come not unto me, for nothing can rescue me. 71

2 SCHOL. Pray thou, and we will pray that God may have mercy upon thee.

FAUST. Gentlemen, farewell. If I live till morning I'll visit you ; if not, Faustus is gone to hell.

ALL. Faustus, farewell !

Exeunt Scholars. The clock strikes eleven.

FAUST. Ah, Faustus,

Now hast thou but one bare hour to live, 79

And then thou must be damn'd perpetually !

Stand still, you ever-moving spheres of Heaven,

That time may cease, and midnight never come ;

Fair Nature's eye, rise, rise again and make

Perpetual day ; or let this hour be but

A year, a month, a week, a natural day,

That Faustus may repent and save his soul !

O lente, lente, currite noctis equi ! <sup>16</sup>

The stars move still, <sup>17</sup> time runs, the clock will strike,

The Devil will come, and Faustus must be damn'd.

O, I'll leap up to my God ! Who pulls me
down ? 90

See, see where Christ's blood streams in the firmament !

One drop would save my soul — half a drop !
ah, my Christ ! —

Ah, rend not my heart for naming of my Christ ! —

Yet will I call on him ! — O, spare me, Lucifer ! —

Where is it now ? 'T is gone ; and see where God

Stretcheth out his arm, and bends his ireful
brows ! —

Mountain and hills, come, come and fall
on me,

And hide me from the heavy wrath of God !

<sup>15</sup> Add. Q 1616.

<sup>16</sup> Run slowly, slowly, steeds of the night. (Ovid, Amores, I, xiii, 40.)

<sup>17</sup> Unceasingly.

No ! no ! — 99

Then will I headlong run into the earth ! —

Earth, gape ! — O no, it will not harbor
me ! —

You stars that reign'd at my nativity, Whose influence hath allotted death and
hell,

Now draw up Faustus like a foggy mist
Into the entrails of yon lab'ring cloud,
That when you vomit forth into the air,
My limbs may issue from their smoky mouths, <sup>18</sup>

So <sup>19</sup> that my soul may but ascend to Heaven.

The watch strikes.

Ah, half the hour is past ! 'T will all be past anon !

O God, 110

If thou wilt not have mercy on my soul,
Yet for Christ's sake, whose blood hath ran-som'd me,

Impose some end to my incessant pain ;

Let Faustus live in hell a thousand years,

A hundred thousand, and at last be sav'd ! —

O, no end is limited to damned souls !

Why wert thou not a creature wanting
soul ?

Or why is this immortal that thou hast ?

Ah, Pythagoras' metempsychosis ! were that true,

This soul should fly from me, and I be
chang'd 120

Unto some brutish beast ! All beasts are happy,

For, when they die,

Their souls are soon dissolv'd in elements ;

But mine must live, still to be plagu'd in hell.

Curs'd be the parents that engend' red me !

No, Faustus, curse thyself, curse Lucifer,

That hath depriv'd thee of the joys of Heaven.

The clock striketh twelve.

O, it strikes, it strikes ! Now, body, turn to
air,

Or Lucifer will bear thee quick to hell !

Thunder and lightning.

O soul, be chang'd into little water-drops, 130

And fall into the ocean — ne'er be found ! —

My God, my God, look not so fierce on me !

<sup>18</sup> Brooke, calling attention to the censor's mutilation of this soliloquy in Q 1616, and to the actors' unmetrical insertions in Q 1, suggests that ll. 106, 107, may have stood in place of the "doubtless histrionic" l. 99. "Their dislocation may have been occasioned by the fact that originally each movement of the invocation ended [with l. 108]."

<sup>19</sup> Provided that.

Enter Devils.

Adders and serpents, let me breathe awhile ! —
 Ugly hell, gape not ! — Come not, Lucifer ! —
 I'll burn my books ! — Ah, Mephistophilis ! <sup>20</sup>

Exeunt [Devils] with him.Enter Chorus.

CHO. Cut is the branch that might have grown full straight,
 And burned is Apollo's laurel bough,

<sup>20</sup> Q 1616 adds 18 lines, in which the scholars discover Faustus's dismembered body.

That sometime <sup>21</sup> grew within this learned
 man.

Faustus is gone ; regard his hellish fall,
 Whose fiendful fortune may exhort the wise
 Only to wonder at unlawful things, 141
 Whose deepness doth entice such forward wits
 To practise more than heavenly power permits.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

As in the case of Faustus, so long a period intervened between the production of The Jew of Malta (c. 1590) and the appearance of the first (known) edition (1633) that our text is very corrupt. Again we must try to reconstruct a splendid edifice which has fallen into partial ruin and been put to base uses. Yet here the initial collapse seems due to the author, who evidently began a tragedy and failed to sustain it. Barabas, like Faustus and Tamburlaine, is a child of the Renaissance; though he is not like them a hero, but a hero-villain. The play is a melodrama rather than a tragedy, or, as has been seriously suggested, a farce. Barabas is the crafty (to the Elizabethans, Machiavellian) scoundrel who, clever as he is, finally overreaches himself. The audience doubtless laughed derisively at his villainous asides and hugely enjoyed his fall. The conclusion is irresistible that, whatever his original intention, Marlowe turned his efforts into capitalizing anti-Semitic prejudice.

He certainly succeeded. The great puzzle is the flagging, toward the end of Act II, of the undeniable power and grandeur of the opening. Various theories have been proposed to account for it; but, unless indeed the second half of the play is largely a reconstruction, Professor Brooke's seems most reasonable. The thread of the plot is throughout probably Marlowe's, but in the first two acts the central character is humanized. In the rest of the play we have the bare plot, possibly with interpolations and alterations, but certainly stripped of the humanizing touches with which Shakespeare manages to keep Shylock invested even after the game goes against him. In both cases the Elizabethans gloated over the villain's ruin. But Shakespeare's Jew, execrated though he be, is always a fellow-creature. Shakespeare's original conception was less bold than Marlowe's. Perhaps it was easier to sustain.

No source for the play has been found. Eminent sixteenth-century Jews resident in Constantinople and powerful politically and commercially have been suggested as possible inspirations by Professors Kellner and Brooke (see introduction to Bennett's edition for references and summaries). Marlowe may have learned about them through his diplomatic connections (he was for a time an agent of the Privy Council), or from London Jews.

Henslowe records that Lord Strange's company was acting The Jew of Malta in 1592-93, and that it was not then a new play. It was apparently the most popular of Marlowe's dramas. In 1594 several companies performed it; but it finally rested in the possession of the Admiral's Men, who acted it at least till 1596, with Edward Alleyn in the title rôle. There was a revival in 1601, and another probably not long prior to the publication of Q 1633. On the latter occasion it was acted at the Cockpit and also at court, with prologues and epilogues by Thomas Heywood, who may have revised it. And there may have been an earlier revision in 1601.

The Jew of Malta was edited for the Case Marlowe by H. S. Bennett (1931). Though an entry was made in the Stationers' Register in 1594, the first surviving edition is that of 1633, in quarto, or which the present text is based.

[THE PROLOGUE]

[Enter] MACHIAVEL.

ALBEIT the world think Machiavel is dead,
Yet was his soul but flown beyond the Alps,
And, now the Guise<sup>1</sup> is dead, is come from France

To view this land and frolic with his friends.
To some, perhaps, my name is odious,
But such as love me guard me from their
tongues;

And let them know that I am Machiavel,
And weigh not men, and therefore not men's words.

Admir'd I am of those that hate me most.
Though some speak openly against my books,<sup>2</sup> 10

Yet will they read me, and thereby attain
To Peter's chair; and when they cast me off,
Are poison'd by my climbing followers.
I count religion but a childish toy,
And hold there is no sin but ignorance.

<sup>1</sup> Assassinated in 1588; he organized the Massacre of St. Bartholomew in 1572. See Marlowe's play on that subject.

<sup>2</sup> The Prince, and others.

Birds of the air will tell of murders past —
I am asham'd to hear such fooleries.

Many will talk of title to a crown:

What right had Cæsar to the empery?<sup>3</sup>

Might first made kings, and laws were then most sure 20

When, like the Draco's,<sup>4</sup> they were writ in
blood.

Hence comes it that a strong-built citadel
Commands much more than letters can import;
Which maxim had Phalaris observ'd,
H' had never bellowed, in a brazen bull,
Of great ones' envy. O' the poor petty wits<sup>5</sup>
Let me be envi'd and not pitied!

But whither am I bound? I come not, I,

To read a lecture here in Brittainy,<sup>6</sup>

But to present the tragedy of a Jew, 30
Who smiles to see how full his bags are cramm'd,

Which money was not got without my means.
I crave but this: grace him as he deserves,
And let him not be entertain'd the worse
Because he favors me. [Exit.]

[ACT I — SCENE I]

Enter <sup>7</sup> BARABAS in his countinghouse, with heaps of gold before him.

BAR. So that of thus much that return was made ;
And of the third part of the Persian ships,
There was the venture summ'd and satisfied.
As for those [Scaenites],<sup>8</sup> and the men of Uz,
That bought my Spanish oils and wines of Greece,

Here have I purs'd their paltry silver[li]ngs.<sup>9</sup>
Fie, what a trouble 't is to count this trash !
Well fare the Arabians, who so richly pay
The things they traffic for with wedge of gold,
Whereof a man may easily in a day 10
Tell <sup>10</sup> that which may maintain him all his life.
The needy groom, that never fing'rd groat,
Would make a miracle of thus much coin ;
But he whose steel-barr'd coffers are cramm'd full,

And all his lifetime hath been tired,<sup>11</sup>
Wearying his fingers' ends with telling it,
Would in his age be loath to labor so,
And for a pound to sweat himself to death.
Give me the merchants of the Indian mines,
That trade in metal of the purest mold ; 20
The wealthy Moor, that in the eastern rocks
Without control can pick his riches up,
And in his house heap pearl like pebble-stones,

Receive them free, and sell them by the weight ;
Bags of fiery opals, sapphires, amethysts,
Jacinths, hard topaz, grass-green emeralds,
Beauteous rubies, sparkling diamonds,
And seld-seen costly stones of so great price
As one of them, indifferently rated,<sup>12</sup>

And of a carat of this quantity, 30
May serve in peril of calamity
To ransom great kings from captivity.
This is the ware wherein consists my wealth ;
And thus methinks should men of judgment frame

Their means of traffic from <sup>13</sup> the vulgar trade,
And as their wealth increaseth, so inclose
Infinite riches in a little room.
But now how stands the wind ?

<sup>12</sup> Impartially valued.

Look what corner peers my halcyon's bill ? <sup>14</sup> Ha ! to the east ? Yes. See, how stands the vanes ? 40

East and by south ; why, then, I hope my ships

I sent for Egypt and the bordering isles
Are gotten up by Nilus' winding banks ;
Mine argosy <sup>15</sup> from Alexandria,
Loaden with spice and silks, now under sail,
Are smoothly gliding down by Candy <sup>16</sup> shore
To Malta, through our Mediterranean sea.
But who comes here ? How now ?

Enter a Merchant.

MERCH. Barabas, thy ships are safe,
Riding in Malta road, and all the merchants
With other merchandise are safe arriv'd, 50
And have sent me to know whether yourself
Will come and custom <sup>17</sup> them.

BAR. The ships are safe thou say'st, and richly fraught ?

MERCH. They are.

BAR. Why then go bid them come ashore,
And bring with them their bills of entry.<sup>11</sup>
I hope our credit in the customhouse
Will serve as well as I were present there.
Go send 'em threescore camels, thirty mules,
And twenty wagons to bring up the ware.
But art thou master in a ship of mine, 60
And is thy credit not enough for that ?

MERCH. The very custom barely comes to more

Than many merchants of the town are worth,
And therefore far exceeds my credit, sir.

BAR. Go tell 'em the Jew of Malta sent thee, man :

Tush ! who amongst 'em knows not Barabas ?

MERCH. I go.

BAR. So, then ; there's somewhat come.

Sirrah, which of my ships art thou master of ?

MERCH. Of the Speranza, sir.

BAR. And saw'st thou not Mine argosy at Alexandria ? 70

Thou couldst not come from Egypt, or by Caire,

But at the entry there into the sea,
Where Nilus pays his tribute to the main,
Thou needs must sail by Alexandria.

MERCH. I neither saw them, nor inquir'd of them ;
But this we heard some of our seamen say,
They wond' red how you durst with so much wealth

Trust such a crazed vessel, and so far.

BAR. Tush, they are wise ! I know her and her strength.

[But] <sup>18</sup> go, go thou thy ways, discharge thy ship, 80

And bid my factor bring his loading in.

[Exit Merchant.]

And yet I wonder at this argosy.

Enter a second Merchant.

2 MERCH. Thine argosy from Alexandria,
Know, Barabas, doth ride in Malta road,
Laden with riches and exceeding store
Of Persian silks, of gold, and orient <sup>19</sup> pearl.

BAR. How chance you came not with those other ships

That sail'd by Egypt?

2 MERCH. Sir, we saw 'em not.

BAR. Belike they coasted round by Candy shore

About their oils, or other businesses. 90

But 't was ill done of you to come so far

Without the aid or conduct of their ships.

2 MERCH. Sir, we were wafted by a Spanish fleet,

That never left us till within a league,

That had the galleys of the Turk in chase.

BAR. O ! they were going up to Sicily.

Well, go,

And bid the merchants and my men despatch

And come ashore, and see the fraught discharg'd.

2 MERCH. I go. Exit. 100

BAR. Thus trolls our fortune in by land and sea,

And thus are we on every side enrich'd.

These are blessings promis'd to the Jews,

And herein was old Abram's happiness.

What more may Heaven do for earthly man

Than thus to pour out plenty in their laps,

Ripping the bowels of the earth for them,

Making the sea their servants, and the winds

To drive their substance with successful blasts?

Who hateth me but for my happiness? 110

Or who is honor'd now but for his wealth?

Rather had I, a Jew, be hated thus,

Rather pitied in a Christian poverty ;

For I can see no fruits in all their faith,
But malice, falsehood, and excessive pride,
Which, methinks, fits not their profession.
Haply some hapless man hath conscience,
And for his conscience lives in beggary.

They say we are a scatter'd nation ;

I cannot tell, but we have scrambled <sup>20</sup> up 120

More wealth by far than those that brag of faith.

There's Kirriah Jairim, the great Jew of Greece,

Obed in Bairseth, Nones in Portugal,

Myself in Malta, some in Italy,

Many in France, and wealthy every one ;

Ay, wealthier far than any Christian.

I must confess we come not to be kings ;

That's not our fault : alas, our number's few,

And crowns come either by succession,

Or urg'd by force ; and nothing violent, 130

Oft have I heard tell, can be permanent.

Give us a peaceful rule, make Christians kings,

That thirst so much for principality.

I have no charge, nor many children,

But one sole daughter, whom I hold as dear

As Agamemnon did his Iphigen ;

And all I have is hers. But who comes here?

Enter three Jews.<sup>21</sup>

1 JEW. Tush, tell not me ; 't was done of policy.

2 JEW. Come, therefore, let us go to Barabas,

For he can counsel best in these affairs ; 140
And here he comes.

BAR. Why, how now, countrymen !
Why flock you thus to me in multitudes? <sup>22</sup>

What accident's betided to the Jews?

1 JEW. A fleet of warlike galleys, Barabas,
Are come from Turkey, and lie in our road ;

And they this day sit in the council-house

To entertain them and their embassy.

BAR. Why, let 'em come, so they come not to war ;

Or let 'em war, so we be conquerors : —

(aside) Nay, let 'em combat, conquer, and kill all, 150

So they spare me, my daughter, and my wealth.

<sup>22</sup> Here and in Scene ii, the three Jews stand for a multitude ; like the "three or four most vile and ragged foils" Shakespeare asks us to consider an army in Henry V.

1 JEW. Were it for confirmation of a league,
They would not come in warlike manner thus.

2 JEW. I fear their coming will afflict us
all.

BAR. Fond <sup>23</sup> men! what dream you of their multitudes?
What need they treat of peace that are in league?

The Turks and those of Malta are in league.
Tut, tut, there is some other matter in 't.

1 JEW. Why, Barabas, they come for peace or war.

BAR. Happily for neither, but to pass along
Towards Venice by the Adriatic Sea; 161
With <sup>24</sup> whom they have attempted many times,

But never could effect their stratagem.

3 JEW. And very wisely said. It may be so.

2 JEW. But there's a meeting in the senate-
house,
And all the Jews in Malta must be there.

BAR. Hum; all the Jews in Malta must be
there?

Ay, like enough. Why, then, let every man
Provide him, and be there for fashion sake.<sup>25</sup>
If anything shall there concern our state, 170 Assure yourselves I'll look — (aside) unto myself.

1 JEW. I know you will. Well, brethren, let us go.

2 JEW. Let's take our leaves. Farewell, good Barabas.

BAR. Do so. Farewell, Zaareth; farewell,
Temainte. [Exeunt the three Jews.]

And, Barabas, now search this secret out;
Summon thy senses, call thy wits together;
These silly men mistake the matter clean.
Long to the Turk did Malta contribute;
Which tribute, all in policy, I fear,
The Turks have let increase to such a sum 180
As all the wealth of Malta cannot pay;
And now by that advantage thinks, belike,
To seize upon the town; ay, that he seeks.
Howe'er the world go, I'll make sure for one,
And seek in time to intercept the worst,
Warily guarding that which I ha' got.
Ego mihi met sum semper proximus.<sup>26</sup>
Why, let 'em enter, let 'em take the town.

[Exit.]

[SCENE II] <sup>27</sup>

Enter [FERNEZE, governor] <sup>28</sup> of Malta, Knights, [and Officers;] met by CALYMATH [and] Bassoes of the Turk.

FERN. Now, Bassoos, what demand you at our hands?

[1] BAS. Know, Knights of Malta, that we came from Rhodes,
From Cyprus, Candy, and those other isles
That lie betwixt the Mediterranean seas.

FERN. What's Cyprus, Candy, and those other isles
To us or Malta? What at our hands demand ye?

CAL. The ten years' tribute that remains unpaid.

FERN. Alas! my Lord, the sum is over-great;
I hope your Highness will consider us.

CAL. I wish, grave [Governor,] <sup>29</sup> 't were in my power 10
To favor you; but 't is my father's cause,
Wherein I may not, nay, I dare not dally.

FERN. Then give us leave, great Selim Caly-math.

CAL. Stand all aside, and let the Knights determine,
And send to keep our galleys under sail,
For happily <sup>30</sup> we shall not tarry here. —
Now, Governor, how are you resolv'd?

FERN. Thus: since your hard conditions are such
That you will needs have ten years' tribute past,

We may have time to make collection 20
Amongst the inhabitants of Malta for 't.

[1] BAS. That's more than is in our commission.

CAL. What, Callapine! a little courtesy.
Let's know their time, perhaps it is not long;
And 't is more kingly to obtain by peace
Than to enforce conditions by constraint.
What respite ask you, Governor?

FERN. But a month.

CAL. We grant a month, but see you keep your promise.
Now launch our galleys back again to sea,
Where we'll attend the respite you have ta'en, 30

<sup>26</sup> Misquoted from Terence, Andria, IV, i, 12:
Proximus sum egomet mihi: i.e., number one comes first.

<sup>27</sup> The Senate-house; afterwards, a street between it and Barabas's house.

<sup>28</sup> Q Gouvernors. Fernese's first speech is tagged Gouver, and thereafter Gov. throughout.

<sup>29</sup> Q Governor; also in ll. 17, 27, 32, 129.

And for the money send our messenger.
Farewell, great Governor and brave Knights of Malta.

Exeunt [CALYMATH and Bassoes].

FERN. And all good fortune wait on Calymath!

Go one and call those Jews of Malta hither.
Were they not summon'd to appear to-day?

OFF. They were, my Lord, and here they come.

Enter BARABAS and three Jews.

1 KNIGHT. Have you determined what to say to them?

FERN. Yes, give me leave; — and, Hebrews, now come near.

From the Emperor of Turkey is arriv'd
Great Selim Calymath, his Highness' son, 40
To levy of us ten years' tribute past;

Now then, here know that it concerneth us —
BAR. Then, good my Lord, to keep your quiet still,

Your Lordship shall do well to let them have it.

FERN. Soft, Barabas, there's more 'longs to 't than so.

To what this ten years' tribute will amount,
That we have cast,<sup>31</sup> but cannot compass it
By reason of the wars that robb'd our store;
And therefore are we to request your aid.

BAR. Alas, my Lord, we are no soldiers; 50
And what's our aid against so great a prince?

1 KNIGHT. Tut, Jew, we know thou art no soldier;

Thou art a merchant and a moneyed man,
And 't is thy money, Barabas, we seek.

BAR. How, my Lord! my money?

FERN. Thine and the rest.

For, to be short, amongst you 't must be had.

1 JEW. Alas, my Lord, the most of us are poor.

FERN. Then let the rich increase your portions.

BAR. Are strangers<sup>32</sup> with your tribute to be tax'd?

2 KNIGHT. Have strangers leave with us to get their wealth? 60

Then let them with us contribute.

BAR. How? equally?

FERN. No, Jew, like infidels.

For through our sufferance of your hateful lives,

Who stand accurs'd in the sight of Heaven,
These taxes and afflictions are befall'n,

And therefore thus we are determined. —
Read there the articles of our decrees.

READER. "First, the tribute-money of the Turks shall all be levied amongst the Jews, and each of them to pay one-half of his estate." [70

BAR. [aside] How, half his estate? I hope you mean not mine.

FERN. Read on.

READER. "Secondly, he that denies to pay shall straight become a Christian."

BAR. [aside] How, a Christian? Hum, what's here to do?

READER. "Lastly, he that denies this shall absolutely lose all he has."

ALL THREE JEWS. O my Lord, we will give half.

BAR. O<sup>33</sup> earth-mettl'd villains, and no Hebrews born!

And will you basely thus submit yourselves [80
To leave your goods to their arbitrament?

FERN. Why, Barabas, wilt thou be christ'ned?

BAR. No, Governor, I will be no convertite.<sup>34</sup>

FERN. Then pay thy half.

BAR. Why, know you what you did by this device?

Half of my substance is a city's wealth.

Governor, it was not got so easily;

Nor will I part so slightly therewithal.

FERN. Sir, half is the penalty of our decree,
Either pay that, or we will seize on all. 90

BAR. Corpo di Dio! stay! you shall have half;

Let me be us'd but as my brethren are.

FERN. No, Jew; thou hast denied the articles,

And now it cannot be recall'd.

[Exeunt Officers, on a sign from FERNEZE.]

BAR. Will you then steal my goods?
Is theft the ground of your religion?

FERN. No, Jew; we take particularly thine
To save the ruin of a multitude;

And better one want for a common good

Than many perish for a private man. 100

Yet, Barabas, we will not banish thee;

But here in Malta, where thou gott'st thy wealth,

Live still, and, if thou canst, get more.

BAR. Christians, what or how can I multiply?

Of naught is nothing made.

<sup>34</sup> Convert

1 KNIGHT. From naught at first thou cam'st to little wealth,
From little unto more, from more to most.
If your first curse fall heavy on thy head,
And make thee poor and scorn'd of all the
world,

'T is not our fault, but thy inherent sin. 110

BAR. What, bring you Scripture to confirm your wrongs?

Preach me not out of my possessions.
Some Jews are wicked, as all Christians are ;
But say the tribe that I descended of
Were all in general cast away for sin,
Shall I be tried by their transgression?
The man that dealeth righteously shall live ;
And which of you can charge me otherwise?

FERN. Out, wretched Barabas !
Sham'st thou not thus to justify thyself, 120
As if we knew not thy profession?
If thou rely upon thy righteousness,
Be patient and thy riches will increase.
Excess of wealth is cause of covetousness ;
And covetousness, O, 't is a monstrous sin.

BAR. Ay, but theft is worse. Tush ! take not from me then,
For that is theft ; and if you rob me thus,
I must be forc'd to steal and compass more.

1 KNIGHT. Grave Governor, list not to his exclaims.

Convert his mansion to a nunnery ; 130

Re-enter Officers.

His house will harbor many holy nuns.

FERN. It shall be so. Now, officers, have you done?

OFF. Ay, my Lord, we have seiz'd upon the goods

And wares of Barabas, which being valued,
Amount to more than all the wealth in Malta.

And of the other we have seized half.

[FERN.]<sup>35</sup> Then we'll take order for the residue.<sup>36</sup>

BAR. Well then, my Lord, say, are you satisfied?

You have my goods, my money, and my wealth,

My ships, my store, and all that I enjoy'd ; [140
And, having all, you can request no more,
Unless your unrelenting, flinty hearts
Suppress all pity in your stony breasts,
And now shall move you to bereave my life.

<sup>35</sup> Om. Q. Sup. Robinson.

business.

FERN. No, Barabas, to stain our hands with
blood

Is far from us and our profession.

BAR. Why, I esteem the injury far less
To take the lives of miserable men
Than be the causers of their misery.

You have my wealth, the labor of my life, [156
The comfort of mine age, my children's hope,
And therefore ne'er distinguish of the wrong.<sup>37</sup>

FERN. Content thee, Barabas, thou hast naught but right.

BAR. Your extreme right does me exceeding wrong ;

But take it to you, i' the Devil's name.

FERN. Come, let us in, and gather of these goods

The money for this tribute of the Turk.

1 KNIGHT. 'T is necessary that be look'd unto ;

For if we break our day, we break the league,
And that will prove but simple policy. 160

Exeunt [all but BARABAS and the Jews].<sup>38</sup>

BAR. Ay, policy ! that's their profession,
And not simplicity, as they suggest.
The plagues of Egypt, and the curse of Heaven,
Earth's barrenness, and all men's hatred<sup>39</sup>

Inflict upon them, thou great Primus Motor !<sup>40</sup>
And here upon my knees, striking the earth,
I ban their souls to everlasting pains

And extreme tortures of the fiery deep,
That thus have dealt with me in my distress.

1 JEW. O yet be patient, gentle Barabas. [170

BAR. O silly brethren, born to see this day, Why stand you thus unmov'd with my la-
ments?

Why weep you not to think upon my wrongs?
Why pine not I, and die in this distress?

1 JEW. Why, Barabas, as hardly can we brook

The cruel handling of ourselves in this ;

Thou seest they have taken half our goods.

BAR. Why did you yield to their extortion?
You were a multitude, and I but one ;

And of me only have they taken all. 180

1 JEW. Yet, Brother Barabas, remember Job.

BAR. What tell you me of Job? I wot his wealth

Was written thus : he had seven thousand sheep,

<sup>37</sup> I.e., make a distinction between the two injuries.

<sup>38</sup> The outer stage now represents the street.

<sup>39</sup> Trisyllabic.

<sup>40</sup> God, First Cause of motion.

Three thousand camels, and two hundred yoke
Of laboring oxen, and five hundred
She-asses ; but for every one of those,
Had they been valued at indifferent rate,
I had at home, and in mine argosy,
And other ships that came from Egypt last,
As much as would have bought his beasts and
him, 190

And yet have kept enough to live upon ;
So that not he, but I, may curse the day,
Thy fatal birthday, forlorn Barabas,
And henceforth wish for an eternal night,
That clouds of darkness may inclose my flesh,
And hide these extreme sorrows from mine
eyes :

For only I have toil'd to inherit here
The months of vanity and loss of time,
And painful nights, have been appointed me.<sup>41</sup>

2 JEW. Good Barabas, be patient.<sup>42</sup>

BAR. Ay, ay ; [200
Pray, leave me in my patience. You that Were ne'er possess'd of wealth, are pleas'd with want ;

But give him liberty at least to mourn,
That in a field amidst his enemies
Doth see his soldiers slain, himself disarm'd,
And knows no means of his recovery.
Ay, let me sorrow for this sudden chance ;
'T is in the trouble of my spirit I speak ;
Great injuries are not so soon forgot.

1 JEW. Come, let us leave him ; in his ireful mood 210

Our words will but increase his ecstasy.<sup>43</sup>

2 JEW. On, then ; but trust me 't is a misery

To see a man in such affliction. —
Farewell, Barabas ! Exeunt [the three Jews].

BAR. Ay, fare you well.
See the simplicity of these base slaves,
Who, for the villains have no wit themselves,
Think me to be a senseless lump of clay
That will with every water wash to dirt.
No, Barabas is born to better chance, 219
And fram'd of finer mold than common men,
That measure naught but by the present time.
A reaching thought will search his deepest wits,
And cast <sup>44</sup> with cunning for the time to come ;
For evils are apt to happen every day. —
But whither wends my beauteous Abigail ?

Enter ABIGAIL, the Jew's daughter.

O, what has made my lovely daughter sad ?

<sup>41</sup> Cf. Job, iii, 1, ff. "Which" is understood before "have."

<sup>43</sup> Fit of emotion.

<sup>44</sup> Plan.

What, woman ! moan not for a little loss ;
Thy father has enough in store for thee.

ABIG. Not for myself, but aged Barabas ;
Father, for thee lamenteth Abigail. 230
But I will learn to leave these fruitless tears,
And, urg'd thereto with my afflictions,
With fierce exclains run to the senate-house,
And in the senate reprehend them all,
And rent<sup>45</sup> their hearts with tearing of my hair,

Till they reduce <sup>46</sup> the wrongs done to my father.

BAR. No, Abigail, things past recovery
Are hardly cur'd with exclamations.
Be silent, Daughter ; sufferance breeds ease,
And time may yield us an occasion 240
Which on the sudden cannot serve the turn.
Besides, my girl, think me not all so fond
As negligently to forego so much
Without provision for thyself and me.
Ten thousand portagues,<sup>47</sup> besides great pearls,
Rich costly jewels, and stones infinite,
Fearing the worst of this before it fell,
I closely hid.

ABIG. Where, father ?

BAR. In my house, my girl.

ABIG. Then shall they ne'er be seen of Barabas,
For they have seiz'd upon thy house and wares. 250

BAR. But they will give me leave once more,
I trow,

To go into my house.

ABIG. That may they not ;
For there I left the Governor placing nuns,
Displacing me ; and of thy house they mean
To make a nunnery, where none but their own sect <sup>48</sup>

Must enter in, men generally barr'd.

BAR. My gold, my gold, and all my wealth is gone !
You partial heavens, have I deserv'd this plague ?

What, will you thus oppose me, luckless stars,
To make me desperate in my poverty ? 260
And knowing me impatient in distress,
Think me so mad as I will hang myself,
That I may vanish o'er the earth in air,
And leave no memory that e'er I was ?
No, I will live ; nor loathe I this my life ;
And, since you leave me in the ocean thus

$20.

To sink or swim, and put me to my shifts,
I'll rouse my senses and awake myself. —
Daughter, I have it ! Thou perceiv'st the plight
Wherein these Christians have oppressed me.
Be rul'd by me, for in extremity 271
We ought to make bar of no policy.

ABIG. Father, whate'er it be to injure them
That have so manifestly wronged us,
What will not Abigail attempt?

BAR. Why, so ;
Then thus : thou told'st me they have turn'd
my house

Into a nunnery, and some nuns are there.

ABIG. I did.

BAR. Then, Abigail, there must my girl
Entreat the abbess to be entertain'd. 279

ABIG. How, as a nun?

BAR. Ay, Daughter, for religion
Hides many mischiefs from suspicion.

ABIG. Ay, but, Father, they will suspect me
there.

BAR. Let 'em suspect ; but be thou so precise 49

As they may think it done of holiness.

Entreat 'em fair, and give them friendly
speech,

And seem to them as if thy sins were great,
Till thou has gotten to be entertain'd.

ABIG. Thus, Father, shall I much dissemble.

BAR. Tush !
As good dissemble that thou never mean'st,
As first mean truth and then dissemble it. 290
A counterfeit profession is better
Than unseen hypocrisy.

ABIG. Well, Father, say I be entertain'd,
What then shall follow?

BAR. This shall follow then :
There have I hid, close underneath the plank
That runs along the upper-chamber floor,
The gold and jewels which I kept for thee.
But here they come ; be cunning, Abigail.

ABIG. Then, Father, go with me.

BAR. No, Abigail, in this
It is not necessary I be seen ; 300
For I will seem offended with thee for't.
Be close,<sup>50</sup> my girl, for this must fetch my gold.
[They retire.]

Enter Friars [JACOMO and BARNARDINE, an Abbess, and a Nun.] 51

[F. JAC.] Sisters,
We now are almost at the new-made nunnery.

<sup>51</sup> Q Enter three Fryars and two Nuns. They are not named in speech tags, throughout.

[ABB.] 52 The better ; for we love not to be seen.

'T is thirty winters long since some of us
Did stray so far amongst the multitude.

F. JAC. But, madam, this house
And waters of this new-made nunnery 310
Will much delight you.

[ABB.] It may be so ; but who comes here?
[ABIGAIL comes forward.]

ABIG. Grave abbess, and you, happy vir-gins' guide,
Pity the state of a distressed maid.

ABB. What art thou, daughter?

ABIG. The hopeless daughter of a hapless
Jew,

The Jew of Malta, wretched Barabas ;
Sometimes 54 the owner of a goodly house,
Which they have now turn'd to a nunnery.

ABB. Well, daughter, say, what is thy suit with us?

ABIG. Fearing the afflictions which my father feels 320

Proceed from sin, or want of faith in us,
I'd pass away my life in penitence,
And be a novice in your nunnery,
To make atonement for my laboring soul.

F. JAC. No doubt, brother, but this proceedeth of the spirit.

F. BARN. Ay, and a moving spirit too, brother ; but come,
Let us entreat she may be entertain'd.

ABB. Well, daughter, we admit you for a nun.

ABIG. First let me as a novice learn to frame

My solitary life to your strait laws, 330
And let me lodge where I was wont to lie.

I do not doubt, by your divine precepts
And mine own industry, but to profit much.

BAR. [aside] As much, I hope, as all I hid is worth.

ABB. Come, daughter, follow us.

BAR. [coming forward] Why, how now, Abigail, what mak'st 55 thou
Amongst these hateful Christians?

F. JAC. Hinder her not, thou man of little faith,

For she has mortified herself. 56

BAR. How ! mortified ?

F. JAC. And is admitted to the sisterhood.

<sup>52</sup> Q 1 Nun, and for her next speech Nun.

of the passage, indicate corruption, probably due to the omission of part of the original text.

<sup>56</sup> Rendered herself dead to the world.

BAR. Child of perdition, and thy father's shame, 341
What wilt thou do among these hateful fiends?
I charge thee on my blessing that thou leave
These devils, and their damned heresy.

ABIG. Father, give <sup>57</sup> me —

BAR. (whispers to her.) Nay, back,
Abigail,

And think upon the jewels and the gold;
The board is marked thus that covers it. —
Away, accursed, from thy father's sight.

F. JAC. Barabas, although thou art in misbelief,
And wilt not see thine own afflictions, 350
Yet let thy daughter be no longer blind.

BAR. Blind friar, I reckon not thy persuasions, — [aside to ABIGAIL]

The board is marked thus + that covers it. —
For I had rather die than see her thus.

Wilt thou forsake me too in my distress,
Seduced daughter? — (aside to her) Go; forget n[o]t! —

Becomes it Jews to be so credulous? — (aside to her) To-morrow early I'll be at the door. —

No, come not at me; if thou wilt be damn'd,
Forget me, see me not, and so begone. — 360
(aside to her) Farewell, remember to-morrow morning. —

Out, out, thou wretch!

[*Exeunt, on one side BARABAS, on the other side
Friars, Abbess, Nun, and ABIGAIL.*]

Enter MATHIAS.

MATH. Who's this? Fair Abigail, the rich
Jew's daughter,
Become a nun? Her father's sudden fall
Has humbled her and brought her down to this.

Tut, she were fitter for a tale of love,
Than to be tired out with orisons;
And better would she far become a bed,
Embraced in a friendly lover's arms,
Than rise at midnight to a solemn mass. 370

Enter LODOWICK.

LOD. Why, how now, Don Mathias, in a dump?

MATH. Believe me, noble Lodowick, I have seen

The strangest sight, in my opinion,
That ever I beheld.

LOD. What was't, I prithee?

<sup>57</sup> Emend. Dyce, forgive. But probably Abigail is about to request a paternal blessing.

MATH. A fair young maid, scarce fourteen years of age,
The sweetest flower in Cytherea's field,
Cropp'd from the pleasures of the fruitful
earth,

And strangely metamorph[o]s'd nun.

LOD. But say, what was she?

MATH. Why, the rich Jew's daughter.

LOD. What, Barabas, whose goods were lately seiz'd? 380
Is she so fair?

MATH. And matchless beautiful,
As, had you seen her, 't would have mov'd
your heart,

Though [countermur'd] <sup>58</sup> with walls of brass,
to love,

Or at the least to pity.

LOD. An if she be so fair as you report,
'T were time well spent to go and visit her.

How say you, shall we?

MATH. I must and will, sir; there's no remedy.

LOD. And so will I, too, or it shall go hard.
Farewell, Mathias.

MATH. Farewell, Lodowick. 390
Exeunt.

ACT II — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter BARABAS with a light.

BAR. Thus, like the sad presaging raven, that tolls

The sick man's passport in her hollow beak,
And in the shadow of the silent night
Doth shake contagion from her sable wings,
Vex'd and tormented runs poor Barabas
With fatal curses towards these Christians.
The incertain pleasures of swift-footed Time
Have ta'en their flight, and left me in despair;
And of my former riches rests no more
But bare remembrance, like a soldier's scar,
That has no further comfort for his maim. 11
O Thou that with a fiery pillar ledd'st
The sons of Israel through the dismal shades, Light Abraham's offspring, and direct the
hand

Of Abigail this night; or let the day
Turn to eternal darkness after this!

No sleep can fasten on my watchful eyes,
Nor quiet enter my distemper'd thoughts,
Till I have answer of my Abigail.

<sup>58</sup> Conj. Deighton; Q countermin'd. Cf. Spanish Tragedy, III, vii, 16.

Enter ABIGAIL above.

ABIG. Now have I happily espied a time 20
To search the plank my father did appoint ;
And here behold, unseen, where I have found
The gold, the pearls, and jewels, which he hid.

BAR. Now I remember those old women's
words,
Who in my wealth would tell me winter's tales,
And speak of spirits and ghosts that glide by
night

About the place where treasure hath been hid ;
And now methinks that I am one of those,
For whilst I live here lives my soul's sole hope,
And, when I die, here shall my spirit walk. 30

ABIG. Now that my father's fortune were so good

As but to be about this happy place.
'Tis not so happy ; yet, when we parted last,
He said he would attend me in the morn.
Then, gentle sleep, where'er his body rests,
Give charge to Morpheus that he may dream
A golden dream, and of the sudden walk,
Come, and receive the treasure I have found.

BAR. Bueno para todos mi ganado no era.<sup>2</sup>
As good go on as sit so sadly thus. 40
But stay, what star shines yonder in the east ?
The loadstar of my life, if Abigail.
Who's there ?

ABIG. Who's that ?

BAR. Peace, Abigail, 't is I.

ABIG. Then, Father, here receive thy happiness.

BAR. Hast thou 't ?

[She] throws down bags.

ABIG. Here, hast thou 't ? There's more,
and more, and more.

BAR. O my girl, my gold, my fortune, my felicity !

Strength to my soul, death to mine enemy,
Welcome, the first beginner of my bliss !
O A[b]igail, Abigail, that I had thee here too ;
Then my desires were fully satisfied. 50
But I will practise<sup>3</sup> thy enlargement thence.
O girl, O gold, O beauty, O my bliss !

Hugs his bags.

ABIG. Father, it draweth towards midnight
now,
And 'bout this time the nuns begin to wake ;
To shun suspicion, therefore, let us part.

BAR. Farewell, my joy, and by my fingers take

<sup>3</sup> Plot.

A kiss from him that sends it from his soul.
Now Phœbus ope the eyelids of the day,
And, for the raven, wake the morning lark,
That I may hover with her in the air, 60
Singing o'er these, as she does o'er her young,
Hermoso [placer de los dineros.]<sup>4</sup> Exeunt.

[SCENE II]<sup>5</sup>

*Enter Governor [FERNEZE], MARTIN DEL
Bosco, [and] the Knights.*

FERN. Now, captain, tell us whither thou art bound ?

Whence is thy ship that anchors in our road ?
And why thou cam'st ashore without our leave ?

Bosc. Governor of Malta, hither am I bound ;

My ship, the Flying Dragon, is of Spain,
And so am I ; Del Bosco is my name,
Vice-admiral unto the Catholic King.

1 KNIGHT. 'T is true, my Lord ; therefore entreat<sup>6</sup> him well.

Bosc. Our freight is Grecians, Turks, and Afric Moors.

For late upon the coast of Corsica, 10
Because we vail'd<sup>7</sup> not to the [Turkish]<sup>8</sup> fleet,
Their creeping galleys had us in the chase.
But suddenly the wind began to rise,
And then we [luff'd and tack'd]<sup>9</sup> and fought at ease.

Some have we fir'd, and many have we sunk ;
But one amongst the rest became our prize.
The captain's slain ; the rest remain our slaves,
Of whom we would make sale in Malta here.

FERN. Martin del Bosco, I have heard of
thee ;

Welcome to Malta, and to all of us. 20
But to admit a sale of these thy Turks
We may not, nay, we dare not give consent,
By reason of a tributary league.

1 KNIGHT. Del Bosco, as thou lovest and honor'st us,

Persuade our governor against the Turk ;
This truce we have is but in hope of gold,
And with that sum he craves might we wage
war.

Bosc. Will Knights of Malta be in league with Turks,
And buy it basely, too, for sums of gold ? 29

My Lord, remember that, to Europe's shame,
The Christian Isle of Rhodes, from whence you came,

Was lately lost, and you were stated <sup>10</sup> here
To be at deadly enmity with Turks.

FERN. Captain, we know it ; but our force is small.

Bosc. What is the sum that Calymath requires?

FERN. A hundred thousand crowns.

Bosc. My lord and king hath title to this isle,

And he means quickly to expel you hence ;
Therefore be rul'd by me, and keep the gold.
I'll write unto his Majesty for aid, 40
And not depart until I see you free.

FERN. On this condition shall thy Turks be sold.

Go, officers, and set them straight in show.

[Exeunt Officers.]

Bosco, thou shalt be Malta's general ;
We and our warlike knights will follow thee
Against these barbarous, misbelieving Turks.

Bosc. So shall you imitate those you succeed ;

For when their hideous force environ'd Rhodes, Small though the number was that kept the
town,

They fought it out, and not a man surviv'd [50
To bring the hapless news to Christendom.<sup>11</sup>

FERN. So will we fight it out. Come, let's
away !

Proud, daring Calymath, instead of gold,
We'll send thee [bullets] wrapp'd in smoke and fire.

Claim tribute where thou wilt, we are resolv'd ;
Honor is bought with blood and not with gold. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>12</sup>

Enter Officers with [ITHAMORE and other] Slaves.

1 OFF. This is the market-place, here let 'em
stand ;

Fear not their sale, for they'll be quickly bought.

2 OFF. Every one's price is written on his back,
And so much must they yield or not be sold.

<sup>12</sup> The market-place, ll. 1-6, 98-168 ; a street, ll. 7-98 ; the street before Barabas's new house, l. 169 to end.

1 OFF. Here comes the Jew ; had not his goods been seiz'd,
He'd give us present money for them all.

Enter BARABAS.

BAR. In spite of these swine-eating Christians, —

Unchosen nation, never circumcis'd,
Such as, poor villains, were ne'er thought upon

Till Titus and Vespasian conquer'd us — 10 Am I become as wealthy as I was.

They hop'd my daughter would ha' been a
nun ;

But she's at home, and I have bought a house
As great and fair as is the Governor's.

And there in spite of Malta will I dwell, Having Ferneze's hand,<sup>13</sup> whose heart I'll
have ;

Ay, and his son's too, or it shall go hard.

I am not of the tribe of Levi, I,
That can so soon forget an injury.

We Jews can fawn like spaniels when we please ; 20

And when we grin we bite, yet are our looks
As innocent and harmless as a lamb's.

I learn'd in Florence <sup>14</sup> how to kiss my hand, Heave up my shoulders when they call me dog,

And duck as low as any barefoot friar ;

Hoping to see them starve upon a stall,<sup>15</sup>

Or else be gather'd for in our synagogue,

That, when the offering-basin comes to me,

Even for charity I may spit into 't.

Here comes Don Lodowick, the Governor's
son, 30

One that I love for his good father's sake.

Enter LODOWICK.

LOD. I hear the wealthy Jew walked this way.

I'll seek him out, and so insinuate
That I may have a sight of Abigail ;
For Don Mathias tells me she is fair.

BAR. [aside] Now will I show myself
To have more of the serpent than the dove ;
That is, more knave than fool.

LOD. Yond' walks the Jew ; now for fair
Abigail.

BAR. [aside] Ay, ay, no doubt but she's at your command. 40

<sup>13</sup> Probably a promise of safety, in writing.

<sup>14</sup> The home of Machiavelli ; the reiteration of policy in this play is also referable to the Elizabeth-than notion of his theories.

<sup>15</sup> Assigned quarters (in an almshouse). (N.E.D.)

LOD. Barabas, thou know'st I am the Governor's son.

BAR. I would you were his father, too, sir ; That's all the harm I wish you. — [aside] The slave <sup>16</sup> looks Like a hog's cheek new sing'd.

LOD. Whither walk'st thou, Barabas?

BAR. No further ; 't is a custom held with us,

That when we speak with Gentiles like to you, We turn into the air to purge ourselves ; For unto us the promise doth belong.

LOD. Well, Barabas, canst help me to a diamond? 49

BAR. O, sir, your father had my diamonds. Yet I have one left that will serve your turn. — [aside] I mean my daughter ; but ere he shall have her

I'll sacrifice her on a pile of wood.

I ha' the poison of the city <sup>17</sup> for him, And the white leprosy.

LOD. What sparkle does it give without a foil? <sup>18</sup>

BAR. The diamond that I talk of ne'er was foil'd. —

[aside] But when he touches it, it will be foil'd. <sup>19</sup> —

Lord Lodowick, it sparkles bright and fair.

LOD. Is it square or pointed, pray let me know. 60

BAR. Pointed <sup>20</sup> it is, good sir — (aside) but not for you.

LOD. I like it much the better.

BAR. So do I too.

LOD. How shows it by night?

BAR. Outshines Cynthia's rays :

— (aside) You'll like it better far a-nights than days.

LOD. And what's the price?

BAR. [aside] Your life an if you have it. —

O my Lord,

We will not jar about the price ; come to my house

And I will give 't your Honor — (aside) with a vengeance.

LOD. No, Barabas, I will deserve it first.

BAR. Good sir, 70

Your father has deserv'd it at my hands, Who, of mere charity and Christian ruth, To bring me to religious purity,

And as it were in catechising sort, To make me mindful of my mortal sins, Against my will, and whether I would or no, Seiz'd all I had, and thrust me out a' doors, And made my house a place for nuns most chaste.

LOD. No doubt your soul shall reap the fruit of it.

BAR. Ay, but, my Lord, the harvest is far off. 80

And yet I know the prayers of those nuns And holy friars, having money for their pains, Are wondrous ; — (aside) and indeed do no man good —

And seeing they are not idle, but still doing, 'T is likely they in time may reap some fruit — I mean in fullness of perfection.

LOD. Good Barabas, glance not at <sup>21</sup> our holy nuns.

BAR. No, but I do it through a burning zeal, —

(aside) Hoping ere long to set the house afire ; For though they do a while increase and multiply, 90

I'll have a saying <sup>22</sup> to that nunnery. —

As for the diamond, sir, I told you of, Come home and there's no price shall make us part,

Even for your honorable father's sake. —

(aside) It shall go hard but I will see your death. —

But now I must be gone to buy a slave.

LOD. And, Barabas, I'll bear thee company.

BAR. Come, then ; — here's the market-place.

What's the price of this slave? Two hundred crowns !

Do the Turk[s] weigh so much?

1 OFF. Sir, that's his price. [100

BAR. What, can he steal, that you demand so much?

Belike he has some new trick for a purse ; And if he has, he is worth three hundred plates, <sup>23</sup>

So that, being bought, the town seal might be got

To keep him for his lifetime from the gallows. The sessions day is critical to thieves,

And few or none 'scape but by being purg'd.

LOD. Ratest thou this Moor but at two hundred plates?

1 OFF. No more, my Lord.

BAR. Why should this Turk be dearer than that Moor? 110

1 OFF. Because he is young and has more qualities.

BAR. What, hast thou the philosopher's stone? <sup>24</sup> An thou hast, break my head with it; I'll forgive thee.

[SLAVE.] <sup>25</sup> No, sir; I can cut and shave.

BAR. Let me see, sirrah, are you not an old shaver?

[SLAVE.] Alas, sir! I am a very youth.

BAR. A youth? I'll buy you, and marry you to Lady Vanity, <sup>26</sup> if you do well. 120

[SLAVE.] I will serve you, sir.

BAR. Some wicked trick or other. It may be, under color of shaving, thou'lt cut my throat for my goods. Tell me, hast thou thy health well?

[SLAVE.] Ay, passing well.

BAR. So much the worse; I must have one that's sickly, [an't] <sup>27</sup> be but for sparing victuals. 'T is not a stone of beef a day will maintain you in these chops; <sup>28</sup> let me see one that's somewhat leaner. 131

1 OFF. Here's a leaner; how like you him?

BAR. Where was thou born?

ITHA. In Thrace; brought up in Arabia.

BAR. So much the better; thou art for my turn.

An hundred crowns? I'll have him; there's the coin.

1 OFF. Then mark him, sir, and take him hence.

BAR. [aside] Ay, mark him, you were best; for this is he

That by my help shall do much villainy. —

My Lord, farewell. — Come, sirrah, you are mine. —

As for the diamond, it shall be yours; 140

I pray, sir, be no stranger at my house;

All that I have shall be at your command.

Enter MATHIAS [and his Mother, KATHERINE].

MATH. [aside] What makes the Jew and Lodowick so private?

I fear me 't is about fair Abigail.

BAR. Yonder comes Don Mathias; let us stay; <sup>29</sup>

He loves my daughter, and she holds him dear:

But I have sworn to frustrate both their hopes,
And be reveng'd upon the — [aside] Governor!
[Exit LODOWICK.]

[KATH.] <sup>30</sup> This Moor is comeliest, is he not? Speak, Son.

MATH. No, this is the better, Mother; view this well. 150

BAR. [aside to MATHIAS] Seem not to know me here before your mother,

Lest she mistrust the match that is in hand.

When you have brought her home, come to my house;

Think of me as thy father; Son, farewell.

MATH. [aside to BARABAS] But wherefore talk'd Don Lodowick with you?

BAR. [aside to MATHIAS] Tush, man! we talk'd of diamonds, not of Abigail.

KATH. Tell me, Mathias, is not that the Jew?

BAR. As for the comment on the Maccabees,

I have it, sir, and 't is at your command.

MATH. Yes, madam, and my talk with him was 160

About the borrowing of a book or two.

KATH. Converse not with him; he is cast off from Heaven. —

Thou hast thy crowns, fellow. — Come, let's away.

MATH. Sirrah, Jew, remember the book.

BAR. Marry will I, sir.

Exeunt [MATHIAS and his Mother].

OFF. Come, I have made A reasonable market; let's away.

[Exeunt Officers with Slaves.]

BAR. Now let me know thy name, and therewithal

Thy birth, condition, and profession.

ITHA. Faith, sir, my birth is but mean; my name's Ithamore; my profession what you please. 171

BAR. Hast thou no trade? Then listen to my words,

And I will teach [thee] <sup>31</sup> that shall stick by thee.

First be thou void of these affections:

Compassion, love, vain hope, and heartless fear;

Be mov'd at nothing, see thou pity none,

But to thyself smile when the Christians moan.

ITHA. O, brave! Master, I worship your nose <sup>32</sup> for this.

<sup>32</sup> Barabas was played with a false nose.

BAR. As for myself, I walk abroad a-nights
And kill sick people groaning under walls ;
Sometimes I go about and poison wells ; 181
And now and then, to cherish Christian thieves,
I am content to lose some of my crowns,
That I may, walking in my gallery,<sup>33</sup>
See 'em go pinion'd along by my door.
Being young, I studied physic, and began
To practise first upon the Italian ;
There I enrich'd the priests with burials,
And always kept the sextons' arms in ure<sup>34</sup>
With digging graves and ringing dead men's knells. 190

And after that was I an engineer,
And in the wars 'twixt France and Germany,
Under pretence of helping Charles the Fifth,
Slew friend and enemy with my stratagems.
Then after that was I an usurer,
And with extorting, cozening,<sup>35</sup> forfeiting,
And tricks belonging unto brokery,
I fill'd the jails with bankrouths in a year,
And with young orphans planted hospitals,
And every moon made some or other mad, [200
And now and then one hang himself for grief,
Pinning upon his breast a long great scroll
How I with interest tormented him.
But mark how I am blest for plaguing them :
I have as much coin as will buy the town.
But tell me now, how hast thou spent thy
time?

ITHA. Faith, master,
In setting Christian villages on fire,
Chaining of eunuchs, binding galley-slaves.
One time I was an ostler in an inn, 210
And in the nighttime secretly would I steal
To travellers' chambers, and there cut their throats.
Once at Jerusalem, where the pilgrims kneel'd,
I strowed powder on the marble stones,
And therewithal their knees would rankle so,
That I have laugh'd a-good<sup>36</sup> to see the cripples
Go limping home to Christendom on stilts.<sup>37</sup>

BAR. Why this is something. Make account of me
As of thy fellow ; we are villains both, 219
Both circumcised, we hate Christians both.
Be true and secret, thou shalt want no gold.
But stand aside ; here comes Don Lodowick.

Re-enter LODOWICK.

LOD. O, Barabas, well met ;
Where is the diamond you told me of?

<sup>37</sup> Crutches.

BAR. I have it for you, sir ; please you walk in with me.
What ho, Abigail ! open the door, I say.

Enter ABIGAIL

ABIG. In good time, father ; here are letters
come
From Ormus, and the post<sup>38</sup> stays here within.
BAR. Give me the letters. — (aside) Daughter,
do you hear,
Entertain Lodowick, the Governor's son, 230
With all the courtesy you can afford,
Provided that you keep your maidenhead.
Use him as if he were a Philistine ;
Dissemble, swear, protest, vow to love him ;
He is not of the seed of Abraham. —
I am a little busy, sir, pray pardon me.
Abigail, bid him welcome for my sake.

ABIG. For your sake and his own he's welcome
hither.

BAR. Daughter, a word more ; — (aside)
kiss him, speak him fair,
And like a cunning Jew so cast about 240
That ye be both made sure<sup>39</sup> ere you come out.

ABIG. (aside) O father ! Don Mathias is my
love.

BAR. (aside) I know it ; yet I say, make love
to him ;
Do, it is requisite it should be so. —
Nay, on my life, it is my factor's hand ;
But go you in, I'll think upon the account.

[Exeunt ABIGAIL and LODOWICK into the house.]

The account is made, for Lodowick dies.
My factor sends me word a merchant's fled
That owes me for a hundred tun of wine.
I weigh it thus much [snapping his fingers] ; I have wealth enough. 250
For now by this has he kiss'd Abigail ;
And she vows love to him, and he to her.
As sure as Heaven rain'd manna for the Jews,
So sure shall he and Don Mathias die :
His father was<sup>40</sup> my chiefest enemy.

Re-enter MATHIAS.

Whither goes Don Mathias? Stay awhile.
MATH. Whither but to my fair love,
Abigail?

BAR. Thou know'st, and Heaven can witness it is true,
That I intend my daughter shall be thine.

MATH. Ay, Barabas, or else thou wrong'st me much. 260

BAR. O, Heaven forbid I should have such a thought.

Pardon me though I weep ; the Governor's son Will, whether I will or no, have Abigail :

He sends her letters, bracelets, jewels, rings.

MATH. Does she receive them ?

BAR. She ? No, Mathias, no, but sends them back ;

And when he comes, she locks herself up fast ; Yet through the keyhole will he talk to her, While she runs to the window looking out When you should come and hale him from the door. 270

MATH. O treacherous Lodowick !

BAR. Even now, as I came home, he slipp'd me in ;

And I am sure he is with Abigail.

MATH. I'll rouse him thence.

BAR. Not for all Malta ; therefore sheathe your sword.

If you love me, no quarrels in my house ; But steal you in, and seem to see him not.

I'll give him such a warning ere he goes

As he shall have small hopes of Abigail.

Away, for here they come. 280

Re-enter LODOWICK [and] ABIGAIL.

MATH. What, hand in hand ! I cannot suffer this.

BAR. Mathias, as thou lov'st me, not a word.

MATH. Well, let it pass ; another time shall serve. Exit.

LOD. Barabas, is not that the widow's son ?

BAR. Ay, and take heed, for he hath sworn your death.

LOD. My death ? What, is the baseborn peasant mad ?

BAR. No, no ; but happily <sup>41</sup> he stands in fear

Of that which you, I think, ne'er dream upon, My daughter here, a paltry silly girl.

LOD. Why, loves she Don Mathias ? 290

BAR. Doth she not with her smiling answer you ?

ABIG. [aside] He has my heart ; I smile against my will.

LOD. Barabas, thou know'st I have lov'd thy daughter long.

BAR. And so has she done you, even from a child.

LOD. And now I can no longer hold my mind.

BAR. Nor I the affection that I bear to you.

<sup>42</sup> Haply.

LOD. This is thy diamond ; tell me shall I have it ?

BAR. Win it, and wear it ; it is yet [un-foil'd].<sup>42</sup>

O, but I know your Lordship would disdain To marry with the daughter of a Jew ; 300

And yet I'll give her many a golden cross,<sup>43</sup> With Christian posies <sup>44</sup> round about the ring.

LOD. 'T is not thy wealth, but her that I esteem.

Yet crave I thy consent.

BAR. And mine you have, yet let me talk to her. —

(Aside) This offspring of Cain, this Jebusite, That never tasted of the Passover

Nor e'er shall see the land of Canaan

Nor our Messias that is yet to come,

This gentle <sup>45</sup> maggot, Lodowick, I mean, [310 Must be deluded. Let him have thy hand, But keep thy heart till Don Mathias comes.

ABIG. [aside] What, shall I be betroth'd to Lodowick ?

BAR. [aside] It's no sin to deceive a Christian,

For they themselves hold it a principle

Faith is not to be held with heretics ;

But all are heretics that are not Jews ;

This follows well, and therefore, Daughter, fear not. —

I have entreated her, and she will grant.

LOD. Then, gentle Abigail, plight thy faith to me. 320

ABIG. I cannot choose, seeing my father bids.

Nothing but death shall part my love and me.

LOD. Now have I that for which my soul hath long'd.

BAR. (aside.) So have not I, but yet I hope I shall.

ABIG. [aside] O wretched Abigail, what hast [thou] <sup>46</sup> done ?

LOD. Why on the sudden is your color chang'd ?

ABIG. I know not, but farewell ; I must be gone.

BAR. Stay her, but let her not speak one word more.

LOD. Mute a' the sudden ! Here's a sudden change.

BAR. O, muse not at it, 't is the Hebrews' guise, 330

That maidens new betroth'd should weep awhile.

Trouble her not ; sweet Lodowick, depart ;
She is thy wife, and thou shalt be mine heir.

Lod. O, is't the custom ? Then I am resolv'd ;<sup>47</sup>

But rathe[r] let the brightsome heavens be dim

And nature's beauty choke with stifling clouds,

Than my fair Abigail should frown on me. —
There comes the villain ; now I'll be reveng'd.

Re-enter MATHIAS.

BAR. Be quiet, Lodowick ; it is enough
That I have made thee sure to Abigail. 340

Lod. Well, let him go. Exit.

BAR. Well, but for me, as you went in at doors

You had been stabb'd ; but not a word on't now ;

Here must no speeches pass nor swords be drawn.

MATH. Suffer me, Barabas, but to follow him.

BAR. No ; so shall I, if any hurt be done,
Be made an accessory of your deeds.

Revenge it on him when you meet him next.

MATH. For this I'll have his heart. 349

BAR. Do so ; lo, here I give thee Abigail.

MATH. What greater gift can poor Mathias have ?

Shall Lodowick rob me of so fair a love ?

My life is not so dear as Abigail.

BAR. My heart misgives me that, to cross your love,

He's with your mother ; therefore after him.

MATH. What, is he gone unto my mother ?

BAR. Nay, if you will, stay till she comes herself.

MATH. I cannot stay ; for if my mother come,

She'll die with grief. Exit.

ABIG. I cannot take my leave of him for tears. — 360

Father, why have you thus incens'd them both ?

BAR. What's that to thee ?

ABIG. I'll make 'em friends again.

BAR. You'll make 'em friends ! Are there not Jews enow

In Malta, but thou must dote upon a Christian ?

<sup>47</sup> Satisfied.

ABIG. I will have Don Mathias ; he is my love.

BAR. Yes, you shall have him. — Go, put her in.

ITHA. Ay, I'll put her in.

[Puts ABIGAIL in.]

BAR. Now tell me, Ithamore, how lik'st thou this ?

ITHA. Faith, master, I think by this 369
You purchase both their lives ; is it not so ?

BAR. True ; and it shall be cunningly perform'd.

ITHA. O master, that I might have a hand in this.

BAR. Ay, so thou shalt ; 't is thou must do the deed.

Take this, and bear it to Mathias straight,
[Gives a letter.]

And tell him that it comes from Lodowick.

ITHA. 'T is poison'd, is it not ?

BAR. No, no ; and yet it might be done that way.

It is a challenge feign'd from Lodowick.

ITHA. Fear not ; I'll so set his heart afire
That he shall verily think it comes from him.

BAR. I cannot choose but like thy readiness ; 381

Yet be not rash, but do it cunningly.

ITHA. As I behave myself in this, employ me hereafter.

BAR. Away then. Exit [ITHAMORE].

So ; now will I go in to Lodowick

And, like a cunning spirit, feign some lie,

Till I have set 'em both at enmity. Exit.

ACT III — [SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter [BELLAMIRA,] a courtesan.

BELL. Since this town was besieg'd, my gain grows cold.

The time has been that, but for one bare night,

A hundred ducats have been freely given ;
But now against my will I must be chaste,

And yet I know my beauty doth not fail.

From Venice merchants and from Padua

Were wont to come rare-witted gentlemen,

Scholars, I mean, learned and liberal ;

And now, save Pilia-Borza, comes there none,

And he is very seldom from my house ; 10
And here he comes.

<sup>1</sup> A street near Bellamira's house.

Enter PILIA-BORZA.

PILIA. Hold thee, wench ; there's something for thee to spend. [Shows a bag of silver.]

BELL. 'T is silver ; I disdain it.

PILIA. Ay, but the Jew has gold,
And I will have it, or it shall go hard.

COURT. Tell me, how cam'st thou by this?

PILIA. Faith, walking the back lanes, through the gardens, I chanc'd to cast mine eye up to the Jew's countinghouse, where [20 I saw some bags of money, and in the night I clamber'd up with my hooks, and, as I was taking my choice, I heard a rumbling in the house ; so I took only this, and run my way. But here's the Jew's man.

Enter ITHAMORE.

BELL. Hide the bag.

PILIA. Look not towards him ; let's away.
Zoons, what a looking thou keep'st ; thou'lt betray's anon.

[Exeunt BELLAMIRA and PILIA-BORZA.]

ITHA. O the sweetest face that ever I [30 beheld ! I know she is a courtesan by her attire. Now would I give a hundred of the Jew's crowns that I had such a concubine.

Well, I have deliver'd the challenge in such sort
As meet they will, and fighting die — brave sport ! Exit.

[SCENE II.]<sup>2</sup>

Enter MATHIAS.

MATH. This is the place ; now Abigail shall see Whether Mathias holds her dear or no.

Enter LODOWICK, reading.<sup>3</sup>

MATH. Wh-<sup>o</sup>, dares the villain write in such base terms?

LOD. I did it ; and revenge it if thou dar'st.
[They fight.]

Enter BARABAS, above.

BAR. O, bravely fought ; and yet they thrust not home.
Now, Lodowick ! now, Mathias ! — So !
[Both fall.]
So now they have show'd themselves to be tall<sup>4</sup> fellows.

[Cries] within. Part 'em, part 'em

BAR. Ay, part 'em now they are dead.
Farewell, farewell. Exit.

Enter FERNEZE, KATHERINE [and Attendants].

FERN. What sight is this ? — my Lodowick slain ! 10

These arms of mine shall be thy sepulchre.

KATH. Who is this ? My son Mathias slain !

FERN. O Lodowick ! hadst thou perish'd by the Turk,
Wretched Ferneze might have veng'd thy death.

KATH. Thy son slew mine, and I'll revenge his death.

FERN. Look, Katherine, look ; thy son gave mine these wounds.

KATH. O, leave to grieve me ; I am griev'd enough.

FERN. O, that my sighs could turn to lively breath,
And these my tears to blood, that he might live.

KATH. Who made them enemies ? 20

FERN. I know not, and that grieves me most of all.

KATH. My son lov'd thine.

FERN. And so did Lodowick him.

KATH. Lend me that weapon that did kill my son,
And it shall murder me.

FERN. Nay, madam, stay ; that weapon was my son's,
And on that rather should Ferneze die.

KATH. Hold ; let's inquire the causers of their deaths,
That we may venge their blood upon their heads.

FERN. Then take them up, and let them be interr'd

Within one sacred monument of stone ; 30
Upon which altar I will offer up
My daily sacrifice of sighs and tears,
And with my prayers pierce impartial Heavens,

Till they [reveal]<sup>5</sup> the causers of our smarts,
Which forc'd their hands divide united hearts.

Come, Katherina, our losses equal are ;
Then of true grief let us take equal share.

Exeunt [with the bodies].

<sup>5</sup> Conj. Dyce ; om. Q.

[SCENE III] <sup>6</sup>Enter ITHAMORE.

ITHA. Why, was there ever seen such villainy,
So neatly plotted, and so well perform'd?
Both held in hand,<sup>7</sup> and flatly both beguil'd?

Enter ABIGAIL.

ABIG. Why, how now, Ithamore, why laugh'st thou so?

ITHA. O mistress, ha! ha! ha!

ABIG. Why, what ail'st thou?

ITHA. O my master!

ABIG. Ha!

ITHA. O mistress! I have the bravest,<sup>8</sup> gravest, secret, subtle, bottle-nos'd knave to my master, that ever gentleman had. 11

ABIG. Say, knave, why rail'st upon my father thus?

ITHA. O, my master has the bravest policy.

ABIG. Wherein?

ITHA. Why, know you not?

ABIG. Why, no.

ITHA. Know you not of Mathias' and Don Lodowick's disaster?

ABIG. No; what was it? 19

ITHA. Why, the Devil invented a challenge, my master writ it, and I carried it, first to Lodowick, and imprimis to Mathias. And then they met, [and,]<sup>9</sup> as the story says, In doleful wise they ended both their days.

ABIG. And was my father furtherer of their deaths?

ITHA. Am I Ithamore?

ABIG. Yes.

ITHA. So sure did your father write, and I carry the challenge.

ABIG. Well, Ithamore, let me request thee this: 30

Go to the new-made nunnery, and inquire For any of the friars of Saint [Jacques,]<sup>10</sup> And say I pray them come and speak with me.

ITHA. I pray, mistress, will you answer me to one question? <sup>11</sup>

ABIG. Well, sirrah, what is 't?

ITHA. A very feeling one: have not the nuns fine sport with the friars now and then?

ABIG. Go to, sirrah sauce; is this your question? Get ye gone. 40

ITHA. I will, forsooth, mistress. Exit.

ABIG. Hard-hearted father, unkind Barabas!

Was this the pursuit of thy policy?

To make me show them favor severally,

That by my favor they should both be slain?

Admit thou lov'dst not Lodowick for his [sire],<sup>12</sup>

Yet Don Mathias ne'er offended thee;

But thou wert set upon extreme revenge,

Because the [sire]<sup>13</sup> dispossess'd thee once,

And couldst not venge it, but upon his son,

Nor on his son, but by Mathias' means, 51

Nor on Mathias, but by murdering me.

But I perceive there is no love on earth,

Pity in Jews, nor piety in Turks.

But here comes cursed Ithamore, with the friar.

Enter ITHAMORE [and] Friar [JACOMO].

F. JAC. Virgo, salve.

ITHA. When! duck you? <sup>14</sup>

ABIG. Welcome, grave friar; Ithamore, be-gone. — Exit [ITHAMORE].

Know, holy sir, I am bold to solicit thee.

F. JAC. Wherein? 60

ABIG. To get me be admitted for a nun.

F. JAC. Why, Abigail, it is not yet long since That I did labor thy admission, And then thou didst not like that holy life.

ABIG. Then were my thoughts so frail and unconfirm'd,

And I was chain'd to follies of the world;

But now experience, purchased with grief,

Has made me see the difference of things.

My sinful soul, alas, hath pac'd too long

The fatal labyrinth of misbelief, 70

Far from the Son <sup>15</sup> that gives eternal life.

F. JAC. Who taught thee this?

ABIG. The abbess of the house, Whose zealous admonition I embrace.

Oh, therefore, Jacom[o], let me be one,

Although unworthy, of that sisterhood.

F. JAC. Abigail, I will; but see thou change no more.

For that will be most heavy to thy soul.

ABIG. That was my father's fault.

F. JAC. Thy father's! how?

ABIG. Nay, you shall pardon me. — [aside]

O Barabas,

<sup>14</sup> The Friars were given to bobs and curtales.

"When" is an exclamation of impatience.

<sup>15</sup> With a pun on sun.

Though thou deservest hardly at my hands, 80
Yet never shall these lips bewray thy life.

F. JAC. Come, shall we go?

ABIG. My duty waits on you.
Exeunt.

[SCENE IV] <sup>16</sup>

Enter BARABAS, reading a letter.

BAR. What, Abigail become a nun again!
False and unkind; <sup>17</sup> what, hast thou lost thy father?

And all unknown, and unconstrain'd of me,
Art thou again got to the nunnery?
Now here she writes, and wills me to repent.
Repentance! Spurca! <sup>18</sup> what pretendeth <sup>19</sup>
this?

I fear she knows — 't is so — of my device
In Don Mathias' and Lodovico's deaths.
If so, 't is time that it be seen into;
For she that varies from me in belief 10
Gives great presumption that she loves me
not;

Or, loving, doth dislike of something done.
But who comes here?

[Enter ITHAMORE.]

O Ithamore, come near;
Come near, my love; come near, thy master's life;
My trusty servant, nay, my second [self]: <sup>20</sup>
For I have now no hope but even in thee,
And on that hope my happiness is built.
When saw'st thou Abigail?

ITHA. To-day.

BAR. With whom?

ITHA. A friar.

BAR. A friar! false villain, he hath done the deed. 19

ITHA. How, sir?

BAR. Why, made mine Abigail a nun.

ITHA. That's no lie, for she sent me for him.

BAR. O unhappy day!

False, credulous, inconstant Abigail!
But let 'em go; and, Ithamore, from hence Ne'er shall she grieve me more with her disgrace;
Ne'er shall she live to inherit aught of mine,
Be bless'd of me, nor come within my gates,
But perish underneath my bitter curse,
Like Cain by Adam for his brother's death.

ITHA. O master!

BAR. Ithamore, entreat not for her, I am mov'd, 30

And she is hateful to my soul and me;
And ['less] <sup>21</sup> thou yield to this that I entreat,
I cannot think but that thou hat'st my life.

ITHA. Who, I, master? Why, I'll run to some rock

And throw myself headlong into the sea;
Why, I'll do anything for your sweet sake.

BAR. O trusty Ithamore, no servant, but my friend,
I here adopt thee for mine only heir;
All that I have is thine when I am dead, 39
And whilst I live use half; spend as myself.
Here take my keys, — I'll give 'em thee anon.
Go buy thee garments; but thou shalt not want.

Only know this, that thus thou art to do;
But first go fetch me in the pot of rice
That for our supper stands upon the fire.

ITHA. [aside] I hold <sup>22</sup> my head my master's hungry. — I go, sir. Exit.

BAR. Thus every villain ambles after wealth,
Although he ne'er be richer than in hope.
But, hush 't!

Re-enter ITHAMORE with the pot.

ITHA. Here 't is, master.

BAR. Well said, <sup>23</sup> Ithamore.
What, hast thou brought the ladle with thee
too? 50

ITHA. Yes, sir; the proverb says he that eats with the Devil had need of a long spoon.
I have brought you a ladle.

BAR. Very well, Ithamore; then now be secret;

And for thy sake, whom I so dearly love,
Now shalt thou see the death of Abigail,
That thou mayst freely live to be my heir.

ITHA. Why, master, will you poison her with a mess of rice porridge? That will preserve life, make her round and plump, and batten more than you are aware. 61

BAR. Ay, but, Ithamore, seest thou this?
It is a precious powder that I bought
Of an Italian in Ancona once,
Whose operation is to bind, infect,
And poison deeply, yet not appear
In forty hours after it is ta'en.

ITHA. How, master?

BAR. Thus, Ithamore.

This even they use in Malta here — 't is called

<sup>23</sup> Well done.

Saint Jacques' Even, — and then, I say, they use 71

To send their alms unto the nunneries.
Among the rest bear this, and set it there ;
There's a dark entry where they take it in,
Where they must neither see the messenger,
Nor make inquiry who hath sent it them.

ITHA. How so ?

BAR. Belike there is some ceremony in 't.
There, Ithamore, must thou go place this [pot] ! <sup>24</sup>

Stay, let me spice it first. 80

ITHA. Pray do, and let me help you, master.
Pray let me taste first.

BAR. Prithce do. — What say'st thou now ?

ITHA. Troth, master, I'm loath such a pot of pottage should be spoil'd.

BAR. Peace, Ithamore ; 't is better so than spar'd.

Assure thyself thou shalt have broth by the eye : <sup>25</sup>

My purse, my coffer, and myself is thine.

ITHA. Well, master, I go.

BAR. Stay, first let me stir it, Ithamore. [90
As fatal be it to her as the draught
Of which great Alexander drunk and died ;
And with her let it work like Borgia's wine,
Whereof his sire, the Pope, was poisoned.
In few, <sup>26</sup> the blood of Hydra, Lerna's bane,
The juice of hebon, <sup>27</sup> and Cocytus' breath,
And all the poisons of the Stygian pool
Break from the fiery kingdom, and in this Vomit your venom and envenom her
That like a fiend hath left her father thus. [100

ITHA. [aside] What a blessing has he giv'n 't !
Was ever pot of rice porridge so sauc'd ? —
What shall I do with it ?

BAR. O, my sweet Ithamore, go set it down,
And come again so soon as thou hast done,
For I have other business for thee.

ITHA. Here's a drench to poison a whole stable of Flanders mares. I'll carry 't to the nuns with a powder. <sup>28</sup>

BAR. And the horse pestilence to boot ;
away !

ITHA. I am gone. 111

Pay me my wages, for my work is done. Exit.

BAR. I'll pay thee with a vengeance, Itha-

<sup>27</sup> A poison ; perhaps henbane, perhaps yew. —
Lerna, a marshy district near Argos, was the place where Hercules killed the Hydra. The river Cocytus, a tributary of the Acheron, was one of the rivers of Hades. So was the Styx.

<sup>28</sup> In haste. With an obvious pun.

[SCENE V] <sup>29</sup>

Enter FERNEZE, DEL BOSCO, Knights, [and a] Bashaw.

FERN. Welcome, great [Bashaw] <sup>30</sup> ; how fares Calymath ?

What wind drives you thus into Malta road ?

BAS. The wind that bloweth all the world besides —

Desire of gold.

FERN. Desire of gold, great sir ?

That's to be gotten in the Western Ind ;
In Malta are no golden minerals.

BAS. To you of Malta thus saith Calymath :
The time you took for respite is at hand,
For the performance of your promise pass'd ;
And for the tribute money I am sent. 10

FERN. Bashaw, in brief, shalt have no tribute here,

Nor shall the heathens live upon our spoil.

First will we raze the city walls ourselves,
Lay waste the island, hew the temples down,
And, shipping off <sup>31</sup> our goods to Sicily,
Open an entrance for the wasteful sea,
Whose billows, beating the resistless banks,
Shall overflow it with their refluxence.

BAS. Well, Governor, since thou hast broke the league

By flat denial of the promis'd tribute, 20
Talk not of razing down your city walls.
You shall not need trouble yourselves so far,
For Selim Calymath shall come himself,
And with brass bullets batter down your towers
And turn proud Malta to a wilderness
For these intolerable wrongs of yours ;
And so, farewell.

FERN. Farewell. — [Exit Basso.]

And now, you men of Malta, look about,
And let's provide to welcome Calymath. 30
Close your portcullis, charge your basilisks, <sup>32</sup>
And as you profitably take up arms,
So now courageously encounter them ;
For by this answer, broken is the league,
And naught is to be look'd for now but wars ;
And naught to us more welcome is than wars.

Exeunt.

[SCENE VI] <sup>33</sup>

Enter [the] two Friars [JACOMO and BARNARDINE].

F. JAC. O, brother, brother, all the nuns are sick,

<sup>29</sup> Unlocated ; perhaps the senate-house.

<sup>33</sup> The courtyard of the nunnery.

And physic will not help them ; they must die.

F. BARN. The Abbess sent for me to be confess'd ;

O, what a sad confession will there be !

F. JAC. And so did fair Maria send for me. I'll to her lodging ; hereabouts she lies. Exit.

Enter ABIGAIL.

F. BARN. What, all dead, save only Abigail ?

ABIG. And I shall die too, for I feel death coming.

Where is the friar that convers'd with me ? 9

F. BARN. O, he is gone to see the other nuns.

ABIG. I sent for him, but seeing you are come,

Be you my ghostly father ; and first know

• That in this house I liv'd religiously,
Chaste, and devout, much sorrowing for my sins ;

But ere I came —

F. BARN. What then ?

ABIG. I did offend high Heaven so grievously

As I am almost desperate for my sins ;

And one offence torments me more than all.

You knew Mathias and Don Lodowick ? 20

F. BARN. Yes, what of them ?

• ABIG. My father did contract me to 'em both :

First to Don Lodowick ; him I never lov'd ;

Mathias was the man that I held dear ;

And for his sake did I become a nun.

F. BARN. So, say how was their end ?

ABIG. Both jealous of my love, envied <sup>34</sup> each other,

And by my father's practice,<sup>35</sup> which is there
Set down at large, the gallants were both slain.

[Gives a paper.]

F. BARN. O monstrous villainy ! 30

ABIG. To work thy peace, this I confess to thee ;

Reveal it not, for then my father dies.

F. BARN. Know that confession must not be reveal'd ;

The canon law forbids it, and the priest

That makes it known, being degraded first,

Shall be condemn'd and then sent to the fire.

ABIG. So I have heard ; pray, therefore, keep it close.<sup>36</sup>

Death seizeth on my heart ; ah, gentle friar,

Convert my father, that he may be sav'd,
And witness that I die a Christian. [Dies.] 40

F. BARN. Ay, and a virgin too ; that grieves me most.

But I must to the Jew and exclaim on <sup>37</sup> him,
And make him stand in fear of me.

Re-enter Friar [JACOMO].

F. JAC. O brother, all the nuns are dead ;
let's bury them.

F. BARN. First help to bury this ; then go with me

And help me to exclaim against the Jew.

F. JAC. Why, what has he done ?

F. BARN. A thing that makes me tremble to unfold.

F. JAC. What, has he crucified a child ?

F. BARN. No, but a worse thing ; 't was told me in shrift ; 50

Thou know'st 't is death an if it be reveal'd.

Come, let's away. Exeunt.

ACT IV — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter BARABAS [and] ITHAMORE. Bells within.

BAR. There is no music to <sup>2</sup> a Christian's knell :

How sweet the bells ring now the nuns are dead,

That sound at other times like tinkers' pans !

I was afraid the poison had not wrought ;

Or, though it wrought, it would have done no good,

For every year they swell, and yet they live.

Now all are dead ; not one remains alive.

ITHA. That's brave, master ; but think you it will not be known ?

BAR. How can it, if we two be secret ?

ITHA. For my part fear you not. 10

BAR. I'd cut thy throat if I did.

ITHA. And reason too.

But here's a royal monastery hard by ;

Good master, let me poison all the monks.

BAR. Thou shalt not need, for now the nuns are dead

They'll die with grief.

ITHA. Do you not sorrow for your daughter's death ?

BAR. No, but I grieve because she liv'd so long.

An Hebrew born, and would become a Christian !

[Catso],<sup>3</sup> diabol[o] !

Enter the two Friars [JACOMO and BARNARDINE].

ITHA. Look, look, master ; here come two religious caterpillars. 21

BAR. I smelt 'em ere they came.

ITHA. God-a-mercy, nose ! Come, let 's be gone.

F. BARN. Stay, wicked Jew ; repent, I say, and stay.

F. JAC. Thou hast offended, therefore must be damn'd.

BAR. [aside to ITHAMORE] I fear they know we sent the poison'd broth.

ITHA. [aside] And so do I, master ; therefore speak 'em fair.

F. BARN. Barabas, thou hast ——

F. JAC. Ay, that thou hast ——

BAR. True, I have money, what though I have? 30

F. BARN. Thou art a ——

F. JAC. Ay, that thou art, a ——

BAR. What needs all this ? I know I am a Jew.

F. BARN. Thy daughter ——

F. JAC. Ay, thy daughter ——

BAR. O speak not of her ! then I die with grief.

F. BARN. Remember that ——

F. JAC. Ay, remember that ——

BAR. I must needs say that I have been a great usurer.

F. BARN. Thou hast committed —— 40

BAR. Fornication — but that was in another country ; and besides, the wench is dead.

F. BARN. Ay, but, Barabas, Remember Mathias and Don Lodowick.

BAR. Why, what of them ?

F. BARN. I will not say that by a forged challenge they met.

BAR. (aside) She has confess'd, and we are both undone —

My bosom inmates<sup>4</sup> ! but I must dissemble. — O holy friars, the burden of my sins 50

Lie heavy on my soul ; then pray you tell me, Is't not too late now to turn Christian ?

I have been zealous in the Jewish faith, Hard-hearted to the poor, a covetous wretch,

<sup>4</sup> I.e., the friars are now in my secrets ; though possibly the plural is erroneous and the reference is to Abigail.

That would for lucre's sake have sold my soul. A hundred for a hundred I have ta'en ; And now for store of wealth may I compare With all the Jews of Malta ; but what is wealth ?

I am a Jew, and therefore am I lost.

Would penance serve for this my sin, 60

I could afford to whip myself to death, —

ITHA. And so could I ; but penance will not serve.

BAR. To fast, to pray, and wear a shirt of hair,

And on my knees creep to Jerusalem.

Cellars of wine, and sollars<sup>5</sup> full of wheat,

Warehouses stuff'd with spices and with drugs,

Whole chests of gold, in bullion and in coin,

Besides I know not how much weight in pearl,

Orient<sup>6</sup> and round, have I within my house ;

At Alexandria, merchandise unsold. 70

But yesterday two ships went from this town ;

Their voyage will be worth ten thousand crowns.

In Florence, Venice, Antwerp, London, Seville,

Frankfort, Lübeck, Moscow, and where not,

Have I debts owing ; and, in most of these,

Great sums of money lying in the banco ;

All this I'll give to some religious house

So<sup>7</sup> I may be baptiz'd and live therein.

F. JAC. O good Barabas, come to our house.

F. BARN. O no, good Barabas, come to our house ; 80

And, Barabas, you know ——

BAR. I know that I have highly sinn'd.

You shall convert me, you shall have all my wealth.

F. JAC. O Barabas, their laws are strict.

BAR. I know they are, and I will be with you.

F. BARN. They wear no shirts, and they go barefoot too.

BAR. Then 't is not for me ; and I am resolv'd

You shall confess me, and have all my goods.

F. JAC. Good Barabas, come to me.

BAR. [aside to F. JAC.] You see I answer him, and yet he stays ; 90

Rid him away, and go you home with me.

F. JAC. I'll be with you to-night.

BAR. Come to my house at one a'clock this night.

F. JAC. You hear your answer, and you may be gone.

F. BARN. Why, go ; get you away.

F. JAC. I will not go for thee.

<sup>7</sup> Provided that.

F. BARN. Not? then I'll make thee go!

F. JAC. How, dost call me rogue? <sup>8</sup> Fight.

ITHA. Part 'em, master, part 'em.

BAR. This is mere frailty, brethren; be content. 100

Friar Barnadine, go you with Ithamore. —

[aside] You know my mind; let me alone with him.<sup>9</sup>

[F. JAC.] Why does he go to thy house? Let him be gone.

BAR. I'll give him something and so stop his mouth.

Exit [ITHAMORE with Friar BARNARDINE].

I never heard of any man but he

Malign'd the order of the Jacobins.

But do you think that I believe his words?

Why, brother, you converted Abigail;

And I am bound in charity to requite it, 109

And so I will. O Jacom[o], fail not, but come.

F. JAC. But, Barabas, who shall be your godfathers?

For presently you shall be shriv'd.

BAR. Marry, the Turk <sup>10</sup> shall be one of my godfathers;

But not a word to any of your covent.<sup>11</sup>

F. JAC. I warrant thee, Barabas. Exit.

BAR. So; now the fear is past, and I am safe;

For he that shriv'd her is within my house.

What if I murder'd him ere Jacom[o] comes?

Now I have such a plot for both their lives

As never Jew nor Christian knew the like. [120

One turn'd my daughter, therefore he shall die;

The other knows enough to have my life,

Therefore 't is not requisite he should live.

But are not both these wise men to suppose

That I will leave my house, my goods, and all,

To fast and be well whipp'd? I'll none of that.

Now, Friar Barnardine, I come to you;

I'll feast you, lodge you, give you fair words,

And after that, I and my trusty Turk — 129

No more, but so; it must and shall be done.

[SCENE II] <sup>12</sup>

Enter ITHAMORE [to BARABAS].

BAR. Ithamore, tell me, is the friar asleep?

ITHA. Yes; and I know not what the reason is,

Do what I can he will not strip himself,
Nor go to bed, but sleeps in his own clothes.
I fear me he mistrusts what we intend.

BAR. No, 't is an order which the friars use.
Yet, if he knew our meanings, could he scape?

ITHA. No, none can hear him, cry he ne'er so loud.

BAR. Why, true; therefore did I place him
there. 9

The other chambers open towards the street.

ITHA. You loiter, master; wherefore stay we thus?

O how I long to see him shake his heels.

BAR. Come on, sirrah.

Off with your girdle; make a handsome noose. —

Friar, awake!

[They put the noose round the Friar's neck.]

F. BARN. What, do you mean to strangle me?

ITHA. Yes, 'cause you use to confess.

BAR. Blame not us but the proverb, "Confess and be hang'd." Pull hard!

F. BARN. What, will you [have] <sup>13</sup> my life?

BAR. Pull hard, I say. — You would have had my goods. 20

ITHA. Ay, and our lives too; therefore pull amain. — [They strangle him.]

'T is neatly done, sir; here's no print at all.

BAR. Then is it as it should be; take him up.

ITHA. Nay, master; be rul'd by me a little.
[Stands the body against the wall with a staff in its hand.] So; let him lean upon his staff.
Excellent! he stands as if he were begging of bacon.

BAR. Who would not think but that this friar liv'd?

What time o' night is 't now, sweet Ithamore?

ITHA. Towards one. 30

BAR. Then will not Jacom[o] be long from hence. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE III] <sup>14</sup>

Enter [Friar] JACOM[o].

F. JAC. This is the hour wherein I shall proceed; <sup>15</sup>

O happy hour, wherein I shall convert
An infidel and bring his gold into our treasury!
But soft, is not this Barnardine? It is;
And, understanding I should come this way,

<sup>13</sup> Emend. Reed; Q save.

<sup>15</sup> Get on, succeed.

Stands here a'purpose, meaning me some wrong

And intercept my going to the Jew. —
Barnardine!

Wilt thou not speak? Thou think'st I see thee not;

Away, I'd wish thee, and let me go by. 10

No, wilt thou not? Nay, then, I'll force my way;

And see, a staff stands ready for the purpose.
As thou lik'st that, stop me another time.

Strike him; he falls.

Enter BARABAS [and ITHAMORE].

BAR. Why, how now, Jacom[o]; what hast thou done?

F. JAC. Why, stricken him that would have struck at me.

BAR. Who is it? Barnardine! Now out, alas, he is slain!

ITHA. Ay, master, he's slain; look how his brains drop out on's nose.

F. JAC. Good sirs, I have done 't; but [20 nobody knows it but you two; I may escape.

BAR. So might my man and I hang with you for company.

ITHA. No, let us bear him to the magistrates.

F. JAC. Good Barabas, let me go.

BAR. No, pardon me; the law must have its course.

I must be forc'd to give in evidence
That, being importun'd by this Barnardine
To be a Christian, I shut him out
And there he sat. Now I, to keep my word,
And give my goods and substance to your house, 31

Was up thus early, with intent to go
Unto your friary, because you stay'd.

ITHA. Fie upon 'em, master; will you turn Christian when holy friars turn devils and murder one another?

BAR. No, for this example I'll remain a Jew. Heaven bless me! What, a friar a murderer! When shall you see a Jew commit the like?

ITHA. Why, a Turk could ha' done no more.

BAR. To-morrow is the sessions; you shall to it. 41

Come, Ithamore, let's help to take him hence.

F. JAC. Villains, I am a sacred person; touch me not.

BAR. The law shall touch you; we'll but lead you, we.

'Las, I could weep at your calamity!

Take in the staff, too, for that must be shown;
Law wills that each particular be known.

Exeunt.

[SCENE IV] <sup>16</sup>

Enter Courtesan [BELLAMIRA] and PILIA-BORZA.

[BELL.] <sup>17</sup> Pilia-Borza, didst thou meet with Ithamore?

PILIA. I did.

BELL. And didst thou deliver my letter?

PILIA. I did.

BELL. And what think'st thou? Will he come?

PILIA. I think so, and yet I cannot tell; for at the reading of the letter he look'd like a man of another world. 10

BELL. Why so?

PILIA. That such a base slave as he should be saluted by such a tall <sup>18</sup> man as I am, from such a beautiful dame as you.

BELL. And what said he?

PILIA. Not a wise word; only gave me a nod, as who should say, "Is it even so?" and so I left him, being driven to a non-plus at the critical aspect of my terrible countenance.

BELL. And where didst meet him? 20

PILIA. Upon mine own freehold, within forty foot of the gallows, conning his neck-verse, I take it, looking of a friar's execution, whom I saluted with an old hempen proverb, Hodie tibi, cras mihi, and so I left him to the mercy of the hangman; but, the exercise <sup>19</sup> being done, see where he comes.

Enter ITHAMORE.

ITHA. I never knew a man take his death so patiently as this friar. He was ready to leap off ere the halter was about his neck; and [30 when the hangman had put on his hempen tippet, he made such haste to his prayers as if he had had another cure to serve. Well, go whither he will, I'll be none of his followers in haste; and, now I think on 't, going to the execution, a fellow met me with a muschatoes <sup>20</sup> like a raven's wing, and a dagger with a hilt like a warming pan, and he gave me a letter from one Madam Bellamira, saluting me in such sort as if he had meant to make clean my boots [40 with his lips; the effect was that I should come

to her house. I wonder what the reason is ; it may be she sees more in me than I can find in myself, for she writes further that she loves me ever since she saw me ; and who would not requite such love ? Here 's her house, and here she comes, and now would I were gone ; I am not worthy to look upon her.

PILIA. This is the gentleman you writ to.

ITHA. [aside] Gentleman ! he flouts me ; [50 what gentry can be in a poor Turk of tenpence ? I'll be gone.

BELL. Is't not a sweet-fac'd youth, Pilia ?

ITHA. [aside] Again, "sweet youth !" — Did not you, sir, bring the sweet youth a letter ?

PILIA. I did, sir, and from this gentlewoman, who, as myself, and the rest of the family, stand or fall at your service.

BELL. Though woman's modesty should hale me back, 60
I can withhold no longer ; welcome, sweet love.

ITHA. [aside] Now am I clean, or rather foully, out of the way.

BELL. Whither so soon ?

ITHA. [aside] I'll go steal some money from my master to make me handsome. — Pray pardon me, I must go and see a ship discharg'd.

BELL. Canst thou be so unkind to leave me thus ?

PILIA. An ye did but know how she loves you, sir. 70

ITHA. Nay, I care not how much she loves me. — Sweet Bellamira, would I had my master's wealth for thy sake.

PILIA. And you can have it, sir, an if you please.

ITHA. If 't were above ground, I could and would have it ; but he hides and buries it up, as partridges do their eggs, under the earth.

PILIA. And is 't not possible to find it out ?

ITHA. By no means possible.

BELL. [aside to PILIA-BORZA] What shall we do with this base villain then ? 80

PILIA. [aside to her] Let me alone ; do but you speak him fair. —

But you know some secrets of the Jew, Which if they were reveal'd would do him harm.

ITHA. Ay, and such as — go to, no more ! I'll make him send me half he has, and glad he escapes so, too. Pen and ink ! I'll write unto him ; we'll have money straight.

PILIA. Send for a hundred crowns at least.

[ITHAMORE] writes.

ITHA. Ten hundred thousand crowns.
"Master Barabas."

PILIA. Write not so submissively, but threat'ning him. 90

ITHA. [writing] "Sirrah Barabas, send me a hundred crowns."

PILIA. Put in two hundred at least.

ITHA. [writing] "I charge thee send me three hundred by this bearer, and this shall be your warrant : if you do not — no more, but so."

PILIA. Tell him you will confess.

ITHA. [writing] "Otherwise I'll confess all." — Vanish, and return in a twinkling.

PILIA. Let me alone ; I'll use him in his kind.<sup>21</sup> 100

[Exit PILIA-BORZA.]

ITHA. Hang him, Jew !

BELL. Now, gentle Ithamore, lie in my lap. —

Where are my maids ? Provide a running<sup>22</sup> banquet.

Send to the merchant ; bid him bring me silks. Shall Ithamore, my love, go in such rags ?

ITHA. And bid the jeweller come hither, too.

BELL. I have no husband, sweet ; I'll marry thee.

ITHA. Content ; but we will leave this paltry land,

And sail from hence to Greece, to lovely Greece.

I'll be thy Jason, thou my golden fleece ; 110
Where painted carpets o'er the meads are hurl'd,

And Bacchus' vineyards o'erspread the world,
Where woods and forests go in goodly green,
I'll be Adonis, thou shalt be Love's Queen.

The meads, the orchards, and the primrose lanes,

Instead of sedge and reed, bear sugar canes ;
Thou in those groves, by Dis above,
Shalt live with me and be my love.

BELL. Whither will I not go with gentle Ithamore ?

Re-enter PILIA-BORZA.

ITHA. How now ! hast thou the gold ? [120

PILIA. Yes.

ITHA. But came it freely ? Did the cow give down her milk freely ?

PILIA. At reading of the letter, he star'd and stamp'd and turn'd aside. I took him by the [beard],<sup>23</sup> and look'd upon him thus ; told him he were best to send it; then he hugg'd and embrac'd me.

ITHA. Rather for fear than love. 129

PILIA. Then, like a Jew, he laugh'd and jeer'd, and told me he lov'd me for your sake, and said what a faithful servant you had been.

ITHA. The more villain he to keep me thus. Here's goodly 'parel, is there not?

PILIA. To conclude, he gave me ten crowns.<sup>24</sup>

ITHA. But ten? I'll not leave him worth a gray goat. Give me a ream<sup>25</sup> of paper; we'll have a kingdom of gold for 't.

PILIA. Write for five hundred crowns. 139

ITHA. [writing] "Sirrah Jew, as you love your life send me five hundred crowns, and give the bearer one hundred." Tell him I must have 't.

PILIA. I warrant your Worship shall have 't.

ITHA. And if he ask why I demand so much, tell him I scorn to write a line under a hundred crowns.

PILIA. You'd make a rich poet, sir. I am gone. Exit.

ITHA. Take thou the money; spend it for my sake.

BELL. 'T is not thy money, but thyself I weigh; 150

Thus Bellamira esteems of gold. [Throws it aside.] But thus of thee. Kiss him.

ITHA. That kiss again! she runs division<sup>26</sup> of my lips.

What an eye she casts on me! It twinkles like a star.

BELL. Come, my dear love, let's in and sleep together.

ITHA. O, that ten thousand nights were put in one,

That we might sleep seven years together afore we wake!

BELL. Come, amorous wag, first banquet and then sleep. Exeunt.

[SCENE V]<sup>27</sup>

Enter BARABAS, reading a letter.

BAR. "Barabas, send me three hundred crowns." —

Plain Barabas! O, that wicked courtesan! He was not wont to call me Barabas.

"Or else I will confess;" ay, there it goes;

But, if I get him, coupe de gorge for that.

He sent a shaggy totter'd,<sup>28</sup> staring slave,

That when he speaks draws out his grisly beard,

And winds it twice or thrice about his ear;

Whose face has been a grindstone for men's swords;

His hands are hack'd, some fingers cut quite off; 10

Who, when he speaks, grunts like a hog, and looks

Like one that is employ'd in catzerie<sup>29</sup>

And crossbiting,<sup>30</sup> — such a rogue

As is the husband to a hundred whores;

And I by him must send three hundred crowns!

Well, my hope is he will not stay there still;

And when he comes — O, that he were but here!

Enter PILIA-BORZA.

PILIA. Jew, I must ha' more gold.

BAR. Why, want'st thou any of thy tale? <sup>31</sup>

PILIA. No; but three hundred will not serve his turn. 21

BAR. Not serve his turn, sir?

PILIA. No, sir; and therefore I must have five hundred more.

BAR. I'll rather —

PILIA. O good words, sir, and send it you were best! See, there's his letter.

BAR. Might he not as well come as send? Pray bid him come and fetch it; what he writes for you, ye shall have straight. 30

PILIA. Ay, and the rest too, or else —

BAR. (aside) I must make this villain away. — Please you dine with me, sir; — and you shall be most heartily poison'd.

PILIA. No, God-a-mercy. Shall I have these crowns?

BAR. I cannot do it; I have lost my keys.

PILIA. O, if that be all, I can pick ope your locks.

BAR. Or climb up to my countinghouse window — you know my meaning. 39

PILIA. I know enough, and therefore talk not to me of your countinghouse. The gold! or know, Jew, it is in my power to hang thee.

BAR. [aside] I am betray'd. —

'T is not five hundred crowns that I esteem;

<sup>28</sup> Tattered.

<sup>30</sup> Swindling. The next line alludes to the practice of blackmailing a man by decoying him into a compromising situation with a prostitute and then confronting him with a confederate who poses as her husband.

I am not mov'd at that : this angers me,
That he, who knows I love him as myself,
Should write in this imperious vein. Why, sir,
You know I have no child, and unto whom Should I leave all but unto Ithamore?

PILIA. Here's many words, but no crowns.
The crowns ! 50

BAR. Commend me to him, sir, most humbly,<sup>32</sup>

And unto your good mistress, as unknown.<sup>33</sup>

PILIA. Speak, shall I have 'em, sir?

BAR. Sir, here they are. —
O, that I should part with so much gold ! —
Here, take 'em, fellow, with as good a will — [aside] As I would see thee hang'd. — O, love stops my breath ;

Never lov'd man servant as I do Ithamore.

PILIA. I know it, sir.

BAR. Pray, when, sir, shall I see you at my house?

PILIA. Soon enough, to your cost, sir. Fare
you well. Exit. [60]

BAR. Nay, to thine own cost, villain, if thou com'st. —

Was ever Jew tormented as I am?

To have a shag-rag knave to come<sup>34</sup> —

Three hundred crowns — and then five hundred crowns !

Well, I must seek a means to rid 'em all,
And presently<sup>35</sup> ; for in his villainy
He will tell all he knows, and I shall die for 't. —
I have it !

I will in some disguise go see the slave, 69
And how the villain revels with my gold. Exit.

[SCENE VI]<sup>36</sup>

Enter Courtesan [BELLAMIRA,] ITHAMORE, [and] PILIA-BORZA.

BELL. I'll pledge thee, love, and therefore drink it off.

ITHA. Say'st thou me so? Have at it ; and do you hear? [Whispers.]

BELL. Go to, it shall be so.

ITHA. Of that condition I will drink it up.
Here's to thee !

[BELL.] Nay, I'll have all or none.

ITHA. There, if thou lov'st me, do not leave a drop.

BELL. Love thee ! Fill me three glasses.

<sup>36</sup> Inside Bellamira's house, and also, apparently,
the street before it.

ITHA. Three-and-fifty dozen, I'll pledge
thee.

PILIA. Knavely spoke, and like a knight at arms.

ITHA. Hey, Rivo Castiliano !<sup>37</sup> A man's a
man ! 10

BELL. Now to the Jew.

ITHA. Ha ! to the Jew, and send me money you<sup>38</sup> were best.

PILIA. What wouldst thou do if he should send thee none?

ITHA. Do nothing ; but I know what I know ; he's a murderer.

BELL. I had not thought he had been so brave a man.

ITHA. You knew Mathias and the Governor's son ; he and I kill'd 'em both, and yet never touch'd 'em.

PILIA. O, bravely done. 20

ITHA. I carried the broth that poison'd the nuns ; and he and I — snickle ! hand to !
fast !<sup>39</sup> — strangled a friar.

BELL. You two alone?

ITHA. We two ; and 't was never known, nor never shall be for me.

PILIA. [aside to BELLAMIRA] This shall with me unto the Governor.

BELL. [aside to PILIA-BORZA] And fit it should ; but first let's ha' more gold. —
Come, gentle Ithamore, lie in my lap.

ITHA. Love me little, love me long. Let music rumble 30

Whilst I in thy incony<sup>40</sup> lap do tumble.

Enter BARABAS, with a lute, disguis'd.

BELL. A French musician ! Come, let's hear your skill.

BAR. Must tuna my lute for sound, twang, twang, first.

ITHA. Wilt drink, Frenchman? Here's to thee with a — pox on this drunken hiccup !

BAR. Gramercy, mounsier.

BELL. Prithée, Pilia-Borza, bid the fiddler give me the posy in his hat there.

<sup>37</sup> A bacchanalian exclamation of uncertain origin.
"Rivo" may = "stream" (Ital.). On "Castiliano" see [London] Times Lit. Sup., May 4, 1933, p. 312.
It may = Castiglione, which seems to have been a name for the Italian wine usually called Lacrimae Christi.

<sup>38</sup> There is no need to emend he. It is more dramatic for the drunken Turk to shake his fist at the absent Jew.

<sup>39</sup> Q snicle hand too fast. Punctuated and explained by Kittredge. = Snare him ! lay your hand to it ! firmly now ! (With appropriate gestures.)

<sup>40</sup> Dainty. Cor. Reed ; Q incoomy.

PILIA. Sirrah, you must give my mistress your posy. 41

BAR. A voustre commandement, madam.

BELL. How sweet, my Ithamore, the flowers smell.

ITHA. Like thy breath, sweetheart; no violet like 'em.

PILIA. Foh! methinks they stink like a hollyhock.

BAR. [aside] So, now I am reveng'd upon
'em all.

The scent thereof was death; I poison'd it.

ITHA. Play, fiddler, or I'll cut your cat's guts into chitterlings. 51

BAR. Pardona moy; be no in tune yet; so now, now all be in.

ITHA. Give him a crown, and fill me out more wine.

PILIA. There's two crowns for thee; play.

BAR. (aside) How liberally the villain gives me mine own gold! [Plays.]

PILIA. Methinks he fingers very well.

BAR. (aside) So did you when you stole my gold. 60

PILIA. How swift he runs!

BAR. (aside) You run swifter when you threw my gold out of my window.

BELL. Musician, hast been in Malta long?

BAR. Two, three, four month, madam.

ITHA. Dost not know a Jew, one Barabas?

BAR. Very mush; mounsier, you no be his
man?

PILIA. His man?

ITHA. I scorn the peasant; tell him so. [70

BAR. [aside.] He knows it already.

ITHA. 'T is a strange thing of that Jew; he lives upon pickled grasshoppers and sauc'd mushrooms.

BAR. (aside) What a slave's this! The Governor feeds not as I do.

ITHA. He never put on clean shirt since he was circumcis'd.

BAR. (aside) O rascal! I change myself twice a day. 80

ITHA. The hat he wears Judas left under the elder when he hang'd himself.

BAR. (aside) 'T was sent me for a present from the great Cham.

PILIA. A masty <sup>41</sup> slave he is. — Whither now, fiddler?

BAR. Pardona moy, mounsier, [me] <sup>42</sup> be no well. Exit.

<sup>41</sup> Burly. Some eds., perhaps rightly, emend nasty or musty.

<sup>42</sup> Cor. Reed; Q we.

PILIA. Farewell, fiddler! — One letter more to the Jew. 90

BELL. Prithee, sweet love, one more, and write it sharp.

ITHA. No, I'll send by word of mouth now.
— Bid him deliver thee a thousand crowns, by the same token that the nuns lov'd rice, that Friar Barnardine slept in his own clothes;
any of 'em will do it.

PILIA. Let me alone to urge it, now I know the meaning.

ITHA. The meaning has a meaning. — Come let's in. 99

To undo a Jew is charity, and not sin. Exeunt.

ACT V — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter Governor [FERNEZE], Knights, MARTIN DEL BOSCO, [and Officers].

FERN. Now, gentlemen, betake you to your
arms,

And see that Malta be well fortifi'd;

And it behoves you to be resolute;

For Calymath, having hover'd here so long,

Will win the town or die before the walls.

[1] KNIGHT. And die he shall, for we will never yield.

Enter Courtesan [BELLAMIRA and] PILIA-BORZA.

BELL. O, bring us to the Governor.

FERN. Away with her! She is a courtesan.

BELL. Whate'er I am, yet, Governor, hear me speak; 9

I bring thee news by whom thy son was slain:
Mathias did it not; it was the Jew.

PILIA. Who, besides the slaughter of these gentlemen,

Poison'd his own daughter and the nuns,

Strangled a friar and I know not what Mischief beside.

FERN. Had we but proof of this —

BELL. Strong proof, my Lord; his man's now at my lodging,

That was his agent; he'll confess it all.

FERN. Go fetch him straight. —

[Exeunt Officers.]

I always fear'd that Jew.

Enter [Officers with BARABAS the] Jew [and] ITHAMORE.

BAR. I'll go alone; dogs, do not hale me thus.

<sup>1</sup> The senate-house.

ITHA. Nor me neither ; I cannot outrun you, constable. — O my belly ! 21

BAR. [aside] One dram of powder more had made all sure.

What a damn'd slave was I !

FERN. Make fires, heat irons, let the rack be fetch'd.

[1] KNIGHT. Nay, stay, my Lord ; 't may be he will confess.

BAR. Confess ! what mean you, Lords ?
Who should confess ?

FERN. Thou and thy Turk ; 't was you that slew my son.

ITHA. Guilty, my Lord, I confess. Your son and Mathias were both contracted unto Abigail ; [he] <sup>2</sup> forg'd a counterfeit challenge.

BAR. Who carried that challenge ? 31

ITHA. I carried it, I confess ; but who writ it ?
Marry, even he that strangled Barnardine, poison'd the nuns and his own daughter.

FERN. Away with him ! his sight is death
to me.

BAR. For what, you men of Malta ? Hear
me speak :

She is a courtesan, and he a thief,
And he my bondman. Let me have law,
For none of this can prejudice my life.

FERN. Once more, away with him ; you shall have law. 40

BAR. [aside] Devils, do your worst ! I live in spite of you. —

As these have spoke, so be it to their souls ! — [aside] I hope the poison'd flowers will work
anon.

[*Exeunt Officers with BARABAS and ITHAMORE, BELLAMIRA, and PILIA-
BORZA.*]

Enter [KATHERINE].

KATH. Was my Mathias murder'd by the Jew ?

Ferneze, 't was thy son that murder'd him.

FERN. Be patient, gentle madam ; it was he ;
He forged the daring challenge made them
fight.

KATH. Where is the Jew ? Where is that murderer ?

FERN. In prison till the law has pass'd on
him.

Re-enter [an] Officer.

OFF. My Lord, the courtesan and her man are dead ; 50
So is the Turk and Barabas the Jew.

<sup>3</sup> Add. Reed.

FERN. Dead !

OFF. Dead, my Lord ; and here they bring his body.<sup>3</sup>

BOSCO. This sudden death of his is very strange.

FERN. Wonder not at it, sir : the Heavens are just ;

Their deaths were like their lives ; then think not of 'em.

Since they are dead, let them be buried ;
For the Jew's body, throw that o'er the walls,
To be a prey for vultures and wild beasts. —
So now away, and fortify the town. Exeunt. [60]

[SCENE II] <sup>4</sup>

BAR. What, all alone ? Well fare, sleepy drink.

I'll be reveng'd on this accursed town ;
For by my means Calymath shall enter in.
I'll help to slay their children and their wives,
To fire the churches, pull their houses down,
Take my goods, too, and seize upon my lands.
I hope to see the Governor a slave,
And, rowing in a galley, whipp'd to death.

Enter CALYMATH, Bashaws, [and] Turks.

CALY. Whom have we there, a spy ?

BAR. Yes, my good Lord, one that can spy
a place 10

Where you may enter, and surprise the town ;
My name is Barabas ; I am a Jew.

CALY. Art thou that Jew whose goods we heard were sold

For tribute money ?

BAR. The very same, my Lord ;
And since that time they have hir'd a slave,
my man,

To accuse me of a thousand villainies.

I was imprison'd, but 'scap'd their hands.

CALY. Didst break prison ?

BAR. No, no ;

I drank of poppy and cold mandrake juice ; 20
And being asleep, belike they thought me dead,
And threw me o'er the walls ; so, or how else,
The Jew is here, and rests at your command.

CALY. 'T was bravely done ; but tell me,
Barabas,

Canst thou, as thou reportest, make Malta ours ?

<sup>3</sup> Barabas may have been carried on at this point ;
if so he was probably borne out at the end of this scene.

<sup>4</sup> Outside the city walls. Probably Barabas was "discovered," coming back to consciousness, on the inner stage.

BAR. Fear not, my Lord, for here against the [sluice] <sup>5</sup>

The rock is hollow, and of purpose digg'd
To make a passage for the running streams
And common channels <sup>6</sup> of the city.
Now, whilst you give assault unto the walls, [30
I'll lead five hundred soldiers through the vault

And rise with them i' th' middle of the town,
Open the gates for you to enter in ;
And by this means the city is your own.

CALY. If this be true, I'll make thee governor.

BAR. And if it be not true, then let me die.

CALY. Thou'st doom'd thyself. Assault it presently. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>7</sup>

Alarums. Enter [CALYMATH, Bassoes,] Turks, [and] BARABAS, [with FERNEZE] and Knights, prisoners.

CALY. Now vail <sup>8</sup> your pride, you captive Christians,
And kneel for mercy to your conquering foe.
Now where's the hope you had of haughty Spain?

Ferneze, speak ; had it not been much better
To kept thy promise than be thus surpris'd?

FERN. What should I say? We are captives and must yield.

CALY. Ay, villains, you must yield, and under Turkish yokes
Shall groaning bear the burden of our ire ;
And, Barabas, as erst we promis'd thee,
For thy desert we make thee governor ; 10
Use them at thy discretion.

BAR. Thanks, my Lord.

FERN. O fatal day, to fall into the hands
Of such a traitor and unhallowed Jew !
What greater misery could Heaven inflict?

CALY. 'T is our command ; and, Barabas, we give
To guard thy person these our Janizaries ;
Entreat <sup>9</sup> them well, as we have used thee.
And now, brave bashaws, come, we'll walk about

The ruin'd town, and see the wrack we made. — 19

Farewell, brave Jew ; farewell, great Barabas.

Exeunt [CALYMATH and Bassoes].

BAR. May all good fortune follow Calymath. —

And now, as entrance to our safety,
To prison with the Governor and these
Captains, his consorts and confederates.

FERN. O villain ! Heaven will be reveng'd on thee.

BAR. Away ! no more ; let him not trouble me.

Exeunt [Turks, with FERNEZE and Knights].

Thus hast thou gotten, by thy policy,
No simple place, no small authority.
I now am governor of Malta ; true,
But Malta hates me ; and, in hating me, 30
My life's in danger, and what boots it thee,
Poor Barabas, to be the governor,
Whenas thy life shall be at their command?
No, Barabas, this must be look'd into ;
And since by wrong thou gott'st authority,
Maintain it bravely by firm policy ;
At least unprofitably lose it not :
For he that liveth in authority,
And neither gets him friends, nor fills his bags,
Lives like the ass, that Aesop speaketh of, 40
That labors with a load of bread and wine,
And leaves it off to snap on thistle-tops ;
But Barabas will be more circumspect.
Begin betimes ; occasion's bald behind ;
Slip not thine opportunity, for fear too late
Thou seek'st for much, but canst not compass it. —

Within here !

Enter [FERNEZE] with a Guard.

FERN. My Lord?

BAR. Ay, "lord ;" thus slaves will learn.

Now, Governor ; — stand by there ; wait within. [Exeunt Guard.]

This is the reason that I sent for thee :
Thou seest thy life and Malta's happiness 50
Are at my arbitrament ; and Barabas
At his discretion may dispose of both.
Now tell me, Governor, and plainly too,
What think'st thou shall become of it and thee?

FERN. This, Barabas ; since things are in thy power,

I see no reason but of Malta's wrack,
Nor hope of thee but extreme cruelty ;
Nor fear I death, nor will I flatter thee.

BAR. Governor, good words ; be not so furious.

'T is not thy life which can avail me aught ; [60
Yet you do live, and live for me you shall ;

And, as for Malta's ruin, think you not
 'T were slender policy for Barabas
 To dispossess himself of such a place?
 For sith,<sup>10</sup> as once you said, within this isle,
 In Malta here, that I have got my goods,
 And in this city still have had success,
 And now at length am grown your governor,
 Yourselves shall see it shall not be forgot;
 For, as a friend not known but in distress, 70
 I'll rear up Malta, now remediless.

FERN. Will Barabas recover Malta's loss?
 Will Barabas be good to Christians?

BAR. What wilt thou give me, Governor, to procure
 A dissolution of the slavish bands
 Wherein the Turk hath yok'd your land and
 you?

What will you give me if I render you
 The life of Calymath, surprise his men,
 And in an outhouse of the city shut
 His soldiers, till I have consum'd 'em all with fire? 80

What will you give him that procureth this?

FERN. Do but bring this to pass which thou pretendest,<sup>11</sup>
 Deal truly with us as thou intimatest,
 And I will send amongst the citizens,
 And by my letters privately procure
 Great sums of money for thy recompense;
 Nay more, do this, and live thou governor still.

BAR. Nay, do thou this, Ferneze, and be free;

Governor, I enlarge thee; live with me,
 Go walk about the city, see thy friends; 90
 Tush, send not letters to 'em, go thyself,
 And let me see what money thou canst make.
 Here is my hand that I'll set Malta free;
 And thus we cast it: to a solemn feast
 I will invite young Selim Calymath,
 Where be thou present only to perform
 One stratagem that I'll impart to thee,
 Wherein no danger shall betide thy life,
 And I will warrant Malta free for ever.

FERN. Here is my hand; believe me, Barabas, 100
 I will be there and do as thou desirest.
 When is the time?

BAR. Governor, presently;
 For Calymath, when he hath view'd the town,
 Will take his leave and sail toward Ottoman.

FERN. Then will I, Barabas, about this coin,
 And bring it with me to thee in the evening.

BAR. Do so, but fail not; now farewell,
 Ferneze! — [Exit FERNEZE.]

<sup>11</sup> Extendest, settest forth.

And thus far roundly goes the business.
 Thus, loving neither, will I live with both,
 Making a profit of my policy; 110
 And he from whom my most advantage comes
 Shall be my friend.

This is the life we Jews are us'd to lead;
 And reason too, for Christians do the like.
 Well, now about effecting this device;
 First to surprise great Selim's soldiers,<sup>12</sup>
 And then to make provision for the feast,
 That at one instant all things may be done.
 My policy detests prevention;
 To what event my secret purpose drives, 120
 I know, and they shall witness with their lives.
 Exit.

[SCENE IV] <sup>13</sup>

Enter CALYMATH and Bashaws.

CALY. Thus have we view'd the city, seen the sack,
 And caus'd the ruins to be new-repair'd,
 Which with our bombards' <sup>14</sup> shot and basilisk
 We rent in sunder at our entry; <sup>15</sup>
 And now I see the situation,
 And how secure this conquer'd island stands
 Environ'd with the Mediterranean Sea,
 Strong [countermur'd] <sup>16</sup> with other petty isles,
 And, toward Calabria, back'd by Sicily,
 [Where] <sup>17</sup> Syracusan Dionysius reign'd, 10
 Two lofty turrets that command the town.
 I wonder how it could be conquer'd thus.

Enter a Messenger.

MESS. From Barabas, Malta's governor, I bring
 A message unto mighty Calymath;
 Hearing his sovereign was bound for sea,
 To sail to Turkey, to great Ottoman,
 He humbly would entreat your Majesty
 To come and see his homely citadel,
 And banquet with him ere thou leav'st the isle.
 CALY. To banquet with him in his citadel?
 I fear me, messenger, to feast my train 21
 Within a town of war so lately pillag'd
 Will be too costly and too troublesome;
 Yet would I gladly visit Barabas,
 For well has Barabas deserv'd of us.

<sup>13</sup> Unlocated, but evidently another spot within the city.

<sup>17</sup> Q When; cor. Robinson, who also corrects this line and the next, transposed in Q.

Mess. Selim, for that, thus saith the Governor :

That he hath in store a pearl so big,
So precious, and withal so orient,
As, be it valued but indifferently,
The price thereof will serve to entertain 30
Selim and all his soldiers for a month ;
Therefore he humbly would entreat your Highness
Not to depart till he has feasted you.

CALY. I cannot feast my men in Malta walls,
Except he place his tables in the streets.

Mess. Know, Selim, that there is a monastery
Which standeth as an outhouse to the town ;
There will he banquet them, but thee at home,
With all thy bashaws and brave followers.

CALY. Well, tell the Governor we grant his suit ; 40
We'll in this summer evening feast with him.

MESS. I shall, my Lord. Exit.

CALY. And now, bold bashaws, let us to our tents,
And meditate how we may grace us best
To solemnize our governor's great feast.

Exeunt.

[SCENE V] <sup>18</sup>

Enter Governor [FERNEZE], Knights, [and] DEL BOSCO.

FERN. In this, my countrymen, be rul'd by me ;
Have special care that no man sally forth
Till you shall hear a culverin discharg'd
By him that bears the linstock, kindled thus ;
Then issue out and come to rescue me,
For happily I shall be in distress,
Or you released of this servitude.

1 KNIGHT. Rather than thus to live as Turkish thralls,
What will we not adventure ?

FERN. On then ; begone.

KNIGHTS. Farewell, grave Governor ! [10
Exeunt.]

[SCENE VI] <sup>19</sup>

Enter [BARABAS,] with a hammer, above, very busy ; [Carpenters also discovered].

BAR. How stand the cords ? How hang these hinges ? Fast ?
Are all the cranes and pulleys sure ?

[CARP.] <sup>20</sup>

All fast.

BAR. Leave nothing loose, all levell'd to my mind.

Why now I see that you have art indeed.
There, carpenters, divide that gold amongst you ;

Go swill in bowls of sack and muscadine !

Down to the cellar, taste of all my wines.

CARP. We shall, my Lord, and thank you.

Exeunt [Carpenters].

BAR. And, if you like them, drink your fill and die ;

For, so I live, perish may all the world ! 10

Now, Selim Calymath, return me word
That thou wilt come, and I am satisfied.

Enter Messenger.

Now, sirrah, what, will he come ?

MESS. He will ; and has commanded all his men

To come ashore and march through Malta streets,

That thou mayst feast them in thy citadel.

BAR. Then now are all things as my wish would have 'em ;

There wanteth nothing but the governor's pelf,
And see, he brings it.

Enter Governor [FERNEZE].

Now, Governor, the sum.

FERN. With free consent, a hundred thousand pounds. 20

BAR. Pounds, say'st thou, Governor ? Well, since it is no more,

I'll satisfy myself with that ; nay, keep it still,
For if I keep not promise, trust not me.

And, Governor, now partake my policy :

First, for his army, they are sent before,

Enter'd the monastery, and underneath

In several places are fieldpieces pitch'd,

Bombards, whole barrels full of gunpowder,

That on the sudden shall dis sever it,

And batter all the stones about their ears, 30

Whence none can possibly escape alive ;

Now as for Calymath and his consorts,

Here have I made a dainty gallery,

The floor whereof, this cable being cut,

Doth fall asunder, so that it doth sink

Into a deep pit past recovery.

Here, hold that knife, and when thou seest he comes,

And with his bashaws shall be blithely set,

A warning piece shall be shot off from the tower,

<sup>20</sup> Q Serv.

To give thee knowledge when to cut the cord 40

And fire the house. Say, will not this be brave?

FERN. O, excellent! here, hold thee, Barabas,
I trust thy word; take what I promis'd thee.

BAR. No, Governor, I'll satisfy thee first;
Thou shalt not live in doubt of anything.

Stand close, for here they come. [FERNEZE retires.] — Why, is not this

A kingly kind of trade, to purchase towns

By treachery and sell 'em by deceit?

Now tell me, worldlings, underneath the [sun] 21

If greater falsehood ever has been done. 50

Enter CALYMATH and Bashaws.

CALY. Come, my companion bashaws; see,
I pray,

How busy Barabas is there above

To entertain us in his gallery.

Let us salute him. — Save thee, Barabas!

BAR. Welcome, great Calymath!

FERN. [aside] How the slave jeers at him.

BAR. Will 't please thee, mighty Selim Caly-
math,

To ascend our homely stairs?

CALY. Ay, Barabas. —
Come, bashaws, attend.

FERN. [coming forward] Stay, Calymath!
For I will show thee greater courtesy 60
Than Barabas would have afforded thee.

KNIGHT [within] Sound a charge there!

A charge [sounded within. FERNEZE cuts] the cable: [the floor of the gallery gives way]; a caldron discovered, [into which BARABAS has fallen.]

[Enter DEL BOSCO and Knights.]

CALY. How now! what means this?

BAR. Help, help me. Christians, help!

FERN. See, Calymath; this was devis'd for
thee!

CALY. Treason! treason! Bashaws, fly!

FERN. No, Selim, do not fly;

See his end first, and fly then if thou canst.

BAR. O help me, Selim! help me, Christians!
Governor, why stand you all so pitiless?

FERN. Should I in pity of thy plaints or thee,
Accursed Barabas, base Jew, relent? 71

No, thus I'll see thy treachery repaid,

But wish thou hadst behav'd thee otherwise.

BAR. You will not help me, then?

FERN. No, villain, no.

BAR. And, villains, know you cannot help me now. —

<sup>21</sup> Cor. Reed; Q Summe.

Then, Barabas, breathe forth thy latest fate,<sup>22</sup>

And in the fury of thy torments strive

To end thy life with resolution. —

Know, Governor, 't was I that slew thy son;
I fram'd the challenge that did make them
meet. 80

Know, Calymath, I aim'd thy overthrow,

And, had I but escap'd this stratagem,

I would have brought confusion on you all,

Damn'd Christians, dogs, and Turkish infidels!

But now begins the extremity of heat

To pinch me with intolerable pangs.

Die, life! fly, soul! tongue, curse thy fill, and die! [Dies.]

CALY. Tell me, you Christians, what doth this portend?

FERN. This train he laid to have entrapp'd thy life.

Now, Selim, note the unhallowed deeds of Jews; 90

Thus he determin'd to have handled thee,

But I have rather chose to save thy life.

CALY. Was this the banquet he prepar'd for us?

Let's hence, lest further mischief be pretended.<sup>23</sup>

FERN. Nay, Selim, stay; for since we have thee here,

We will not let thee part so suddenly;

Besides, if we should let thee go, all's one,<sup>24</sup>

For with thy galleys couldst thou not get
hence,

Without fresh men to rig and furnish them.

CALY. Tush, Governor, take thou no care for that; 100

My men are all aboard,

And do attend<sup>25</sup> my coming there by this.

FERN. Why, heard'st thou not the trumpet sound a charge?

CALY. Yes, what of that?

FERN. Why, then the house was fir'd,

Blown up, and all thy soldiers massacred.

CALY. O monstrous treason!

FERN. A Jew's courtesy;

For he that did by treason work our fall,

By treason hath delivered thee to us.

Know, therefore, till thy father hath made good

The ruins done to Malta and to us, 110

Thou canst not part; for Malta shall be freed,

Or Selim ne'er return to Ottoman.

CALY. Nay, rather, Christians, let me go to Turkey,
 In person there to [mediate] <sup>26</sup> your peace;
 To keep me here will naught advantage
 you.

FERN. Content thee, Calymath; here thou must stay,

<sup>26</sup> Conj. Collier; Q meditate.

And live in Malta prisoner; for come [all] <sup>27</sup>
 the world

To rescue thee, so will we guard us now,
 As sooner shall they drink the ocean dry
 Than conquer Malta, or endanger us. — 120
 So march away, and let due praise be given
 Neither to Fate nor Fortune, but to Heaven.

[Exeunt.]

<sup>27</sup> Emend. Reed; Q call.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

WITH Edward II, probably produced in 1591-92, Marlowe carries the chronicle play to its highest level prior to Shakespeare's best "histories." Technically, though not imaginatively, it marks the culmination of Marlowe's dramatic powers. Characterization is now extended beyond one or two central figures, difficult problems of selection and condensation are surmounted with ease, and a masterly transfer of sympathy is accomplished. Whatever the King's faults, his death is affecting; to enlist the emotions of the audience for a monarch so weakly bad as Edward is a feat which does not suffer in comparison with Shakespeare's similar treatment of Richard II. On the greater dramatist's technical development Marlowe's most mature play may have exerted considerable influence. On the other hand, there are fewer lyrical outbursts than in the earlier works; it is curious that Marlowe's best play seems less Marlovian than the others.

The chief source of Edward II was Holinshed's Chronicles, though Fabyan's and Stowe's were also used for a few details. How popular the play was on the stage, and how long it remained in the repertory are unknown; but the number of early editions indicates considerable success. The title pages of the old editions state that it was acted by the Earl of Pembroke's company. It was revived, according to the Fourth Quarto, by Queen Anne's Men at the Red Bull.

Edward II was edited for the Malone Society by W. W. Greg (1925); for the Case Marlowe the editors are to be H. B. Charlton and R. A. Waller. Among other editions are those of A. W. Verity (1896) and W. D. Briggs (1914). The present text is based on the first edition, the best of the early texts of Marlowe, the octavo of 1594 (reprinted in quarto 1598, 1612, 1622), as reproduced by Greg and Brooke.

The latter was the first to observe that the Dyce copy of Q 1598 contains a transcript (supplying the absence of the first two leaves of that Quarto) dated, on the title page, 1593. This MS is given in facsimile by Greg. Since the text of the MS is closer to the first than to the second of the surviving editions, it rather looks as though an edition, now quite lost, had preceded them. Of the first surviving edition, but two copies are known; they are in the Landesbibliothek of Cassel and the Zentralbibliothek of Zurich.

[ACT I — SCENE I]<sup>2</sup>

Enter GAVESTON, reading on a letter that was brought him from the King.

[GAV.] "My father is deceas'd; come, Gaveston,

And share the kingdom with thy dearest
friend."

Ah, words that make me surfeit with delight!
What greater bliss can hap to Gaveston
Than live and be the favorite of a king?

Sweet prince, I come; these, these thy amorous lines

Might have enforc'd me to have swum from France,

And, like Leander, gasp'd upon the sand,

So<sup>3</sup> thou wouldst smile and take me in thy
arms.

The sight of London to my exiled eyes 10

Is as Elysium to a new-come soul;

Not that I love the city or the men,

But that it harbors him I hold so dear,

The King, upon whose bosom let me die,<sup>4</sup>

And with the world be still at enmity.

What need the arctic people love starlight,

To whom the sun shines both by day and night?

Farewell base stooping to the lordly peers;

My knee shall bow to none but to the King.

As for the multitude, that are but sparks 20

Rak'd up in embers of their poverty,

That glanceth at my lips, and flyeth away.

Enter three Poor Men.

But how now, what are these?

POOR MEN. Such as desire your Worship's service.

GAV. What canst thou do?

1 P. MAN. I can ride.

GAV. But I have no horses. — What art thou?

2 P. MAN. A traveller.

GAV. Let me see; thou wouldst do well
To wait at my trencher and tell me lies at dinner time;

And as I like your discoursing, I'll have you. —
And what art thou?

3 P. MAN. A soldier that hath serv'd against the Scot.

GAV. Why, there are hospitals <sup>7</sup> for such as
you.

I have no war, and therefore, sir, begone.

3 P. MAN. Farewell, and perish by a soldier's hand,

That wouldst reward them with an hospital.

GAV. [aside] Ay, ay, these words of his move me as much

As if a goose should play the porpentine,<sup>8</sup> 40
And dart her plumes, thinking to pierce my breast.

But yet it is no pain to speak men fair;
I'll flatter these, and make them live in hope. —

You know that I came lately out of France,
And yet I have not view'd my Lord the
King;

If I speed well, I'll entertain you all.

OMNES. We thank your Worship.

GAV. I have some business; leave me to myself.

OMNES. We will wait here about the court.

Exeunt [the Poor Men].

GAV. Do. — These are not men for me; [50

I must have wanton poets, pleasant wits,
Musicians, that with touching of a string
May draw the pliant King which way I please.
Music and poetry is his delight;

Therefore I'll have Italian masques by night,
Sweet speeches, comedies, and pleasing shows;
And in the day, when he shall walk abroad,
Like sylvan<sup>9</sup> nymphs my pages shall be clad;
My men, like satyrs grazing on the lawns,
Shall with their goat-feet dance an antic hay.<sup>10</sup>

Sometime a lovely boy in Dian's shape, 61
With hair that gilds the water as it glides,

Crowns<sup>11</sup> of pearl about his naked arms,
And in his sportful hands an olive tree,
To hide those parts which men delight to see,
Shall bathe him in a spring; and there, hard by,
One like Actaeon peeping through the grove
Shall by the angry goddess be transform'd,
And running in the likeness of an hart
By yelping hounds pull'd down, and seem to die; 70

Such things as these best please his Majesty, My lord. — Here comes the King and the nobles

From the parliament; I'll stand aside.

[Retires.]

*Enter the KING [EDWARD II], LANCASTER, MORTIMER SENIOR, MORTIMER JUNIOR,
EDMUND EARL of KENT, GUY EARL of WAR-WICK, etc.*

K. EDW. Lancaster.

LAN. My Lord.

GAV. [aside] That Earl of Lancaster do I abhor.

K. EDW. Will you not grant me this? — [aside] In spite of them

I'll have my will; and these two Mortimers,
That cross me thus, shall know I am displeas'd.

ELDER MOR.<sup>12</sup> If you love us, my Lord, hate Gaveston. 80

GAV. [aside] That villain Mortimer! I'll be his death.

YOUNG MOR. Mine uncle here, this earl,
and I myself

Were sworn to your father at his death,
That he should ne'er return into the realm;
And know, my Lord, ere I will break my oath,
This sword of mine, that should offend your
foes,

Shall sleep within the scabbard at thy need;
And underneath thy banners march who will,
For Mortimer will hang his armor up.

GAV. [aside] Mort Dieu! 90

K. EDW. Well, Mortimer, I'll make thee rue these words.

Beseems it thee to contradict thy king?
Frown'st thou thereat, aspiring Lancaster?
The sword shall plane the furrows of thy brows,
And hew these knees that now are grown so stiff.

I will have Gaveston, and you shall know
What danger 't is to stand against your king.

GAV. [aside] Well done, Ned!

LAN. My Lord, why do you thus incense your peers,
That naturally would love and honor you 100
But for that base and obscure Gaveston?
Four earldoms have I, besides Lancaster —
Derby, Salisbury, Lincoln, Leicester. —
These will I sell, to give my soldiers pay,
Ere Gaveston shall stay within the realm;
Therefore, if he be come, expel him straight.

KENT. Barons and earls, your pride hath made me mute;
But now I'll speak, and to the proof, I hope.
I do remember in my father's days
Lord Percy of the north, being highly mov'd,
Brav'd Mowbray<sup>13</sup> in presence of the King; 111
For which, had not his Highness lov'd him well,
He should have lost his head; but with his look
The undaunted spirit of Percy was appeas'd,
And Mowbray and he were reconcil'd;
Yet dare you brave the King unto his face? —
Brother, revenge it; and let these their heads
Preach upon poles, for trespass of their tongues.

WAR. O, our heads!

K. EDW. Ay, yours; and therefore I would wish you grant. 120

WAR. Bridle thy anger, gentle Mortimer.

Y. MOR. I cannot, nor I will not; I must speak.

Cousin, our hands I hope shall fence our heads,
And strike off his that makes you threaten us.
Come, Uncle, let us leave the brainsick king,
And henceforth parley with our naked swords.

E. MOR. Wiltshire hath men enough to save our heads.

WAR. All Warwickshire will love him for my sake.

LAN. And northward Gaveston hath many friends. —

Adieu, my Lord; and either change your mind, 130

Or look to see the throne, where you should sit,
To float in blood, and at thy wanton head
The glozing<sup>14</sup> head of thy base minion thrown.

Exeunt [all but KING EDWARD, KENT, GAVESTON, and Attendants].

K. EDW. I cannot brook these haughty menaces.

Am I a king, and must be overrul'd? —
Brother, display my ensigns in the field;
I'll bandy<sup>15</sup> with the barons and the earls,
And either die or live with Gaveston.

GAV. [coming forward] I can no longer keep me from my lord.

K. EDW. What, Gaveston, welcome! —
Kiss not my hand — 140

Embrace me, Gaveston, as I do thee!
Why shouldst thou kneel? Knowest thou not who I am?

Thy friend, thyself, another Gaveston!
Not Hylas was more mourned of Hercules,
Than thou hast been of me since thy exile.

GAV. And since I went from hence, no soul in hell

Hath felt more torment than poor Gaveston.

K. EDW. I know it. — Brother, welcome home my friend.

Now let the treacherous Mortimers conspire,
And that high-minded Earl of Lancaster; 150
I have my wish, in that I joy thy sight;
And sooner shall the sea o'erwhelm my land,
Than bear the ship that shall transport thee
hence.

I here create thee Lord High Chamberlain,
Chief Secretary to the state and me,
Earl of Cornwall, King and Lord of Man.

GAV. My Lord, these titles far exceed my worth.

KENT. Brother, the least of these may well suffice

For one of greater birth than Gaveston.

K. EDW. Cease, Brother, for I cannot brook
these words. — 160

Thy worth, sweet friend, is far above my gifts;
Therefore, to equal it, receive my heart.

If for these dignities thou be envied,<sup>16</sup>
I'll give thee more; for but to honor thee
Is Edward pleas'd with kingly regiment.<sup>17</sup> Fear'st thou<sup>18</sup> thy person? Thou shalt have a guard.

Wants thou gold? Go to my treasury.
Wouldst thou be lov'd and fear'd? Receive my seal:

Save or condemn, and in our name command
Whatso thy mind affects, or fancy likes. 170

GAV. It shall suffice me to enjoy your love,
Which whiles I have, I think myself as great
As Caesar riding in the Roman street,
With captive kings at his triumphant car.

Enter the BISHOP OF COVENTRY.

K. EDW. Whither goes my Lord of Coven-try so fast?

B. OF COV. To celebrate your father's executions.

But is that wicked Gaveston return'd?

<sup>17</sup> Rule.

K. EDW. Ay, priest, and lives to be reveng'd
on thee,

That wert the only cause of his exile.

GAV. 'Tis true; and but for reverence of these robes, 180

Thou shouldst not plod one foot beyond this place.

B. OF COV. I did no more than I was bound to do;

And, Gaveston, unless thou be reclaim'd,
As then I did incense the parliament,
So will I now, and thou shalt back to France.

GAV. Saving your reverence, you must pardon me.

K. EDW. Throw off his golden mitre, rend his stole,
And in the channel<sup>19</sup> christen him anew.

KENT. Ah, Brother, lay not violent hands on him,

For he'll complain unto the see of Rome. 190

GAV. Let him complain unto the see of hell;
I'll be reveng'd on him for my exile.

K. EDW. No, spare his life, but seize upon his goods.

Be thou Lord Bishop and receive his rents,
And make him serve thee as thy chaplain:
I give him thee — here, use him as thou wilt.

GAV. He shall to prison, and there die in bolts.

K. EDW. Ay, to the Tower, the Fleet, or where thou wilt.

B. OF COV. For this offence, be thou accurs'd of God.

K. EDW. Who's there? Convey this priest to the Tower. [Enter Guards.] 200

B. OF COV. True, true.<sup>20</sup>

K. EDW. But in the meantime, Gaveston,
away

And take possession of his house and goods.
Come, follow me, and thou shalt have my guard
To see it done, and bring thee safe again.

GAV. What should a priest do with so fair a
house?

A prison may best beseem his holiness.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II] <sup>21</sup>

Enter both the MORTIMERS, WARWICK, and LANCASTER.

WAR. 'Tis true, the Bishop is in the Tower,
And goods and body given to Gaveston.

<sup>19</sup> Gutter.

<sup>20</sup> I.e., you well may say "convey" (= steal).

<sup>21</sup> The same.

LAN. What! will they tyrannize upon the Church?

Ah, wicked King! accursed Gaveston!

This ground, which is corrupted with their steps,

Shall be their timeless<sup>22</sup> sepulchre or mine.

Y. MOR. Well, let that peevish Frenchman guard him sure;

Unless his breast be sword-proof, he shall die.

E. MOR. How now! why droops the Earl of Lancaster?

Y. MOR. Wherefore is Guy of Warwick discontent? 10

LAN. That villain Gaveston is made an earl.

E. MOR. An earl!

WAR. Ay, and besides Lord Chamberlain of
the realm,
And Secretary too, and Lord of Man.

E. MOR. We may not, nor we will not suffer
this.

Y. MOR. Why post we not from hence to levy men?

LAN. "My Lord of Cornwall" now at every word!

And happy is the man whom he vouchsafes,
For vailing<sup>23</sup> of his bonnet, one good look. [19
Thus, arm in arm, the King and he doth march;
Nay more, the guard upon his Lordship waits,
And all the court begins to flatter him.

WAR. Thus leaning on the shoulder of the
King,

He nods and scorns and smiles at those that pass.

E. MOR. Doth no man take exceptions at the slave?

LAN. All stomach<sup>24</sup> him, but none dare speak a word.

Y. MOR. Ah, that bewrays<sup>25</sup> their baseness,
Lancaster;

Were all the earls and barons of my mind,
We'll hale him from the bosom of the King,
And at the court gate hang the peasant up, 30
Who, swoln with venom of ambitious pride,
Will be the ruin of the realm and us.

Enter the [ARCH]BISHOP OF CANTERBURY [and an Attendant].

WAR. Here comes my Lord of Canterbury's
Grace.

LAN. His countenance bewrays he is dis-
pleas'd.

A. OF CANT. First were his sacred garments rent and torn;

<sup>25</sup> Discloses.

Then laid they violent hands upon him ; next
Himself imprisoned, and his goods asseiz'd.
This certify the Pope. Away, take horse.

[Exit Attendant.]

LAN. My Lord, will you take arms against the King?

A. OF CANT. What need I? God himself is up in arms, 40

When violence is offered to the Church.

Y. MOR. Then will you join with us, that be his peers,

To banish or behead that Gaveston?

A. OF CANT. What else, my Lords? for it concerns me near ;

The bishopric of Coventry is his.

Enter the QUEEN [ISABELLA].

Y. MOR. Madam, whither walks your Majesty so fast?

Q. ISAB. Unto the forest,<sup>26</sup> gentle Mortimer,
To live in grief and baleful discontent ;
For now my Lord the King regards me not,
But dotes upon the love of Gaveston. 50
He claps his cheeks, and hangs about his neck,
Smiles in his face, and whispers in his ears ;
And when I come he frowns, as who should say,
"Go whither thou wilt, seeing I have Gaveston."

E. MOR. Is it not strange that he is thus bewitch'd?

Y. MOR. Madam, return unto the court
again.

That sly inveigling Frenchman we'll exile,
Or lose our lives ; and yet, ere that day come,
The King shall lose his crown ; for we have
power,

And courage too, to be reveng'd at full. 60

A. OF CANT. But yet lift not your swords against the King.

LAN. No ; but we'll lift Gaveston from
hence.

WAR. And war must be the means, or he'll stay still.

Q. ISAB. Then let him stay ; for rather than
my lord

Shall be oppress'd by civil mutinies,

I will endure a melancholy life

And let him frolic with his minion.

A. OF CANT. My Lords, to ease all this, but hear me speak.

We and the rest, that are his counsellors,
Will meet and with a general consent 70

<sup>26</sup> A metaphor, = "into seclusion," as Bullen
notes.

Confirm him banishment with our hands and seals.

LAN. What we confirm the King will frustrate.

Y. MOR. Then may we lawfully revolt from
him.

WAR. But say, my Lord, where shall this meeting be?

A. OF CANT. At the New Temple.

Y. MOR. Content.

A. OF CANT. And, in the meantime, I'll entreat you all

To cross to Lambeth,<sup>27</sup> and there stay with me.

LAN. Come, then ; let's away.

Y. MOR. Madam, farewell. 80

Q. ISAB. Farewell, sweet Mortimer ; and for my sake,

Forbear to levy arms against the King.

Y. MOR. Ay, if words will serve ; if not, I must. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE III]<sup>28</sup>

Enter GAVESTON and the EARL OF KENT.

GAV. Edmund, the mighty Prince of Lancaster,

That hath more earldoms than an ass can bear,
And both the Mortimers, two goodly men,
With Guy of Warwick, that redoubted knight,
Are gone towards Lambeth ; there let them remain ! Exeunt.

[SCENE IV]<sup>29</sup>

Enter Nobles [LANCASTER, WARWICK, PEM-BROKE, the Elder MORTIMER, Young MORTI-MER, the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY, and Attendants].

LAN. Here is the form of Gaveston's exile.
May it please your Lordship to subscribe your name.

A. OF CANT. Give me the paper.

[He subscribes, as the others do after him.]

LAN. Quick, quick, my Lord ; I long to write my name.

WAR. But I long more to see him banish'd
hence.

Y. MOR. The name of Mortimer shall fright
the King,

Unless he be declin'd from that base peasant.

<sup>29</sup> London. The New Temple. It stood between Fleet Street and the Thames. Upon the fall of the Knights Templars Edward II had given it to Pembroke.

Enter the KING, GAVESTON, [and KENT].

K. EDW. What! are you mov'd that Gaveston sits here?

It is our pleasure; we will have it so.

LAN. Your Grace doth well to place him by your side, 10

For nowhere else the new earl is so safe.

E. MOR. What man of noble birth can brook this sight?

Quam male conveniunt! <sup>30</sup>

See what a scornful look the peasant casts!

/ PEM. Can kingly lions fawn on creeping ants?

WAR. Ignoble vassal, that like Phaëthon Aspir'd unto the guidance of the sun!

Y. MOR. Their downfall is at hand, their forces down;

We will not thus be fac'd and over-peer'd.

K. EDW. Lay hands on that traitor Mortimer! 20

E. MOR. Lay hands on that traitor Gaveston! [They seize GAVESTON.]

KENT. Is this the duty that you owe your king?

WAR. We know our duties; let him know his peers.

K. EDW. Whither will you bear him? Stay, or ye shall die.

E. MOR. We are no traitors; therefore threaten not.

GAV. No, threaten not, my Lord, but pay them home.

Were I a king——

Y. MOR. Thou villain, wherefore talks thou of a king,

That hardly art a gentleman by birth?

K. EDW. Were he a peasant, being my minion, 30

I'll make the proudest of you stoop to him.

LAN. My Lord, you may not thus disparage us. —

Away, I say, with hateful Gaveston.

E. MOR. And with the Earl of Kent that favors him.

[Attendants remove KENT and GAVESTON.]

K. EDW. Nay, then, lay violent hands upon your king.

/ Here, Mortimer, sit thou in Edward's throne; Warwick and Lancaster, wear you my crown.

Was ever king thus overrul'd as I?

LAN. Learn then to rule us better, and the realm.

<sup>30</sup> How ill they agree!

Y. MOR. What we have done our heart-blood shall maintain. 40

WAR. Think you that we can brook this upstart pride?

K. EDW. Anger and wrathful fury stops my speech.

A. OF CANT. Why are you mov'd? Be patient,<sup>31</sup> my Lord,

And see what we your counsellors have done.

Y. MOR. My Lords, now let us all be resolute,

And either have our wills or lose our lives.

K. EDW. Meet you for this, proud overbearing peers?

Ere my sweet Gaveston shall part from me,

This isle shall fleet<sup>32</sup> upon the ocean,

And wander to the unfrequented Inde. 50

A. OF CANT. You know that I am legate to the Pope.

On your allegiance to the see of Rome, Subscribe, as we have done, to his exile.

Y. MOR. Curse him, if he refuse; and then may we Depose him and elect another king.

K. EDW. Ay, there it goes! but yet I will not yield,

Curse me, depose me, do the worst you can.

LAN. Then linger not, my Lord, but do it straight.

A. OF CANT. Remember how the Bishop was abus'd; 59

Either banish him that was the cause thereof,

Or I will presently discharge these lords

Of duty and allegiance due to thee.

(K. EDW. [aside] It boots me not to threaten; I must speak fair. —

The legate of the Pope will be obey'd.

My Lord, you shall be Chancellor of the realm;

Thou, Lancaster, High Admiral of our fleet; Young Mortimer and his uncle shall be earls;

And you, Lord Warwick, President of the North;

And [to PEMBROKE] thou, of Wales. If this content you not,

Make several kingdoms of this monarchy, 70

And share it equally amongst you all,

So I may have some nook or corner left,

To frolic with my dearest Gaveston.)

A. OF CANT. Nothing shall alter us; we are resolv'd.

LAN. Come, come, subscribe.

Y. MOR. Why should you love him whom the world hates so?

<sup>32</sup> Float.

K. EDW. Because he loves me more than all the world.

Ah, none but rude and savage-minded men
Would seek the ruin of my Gaveston ;
You that be noble born should pity him. 80

WAR. You that are princely born should shake him off ;

For shame subscribe, and let the lown<sup>33</sup> depart.

E. MOR. Urge him, my Lord.

A. OF CANT. Are you content to banish him
the realm ?

K. EDW. I see I must, and therefore am content.

Instead of ink, I'll write it with my tears.

[Subscribes.]

Y. MOR. The king is lovesick for his minion.

K. EDW. 'T is done ; and now, accursed hand, fall off.

LAN. Give it me ; I'll have it published in the streets.

Y. MOR. I'll see him presently<sup>34</sup> despatched away. 90

A. OF CANT. Now is my heart at ease.

WAR. And so is mine.

PEM. This will be good news to the common sort.

E. MOR. Be it or no, he shall not linger here.

Exeunt [all but KING EDWARD].

K. EDW. How fast they run to banish him
I love.

They would not stir, were it to do me good.

Why should a king be subject to a priest ?

Proud Rome, that hatchest such imperial grooms,

For these thy superstitious taper-lights,
Wherewith thy antichristian churches blaze,

I'll fire thy crazed buildings, and enforce 100

The papal towers to kiss the lowly ground,

With slaughtered priests [make]<sup>35</sup> Tiber's
channel swell,

And banks rais'd higher with their sepulchres !

As for the peers, that back the clergy thus,

If I be king, not one of them shall live.

Re-enter GAVESTON.

GAV. My Lord, I hear it whispered everywhere,

That I am banish'd, and must fly the land.

K. EDW. 'T is true, sweet Gaveston — O, were it false !

The legate of the Pope will have it so,

And thou must hence, or I shall be depos'd. [110

But I will reign to be reveng'd of them ;

<sup>35</sup> Emend. Dodsley ; old eds. may.

And therefore, sweet friend, take it patiently.
Live where thou wilt, I'll send thee gold enough ;

And long thou shalt not stay, or, if thou dost,
I'll come to thee ; my love shall ne'er decline.

GAV. Is all my hope turn'd to this hell of grief ?

K. EDW. Rend not my heart with thy too piercing words.

Thou from this land, I from myself am ban-ish'd.

GAV. To go from hence grieves not poor
Gaveston ;

But to forsake you, in whose gracious looks [120

The blessedness of Gaveston remains,

For nowhere else seeks he felicity.

K. EDW. And only this torments my wretched soul,

That, whether I will or no, thou must depart.

Be governor of Ireland in my stead,

And there abide till fortune call thee home.

Here, take my picture, and let me wear thine ;
O, might I keep thee here as I do this,

Happy were I ! but now most miserable ! 129

GAV. 'T is something to be pitied of a king.

K. EDW. Thou shalt not hence — I'll hide thee, Gaveston.

GAV. I shall be found, and then 't will grieve me more.

K. EDW. Kind words and mutual talk makes our grief greater ;

Therefore with dumb embracement let us part. —

Stay, Gaveston, I cannot leave thee thus.

GAV. For every look, my Lord drops down a tear.

Seeing I must go, do not renew my sorrow.

K. EDW. The time is little that thou hast to stay,

And, therefore, give me leave to look my fill.
But come, sweet friend, I'll bear thee on thy

way. 140

GAV. The peers will frown.

K. EDW. I pass<sup>36</sup> not for their anger.

Come, let's go ;

O that we might as well return as go.

Enter EDMUND and QUEEN ISABELL[A].

Q. ISAB. Whither goes my Lord ?

K. EDW. Fawn not on me, French strumpet ! Get thee gone !

Q. ISAB. On whom but on my husband should I fawn ?

<sup>36</sup> Care, am moved.

GAV. On Mortimer, with whom, ungentle
Queen —

I say no more. Judge you the rest, my
Lord.

Q. ISAB. In saying this, thou wrong'st me,
Gaveston. 149

Is't not enough that thou corrupts my lord,
And art a bawd to his affections,
But thou must call mine honor thus in question?

GAV. I mean not so ; your Grace must pardon me.

K. EDW. Thou art too familiar with that
Mortimer,
And by thy means is Gaveston exil'd ;
But I would wish thee reconcile the lords,
Or thou shalt ne'er be reconcil'd to me.

Q. ISAB. Your Highness knows it lies not in my power.

K. EDW. Away then ! touch me not ! — Come, Gaveston.

Q. ISAB. Villain, 't is thou that robb'st me of my lord. 160

GAV. Madam, 't is you that rob me of my
lord.

K. EDW. Speak not unto her ; let her droop and pine.

Q. ISAB. Wherein, my Lord, have I deserv'd
these words?

Witness the tears that Isabella sheds,
Witness this heart, that, sighing for thee,
breaks,

How dear my lord is to poor Isabel.

K. EDW. And witness Heaven how dear thou art to me !

There weep ; for till my Gaveston be repeal'd,
Assure thyself thou com'st not in my sight.

Exeunt EDWARD and GAVESTON.

Q. ISAB. O miserable and distressed queen !
Would, when I left sweet France and was embark'd, 171

That charming <sup>37</sup> Circes, walking on the waves,
Had chang'd my shape, or at the marriage day
The cup of Hymen had been full of poison,
Or with those arms that twin'd about my neck
I had been stified, and not lived to see
The King, my lord, thus to abandon me !

Like frantic Juno will I fill the earth
With ghastly murmur of my sighs and cries ;
For never doted Jove on Ganymede 180
So much as he on cursed Gaveston.

But, that will more exasperate his wrath,
I must entreat him, I must speak him fair,
And be a means to call home Gaveston.

<sup>37</sup> Able to enchant.

And yet he'll ever dote on Gaveston ;
And so am I for ever miserable.

*Re-enter the Nobles [LANCASTER, WARWICK,
PEMBROKE, the Elder MORTIMER, and Young
MORTIMER] to the Queen.*

LAN. Look where the sister of the King of France
Sits wringing of her hands, and beats her
breast.

WAR. The King, I fear, hath ill entreated
her.

PEM. Hard is the heart that injures such a saint. 190

Y. MOR. I know 't is 'long of Gaveston she weeps.

E. MOR. Why? He is gone.

Y. MOR. Madam, how fares your Grace?

Q. ISAB. Ah, Mortimer ! now breaks the King's hate forth,
And he confesseth that he loves me not.

Y. MOR. Cry quitance, madam, then ; and love not him.

Q. ISAB. No, rather will I die a thousand deaths !

And yet I love in vain ; he'll ne'er love me.

LAN. Fear ye not, madam ; now his minion's gone,

His wanton humor will be quickly left. 199

Q. ISAB. O never, Lancaster ! I am enjoin'd
To sue upon you all for his repeal ;

This wills my Lord, and this must I perform,
Or else be banish'd from his Highness' presence.

LAN. For his repeal? Madam, he comes not back,

Unless the sea cast up his shipwreck[']d body.

WAR. And to behold so sweet a sight as that,
There's none here but would run his horse to
death.

Y. MOR. But, madam, would you have us
call him home?

Q. ISAB. Ay, Mortimer, for till he be restor'd, 209

The angry King hath banished me the court ;
And, therefore, as thou lovest and tend'rest me,
Be thou my advocate unto these peers.

Y. MOR. What, would ye have me plead for Gaveston?

E. MOR. Plead for him he that will, I am resolv'd.

LAN. And so am I, my Lord. Dissuade the Queen.

Q. ISAB. O Lancaster, let him dissuade the
King ;

For 't is against my will he should return.

WAR. Then speak not for him; let the peasant go.

Q. ISAB. 'T is for myself I speak, and not for him.

PEM. No speaking will prevail, and therefore cease. 220

(Y. MOR. Fair Queen, forbear to angle for the fish

Which, being caught, strikes him that takes it dead;

I mean that vile torpedo,<sup>38</sup> Gaveston,
That now, I hope, floats on the Irish seas.)

Q. ISAB. Sweet Mortimer, sit down by me awhile,

And I will tell thee reasons of such weight
As thou wilt soon subscribe to his repeal.

Y. MOR. It is impossible; but speak your mind.

Q. ISAB. Then thus;—but none shall hear it but ourselves.

[Talks to Young MORTIMER apart.]

LAN. My Lords, albeit the Queen win Mortimer, 230

Will you be resolute, and hold with me?

E. MOR. Not I, against my nephew.

PEM. Fear not, the Queen's words cannot alter him.

WAR. No? Do but mark how earnestly she pleads.

LAN. And see how coldly his looks make denial.

WAR. She smiles; now, for my life, his mind is chang'd.

LAN. I'll rather lose his friendship, I, than grant.

Y. MOR. Well, of necessity it must be so.—My Lords, that I abhor base Gaveston,

I hope your Honors make no question; 240

And therefore, though I plead for his repeal,
'T is not for his sake, but for our avail;

Nay for the realm's behoof, and for the King's.

LAN. Fie, Mortimer, dishonor not thyself.
Can this be true, 't was good to banish him?

And is this true, to call him home again?
Such reasons make white black, and dark night day.

Y. MOR. My Lord of Lancaster, mark the respect.<sup>39</sup>

(LAN. In no respect can contraries be true.

Q. ISAB. Yet, good my Lord, hear what he can allege. 250

WAR. All that he speaks is nothing; we are resolv'd.

Y. MOR. Do you not wish that Gaveston were dead?

PEM. I would he were.

Y. MOR. Why, then, my Lord, give me but leave to speak.

E. MOR. But, Nephew, do not play the sophister.

Y. MOR. This which I urge is of a burning zeal

To mend the King, and do our country good.
Know you not Gaveston hath store of gold,
Which may in Ireland purchase him such friends

As he will front the mightiest of us all? 260

And whereas<sup>40</sup> he shall live and be below'd,

'T is hard for us to work his overthrow.

WAR. Mark you but that, my Lord of Lancaster.

Y. MOR. But were he here, detested as he is,
How easily might some base slave be suborn'd
To greet his Lordship with a poniard,
And none so much as blame the murderer,
But rather praise him for that brave attempt,
And in the chronicle enroll his name

For purging of the realm of such a plague. 270

PEM. He saith true.

LAN. Ay, but how chance this was not done before?

Y. MOR. Because, my Lords, it was not thought upon.

Nay, more, when he shall know it lies in us
To banish him, and then to call him home,
'T will make him vail<sup>41</sup> the top-flag of his pride,

And fear to offend the meanest nobleman.

E. MOR. But how if he do not, Nephew?

Y. MOR. Then may we with some color<sup>42</sup> rise in arms;

For howsoever we have borne it out, 280

'T is treason to be up against the King.

So we shall have the people of our side,
Which for his father's sake lean to the King,
But cannot brook a night-grown mushroom,
Such a one as my Lord of Cornwall is,
Should bear us down of the nobility.

And when the commons and the nobles join,
'T is not the King can buckler Gaveston;
We'll pull him from the strongest hold he hath.
My Lords, if to perform this I be slack, 290
Think me as base a groom as Gaveston.

LAN. On that condition, Lancaster will grant.

WAR. And so will Pembroke and I.

<sup>40</sup> Consideration.

E. MOR.

And I.

Y. MOR. In this I count me highly gratified,
And Mortimer will rest at your command.

Q. ISAB. And when this favor Isabel forgets,

Then let her live abandon'd and forlorn. —

But see, in happy time, my Lord the King, Having brought the Earl of Cornwall on his
way,

Is new return'd. This news will glad him much,
Yet not so much as me. I love him more [301
Than he can Gaveston; would he lov'd me
But half so much: then were I treble-blest.

[They retire.]

Re-enter KING EDWARD, mourning, [with BEAUMONT and other Attendants].

K. EDW. He's gone, and for his absence
thus I mourn.

Did never sorrow go so near my heart
As doth the want of my sweet Gaveston;
And could my crown's revenue <sup>43</sup> bring him
back,

I would freely give it to his enemies,
And think I gain'd, having bought so dear a
friend.

Q. ISAB. [aside to the Nobles] Hark how he harps upon his minion. 310

K. EDW. My heart is as an anvil unto sorrow,
Which beats upon it like the Cyclops' hammers,

And with the noise turns up my giddy brain,
And makes me frantic for my Gaveston.

Ah, had some bloodless Fury rose from hell,
And with my kingly sceptre struck me dead,
When I was forc'd to leave my Gaveston!

LAN. [aside to the Nobles] Diablo! What passions call you these?

Q. ISAB. [advancing] My gracious Lord, I come to bring you news.

K. EDW. That you have parle[y]'d with your Mortimer! 320

Q. ISAB. That Gaveston, my Lord, shall be repeal'd.

K. EDW. Repeal'd! The news is too sweet to be true.

Q. ISAB. But will you love me, if you find it
so? *

K. EDW. If it be so, what will not Edward do?

Q. ISAB. For Gaveston, but not for Isabel.

K. EDW. For thee, fair Queen, if thou lovest
Gaveston.

I'll hang a golden tongue about thy neck,
Seeing thou hast pleaded with so good success.

Q. ISAB. No other jewels hang about my neck

Than these, my Lord; nor let me have more wealth 330

Than I may fetch from this rich treasury.

O how a kiss revives poor Isabel.

K. EDW. Once more receive my hand; and let this be

A second marriage 'twixt thyself and me.

Q. ISAB. And may it prove more happy than the first.

My gentle Lord, bespeak these nobles fair,
That wait attendance for a gracious look,
And on their knees salute your Majesty.

K. EDW. Courageous Lancaster, embrace thy King!

And, as gross vapors perish by the sun, 340
Even so let hatred with thy sovereign[s]' <sup>44</sup> smile.

Live thou with me as my companion.

LAN. This salutation overjoys my heart.

K. EDW. Warwick shall be my chiefest counsellor;

These silver hairs will more adorn my court
Than gaudy silks, or rich embroidery.

Chide me, sweet Warwick, if I go astray.

WAR. Slay me, my Lord, when I offend your Grace.

K. EDW. In solemn triumphs, and in public shows,

Pembroke shall bear the sword before the
King. 350

PEM. And with this sword Pembroke will fight for you.

K. EDW. But wherefore walks young Mortimer aside?

Be thou commander of our royal fleet;

Or, if that lofty office like thee not,

I make thee here Lord Marshal of the realm.

Y. MOR. My Lord, I'll marshal so your enemies,

As England shall be quiet, and you safe.

K. EDW. And as for you, Lord Mortimer of Chirke,

Whose great achievements in our foreign
war

Deserves no common place nor mean reward,
Be you the general of the levied troops, 361

That now are ready to assail the Scots.

E. MOR. In this your Grace hath highly honored me,

For with my nature war doth best agree.

<sup>43</sup> Accented on second syllable.

<sup>44</sup> Add. Q 1612; om. earlier eds.

Q. ISAB. Now is the King of England rich and strong,
Having the love of his renowned peers.

K. EDW. Ay, Isabel, ne'er was my heart so light.

Clerk of the crown, direct our warrant forth
For Gaveston to Ireland. Bea[u]mont, fly
As fast as Iris or Jove's Mercury. 370

BEAU. It shall be done, my gracious Lord.
[Exit.]

K. EDW. Lord Mortimer, we leave you to your charge. —

Now let us in, and feast it royally.
Against our friend the Earl of Cornwall comes,
We'll have a general tilt and tournament;
And then his marriage shall be solemnized.
For wot you not that I have made him sure <sup>45</sup> Unto our cousin, <sup>46</sup> the Earl of Gloucester's heir?

LAN. Such news we hear, my Lord.

K. EDW. That day, if not for him, yet for
my sake, 380

Who in the triumph will be challenger,
Spare for no cost; we will requite your love.

WAR. In this, or aught, your Highness shall command us.

K. EDW. Thanks, gentle Warwick; come,
let's in and revel.

Exeunt [all except the] MORTIMERS.

E. MOR. Nephew, I must to Scotland; thou stayest here.

Leave now to oppose thyself against the King.
Thou seest by nature he is mild and calm,
And, seeing his mind so dotes on Gaveston,
Let him without controlment have his will.

The mightiest kings have had their minions:
{ Great Alexander loved Hephaestion; 391

{ The conquering [Hercules] <sup>47</sup> for Hylas wept;
And for Patroclus stern Achilles droop'd;

And not kings only, but the wisest men:
The Roman Tully <sup>48</sup> lov'd Octavius;

Grave Socrates, wild Alcibiades. }
Then let his Grace, whose youth is flexible,

And promiseth as much as we can wish,
Freely enjoy that vain, light-headed earl;

For riper years will wean him from such toys.

Y. MOR. Uncle, his wanton humor grieves not me; 401

But this I scorn, that one so basely born
Should by his sovereign's favor grow so pert,

And riot it with the treasure of the realm.
While soldiers mutiny for want of pay,

He wears a lord's revenue on his back;
And Midas-like, he jets <sup>49</sup> it in the court,
With base outlandish cullions <sup>50</sup> at his heels,
Whose proud fantastic liveries make such show
As if that Proteus, god of shapes, appear'd.

I have not seen a dapper Jack so brisk; 411
He wears a short Italian hooded cloak,
Larded with pearl, and, in his Tuscan cap,

A jewel of more value than the crown.
Whiles other walk below, the King and he

From out a window laugh at such as we,
And flout our train, and jest at our attire.

Uncle, 't is this that makes me impatient.

E. MOR. But, Nephew, now you see the King is chang'd.

Y. MOR. Then so am I, and live to do him service; 420

But whiles I have a sword, a hand, a heart,
I will not yield to any such upstart.

You know my mind; come, Uncle, let's away.
Exeunt.

[ACT II — SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter [Young] SPENCER and BALDOCK.

BALD. Spencer, seeing that our lord th'
Earl of Gloucester's dead,

Which of the nobles dost thou mean to serve?

Y. SPEN. Not Mortimer, nor any of his side,
Because the king and he are enemies.

Baldock, learn this of me: a factious lord
Shall hardly do himself good, much less us;

But he that hath the favor of a king,
May with one word advance us while we live.

The liberal Earl of Cornwall is the man
On whose good fortune Spencer's hope depends. 10

BALD. What, mean you then to be his follower?

Y. SPEN. No, his companion; for he loves me well,

And would have once preferr'd me to the
King.

BALD. But he is banish'd; there's small hope of him.

Y. SPEN. Ay, for a while; but, Baldock, mark the end.

A friend of mine told me in secrecy
That he's repeal'd, and sent for back again;

<sup>1</sup> A room in the late Earl's residence at Gloucester.
The historical Lady of Gloucester's brother, the Earl, was killed at Bannockburn.

And even now a post came from the court
With letters to our lady from the King ;
And as she read she smil'd, which makes me
think 20

It is about her lover Gaveston.

BALD. 'T is like enough ; for since he was exil'd

She neither walks abroad, nor comes in sight.
But I had thought the match had been broke off,
And that his banishment had chang'd her
mind.

Y. SPEN. Our lady's first love is not waver-
ing ;

My life for thine, she will have Gaveston.

BALD. Then hope I by her means to be pre-ferr'd,

Having read unto her since she was a child.

Y. SPEN. Then, Baldock, you must cast the scholar off, 30

And learn to court it like a gentleman.

'T is not a black coat and a little band,
A velvet-cap'd cloak, fac'd before with serge,
And smelling to a nosegay all the day,
Or holding of a napkin in your hand,
Or saying a long grace at a table's end,
Or making low legs<sup>2</sup> to a nobleman,
Or looking downward with your eyelids close,
And saying, "Truly, an't may please your Honor,"

Can get you any favor with great men. 40
You must be proud, bold, pleasant, resolute,
And now and then stab, as occasion serves.

BALD. Spencer, thou knowest I hate such formal toys,

And use them but of mere hypocrisy.

Mine old lord whiles he liv'd was so precise,<sup>3</sup>
That he would take exceptions at my buttons,
And being like pin's heads, blame me for the bigness ;

Which made me curate-like in mine attire,
Though inwardly licentious enough
And apt for any kind of villainy. 50

I am none of these common [pedants]<sup>4</sup> I,
That cannot speak without propterea quod.<sup>5</sup>

Y. SPEN. But one of those that saith quan-doquidem.<sup>6</sup>

And hath a special gift to form a verb.

BALD. Leave off this jesting ; here my Lady comes. [They retire.]

(Spencer hints) to give his reasons." (Verity.)

Enter the Lady [of Gloucester, King Edward's Niece.]

[NIECE.]<sup>7</sup> The grief for his exile was not so much

As is the joy of his returning home.

This letter came from my sweet Gaveston.

What need'st thou, love, thus to excuse thyself ?
I know thou couldst not come and visit me. 60

"I will not long be from thee, though I die."
This argues the entire love of my lord.

"When I forsake thee, death seize on my
heart." —

But rest thee here where Gaveston shall sleep.

[Puts the letter into her bosom.]

Now to the letter of my Lord the King. —

He wills me to repair unto the court

And meet my Gaveston. Why do I stay, Seeing that he talks thus of my marriage
day? —

Who's there? Baldock !

See that my coach be ready ; I must hence. 70

BALD. It shall be done, madam. Exit.

NIECE. And meet me at the park pale presently. —

Spencer, stay you and bear me company,

For I have joyful news to tell thee of.

My Lord of Cornwall is a-coming over,

And will be at the court as soon as we.

Y. SPEN. I knew the King would have him home again.

NIECE. If all things sort out<sup>8</sup> as I hope they will,

Thy service, Spencer, shall be thought upon.

Y. SPEN. I humbly thank your Ladyship. [80

NIECE. Come, lead the way ; I long till I am there. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II]<sup>9</sup>

Enter [KING] EDWARD, the QUEEN [ISABELLA],
LANCASTER, [Young] MORTIMER, WARWICK,
PEMBROKE, KENT, [and] Attendants.

K. EDW. The wind is good ; I wonder why he stays.

I fear me he is wrack'd upon the sea.

Q. ISAB. [aside] Look, Lancaster, how passionate<sup>10</sup> he is,

And still his mind runs on his minion.

LAN. My Lord.

K. EDW. How now ! what news ? Is Gaves-ton arriv'd ?

<sup>10</sup> Sorrowful.

Y. MOR. Nothing but Gaveston! What means your Grace?

You have matters of more weight to think upon.

The King of France sets foot in Normandy.

K. EDW. A trifle! we'll expel him when we please! 10

But tell me, Mortimer, what's thy device<sup>11</sup> Against the stately triumph we decreed?

Y. MOR. A homely one, my Lord, not worth the telling.

K. EDW. Prithce let me know it.

Y. MOR. But, seeing you are so desirous, thus it is:

A lofty cedar tree, fair flourishing,
On whose top branches kingly eagles perch;
And by the bark a canker<sup>12</sup> creeps me up,
And gets unto the highest bough of all;

The motto, Aeque tandem.<sup>13</sup> 20

K. EDW. And what is yours, my Lord of Lancaster?

LAN. My Lord, mine's more obscure than Mortimer's.

Pliny reports there is a flying fish
Which all the other fishes deadly hate;
And therefore, being pursued, it takes the air.

No sooner is it up, but there's a fowl
That seizeth it. This fish, my Lord, I bear;
The motto this, Undique mors est.<sup>14</sup>

K. EDW. Proud Mortimer, ungentle Lancaster,

Is this the love you bear your sovereign? 30
Is this the fruit your reconciliation bears?
Can you in words make show of amity,
And in your shields display your rancorous minds?

What call you this but private libelling
Against the Earl of Cornwall and my brother?

Q. ISAB. Sweet Husband, be content; they all love you.

K. EDW. They love me not that hate my Gaveston.

I am that cedar — shake me not too much;
And you the eagles — soar ye ne'er so high,
I have the [jesses]<sup>15</sup> that will pull you down; 40
And Aeque tandem shall that canker cry
Unto the proudest peer of Britainy.
Though thou compar'st him to a flying fish,
And threatenest death whether he rise or fall,
'Tis not the hugest monster of the sea,
Nor foulest harpy, that shall swallow him.

Y. MOR. [aside to the Nobles] If in his absence thus he favors him,

What will he do whenas he shall be present?

LAN. [aside] That shall we see; look where his Lordship comes.

Enter GAVESTON.

K. EDW. My Gaveston! 50
Welcome to Tynemouth! Welcome to thy friend!

Thy absence made me droop and pine away;
For, as the lovers of fair Danaë,
When she was lock'd up in a brazen tower,
Desir'd her more and wax'd outrageous,
So did it, sure,<sup>16</sup> with me; and now thy sight

Is sweeter far than was thy parting hence Bitter and irksome to my sobbing heart.)

GAV. Sweet Lord and King, your speech preventeth<sup>17</sup> mine;

Yet have I words left to express my joy. 60
The shepherd nipp'd with biting winter's rage

Frolics not more to see the painted spring
Than I do to behold your Majesty.

K. EDW. Will none of you salute my Gaveston?

LAN. Salute him? yes. Welcome, Lord Chamberlain!

Y. MOR. Welcome is the good Earl of Cornwall!

WAR. Welcome, Lord Governor of the Isle of Man!

PEM. Welcome, Master Secretary!

KENT. Brother, do you hear them?

K. EDW. Still will these earls and barons use me thus?

GAV. My Lord, I cannot brook these injuries. 70

Q. ISAB. [aside] Aye me, poor soul, when these begin to jar.

K. EDW. Return it to their throats; I'll be thy warrant.

GAV. Base, leaden earls, that glory in your birth,

Go sit at home and eat your tenants' beef;
And come not here to scoff at Gaveston,
Whose mounting thoughts did never creep so low

As to bestow a look on such as you.

LAN. Yet I disdain not to do this for you.

[Draws his sword and offers to stab GAVESTON.]

<sup>17</sup> Anticipateth.

K. EDW. Treason! treason; where's the traitor?

PEM. Here! here!

K. EDW. Convey hence Gaveston; they'll murder him. 80

GAV. The life of thee shall salve this foul disgrace.

Y. MOR. Villain, thy life, unless I miss mine aim. [Wounds GAVESTON.]

Q. ISAB. Ah, furious Mortimer, what hast thou done?

Y. MOR. No more than I would answer, were he slain.

[Exit GAVESTON with Attendants.]

K. EDW. Yes, more than thou canst answer, though he live.

Dear shall you both aby<sup>e</sup> 18 this riotous deed.

Out of my presence! Come not near the court.

Y. MOR. I'll not be barr'd the court for Gaveston.

LAN. We'll hale him by the ears unto the block.

K. EDW. Look to your own heads; his is sure enough. 90

WAR. Look to your own crown, if you back him thus.

KENT. Warwick, these words do ill beseem thy years.

K. EDW. Nay, all of them conspire to cross me thus;

But if I live, I'll tread upon their heads

That think with high looks thus to tread me down.

Come, Edmund, let's away and levy men;
'T is war that must abate these barons' pride.

Exit the KING [with QUEEN ISABELLA and KENT].

WAR. Let's to our castles, for the King is mov'd.

Y. MOR. Mov'd may he be, and perish in his wrath! 99

LAN. Cousin, it is no dealing with him now; He means to make us stoop by force of arms. And therefore let us jointly here protest, To prosecute that Gaveston to the death.

Y. MOR. By Heaven, the abject villain shall not live!

WAR. I'll have his blood, or die in seeking it.

PEM. The like oath Pembroke takes.

LAN. And so doth Lancaster.

Now send our heralds to defy the King;
And make the people swear to put him down.

<sup>18</sup> Pay for. O, abie; other old eds. abide.

Enter a Post.

Y. MOR. Letters, from whence?

MESS. From Scotland, my Lord.
[Gives letters to MORTIMER.]

LAN. Why, how now, cousin, how fares all our friends? 110

Y. MOR. My uncle's taken prisoner by the Scots.

LAN. We'll have him ransom'd, man; be of good cheer.

Y. MOR. They rate his ransom at five thousand pound.

Who should defray the money but the King,
Seeing he is taken prisoner in his wars?
I'll to the King.

LAN. Do, cousin, and I'll bear thee company.

WAR. Meantime, my Lord of Pembroke and myself

Will to Newcastle here, and gather head.<sup>19</sup>

Y. MOR. About it, then, and we will follow you. 120

LAN. Be resolute and full of secrecy.

WAR. I warrant you. [Exit with PEMBROKE.]

Y. MOR. Cousin, an if he will not ransom him,

I'll thunder such a peal into his ears,
As never subject did unto his king.

LAN. Content; I'll bear my part — Holla! who's there?

[Enter Guard.]

Y. MOR. Ay, marry, such a guard as this doth well.

LAN. Lead on the way.

GUARD. Whither will your Lordships?

Y. MOR. Whither else but to the King? [130

GUARD. His Highness is dispos'd to be alone.

LAN. Why, so he may, but we will speak to him.

GUARD. You may not in, my Lord.

Y. MOR. May we not?

[Enter KING EDWARD and KENT.]

K. EDW. How now!

What noise is this? Who have we there?
Is't you? [He starts to leave.]

Y. MOR. Nay, stay, my Lord; I come to bring you news;

Mine uncle's taken prisoner by the Scots.

K. EDW. Then ransom him.

LAN. 'T was in your wars; you should ransom him. 140

Y. MOR. And you shall ransom him, or else —

KENT. What, Mortimer, you will not threaten him?

K. EDW. Quiet yourself; you shall have the broad seal

To gather<sup>20</sup> for him throughout the realm.

LAN. Your minion Gaveston hath taught you this.

Y. MOR. My Lord, the family of the Mortimers

Are not so poor but, would they sell their land, Would<sup>21</sup> levy men enough to anger you.

We never beg, but use such prayers as these.

K. EDW. Shall I still be haunted thus? 150

Y. MOR. Nay, now you are here alone, I'll speak my mind.

LAN. And so will I, and then, my Lord, farewell.

Y. MOR. The idle triumphs, masques, lascivious shows,

And prodigal gifts bestowed on Gaveston, Have drawn thy treasure dry and made thee weak,

The murmuring commons overstretched hath.<sup>22</sup>

(LAN. Look for rebellion; look to be depos'd. Thy garrisons are beaten out of France, And, lame and poor, lie groaning at the gates. The wild O'Neill, with swarms of Irish kerns,<sup>23</sup> Lives uncontroll'd within the English pale.[161 Unto the walls of York the Scots made road, And unresisted drave away rich spoils.]

Y. MOR. The haughty Dane commands the narrow seas, While in the harbor ride thy ships unrigg'd.

LAN. What foreign prince sends thee ambassadors?

Y. MOR. Who loves thee, but a sort<sup>24</sup> of flatterers?

LAN. Thy gentle Queen, sole sister to Valois,<sup>25</sup>

Complains that thou hast left her all forlorn.

Y. MOR. Thy court is naked, being bereft of those 170

That make a king seem glorious to the world; I mean the peers, whom thou shouldst dearly love.

Libels are cast again<sup>26</sup> thee in the street; Ballads and rhymes made of thy overthrow.

LAN. The Northern borderers, seeing [their]<sup>27</sup> houses burnt,

Their wives and children slain, run up and down,

Cursing the name of thee and Gaveston.

Y. MOR. When wert thou in the field with banner spread?

But once! and then thy soldiers march'd like players, 179

With garish robes, not armor; and thyself, Bedaub'd with gold, rode laughing at the rest, Nodding and shaking of thy spangled crest, Where women's favors hung like labels<sup>28</sup> down.

LAN. And thereof came it, that the fleering Scots, To England's high disgrace, have made this jig:

Maids of England, sore may you mourn,
For your lemans<sup>29</sup> you have lost at Bannocks-bourn,<sup>30</sup>

With a heave and a ho!
What weeneth the King of England,
So soon to have won Scotland? 190
With a rombelow!

Y. MOR. Wigmore shall fly,<sup>31</sup> to set my uncle free.

LAN. And when 't is gone, our swords shall purchase more.

If ye be mov'd, revenge it as you can;

Look next to see us with our ensigns spread.
Exeunt Nobles.

K. EDW. My swelling heart for very anger breaks.

How oft have I been baited by these peers, And dare not be reveng'd, for their power is great!

Yet, shall the crowing of these cockerels Affright a lion? Edward, unfold thy paws, 200

And let their lives' blood slake thy fury's hunger.

If I be cruel and grow tyrannous, Now let them thank themselves, and rue too late.

KENT. My Lord, I see your love to Gaveston

Will be the ruin of the realm and you;

<sup>25</sup> Isabella was sister to the last of the Capet kings, Charles IV, and his two predecessors. Philip VI, first king of the house of Valois, did not ascend the throne till after the death of Edward II.

For now the wrathful nobles threaten wars,
And therefore, Brother, banish him for ever.

K. EDW. Art thou an enemy to my Gaveston?

KENT. Ay, and it grieves me that I favored him.

K. EDW. Traitor, begone! whine thou with Mortimer. 210

KENT. So will I, rather than with Gaveston.

K. EDW. Out of my sight, and trouble me no more!

KENT. No marvel though thou scorn thy noble peers,

When I, thy brother, am rejected thus.

K. EDW. Away! Exit [KENT].

Poor Gaveston, that has no friend but me!

Do what they can, we'll live in Tynemouth here;

And, so I walk with him about the walls,
What care I though the earls begirt us round?—
Here comes she that's cause of all these jars.

Enter the QUEEN [ISABELLA] with [King Edward's Niece, two] Ladies, [GAVESTON,] BALDOCK, and [Young] SPENCER.

Q. ISAB. My Lord, 't is thought the earls are up in arms. 221

K. EDW. Ay, and 't is likewise thought you favor him.<sup>32</sup>

Q. ISAB. Thus do you still suspect me without cause.

NIECE. Sweet Uncle, speak more kindly to the Queen.

GAV. [aside to KING EDWARD] My Lord, dissemble with her; speak her fair.

K. EDW. Pardon me, sweet; I forgot myself.

Q. ISAB. Your pardon is quickly got of Isabel.

K. EDW. The younger Mortimer is grown so brave

That to my face he threatens civil wars.

GAV. Why do you not commit him to the Tower? 230

K. EDW. I dare not, for the people love him well.

GAV. Why, then, we'll have him privily made away.

K. EDW. Would Lancaster and he had both carous'd

A bowl of poison to each other's health!

But let them go,<sup>33</sup> and tell me what are these.

NIECE. Two of my father's servants whilst he liv'd;

May't please your Grace to entertain them now.

K. EDW. Tell me, where wast thou born? What is thine arms?

BALD. My name is Baldock, and my gentry I fetch'd from Oxford, not from heraldry. [240

K. EDW. The fitter art thou, Baldock, for my turn.

Wait on me, and I'll see thou shalt not want.

BALD. I humbly thank your Majesty.

K. EDW. Knowest thou him, Gaveston?

GAV. Ay, my Lord.

His name is Spencer; he is well allied.<sup>34</sup>

For my sake, let him wait upon your Grace; Scarce shall you find a man of more desert.

K. EDW. Then, Spencer, wait upon me; for his sake

I'll grace thee with a higher style<sup>35</sup> ere long.

Y. SPEN. No greater titles happen unto me 250

Than to be favored of your Majesty.

K. EDW. Cousin, this day shall be your marriage feast.—

And, Gaveston, think that I love thee well

To wed thee to our niece, the only heir

Unto the Earl of Gloucester late deceas'd.

GAV. I know, my Lord, many will stomach<sup>36</sup> me;

But I respect<sup>37</sup> neither their love nor hate.

K. EDW. The headstrong barons shall not limit me:

He that I list to favor shall be great.

Come, let's away; and, when the marriage ends, 260

Have at the rebels, and their 'complices!

Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE III] <sup>38</sup> ✓

Enter LANCASTER, [Young] MORTIMER, WARWICK, PEMBROKE, KENT, [and others].

KENT. My Lords, of love to this our native land,

I come to join with you and leave the King;

And in your quarrel and the realm's behoof

Will be the first that shall adventure life.

LAN. I fear me, you are sent of policy,
To undermine us with a show of love.

<sup>38</sup> Heed.

WAR. He is your brother, therefore have we cause

To cast <sup>39</sup> the worst, and doubt of your revolt.

KENT. Mine honor shall be hostage of my truth ; 9

If that will not suffice, farewell, my Lords.

[Speaks aside with LANCASTER.]

Y. MOR. Stay, Edmund ; never was Plantagenet

False of his word, and therefore trust we thee.

PEM. But what's the reason you should leave him now?

KENT. I have inform'd the Earl of Lancaster.

LAN. And it sufficeth. Now, my Lords, know this,

That Gaveston is secretly arriv'd,

And here in Tynemouth frolics with the King.

Let us with these our followers scale the walls,

And suddenly surprise them unawares.

Y. MOR. I'll give the onset.

WAR. And I'll follow thee. 20

Y. MOR. This tottered <sup>40</sup> ensign of my ancestors,

Which swept the desert shore of that Dead Sea

Whereof we got the name of Mortimer, <sup>41</sup>

Will I advance upon this castle walls.

Drums, strike alarum, raise them from their sport,

And ring aloud the knell of Gaveston !

LAN. None be so hardy as to touch the
King ;

But neither spare you Gaveston nor his friends.

Exeunt.

[SCENE IV] <sup>42</sup>

Enter the KING and [Young] SPENCER.

K. EDW. O tell me, Spencer, where is Gaves-ton ?

SPEN. I fear he is slain, my gracious Lord.

K. EDW. No, here he comes ; now let them spoil and kill !

To them [enter] GAVESTON, [QUEEN ISABELLA, King Edward's Niece,] etc.

Fly, fly, my Lords : the earls have got the hold ; <sup>43</sup>

Take shipping and away to Scarborough ;

Spencer and I will post away by land.

GAV. O stay, my Lord ; they will not injure
you.

<sup>44</sup> The same.

K. EDW. I will not trust them ; Gaveston,
away !

GAV. Farewell, my Lord.

K. EDW. Lady, farewell. 10

NIECE. Farewell, sweet Uncle, till we meet again.

K. EDW. Farewell, sweet Gaveston ; and farewell, Niece.

Q. ISAB. No farewell to poor Isabel, thy
queen ?

K. EDW. Yes, yes, for Mortimer, your lover's sake.

Exeunt omnes [but QUEEN] ISABELLA.

Q. ISAB. Heavens can witness I love none
but you ! —

From my embracements thus he breaks away.

O that mine arms could close this isle about,

That I might pull him to me where I would !

Or that these tears that drizzle from mine eyes

Had power to mollify his stony heart, 20

That when I had him we might never part.

Enter the BARONS, [LANCASTER, WARWICK, Young MORTIMER, and others]. Alarums.

LAN. I wonder how he scap'd.

Y. MOR. Who's this ? The Queen ?

Q. ISAB. Ay, Mortimer, the miserable
Queen,

Whose pining heart her inward sighs have blasted,

And body with continual mourning wasted.

These hands are tir'd with haling of my Lord

From Gaveston, from wicked Gaveston,

And all in vain ; for, when I speak him fair,

He turns away and smiles upon his minion.

Y. MOR. Cease to lament, and tell us where's the King ? 30

Q. ISAB. What would you with the King ?
Is't him you seek ?

LAN. No, madam, but that cursed Gaves-
ton.

Far be it from the thought of Lancaster

To offer violence to his sovereign.

We would but rid the realm of Gaveston.

Tell us where he remains, and he shall die.

Q. ISAB. He's gone by water unto Scarborough ;

Pursue him quickly, and he cannot scape ;

The King hath left him, and his train is small.

WAR. Foreslow <sup>44</sup> no time, sweet Lancaster ;
let's march. 40

Y. MOR. How comes it that the King and he is parted ?

<sup>44</sup> Delay.

Q. ISAB. That this <sup>45</sup> your army, going several ways,
Might be of lesser force ; and, with the power <sup>46</sup>
That he intendeth presently to raise,
Be easily suppress'd ; and therefore be gone.

Y. MOR. Here in the river rides a Flemish hoy ; <sup>47</sup>
Let's all aboard, and follow him amain.

LAN. The wind that bears him hence will fill our sails.
Come, come aboard ; 't is but an hour's <sup>48</sup> sailing.

Y. MOR. [drawing the QUEEN aside] Madam, stay you within this castle here. 50

Q. ISAB. No, Mortimer, I'll to my Lord the King.

Y. MOR. Nay, rather sail with us to Scarborough.

Q. ISAB. You know the King is so suspicious <sup>49</sup>
As, if he hear I have but talk'd with you,
Mine honor will be call'd in question ;
And therefore, gentle Mortimer, begone.

Y. MOR. Madam, I cannot stay to answer
you ;
But think of Mortimer as he deserves.

Q. ISAB. So well hast thou deserv'd, sweet
Mortimer,
As Isabel could live with thee for ever. — 60
In vain I look for love at Edward's hand,
Whose eyes are fix'd on none but Gaveston ;
Yet once more I'll importune him with prayers ;
If he be strange <sup>50</sup> and not regard my words,
My son and I will over into France,
And to the King, my brother, there complain
How Gaveston hath robb'd me of his love :
But yet I hope my sorrows will have end,
And Gaveston this blessed day be slain.

Exeunt.

[SCENE V] <sup>51</sup>

Enter GAVESTON, pursued.

GAV. Yet, lusty lords, I have escap'd your hands,
Your threats, your 'larums, and your hot pursuits ;
And though divorced from King Edward's
eyes,

Yet liveth Pierce of Gaveston unsurpris'd, <sup>52</sup>
Breathing, in hope (malgrado <sup>53</sup> all your beards,
That muster rebels thus against your king),
To see his royal sovereign once again.

*Enter the Nobles, [WARWICK, LANCASTER,
PEMBROKE, Young MORTIMER ; Soldiers,
JAMES, and other Attendants of PEMBROKE].*

WAR. Upon him, soldiers ; take away his weapons.

Y. MOR. Thou proud disturber of thy country's peace,
Corrupter of thy king, cause of these broils, 10
Base flatterer, yield ! and were it not for shame,
Shame and dishonor to a soldier's name,
Upon my weapon's point here shouldst thou
fall,
And welter in thy gore.

LAN. Monster of men,
That, like the Greekish strumpet, <sup>54</sup> train'd <sup>55</sup>
to arms
And bloody wars so many valiant knights,
Look for no other fortune, wretch, than death !
Kind Edward is not here to buckler thee.

WAR. Lancaster, why talk'st thou to the slave ?
Go, soldiers, take him hence ; for, by my sword, 20
His head shall off. Gaveston, short warning
Shall serve thy turn ; it is our country's cause
That here severely we will execute
Upon thy person. Hang him at a bough.

GAV. My Lord !

WAR. Soldiers, have him away ! —
But for thou wert the favorite of a king,
Thou shalt have so much honor <sup>56</sup> at our hands.

GAV. I thank you all, my Lords ; then I perceive
That heading is one, and hanging is the other,
And death is all.

Enter EARL OF ARUNDEL.

LAN. How now, my Lord of Arundel ? [30
ARUN. My Lords, King Edward greets you all by me.

WAR. Arundel, say your message.

ARUN. His Majesty,
Hearing that you had taken Gaveston,
Entreateth you by me, yet but he may
See him before he dies ; forwhy, <sup>57</sup> he says,

<sup>56</sup> Of being beheaded like a gentleman instead of

And sends you word, he knows that die he shall ;

And if you gratify his Grace so far,
He will be mindful of the courtesy.

WAR. How now?

GAV. Renowned Edward, how thy name
Revives poor Gaveston.

WAR. No, it needeth not ; [40
Arundel, we will gratify the King
In other matters ; he must pardon us in this. — Soldiers, away with him !

GAV. Why, my Lord of Warwick,
Will not these delays beget my hopes ?
I know it, Lords, it is this life you aim at ;
Yet grant King Edward this.

Y. MOR. Shalt thou appoint
What we shall grant ? — Soldiers, away with
him ! —

Thus we'll gratify the King :
We'll send his head by thee ; let him bestow
His tears on that, for that is all he gets 50
Of Gaveston, or else his senseless trunk.

LAN. Not so, my Lords, lest he bestow more cost

In burying him than he hath ever earn'd.

ARUN. My Lords, it is his Majesty's request ;

And in the honor of a king he swears
He will but talk with him and send him back.

WAR. When, can you tell ? — Arundel, no ;
We wot he that the care of realm remits,
And drives his nobles to these exigents,<sup>58</sup>
For Gaveston, will, if he seize<sup>59</sup> him once, 60
Violate any promises to possess him.

ARUN. Then if you will not trust his Grace in keep,

My Lords, I will be pledge for his return.

Y. MOR. It is honorable in thee to offer
this ;

But, for we know thou art a noble gentleman,
We will not wrong thee so, to make away
A true man for a thief.

GAV. How mean'st thou, Mortimer ? That is overbase.

Y. MOR. Away, base groom, robber of kings' renown ! 69

Question with thy companions and thy mates.

PEM. My Lord Mortimer, and you, my Lords, each one,

To gratify the King's request therein,
Touching the sending of this Gaveston,
Because his Majesty so earnestly

Desires to see the man before his death,
I will upon mine honor undertake
To carry him, and bring him back again ;
Provided this, that you, my Lord of Arundel,
Will join with me.

WAR. Pembroke, what wilt thou do ? [79
Cause yet more bloodshed ? Is it not enough
That we have taken him, but must we now
Leave him on " had I wist",<sup>60</sup> and let him go ?

PEM. My Lords, I will not overwoo your Honors ;

But if you dare trust Pembroke with the prisoner,

Upon mine oath, I will return him back.

ARUN. My Lord of Lancaster, what say you in this ?

LAN. Why, I say, let him go on Pembroke's
word.

PEM. And you, Lord Mortimer ?

Y. MOR. How say you, my Lord of Warwick ?

WAR. Nay, do your pleasures ; I know how
't will prove.

PEM. Then give him me.

GAV. Sweet sovereign, yet I come [90
To see thee ere I die.

WAR. [aside] Yet not, perhaps,
If Warwick's wit and policy prevail.

Y. MOR. My Lord of Pembroke, we deliver him you ;

Return him on your honor. — Sound ; away !

*Exeunt [all but] PEMBROKE, [ARUN-DEL] 61 GAVESTON, [JAMES, and]
Pembroke's men, four Soldiers.*

PEM. My Lord, you shall go with me.
My house is not far hence ; out of the way
A little, but our men shall go along.

We that have pretty wenches to our wives,
Sir, must not come so near and balk their lips.

[ARUN.] 'T is very kindly spoke, my Lord of Pembroke. 100

Your Honor hath an adamant of power,<sup>62</sup>
To draw a prince.

PEM. So, my Lord. — Come hither, James.
I do commit this Gaveston to thee ;

Be thou this night his keeper ; in the morning
We will discharge thee of thy charge. Begone.

GAV. Unhappy Gaveston, whither goest thou now ?

Exit [with JAMES and the rest of Pembroke's Men].

[ACT III — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter GAVESTON mourning and [JAMES and the Earl of Pembroke's Men.

GAV. O treacherous Warwick, thus to wrong thy friend!

JAMES. I see it is your life these arms pursue.

GAV. Weaponless must I fall, and die in bands?<sup>2</sup>

O! must this day be period of my life?
Centre<sup>3</sup> of all my bliss? An ye be men,
Speed to the King.

Enter WARWICK and his Company.

WAR. My Lord of Pembroke's men,
Strive you no longer; I will have that Gaveston.

JAMES. Your Lordship does dishonor to yourself,
And wrong our lord, your honorable friend.

WAR. No, James; it is my country's cause
I follow. — 10

Go, take the villain; soldiers, come away.
We'll make quick work. — Commend me to your master,
My friend, and tell him that I watch'd it
well. —

Come, let thy shadow<sup>4</sup> parley with King Edward.

GAV. Treacherous Earl, shall I not see the King?

WAR. The King of Heaven, perhaps; no other king. —

Away! Exeunt WARWICK and his men,
with GAVESTON.

JAMES. Come, fellows, it booteth not for us to strive;
We will in haste go certify our lord. Exeunt.

[SCENE II]<sup>5</sup>

Enter KING EDWARD and [Young] SPENCER, [BALDOCK, and Nobles of the King's side, and Soldiers] with drums and fifes.

K. EDW. I long to hear an answer from the barons

Touching my friend, my dearest Gaveston.
Ah, Spencer, not the riches of my realm
Can ransom him! Ah, he is mark'd to die!
I know the malice of the younger Mortimer;
Warwick I know is rough, and Lancaster
Inexorable, and I shall never see
My lovely Pierce, my Gaveston again;
The barons overbear me with their pride.

Y. SPEN. Were I King Edward, England's
sovereign, 10

Son to the lovely Eleanor of Spain,
Great Edward Longshanks' issue, would I bear
These braves, this rage, and suffer uncontroll'd
These barons thus to beard me in my land,
In mine own realm? My Lord, pardon my speech.

Did you retain your father's magnanimity,<sup>6</sup>
Did you regard the honor of your name,
You would not suffer thus your majesty
Be counterbuff'd of your nobility!<sup>7</sup> Strike off their heads, and let them preach on poles! 20

No doubt such lessons they will teach the rest
As by their preachments they will profit much
And learn obedience to their lawful king.

K. EDW. Yea, gentle Spencer, we have been too mild,

Too kind to them, but now have drawn our
sword;

And if they send me not my Gaveston, We'll steel it<sup>8</sup> on their crest and poll their tops.<sup>9</sup>

BALD. This haught resolve becomes you.
Majesty,

Not to be tied to their affection,<sup>10</sup>
As though your Highness were a schoolboy
still, 30

And must be aw'd and govern'd like a child.

Enter HUGH SPENCER, an old man, father to the Young SPENCER, with his truncheon and Soldiers.

E. SPEN. Long live my sovereign, the noble
Edward,

In peace triumphant, fortunate in wars!

K. EDW. Welcome, old man, com'st thou in Edward's aid?

Then tell thy prince of whence, and what thou
art.

E. SPEN. Lo, with a band of bowmen and of pikes,

<sup>6</sup> Greatness of spirit.

tree is "polled."

<sup>10</sup> Caprice.

Brown bills and targeteers,<sup>11</sup> four hundred strong,

Sworn to defend King Edward's royal right,
I come in person to your Majesty,
Spencer, the father of Hugh Spencer there, 40
Bound to your Highness everlastingly,
For favors done, in him, unto us all.

K. EDW. Thy father, Spencer?

Y. SPEN. True, an it like your Grace,
That pours, in lieu of all your goodness shown,
His life, my Lord, before your princely feet.

K. EDW. Welcome ten thousand times, old man, again. —

Spencer,<sup>12</sup> this love, this kindness to thy king,
Argues thy noble mind and disposition.

Spencer, I here create thee Earl of Wil[t]shire,
And daily will enrich thee with our favor, 50
That, as the sunshine, shall reflect o'er thee.

Beside, the more to manifest our love,
Because we hear Lord Bruce doth sell his land,
And that the Mortimers are in hand withal,<sup>13</sup>
Thou shalt have crowns of us t' outbid the barons ;

And, Spencer, spare them not, but lay it on. —
Soldiers, a largess, and thrice welcome all !

Y. SPEN. My Lord, here comes the Queen.

*Enter the QUEEN [ISABELLA,] and her son
[PRINCE EDWARD,] and LEVUNE,<sup>14</sup> a French-
man.*

K. EDW. Madam, what news?

Q. ISAB. News of dishonor, Lord, and discontent. 59

Our friend Levune, faithful and full of trust,
Informeth us, by letters and by words,
That Lord Valois our brother, King of France,
Because your Highness hath been slack in homage,

Hath seized Normandy<sup>15</sup> into his hands.

These be the letters, this the messengur.

K. EDW. Welcome, Levune. — Tush, Sib,<sup>16</sup>
if this be all,

<sup>12</sup> Addressed to the younger. Although Holinshed mentions the manor of Fasteine in Wiltshire as belonging to the elder Spencer, this nobleman was Earl of Winchester. Briggs suggests that since the earldom of Wiltshire provided a courtesy title for the eldest son of the Marquess of Winchester, Marlowe here confers it, though unhistorically, on the younger Spencer. Holinshed refers to Edward's bestowal on the younger Spencer of money for the purchase mentioned in ll. 53-56.

Valois and I will soon be friends again. —

But to my Gaveston ; shall I never see,
Never behold thee now? — Madam, in this matter,

We will employ you and your little son ; 70
You shall go parley with the King of France. —

Boy, see you bear you bravely to the King,
And do your message with a majesty.

P. EDW. Commit not to my youth things of more weight

Than fits a prince so young as I to bear ;
And fear not, Lord and Father : Heaven's great beams

On Atlas' shoulder shall not lie more safe,
Than shall your charge committed to my trust.

Q. ISAB. Ah, boy, this towardness makes thy mother fear 79

Thou art not mark'd to many days on earth.

K. EDW. Madam, we will that you with speed be shipp'd,

And this our son ; Levune shall follow you
With all the haste we can despatch him hence.
Choose of our lords to bear you company,
And go in peace ; leave us in wars at home

Q. ISAB. Unnatural wars, where subjects brave their king ;

God end them once ! My Lord, I take my leave,

To make my preparation for France.

[Exit with PRINCE EDWARD.]

Enter LORD [ARUNDEL].

K. EDW. What, Lord [Arundel,] dost thou come alone?

[ARUN.] Yea, my good Lord, for Gaveston is dead. 90

K. EDW. Ah, traitors ! have they put my friend to death?

Tell me, Arundel, died he ere thou cam'st,
Or didst thou see my friend to take his death?

ARUN. Neither, my Lord ; for as he was surpris'd,<sup>17</sup>

Beginst with weapons and with enemies round,
I did your Highness' message to them all,
Demanding him of them, entreating rather,
And said, upon the honor of my name,
That I would undertake to carry him 99
Unto your Highness, and to bring him back.

K. EDW. And tell me, would the rebels deny me that?

[Y.] SPEN. Proud recreants !

K. EDW. Yea, Spencer, traitors all.

ARUN. I found them at the first inexorable ;

<sup>17</sup> Captured.

The Earl of Warwick would not bide the hearing,

Mortimer hardly ; Pembroke and Lancaster
Spake least ; and when they flatly had denied,
Refusing to receive me pledge for him,
The Earl of Pembroke mildly thus bespake :
" My Lords, because our sovereign sends for
him,

And promiseth he shall be safe return'd, 110
I will this undertake, to have him hence,
And see him redelivered to your hands."

K. EDW. Well, and how fortunes that he came not?

[Y.] SPEN. Some treason, or some villainy, was cause.

ARUN. The Earl of Warwick seiz'd him on his way ;
For, being delivered unto Pembroke's men,
Their lord rode home thinking his prisoner
safe ;

But ere he came, Warwick in ambush lay,
And bare him to his death ; and in a trench Strake off his head, and march'd unto the camp. 120

[Y.] SPEN. A bloody part, flatly against law
of arms !

K. EDW. O shall I speak, or shall I sigh and
die?

[Y.] SPEN. My Lord, refer your vengeance to the sword

Upon these barons ; hearten up your men ;
Let them not unreveng'd murder your friends !
Advance your standard, Edward, in the field,
And march to fire them from their starting holes.<sup>18</sup>

K. EDW. (kneels and saith.) By earth, the common mother of us all,

By Heaven, and all the moving orbs thereof,
By this right hand, and by my father's sword,
And all the honors 'longing to my crown, 131
I will have heads and lives for him as many
As I have manors, castles, towns, and towers ! — [Rises.]

Treacherous Warwick ! traitorous Mortimer !
If I be England's king, in lakes of gore
Your headless trunks, your bodies, will I trail,
That you may drink your fill, and quaff in
blood,

And stain my royal standard with the same,
That so my bloody colors may suggest
Remembrance of revenge immortally 140
On your accursed traitorous progeny,
You villains, that have slain my Gaveston !

<sup>18</sup> As hunted animals are driven from their holes by fire.

And in this place of honor and of trust,
Spencer, sweet Spencer, I adopt thee here ;
And merely of our love we do create thee
Earl of Gloucester, and Lord Chamberlain,
Despite of times, despite of enemies.

[Y.] SPEN. My Lord, [here is]<sup>19</sup> a messenger from the barons

Desires access unto your Majesty.

K. EDW. Admit him near. 150

Enter the Herald from the barons, with his coat of arms.

HER. Long live King Edward, England's lawful lord !

K. EDW. So wish not they, I wis,<sup>20</sup> that sent thee hither.

Thou com'st from Mortimer and his 'complices ;

A ranker rout of rebels never was.

Well, say thy message.

HER. The barons up in arms by me salute
Your Highness with long life and happiness,
And bid me say, as plainer<sup>21</sup> to your Grace,
That if without effusion of blood
You will this grief have ease and remedy, 160
That from your princely person you remove
This Spencer, as a putrifying branch,
That deads the royal vine, whose golden leaves
Empale your princely head, your diadem,
Whose brightness such pernicious upstarts dim,

Say they, and lovingly advise your Grace
To cherish virtue and nobility,
And have old servitors in high esteem,
And shake off smooth dissembling flatterers.
This granted, they, their honors, and their
lives, 170

Are to your Highness vow'd and consecrate.

[Y.] SPEN. Ah, traitors ! will they still display their pride?

K. EDW. Away ! tarry no answer, but begone !

Rebels, will they appoint their sovereign
His sports, his pleasures, and his company ?
Yet, ere thou go, see how I do divorce

Embrace SPENCER.

Spencer from me. — Now get thee to thy lords,

And tell them I will come to chastise them
For murdering Gaveston ; hie thee ! get thee
gone !

<sup>19</sup> Cor. Dodsley ; O<sub>1</sub>, according to Greg, heres is ;
according to Brooke, heres in.

<sup>20</sup> I know ; a popular misunderstanding of M. E.
wis = certainly.

<sup>21</sup> Complainer, plaintiff.

Edward with fire and sword follows at thy heels. — [Exit Herald.] 180
My Lord, perceive you how these rebels swell? —
Soldiers, good hearts, defend your sovereign's right;
For now, even now, we march to make them stoop.
Away!

Exeunt.

[SCENE III]<sup>22</sup>

Alarums, excursions, a great fight, and a retreat [sounded, within]. Enter the KING, SPENCER the father, SPENCER the son, and the Noblemen of the King's side.

K. EDW. Why do we sound retreat? Upon them, Lords!
This day I shall pour vengeance with my sword
On those proud rebels that are up in arms
And do confront and countermand their king.
Y. SPEN. I doubt it not, my Lord, right will prevail.

E. SPEN. 'T is not amiss, my Liege, for either part
To breathe awhile; our men, with sweat and dust
All chok'd well near, begin to faint for heat;
And this retire refresheth horse and man.

Y. SPEN. Here come the rebels.

Enter the Barons, [Young] MORTIMER, LANCASTER, WARWICK, [and] PEMBROKE, cum cæteris.

Y. MOR. Look, Lancaster; yonder is Edward 10
Among his flatterers.

LAN. And there let him be
Till he pay dearly for their company.

WAR. And shall, or Warwick's sword shall smite in vain.

K. EDW. What, rebels, do you shrink and sound retreat?

Y. MOR. No, Edward, no; thy flatterers faint and fly.

LAN. Th'ad best betimes forsake [them]<sup>23</sup> and their trains,<sup>24</sup>

For they'll betray thee, traitors as they are.

Y. SPEN. Traitor on thy face, rebellious Lancaster!

PEM. Away, base upstart; brav'st thou nobles thus?

E. SPEN. A noble attempt and honorable deed, 20

Is it not, trow ye, to assemble aid
And levy arms against your lawful king?

K. EDW. For which ere long their heads shall satisfy,

T' appease the wrath of their offended king.

Y. MOR. Then, Edward, thou wilt fight it to the last,

And rather bathe thy sword in subjects' blood,
Than banish that pernicious company?

K. EDW. Ay, traitors all, rather than thus be brav'd,

Make England's civil towns huge heaps of stones,

And ploughs to go about our palace gates. 30

WAR. A desperate and unnatural resolution!

Alarum to the fight! <sup>25</sup>

St. George for England and the barons' right!

K. EDW. Saint George for England, and King Edward's right!

[Exeunt the two parties severally.]

[SCENE IV]<sup>26</sup>

[Alarums.] Enter [KING] EDWARD [and his followers,] with the Barons [and KENT], captives.

K. EDW. Now, lusty lords, now, not by chance of war,

But justice of the quarrel and the cause,
Vail'd is your pride; methinks you hang the heads;

But we'll advance <sup>27</sup> them, traitors. Now 't is time

To be aveng'd on you for all your braves,
And for the murder of my dearest friend,
To whom right well you knew our soul was knit,

Good Pierce of Gaveston, my sweet favorite.

Ah, rebels, recreants, you made him away.

KENT. Brother, in regard of thee and of thy land, 10

Did they remove that flatterer from thy throne.

K. EDW. So, sir, you have spoke; away, avoid our presence! [Exit KENT.]

Accursed wretches, was't in regard of us,
When we had sent our messenger to request
He might be spar'd to come to speak with us,
And Pembroke undertook for his return,
That thou, proud Warwick, watch'd the prisoner,

<sup>25</sup> Possibly a stage direction; but note the rhyme.

<sup>27</sup> Raise.

Poor Pierce, and headed him against law of arms?

For which thy head shall overlook the rest,
As much as thou in rage outwent'st the rest!

WAR. Tyrant, I scorn thy threats and menaces; 21

It is but temporal that thou canst inflict.

LAN. The worst is death, and better die to live

Than live in infamy under such a king.

K. EDW. Away with them, my Lord of Winchester! 28

These lusty leaders, Warwick and Lancaster,
I charge you roundly off with both their heads!
Away!

WAR. Farewell, vain world!

LAN. Sweet Mortimer, farewell.

Y. MOR. England, unkind to thy nobility, [30
Groan for this grief; behold how thou art maimed.

K. EDW. Go take that haughty Mortimer to the Tower;

There see him safe bestowed; and, for the rest,
Do speedy execution on them all.

Begone!

Y. MOR. What, Mortimer, can ragged stony walls

Immure thy virtue, that aspires to Heaven?
No, Edward, England's scourge, it may not be;
Mortimer's hope surmounts his fortune far.

[The captive Barons are led off.]

K. EDW. Sound drums and trumpets!
March with me, my friends; 40

Edward this day hath crown'd him king anew.

[Exeunt all but] SPENCER filius, LEVUNE, and BALDOCK.

Y. SPEN. Levune, the trust that we repose in thee

Begets the quiet of King Edward's land.
Therefore begone in haste, and with advice
Bestow that treasure on the lords of France,
That, therewith all 29 enchanted, like the guard
That suffered Jove to pass in showers of gold
To Danaë, all aid may be denied
To Isabel, the Queen, that now in France
Makes friends, to cross the seas with her young son, 50

And step into his father's regiment.

LEVUNE. That's it these barons and the subtle Queen
Long [levell'd] 30 at.

<sup>28</sup> Spencer Senior. Not, as has been asserted, a slip; Holinshed mentions the elder Spencer's promotion to this earldom. See on III, ii, 47.

<sup>30</sup> Aimed. Conj. Dodsley; old eds. levied.

BAL. Yea; but, Levune, thou seest
These barons lay their heads on blocks together;

What they intend the hangman frustrates clean.

LEVUNE. Have you no doubts, my Lords,
I'll clap s[o] 31 close

Among the lords of France with England's gold
That Isabel shall make her plaints in vain,
And France shall be obdurate with her tears.

Y. SPEN. Then make for France amain;
Levune, away! 60

Proclaim King Edward's wars and victories.

Exeunt omnes.

[ACT IV — SCENE I] 1

Enter EDMUND, [EARL OF KENT].

KENT. Fair blows the wind for France;
blow, gentle gale,
Till Edmund be arriv'd for England's good!
Nature, yield to my country's cause in this.
A brother? No, a butcher of thy friends!
Proud Edward, dost thou banish me thy presence?

But I'll to France, and cheer the wronged Queen,

And certify what Edward's looseness is.
Unnatural king! to slaughter noblemen
And cherish flatterers! Mortimer, I stay
Thy sweet escape; stand gracious, gloomy night, 10

To his device.

Enter [Young] MORTIMER, disguised.

Y. MOR. Holla! who walketh there?
Is't you, my Lord?

KENT. Mortimer, 't is I;
But hath thy potion wrought so happily?

Y. MOR. It hath, my Lord; the warders,
all asleep,

I thank them, gave me leave to pass in peace.
But hath your Grace got shipping unto France?

KENT. Fear it not. Exeunt.

[SCENE II] 2

Enter the QUEEN [ISABELLA] and her son
[PRINCE EDWARD].

Q. ISAB. Ah, boy, our friends do fail us all in France.

The lords are cruel, and the King unkind ;
What shall we do ?

P. EDW. Madam, return to England,
And please my father well ; and then a fig
For all my uncle's friendship here in France.
I warrant you, I'll win his Highness quickly ;
'A loves me better than a thousand Spencers.

Q. ISAB. Ah, boy, thou art deceiv'd, at least in this,
'To think that we can yet be tun'd together ;
No, no, we jar too far. Unkind Valois ! 10
Unhappy Isabel ! when France rejects, Whither, oh, whither dost thou bend thy steps ?

Enter SIR JOHN OF HAINAULT.

SIR J. Madam, what cheer ?

Q. ISAB. Ah ! good Sir John of Hainault,
Never so cheerless, nor so far distress'd.

SIR J. I hear, sweet lady, of the King's unkindness ;
But droop not, madam ; noble minds contemn Despair. Will your Grace with me to Hain-ault,

And there stay time's advantage with your
son ?

How say you, my Lord, will you go with your
friends,

And [share of] <sup>3</sup> all our fortunes equally ? 20

P. EDW. So pleaseth the Queen, my mother, me it likes.

The King of England, nor the court of France,
Shall have me from my gracious mother's side,
Till I be strong enough to break a staff <sup>4</sup> ;
And then have at the proudest Spencer's head.

SIR J. Well said, my Lord.

Q. ISAB. O, my sweetheart, how do I moan thy wrongs,
Yet triumph in the hope of thee, my joy !
Ah, sweet Sir John, even to the utmost verge
Of Europe, or the shore of Tanais, <sup>5</sup> 30
Will we with thee to Hainault, so we will ;
The Marquis is a noble gentleman ;
His Grace, I dare presume, will welcome me.
But who are these ?

Enter EDMUND [EARL OF KENT] and [Young]
MORTIMER.

KENT. Madam, long may you live,
Much happier than your friends in England
do !

Q. ISAB. Lord Edmund and Lord Morti-mer alive !

Welcome to France ! The news was here, <sup>1</sup>
Lord,

That you were dead, or very near your death.

Y. MOR. Lady, the last was truest of the twain ;

But Mortimer, reserv'd for better hap, 40
Hath shaken off the thralldom of the Tower,
And lives t' advance your standard, good my
Lord.

P. EDW. How mean you, an the King,
my father, lives ?

No, my Lord Mortimer, not I, I trow.

Q. ISAB. Not, son ! why not ? I would it were no worse.

But, gentle lords, friendless we are in France.

Y. MOR. Monsieur le Grand, a noble friend of yours,

Told us, at our arrival, all the news :

How hard the nobles, how unkind the King
Hath show'd himself ; but, madam, right makes room 50

Where weapons want ; and, though a many friends

Are made away, as Warwick, Lancaster,

And others of our party and faction,

Yet have we friends, assure your Grace, in England

Would cast up caps, and clap their hands for joy,

To see us there, appointed <sup>6</sup> for our foes.

KENT. Would all were well, and Edward well reclaim'd,

For England's honor, peace, and quietness.

Y. MOR. But by the sword, my Lord, it must be deserv'd ;

The King will ne'er forsake his flatterers. 60

SIR J. My Lords of England, sith <sup>7</sup> the un-gentle King

Of France refuseth to give aid of arms

To this distressed queen, his sister, here,

Go you with her to Hainault. Doubt ye
not,

We will find comfort, money, men, and friends
Ere long, to bid the English king a base. <sup>8</sup> 69

How say, young Prince ? What think you of the match ?

P. EDW. I think King Edward will outrun us all.

Q. ISAB. Nay, son, not so ; and you must not discourage 69
Your friends, that are so forward in your aid.

KENT. Sir John of Hainault, pardon us, I pray ;

<sup>8</sup> Challenge (from the game of prisoner's base).

These comforts that you give our woful queen
Bind us in kindness all at your command.

Q. ISAB. Yea, gentle Brother; and the God of Heaven

Prosper your happy motion,<sup>9</sup> good Sir John.

Y. MOR. This noble gentleman, forward in
arms,

Was born, I see, to be our anchor-hold. —

Sir John of Hainault, be it thy renown,
That England's Queen and nobles in distress
Have been by thee restored and comforted. 80

SIR J. Madam, along, and you, my Lord, with me,

That England's peers may Hainault's welcome
see. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE III] <sup>10</sup>

Enter the KING, [ARUNDEL, and] the two SPENCERS, with others.

K. EDW. Thus after many threats of wrathful war,
Triumpheth England's Edward with his
friends;
And triumph, Edward, with his friends <sup>11</sup> un-controll'd!

My Lord of Gloucester, do you hear the news?

Y. SPEN. What news, my Lord?

K. EDW. Why, man, they say there is Great execution done through the realm;
My Lord of Arundel, you have the note,
have you not?

ARUN. From the Lieutenant of the Tower,
my Lord.

K. EDW. I pray let us see it. [Takes the note.]
What have we there?

Read it, Spencer. 10

[Young] SPENCER reads their names.<sup>12</sup>

Why, so; they bark'd apace a month ago;
Now, on my life, they'll neither bark nor bite.
Now, sirs, the news from France. Gloucester,
I trow

The Lords of France love England's gold so
well

As Isabel gets no aid from thence.

What now remains? Have you proclaim'd,
my Lord,

Reward for them can bring in Mortimer?

<sup>10</sup> Unlocated; perhaps a room in the royal palace at Westminster.

<sup>11</sup> Almost certainly corrupt. Broughton suggests henceforth.

<sup>12</sup> They were doubtless taken from Holinshed's list (ed. 1807, II, 569) of executions at various places.

Y. SPEN. My Lord, we have; and if he be in England,

'A will be had ere long, I doubt it not.

K. EDW. If, dost thou say? Spencer, as true as death, 20

He is in England's ground; our port-masters
Are not so careless of their King's command.

Enter a Post.

How now, what news with thee? From whence come these?

POST. Letters, my Lord, and tidings forth of France,

To you, my Lord of Gloucester, from Levune.

K. EDW. Read.

[Y.] SPEN. (reads the letter.) "My duty to your Honor [promised],<sup>13</sup> &c., I have, according to instructions in that behalf, dealt with the King of France his lords, and effected that [30
the Queen, all discontented and discomfited, is gone; whither if you ask, with Sir John of Hainault, brother to the Marquis, into Flanders. With them are gone Lord Edmund, and the Lord Mortimer, having in their company divers of your nation, and others; and, as constant report goeth, they intend to give King Edward battle in England, sooner than he can look for them. This is all the news of import. 40

Your Honor's in all service, LEVUNE."

K. EDW. Ah, villains! hath that Mortimer escap'd?

With him is Edmund gone associate?

And will Sir John of Hainault lead the round? <sup>14</sup>

Welcome, a' God's name, madam, and your
son;

England shall welcome you and all your rout.

Gallop apace, bright Phoebus, through the sky,

And dusky night, in rusty iron car,
Between you both, shorten the time, I pray,

That I may see that most desired day 50
When we may meet these traitors in the
field.

Ah, nothing grieves me but my little boy
Is thus misled to countenance their ills.

Come, friends, to Bristow, <sup>15</sup> there to make us strong;

And, winds, as equal be to bring them in,
As you injurious were to bear them forth.

<sup>14</sup> Dance.

<sup>15</sup> Bristol.

[SCENE IV] <sup>16</sup>

Enter the QUEEN [ISABELLA], her son [PRINCE EDWARD,] EDMUND [EARL OF KENT, Young] MORTIMER, and SIR JOHN [OF HAINAULT].

Q. ISAB. Now, Lords, our loving friends and countrymen,
Welcome to England all, with prosperous winds!

Our kindest friends in Belgia have we left,
To cope with friends at home; a heavy case
When force to force is knit, and sword and glaiue

In civil broils makes kin and countrymen
Slaughter themselves in others, and their sides With their own weapons gor'd! But what's the help?

Misgoverned kings are cause of all this wrack;
And, Edward, thou art one among them all, [10 Whose looseness hath betrayed thy land to spoil,

Who made the channels <sup>17</sup> overflow with blood.
Of thine own people patron shouldst thou be,
But thou —

Y. MOR. Nay, madam, if you be a warrior,

Ye must not grow so passionate in speeches. —
Lords, sith that we are by sufferance of Heaven
Arrived and armed in this prince's right,
Here for our country's cause swear we to him
All homage, fealty, and forwardness;
And for the open wrongs and injuries 20
Edward hath done to us, his Queen, and land,
We come in arms to wreak <sup>18</sup> it with the [sword]; <sup>19</sup>

That England's Queen in peace may repossess
Her dignities and honors; and withal
We may remove these flatterers from the King,
That havocs England's wealth and treasury.

SIR J. Sound trumpets, my Lord, and forward
let us march;

Edward will think we come to flatter him.

KENT. I would he never had been flattered more. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE V] <sup>20</sup>

Enter the KING, BALDOCK, and SPENCER the son, flying about the stage.

[Y.] SPEN. Fly, fly, my Lord! the Queen is overstrong;

<sup>16</sup> Unlocated, but presumably in the vicinity of Harwich, near which this expedition landed.

Her friends do multiply, and yours do fail.
Shape we our course to Ireland, there to breathe.

K. EDW. What! was I born to fly and run
away,

And leave the Mortimers conquerors behind?
Give me my horse, and let's r'enforce our troops,

And in this bed of honor <sup>21</sup> die with fame.

BALD. O no, my Lord; this princely resolution

Fits not the time; away! we are pursu'd.

[Exeunt.]

[Enter] EDMUND [EARL OF KENT], alone, with a sword and target.

KENT. This way he fled, but I am come too late. 10

Edward, alas, my heart relents for thee.

Proud traitor, Mortimer, why dost thou chase Thy lawful king, thy sovereign, with thy sword?

Vild wretch! and why hast thou, of all unkind, <sup>22</sup>

Borne arms against thy brother and thy king?
Rain showers of vengeance on my cursed head,
Thou God, to whom in justice it belongs
To punish this unnatural revolt!

Edward, this Mortimer aims at thy life!
O fly him, then! But, Edmund, calm this rage: 20

Dissemble, or thou diest; for Mortimer
And Isabel do kiss, while they conspire;
And yet she bears a face of love, forsooth.
Fie on that love that hatcheth death and hate!
Edmund, away! Bristow to Longshanks'
blood

Is false. Be not found single for suspect: <sup>23</sup>
Proud Mortimer pries near into thy walks.

*Enter the QUEEN [ISABELLA, Young] MORTI-MER, the young PRINCE [EDWARD,] and SIR
JOHN OF HAINAULT.*

Q. ISAB. Successful battles gives the God of
kings

To them that fight in right and fear his wrath!
Since, then, successfully we have prevailed, [30
Thanks <sup>24</sup> be Heaven's great Architect, and
you.

Ere farther we proceed, my noble Lords,
We here create our well-beloved son,
Of love and care unto his royal person,

<sup>24</sup> Q 1598 et seq., thankt.

Lord Warden of the realm ; and sith the fates
Have made his father so infortunate,
Deal you, my Lords, in this, my loving Lords,
As to your wisdoms fittest seems in all.

KENT. Madam, without offence, if I may ask,
How will you deal with Edward in his fall? 40
P. EDW. Tell me, good Uncle, what Edward do you mean?

KENT. Nephew, your father ; I dare not call him king.

[Y.] MOR. My Lord of Kent, what needs
these questions?

'T is not in her controlment, nor in ours,
But as the realm and parliament shall please,
So shall your brother be disposed of. —

[aside to the QUEEN] I like not this relenting mood in Edmund.

Madam, 't is good to look to him betimes.

Q. ISAB. My Lord, the Mayor of Bristow knows our mind.

[Y.] MOR. Yea, madam, and they scape not easily 50

That fled the field.

Q. ISAB. Baldock is with the King,
A goodly chancellor, is he not, my Lord?

SIR J. So are the Spencers, the father and the son.

KENT. This Edward is the ruin of the realm.

Enter RICE AP HOWELL and the Mayor of Bristow, with SPENCER the father [prisoner, and Attendants].

RICE. God save Queen Isabel, and her princely son !

Madam, the Mayor and citizens of Bristow,
In sign of love and duty to this presence,
Present by me this traitor to the state,
Spencer, the father to that wanton Spencer,
That, like the lawless Catiline of Rome, 60
Revell'd in England's wealth and treasury.

Q. ISAB. We thank you all.

Y. MOR. Your loving care in this
Deserveth princely favors and rewards.
But where's the King and the other Spencer fled?

RICE. Spencer the son, created Earl of Gloucester,
Is with that smooth-tongu'd scholar Baldock
gone

And shipp'd but late for Ireland with the King.

Y. MOR. [aside] Some whirlwind fetch them back or sink them all ! —

They shall be started <sup>25</sup> thence, I doubt it not.

<sup>25</sup> I.e., like hunted animals.

P. EDW. Shall I not see the King, my father, yet? 70

KENT. [aside] Unhappy's Edward, chas'd from England's bounds.

SIR J. Madam, what resteth? <sup>26</sup> why stand ye in a muse?

Q. ISAB. I rue my lord's ill fortune ; but alas !

Care of my country call'd me to this war.

Y. MOR. Madam, have done with care and sad complaint ;

Your King hath wrong'd your country and himself,

And we must seek to right it as we may.

Meanwhile, have hence this rebel to the block.
Your lordship cannot privilege your head.

E. SPEN. Rebel is he that fights against his prince ; 80

So fought not they that fought in Edward's
right.

[Y.] MOR. Take him away ; he prates. —

[*Exeunt Attendants with the Elder
SPENCER.*]

You, Rice ap Howell,
Shall do good service to her Majesty,
Being of countenance <sup>27</sup> in your country here,
To follow these rebellious runagates. <sup>28</sup>
We in meanwhile, madam, must take advice
How Baldock, Spencer, and their 'complices
May in their fall be followed to their end.

Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE VI] <sup>29</sup>

Enter the Abbot, Monks, [KING] EDWARD, [Young] SPENCER, and BALDOCK, [the three latter disguised].

ABBOT. Have you no doubt, my Lord ;
have you no fear ;

As silent and as careful will we be
To keep your royal person safe with us,
Free from suspect and fell invasion
Of such as have your Majesty in chase,
Yourself, and those your chosen company,
As danger of this stormy time requires.

K. EDW. Father, thy face should harbor no deceit.

O, hadst thou ever been a king, thy heart,
Pierced deeply with sense of my distress, 10
Could not but take compassion of my state.

<sup>26</sup> Remaineth to be done.

<sup>29</sup> A room in an abbey (of Neath, in Glamorganshire).

Stately and proud, in riches and in train,
 Whilom I was powerful and full of pomp ;
 But what is he whom rule and empery
 Have not in life or death made miserable?
 Come, Spencer ; come, Baldock ; come, sit down by me ;
 Make trial now of that philosophy,
 That in our famous nurseries of arts
 Thou sucked'st from Plato and from Aristotle.
 Father, this life contemplative is Heaven. 20
 O that I might this life in quiet lead !
 But we, alas, are chas'd ; and you, my friends,
 Your lives and my dishonor they pursue.
 Yet, gentle monks, for treasure, gold, nor fee,
 Do you betray us and our company.

MONKS. Your Grace may sit secure, if none but we
 Do wot of your abode.

[Y.] SPEN. Not one alive ; but shrewdly I suspect

A gloomy fellow in a mead below.

'A gave a long look after us, my Lord ; 30
 And all the land I know is up in arms,
 Arms that pursue our lives with deadly hate.

BALD. We were embark'd for Ireland, wretched we,
 With awkward winds and sore <sup>30</sup> tempests driven

To fall on shore, and here to pine in fear
 Of Mortimer and his confederates.

K. EDW. Mortimer, who talks of Mortimer?
 Who wounds me with the name of Mortimer,
 That bloody man? Good father, on thy lap
 Lay I this head, laden with mickle <sup>31</sup> care. 40
 O might I never open these eyes again,
 Never again lift up this drooping head,
 O nevermore lift up this dying heart !

Y. SPEN. Look up, my Lord. — Baldock, this drowsiness
 Betides no good ; here even we are betray'd.

Enter, with Welsh hooks, RICE AP HOWELL, a Mower, and the EARL OF LEICESTER.

Mow. Upon my life, these be the men ye seek.

RICE. Fellow, enough. — My Lord, I pray be short ;
 A fair commission warrants what we do.

LEICES. The Queen's commission, urg'd by
 Mortimer ;
 What cannot gallant Mortimer with the
 Queen? 50

Alas, see where he sits, and hopes unseen
 T' escape their hands that seek to reave his life.

<sup>31</sup> Much.

Too true it is, *Quem dies vidit veniens
 Superbum, hunc dies vidit fugiens iacentem.*<sup>32</sup>

But, Leicester, leave to grow so passionate.
 Spencer and Baldock, by no other names,
 I <sup>33</sup> arrest you of high treason here.

Stand not on titles, but obey th' arrest ;
 'T is in the name of Isabel, the Queen. —

My Lord, why droop you thus? 60

K. EDW. O day, the last of all my bliss on
 earth,

Centre of all misfortune ! O my stars !

Why do you lour unkindly on a king?

Comes Leicester, then, in Isabella's name

To take my life, my company from me?

Here, man, rip up this panting breast of mine,
 And take my heart in rescue of my friends !

RICE. Away with them !

Y. SPEN. It may become thee yet
 To let us take our farewell of his Grace.

ABBOT. [aside] My heart with pity earns <sup>34</sup>
 to see this sight — 70

A king to bear these words and proud commands.

K. EDW. Spencer, ah, sweet Spencer, thus then must we part?

Y. SPEN. We must, my Lord ; so will the angry Heavens.

K. EDW. Nay, so will hell and cruel Morti-mer ;

The gentle Heavens have not to do in this.

BALD. My Lord, it is in vain to grieve or storm.

Here humbly of your Grace we take our leaves ;
 Our lots are cast ; I fear me, so is thine.

K. EDW. In Heaven we may, in earth never shall we meet ;

And, Leicester, say, what shall become of us?

LEICES. Your Majesty must go to Killingworth.<sup>35</sup> 81

K. EDW. Must ! it is somewhat hard, when kings " must " go.

LEICES. Here is a litter ready for your
 Grace,

That waits your pleasure ; and the day grows old.

RICE. As good be gone, as stay and be benighted.

K. EDW. A litter hast thou? Lay me in a hearse,

And to the gates of hell convey me hence ;

Let Pluto's bells ring out my fatal knell,

And hags howl for my death at Charon's shore ;

<sup>32</sup> Whom dawn sees proud, evening sees prostrate.

<sup>35</sup> Kenilworth.

For friends hath Edward none but these and
these, 90

And these must die under a tyrant's sword.

RICE. My Lord, be going; care not for these,

For we shall see them shorter by the heads.

K. EDW. Well, that shall be, shall be; part we must;

Sweet Spencer, gentle Baldock, part we must.
Hence feigned weeds! unfeigned are my woes. —

[Throws off his disguise.]

Father, farewell! — Leicester, thou stay'st for
me,

And go I must. Life, farewell, with my friends.

Exeunt EDWARD and LEICESTER.

Y. SPEN. O, is he gone? Is noble Edward gone?

Parted from hence, never to see us more? 100
Rent, sphere of Heaven! and, fire, forsake thy orb!

Earth, melt to air! gone is my sovereign,
Gone, gone, alas! never to make return.

BALD. Spencer, I see our souls are fled 36
hence;

We are depriv'd the sunshine of our life;
Make for a new life, man; throw up thy eyes,
And heart, and hand to Heaven's immortal
throne;

Pay nature's debt with cheerful countenance;
Reduce we all our lessons unto this:

To die, sweet Spencer, therefore live we all;
Spencer, all live to die, and rise to fall. 111

RICE. Come, come, keep these preachments till you come to the place appointed. You, and such as you are, have made wise work in England. Will your Lordships away?

Mow. Your Worship, I trust, will remember me?

RICE. Remember thee, fellow! what else?
Follow me to the town. [Exeunt.]

[ACT V — SCENE I] 1

Enter the KING [and] LEICESTER, with [the] BISHOP [OF WINCHESTER] for the crown, [and] TRUSSEL.

LEICES. Be patient, good my Lord; cease to lament;
Imagine Killingworth Castle were your court,

And that you lay for pleasure here a space,
Not of compulsion or necessity.

K. EDW. Leicester, if gentle words might comfort me,

Thy speeches long ago had eas'd my sorrows;
For kind and loving hast thou always been.

The griefs of private men are soon allay'd,
But not of kings. The forest deer, being struck, 9

Runs to an herb 2 that closeth up the wounds;
But when the imperial lion's flesh is gor'd,

He rends and tears it with his wrathful paw,
Highly scorning that the lowly earth

Should drink his blood, mounts up into the air.
And so it fares with me, whose dauntless mind

The ambitious Mortimer would seek to curb,
And that unnatural queen, false Isabel,

That thus hath pent and mew'd me in a prison;
For such outrageous passions cloy my soul,

As with the wings of rancor and disdain 20
Full often am I soaring up to Heaven,

To plain me to the gods against them both.
But when I call to mind I am a king,

Methinks I should revenge me of the wrongs
That Mortimer and Isabel have done.

But what are kings, when regiment is gone,
But perfect shadows in a sunshine day?

My nobles rule, I bear the name of king;
I wear the crown, but am controll'd by them,

By Mortimer, and my unconstant Queen, 30
Who spots my nuptial bed with infamy,

Whilst I am lodg'd within this cave of care,
Where sorrow at my elbow still attends,

To company my heart with sad laments,
That bleeds within me for this strange exchange.

But tell me, must I now resign my crown,
To make usurping Mortimer a king?

B. or WIN. Your Grace mistakes; it is for England's good,

And princely Edward's right, we crave the
crown.

K. EDW. No, 't is for Mortimer, not Edward's head; 40

For he's a lamb, encompassed by wolves,
Which in a moment will abridge his life.

But if proud Mortimer do wear this crown,
Heavens turn it to a blaze of quenchless fire!

Or like the snaky wreath of Tisiphon,<sup>3</sup>
Engirt the temples of his hateful head;

So shall not England's vines be perished,
But Edward's name survives, though Edward dies.

LEICES. My Lord, why waste you thus the time away?

They stay your answer; will you yield your crown? 50

K. EDW. Ah, Leicester, weigh how hardly I can brook

To lose my crown and kingdom without cause;
To give ambitious Mortimer my right,
That like a mountain overwhelms my bliss,
In which extreme my mind here murdered is.
But what the Heavens appoint, I must obey
Here, take my crown, the life of Edward too;
[He takes off the crown.]

Two kings in England cannot reign at once.
But stay awhile, let me be king till night,
That I may gaze upon this glittering crown;
So shall my eyes receive their last content, 61
My head, the latest honor due to it,
And jointly both yield up their wished right.
Continue ever, thou celestial sun;
Let never silent night possess this clime;
Stand still you watches of the element;<sup>4</sup>
All times and seasons, rest you at a stay,
That Edward may be still fair England's king!
But day's bright beams doth vanish fast away,
And needs I must resign my wished crown. 70
Inhuman creatures, nurs'd with tiger's milk,
Why gape you for your sovereign's overthrow?
My diadem I mean, and guiltless life.
See, monsters, see, I'll wear my crown again!

[He puts on the crown.]

What, fear you not the fury of your king?
But, hapless Edward, thou art fondly<sup>5</sup> led;
They pass not for thy frowns as late they did,
But seeks to make a new-elected king;
Which fills my mind with strange despairing thoughts,

Which thoughts are martyred with endless torments, 80

And in this torment comfort find I none,
But that I feel the crown upon my head;
And therefore let me wear it yet awhile.

TRUS. My Lord, the parliament must have present news,

And therefore say, will you resign or no?

The KING rageth.

K. EDW. I'll not resign; but whilst I live—

Traitors, be gone and join you with Mortimer!
Elect, conspire, install, do what you will;
Their blood and yours shall seal these treacheries!

B. OF WIN. This answer we'll return, and so farewell. 90

LEICES. Call them again, my Lord, and speak them fair;

For if they go, the Prince shall<sup>6</sup> lose his right.

K. EDW. Call thou them back; I have no power to speak.

LEICES. My Lord, the King is willing to resign.

B. OF WIN. If he be not, let him choose.

K. EDW. O would I might; but Heavens and earth conspire

To make me miserable! Here receive my crown;

Receive it? No, these innocent hands of mine Shall not be guilty of so foul a crime.

He of you all that most desires my blood, 100 And will be called the murderer of a king,

Take it.—What, are you mov'd? Pity you me?

Then send for unrelenting Mortimer,
And Isabel, whose eyes, [being]<sup>7</sup> turn'd to steel,
Will sooner sparkle fire than shed a tear.

Yet stay; for, rather than I'll look on them,
Here, here! — [Gives the crown.]

Now, sweet God of Heaven,
Make me despise this transitory pomp,
And sit for aye enthronized in Heaven!
Come, death, and with thy fingers close my eyes, 110

Or if I live, let me forget myself.

[B. OF WIN.]<sup>8</sup> My Lord—

K. EDW. Call me not lord; away! out of my sight!

Ah, pardon me; grief makes me lunatic.

Let not that Mortimer protect my son<sup>9</sup>;

More safety is there in a tiger's jaws,

Than his embracements. Bear this to the Queen,

Wet with my tears, and dried again with sighs;
[Gives a handkerchief.]

If with the sight thereof she be not mov'd,
Return it back and dip it in my blood. 120

Commend me to my son, and bid him rule
Better than I. Yet how have I transgress'd,
Unless it be with too much clemency?

TRUS. And thus most humbly do we take our leave.

K. EDW. Farewell. — [Exeunt the BISHOP OF WINCHESTER and TRUSSEL.]

I know the next news that they bring
Will be my death; and welcome shall it be;
To wretched men, death is felicity.

Enter BERKELEY,<sup>10</sup> [who gives a paper to LEICESTER].

LEICES. Another post! what news brings
he?

K. EDW. Such news as I expect — come,
Berkeley, come,

And tell thy message to my naked breast. 130

BERK. My Lord, think not a thought so villainous

Can harbor in a man of noble birth.

To do your Highness service and devoir,

And save you from your foes, Berkeley would die.

LEICES. My Lord, the Council of the Queen commands

That I resign my charge.

K. EDW. And who must keep me now?
Must you, my Lord?

BERK. Ay, my most gracious Lord; so 't is decreed.

K. EDW. [taking the paper] By Mortimer, whose name is written here!

Well may I rent his name that rends my
heart! — 140

This poor revenge has something eas'd my mind.

So may his limbs be torn, as is this paper!

Hear me, immortal Jove, and grant it too!

BERK. Your Grace must hence with me to Berkeley straight.

K. EDW. Whither you will; all places are alike,

And every earth is fit for burial.

LEICES. Favor him, my Lord, as much as lieth in you.

BERK. Even so betide my soul as I use him.

K. EDW. Mine enemy hath pitied my estate,
And that's the cause that I am now remov'd.

BERK. And thinks your Grace that Berkeley will be cruel? 151

K. EDW. I know not; but of this am I assured,

That death ends all, and I can die but once. —
Leicester, farewell.

LEICES. Not yet, my Lord; I'll bear you on your way. Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE II]<sup>11</sup>

Enter [Young] MORTIMER and QUEEN ISA-
BELL[A].

Y. MOR. Fair Isabel, now have we our desire;

The proud corrupters of the light-brain'd King
Have done their homage to the lofty gallows,
And he himself lies in captivity.

Be rul'd by me, and we will rule the realm.

In any case take heed of childish fear;

For now we hold an old wolf<sup>12</sup> by the ears,

That, if he slip, will seize upon us both,

And grip the sorer, being gripp'd himself.

Think therefore, madam, that imports as<sup>13</sup>
much 10

To erect your son with all the speed we may,

And that I be Protector over him;

For our behoof will bear the greater sway

Whenas a king's name shall be underwrit.

Q. ISAB. Sweet Mortimer, the life of Isabel,

Be thou persuaded that I love thee well,

And therefore, so<sup>14</sup> the Prince, my son, be safe,

Whom I esteem as dear as these mine eyes,

Conclude against his father what thou wilt,

And I myself will willingly subscribe. 20

Y. MOR. First would I hear news that he were depos'd,

And then let me alone<sup>15</sup> to handle him.

Enter Messenger.

Letters! from whence?

MESS. From Killingworth, my Lord.

Q. ISAB. How fares my Lord, the King?

MESS. In health, madam, but full of pensiveness.

Q. ISAB. Alas, poor soul, would I could ease his grief!

[Enter the BISHOP of WINCHESTER, with the crown.]

Thanks, gentle Winchester. — [to the Messenger] Sirrah, be gone. [Exit Messenger.]

B. OF WIN. The King hath willingly resign'd his crown.

Q. ISAB. O happy news! Send for the Prince, my son.

B. OF WIN. Further, or<sup>16</sup> this letter was sealed Lord Berkeley came; 30

So that he now is gone from Killingworth;

And we have heard that Edmund laid a plot
To set his brother free; no more but so.

The Lord of Berkeley is so pitiful

As Leicester that had charge of him before.

Q. ISAB. Then let some other be his guardian.

<sup>11</sup> Unlocated; probably a room in the Palace at

<sup>16</sup> Leave it to me.

Y. MOR. Let me alone; here is the privy seal.

[Exit the BISHOP of WINCHESTER.]

Who's there? [to Attendants within] Call hither Gurney and Matrevis. —

To dash the heavy-headed Edmund's drift,<sup>17</sup> [39] Berkeley shall be discharg'd, the King remov'd, And none but we shall know where he lieth.

Q. ISAB. But, Mortimer, as long as he survives,

What safety rests for us, or for my son?

Y. MOR. Speak, shall he presently be despatch'd and die?

Q. ISAB. I would he were, so 't were not by my means.

Enter MATREVIS and GURNEY.

Y. MOR. Enough. — Matrevis, write a letter presently

Unto the Lord of Berkeley from ourself That he resign the King to thee and Gurney; And when 't is done, we will subscribe our name. 49

MAT. It shall be done, my Lord.

Y. MOR. Gurney.

GUR. My Lord.

Y. MOR. As thou intendest to rise by Mortimer,

Who now makes Fortune's wheel turn as he please,

Seek all the means thou canst to make him droop,

And neither give him kind word nor good look.

GUR. I warrant you, my Lord.

Y. MOR. And this above the rest: because we hear

That Edmund casts<sup>18</sup> to work his liberty, Remove him still<sup>19</sup> from place to place by night, [Till]<sup>20</sup> at the last he come to Killingworth, 59 And then from thence to Berkeley back again; And by the way, to make him fret the more, Speak curstly<sup>21</sup> to him, and in any case Let no man comfort him; if he chance to weep, But amplify his grief with bitter words.

MAT. Fear not, my Lord; we'll do as you command.

Y. MOR. So now away; post thitherwards amain.

Q. ISAB. Whither goes this letter? To my Lord the King?

Commend me humbly to his Majesty, And tell him that I labor all in vain

To ease his grief and work his liberty; 79 And bear him this as witness of my love.

[Gives a ring.]

MAT. I will, madam.

Exeunt MATREVIS and GURNEY.

Enter the young PRINCE [EDWARD,] and the EARL OF KENT talking with him.

Y. MOR. Finely dissembled. Do so still, sweet Queen.

Here comes the young Prince with the Earl of Kent.

Q. ISAB. Something he whispers in his childish ears.

Y. MOR. If he have such access unto the Prince,

Our plots and stratagems will soon be dash'd.

Q. ISAB. Use Edmund friendly, as if all were well.

Y. MOR. How fares my honorable Lord of Kent?

KENT. In health, sweet Mortimer. — How fares your Grace? 80

Q. ISAB. Well, if my Lord, your brother, were enlarg'd.

KENT. I hear of late he hath depos'd himself.

Q. ISAB. The more my grief.

Y. MOR. And mine.

KENT. [aside] Ah, they do dissemble.

Q. ISAB. Sweet son, come hither; I must talk with thee.

Y. MOR. 'Thou being his uncle, and the next of blood,

Do look to be Protector over the Prince.

KENT. Not I, my Lord; who should protect the son,

But she that gave him life? I mean the Queen.

P. EDW. Mother, persuade me not to wear the crown; 89

Let him be king; I am too young to reign.

Q. ISAB. But be content, seeing it his Highness' pleasure.

P. EDW. Let me but see him first, and then I will.

KENT. Ay, do, sweet Nephew.

Q. ISAB. Brother, you know it is impossible.

P. EDW. Why, is he dead?

Q. ISAB. No, God forbid.

KENT. I would those words proceeded from your heart.

Y. MOR. Inconstant Edmund, dost thou favor him,

That wast a cause of his imprisonment?

<sup>17</sup> Plot. <sup>18</sup> Plans. <sup>19</sup> Continually. <sup>20</sup> Cor. Q 1598; O<sub>1</sub> And. <sup>21</sup> Crossly.

KENT. The more cause have I now to make amends. 100

Y. MOR. [to QUEEN] I tell thee, 't is not meet that one so false

Should come about the person of a prince. —
My Lord, he hath betrayed the King, his brother,

And therefore trust him not.

P. EDW. But he repents, and sorrows for it
now.

Q. ISAB. Come, Son, and go with this gentle lord and me.

P. EDW. With you I will, but not with Mortimer.

Y. MOR. Why, youngling, 'sdain'st thou so of Mortimer?

Then I will carry thee by force away.

P. EDW. Help, Uncle Kent! Mortimer will wrong me. 110

Q. ISAB. Brother Edmund, strive not; we are his friends;

Isabel is nearer than the Earl of Kent.

KENT. Sister, Edward is my charge; redeem him.

Q. ISAB. Edward is my son, and I will keep
him.

KENT. Mortimer shall know that he hath wrong'd me! —

[aside] Hence will I haste to Killingworth Castle,

And rescue aged Edward from his foes,

To be reveng'd on Mortimer and thee.

Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE III] <sup>22</sup>

Enter MATREVIS and GURNEY [and Soldiers,] with the KING.

MAT. My Lord, be not pensive; we are
your friends;

Men are ordain'd to live in misery;

Therefore come; dalliance dangereth our lives.

K. EDW. Friends, whither must unhappy
Edward go?

Will hateful Mortimer appoint no rest?

Must I be vexed like the nightly bird,

Whose sight is loathsome to all winged fowls?

When will the fury of his mind assuage?

When will his heart be satisfied with blood?

If mine will serve, unbowel straight this breast,

And give my heart to Isabel and him; 111

It is the chiefest mark they level <sup>23</sup> at.

GUR. Not so, my Liege; the Queen hath given this charge

To keep your Grace in safety;

Your passions make your dolours to increase.

K. EDW. This usage makes my misery increase.

But can my air of life <sup>24</sup> continue long

When all my senses are annoy'd with stench?

Within a dungeon England's King is kept,

Where I am starv'd for want of sustenance. [20

My daily diet is heartbreaking sobs,

That almost rents the closet of my heart.

Thus lives old Edward not reliev'd by any,

And so must die, though pitied by many.

O, water, gentle friends, to cool my thirst,

And clear my body from foul excrements!

MAT. Here's channel water, as our charge is given.

Sit down, for we'll be barbers to your Grace.

K. EDW. Traitors, away! What, will you murder me,

Or choke your sovereign with puddle water? [30

GUR. No; but wash your face, and shave away your beard,

Lest you be known and so be rescued.

MAT. Why strive you thus? Your labor is in vain!

K. EDW. The wren may strive against the lion's strength,

But all in vain; so vainly do I strive

To seek for mercy at a tyrant's hand.

*They wash him with puddle water,
and shave his beard away.*

Immortal powers, that knows the painful cares
That waits upon my poor distressed soul,

O level all your looks upon these daring men, <sup>25</sup>

That wrongs their liege and sovereign, England's king! 40

O Gaveston, it is for thee I am wrong'd;

For me, both thou and both the Spencers died!

And for your sakes a thousand wrongs I'll take.

The Spencers' ghosts, wherever they remain,

Wish well to mine; then tush, for them I'll die.

MAT. 'Twixt theirs and yours shall be no enmity.

Come, come, away. — Now put the torches out;
We'll enter in by darkness to Killingworth.

Enter EDMUND [EARL OF KENT].

GUR. How now, who comes there?

MAT. Guard the King sure; it is the Earl of Kent. 50

<sup>24</sup> "A Latinism — aura vitæ." (Dyce.)

<sup>25</sup> Not an Alexandrine. "O" is hypermetrical, and
"level all" forms a trisyllabic foot.

K. EDW. O gentle Brother, help to rescue me!

MAT. Keep them asunder; thrust in the King.

KENT. Soldiers, let me but talk to him one word.

GUR. Lay hands upon the Earl for this assault.

KENT. Lay down your weapons! Traitors, yield the King!

MAT. Edmund, yield thou thyself, or thou shalt die.

KENT. Base villains, wherefore do you gripe me thus?

GUR. Bind him and so convey him to the court.

KENT. Where is the court but here? Here is the King;

And I will visit him; why stay you me? 60

MAT. The court is where Lord Mortimer remains;

Thither shall your Honor go; and so farewell.

Exeunt MATREVIS and GURNEY, with the KING.

KENT. O miserable is that commonweal
Where lords keep courts, and kings are lock'd in prison!

SOL. Wherefore stay we? On, sirs, to the court!

KENT. Ay, lead me whither you will, even to my death,

Seeing that my brother cannot be releas'd.

Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE IV] 26

Enter [Young] MORTIMER, alone.

Y. MOR. The King must die, or Mortimer goes down;

The commons now begin to pity him.

Yet he that is the cause of Edward's death

Is sure to pay for it when his son is of age;

And therefore will I do it cunningly.

This letter, written by a friend 27 of ours,
Contains his death, yet bids them save his life.

[Reads.]

"Edwardum occidere nolite timere, bonum est:
Fear not to kill the King; 't is good he die."

But read it thus, and that's another sense: 10

"Edwardum occidere nolite, timere bonum est:
Kill not the King; 't is good to fear the worst."

Unpointed as it is, thus shall it go,

That, being dead, if it chance to be found,

<sup>26</sup> A hall in the Palace at Westminster.

Matrevis and the rest may bear the blame,
And we be quit that caus'd it to be done.

Within this room is lock'd the messenger

That shall convey it, and perform the rest;

And by a secret token that he bears,

Shall he be murdered when the deed is done. —

Lightborn, come forth! 21

[Enter LIGHTBORN.]

Art thou as resolute as thou wast?

LIGHT. What else, my Lord? and far more resolute.

Y. MOR. And hast thou cast how to accomplish it?

LIGHT. Ay, ay; and none shall know which way he died.

Y. MOR. But at his looks, Lightborn, thou wilt relent.

LIGHT. Relent! ha, ha! I use much to relent.

Y. MOR. Well, do it bravely, and be secret.

LIGHT. You shall not need to give instructions;

'T is not the first time I have killed a man. 30

I learn'd in Naples how to poison flowers;

To strangle with a lawn 28 thrust through the throat;

To pierce the windpipe with a needle's point;

Or whilst one is asleep, to take a quill

And blow a little powder in his ears,

Or open his mouth and pour quicksilver down.

And yet I have a braver 29 way than these.

Y. MOR. What's that?

LIGHT. Nay, you shall pardon me; none shall know my tricks.

Y. MOR. I care not how it is, so it be not spy'd. 40

Deliver this to Gurney and Matrevis.

[Gives letter.]

At every ten miles' end thou hast a horse.

[Giving money] Take this; away! and never see me more.

LIGHT. No?

Y. MOR. No;

Unless thou bring me news of Edward's death.

LIGHT. That will I quickly do. Farewell,
my Lord. [Exit.]

Y. MOR. The Prince I rule; the Queen do
I command;

And, with a lowly congee to the ground,

The proudest lords salute me as I pass; 50

I seal, I cancel, I do what I will.

Fear'd am I more than lov'd — let me be fear'd,

<sup>29</sup> Finer.

And, when I frown, make all the court look pale.

I view the Prince with Aristarchus' <sup>30</sup> eyes,
Whose looks were as a breeching to a boy.

They thrust upon me the Protectorship,
And sue to me for that that I desire.

While at the council table, grave enough,
And not unlike a bashful p[ro]ritan,

First I complain of imbecility, <sup>31</sup> 60

Saying it is onus quam gravissimum, <sup>32</sup>

Till, being interrupted by my friends,
Suscepi that provinciam, <sup>33</sup> as they term it ;

And to conclude, I am Protector now.

Now is all sure : the Queen and Mortimer Shall rule the realm, the King ; and none rule us.

Mine enemies will I plague, my friends advance ;

And what I list command who dare control ?

Maiores sum quam cui possit fortuna nocere. <sup>34</sup>

And that this be the coronation day, 70

It pleaseth me, and Isabel the Queen.

[Trumpets within.]

The trumpets sound ; I must go take my place.

Enter the young KING, [the ARCH]BISHOP [OF CANTERBURY,] Champion, Nobles, [and] QUEEN.

[A. of CANT.] <sup>35</sup> Long live King Edward,
by the grace of God

King of England and Lord of Ireland !

CHAM. If any Christian, Heathen, Turk, or Jew,

Dares but affirm that Edward's not true king,
And will avouch his saying with the sword,

I am the champion that will combat him !

Y. MOR. None comes ; sound trumpets.

[Trumpets sound.]

K. [EDW. THIRD.] Champion, here's to thee. <sup>36</sup>

Q. ISAB. Lord Mortimer, now take him to your charge. 80

Enter Soldiers, with the EARL OF KENT prisoner.

Y. MOR. What traitor have we there with blades and bills ?

SOL. Edmund, the Earl of Kent.

<sup>31</sup> I.e., my incapacity.

<sup>36</sup> The champion regularly appeared at the coronation banquet ; the sovereign drank to him and gave him the cup as a fee.

K. EDW. THIRD. What hath he done ?

SOL. 'A would have taken the King away
perforce,

As we were bringing him to Killingworth.

Y. MOR. Did you attempt his rescue,
Edmund ? Speak !

KENT. Mortimer, I did ; he is our king,
And thou compell'st this prince to wear the crown.

Y. MOR. Strike off his head ! he shall have martial law.

KENT. Strike off my head ! Base traitor, I defy thee !

K. EDW. THIRD. My Lord, he is my uncle, and shall live. 90

Y. MOR. My Lord, he is your enemy, and shall die.

KENT. Stay, villains !

K. EDW. THIRD. Sweet Mother, if I cannot pardon him,

Entreat my Lord Protector for his life.

Q. ISAB. Son, be content ; I dare not speak a word.

K. EDW. THIRD. Nor I ; and yet methinks
I should command ;

But, seeing I cannot, I'll entreat for him. —

My Lord, if you will let my uncle live,

I will requite it when I come to age.

Y. MOR. 'T is for your Highness' good, and for the realm's. — 100

How often shall I bid you bear him hence ?

KENT. Art thou king ? Must I die at thy command ?

Y. MOR. At our command. — Once more away with him.

KENT. Let me but stay and speak ; I will not go.

Either my brother or his son is king,

And none of both [them] <sup>37</sup> thirst for Edmund's
blood ;

And therefore, soldiers, whither will you hale
me ?

They hale EDMUND away, and carry him to be beheaded.

K. EDW. THIRD. What safety may I look for at his hands,

If that my uncle shall be murdered thus ?

Q. ISAB. Fear not, sweet boy ; I'll guard thee from thy foes ; 110

Had Edmund liv'd, he would have sought thy
death.

Come, Son, we'll ride a-hunting in the park.

K. EDW. THIRD. And shall my uncle Edmund ride with us ?

<sup>37</sup> Cor. Q 1598 ; O, then.

Q. ISAB. He is a traitor ; think not on him ;
come. Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE V] <sup>38</sup>

Enter MATREVIS and GURNEY.

MAT. Gurney, I wonder the King dies not,
Being in a vault up to the knees in water,
To which the channels <sup>39</sup> of the castle run,
From whence a damp continually ariseth,
That were enough to poison any man,
Much more a king brought up so tenderly.

GUR. And so do I, Matrevis ; yesternight
I opened but the door to throw him meat,
And I was almost stifed with the savor.

MAT. He hath a body able to endure 10
More than we can inflict ; and therefore now
Let us assail his mind another while.

GUR. Send for him out thence, and I will anger him.

MAT. But stay ; who's this ?

Enter LIGHTBORN.

LIGHT. My Lord Protector greets you.
[Gives letter.]

GUR. What's here ? I know not how to conster <sup>40</sup> it.

MAT. Gurney, it was left unpointed for the nonce : <sup>41</sup>

"Edwardum occidere nolite timere :"

That's his meaning.

LIGHT. Know you this token ? I must have the King. [Gives token.]

MAT. Ay, stay awhile ; thou shalt have answer straight. — 20

[aside to GURNEY] This villain's sent to make away the King.

GUR. [aside] I thought as much.

MAT. [aside] And when the murder's
done,

See how he must be handled for his labor.

Pereat iste ! <sup>42</sup> Let him have the King.

What else ? Here is the keys ; this is the lake ; <sup>43</sup>
Do as you are commanded by my Lord.

LIGHT. I know what I must do. Get you
away.

Yet be not far off ; I shall need your help ;
See that in the next room I have a fire,
And get me a spit, and let it be red-hot. <sup>44</sup> 30

<sup>43</sup> Dungeon. (N. E. D.)

<sup>44</sup> According to Holinshed, the hot spit was "thrust up into his body" while Edward was held down with "heavy featherbeds or a table, as some write."

MAT. Very well.

GUR. Need you anything besides ?

LIGHT. What else ? A table and a feather-bed.

GUR. That's all ?

LIGHT. Ay, ay ; so ; when I call you, bring it in.

MAT. Fear not you that.

GUR. Here's a light, to go into the dungeon.
[Gives a light, and then exit with MATREVIS.]

LIGHT. So now

Must I about this gear ; <sup>45</sup> ne'er was there any
So finely handled as this king shall be. 39
Foh ! here's a place indeed, with all my heart !

[Discovers KING EDWARD II.] <sup>46</sup>

K. EDW. Who's there ? What light is that ? Wherefore comes thou ?

LIGHT. To comfort you, and bring you joyful news.

K. EDW. Small comfort finds poor Edward in thy looks ;

Villain, I know thou com'st to murder me.

LIGHT. To murder you, my most gracious
Lord !

Far is it from my heart to do you harm.

The Queen sent me to see how you were used,
For she relents at this your misery.

And what eyes can refrain from shedding tears,
To see a king in this most piteous state ? 50

K. EDW. Weep'st thou already ? List awhile to me,

And then thy heart, were it as Gurney's is,

Or as Matrevis', hewn from the Caucasus,

Yet will it melt, ere I have done my tale.

This dungeon where they keep me is the sink
Wherein the filth of all the castle falls.

LIGHT. O villains !

K. EDW. And there in mire and puddle have I stood

This ten days' space ; and, lest that I should sleep,

One plays continually upon a drum. 60

They give me bread and water, being a king ;

So that, for want of sleep and sustenance,

My mind's distempered, and my body's numb'd,

And whether I have limbs or no I know not.

O, would my blood dropp'd out from every vein,

As doth this water from my tattered robes !

Tell Isabel, the Queen, I look'd not thus

<sup>46</sup> Edward is probably behind one of the downstage doors, since the bed would be on the inner stage.

When for her sake I ran at tilt in France,
And there unhors'd the Duke of Cleremont.

LIGHT. O speak no more, my Lord! This breaks my heart. 70

Lie on this bed, and rest yourself awhile.

K. EDW. These looks of thine can harbor naught but death.

I see my tragedy written in thy brows.

Yet stay awhile; forbear thy bloody hand,
And let me see the stroke before it comes,
That <sup>47</sup> even then when I shall lose my life,
My mind may be more steadfast on my God.

LIGHT. What means your Highness to mistrust me thus?

K. EDW. What means thou to dissemble with me thus?

LIGHT. These hands were never stain'd with innocent blood, 80
Nor shall they now be tainted with a king's.

K. EDW. Forgive my thought for having such a thought.

One jewel have I left; receive thou this. —
Still fear I, and I know not what 's the cause,
But every joint shakes as I give it thee.
O, if thou harbor'st murder in thy heart,
Let this gift change thy mind, and save thy
soul.

Know that I am a king; O, at that name
I feel a hell of grief. Where is my crown?
Gone, gone! and do I remain alive? 90

LIGHT. You're overwatch'd,<sup>48</sup> my Lord; lie down and rest.

K. EDW. But that grief keeps me waking,
I should sleep;
For not these ten days have these eyelids
clos'd.

Now as I speak they fall, and yet with fear
Open again. O wherefore sits thou here?

LIGHT. If you mistrust me, I'll be gone, my
Lord.

K. EDW. No, no; for if thou mean'st to
murder me,

Thou wilt return again; and therefore stay.

LIGHT. He sleeps.

K. EDW. [waking] O let me not die yet!
Stay, O stay awhile! 100

LIGHT. How now, my Lord?

K. EDW. Something still buzzeth in mine ears,

And tells me if I sleep I never wake;
This fear is that which makes me tremble thus.
And therefore tell me, wherefore art thou
come?

<sup>47</sup> Old eds. that and.

<sup>48</sup> Wearied by waking.

LIGHT. To rid thee of thy life. — Matrevis,
come!

[Enter MATREVIS and GURNEY.]

K. EDW. I am too weak and feeble to resist.
Assist me, sweet God, and receive my soul.

LIGHT. Run for the table.

K. EDW. O spare me, or despatch me in a trice. [MATREVIS brings in a table.] 110

LIGHT. So; lay the table down, and stamp on it,

But not too hard, lest that you bruise his body.
[KING EDWARD is murdered, shrieking.]

MAT. I fear me that this cry will raise the
town;

And therefore let us take horse and away.

LIGHT. Tell me, sirs, was it not bravely <sup>49</sup>
done?

GUR. Excellent well; take this for thy reward.

Then GURNEY stabs LIGHTBORN, [who dies].
Come, let us cast the body in the moat,
And bear the King's to Mortimer, our Lord;
Away! Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE VI] <sup>50</sup>

Enter [Young] MORTIMER and MATREVIS.

Y. MOR. Is 't done, Matrevis, and the mur-derer dead?

MAT. Ay, my good Lord; I would it were undone!

Y. MOR. Matrevis, if thou now growest penitent

I'll be thy ghostly father; therefore choose
Whether thou wilt be secret in this
Or else die by the hand of Mortimer.

MAT. Gurney, my Lord, is fled, and will, I fear,

Betray us both; therefore let me fly.

Y. MOR. Fly to the savages!

MAT. I humbly thank your Honor.
[Exit.]

Y. MOR. As for myself, I stand as Jove's huge tree,<sup>51</sup> 10

And others are but shrubs compar'd to me.
All tremble at my name, and I fear none;
Let's see who dare impeach me for his death!

Enter the QUEEN.

Q. ISAB. Ah, Mortimer, the King, my son, hath news
His father's dead, and we have murdered him!

Westminster.

Y. MOR. What if he have? The King is yet a child.

Q. ISAB. Ay, ay, but he tears his hair, and wrings his hands,

And vows to be reveng'd upon us both.
Into the council chamber he is gone,
To crave the aid and succor of his peers. 20
Ay, me! see here he comes, and they with him;
Now, Mortimer, begins our tragedy.

Enter the KING [EDWARD THE THIRD], with the Lords [and Attendants].

[1 Lord].<sup>52</sup> Fear not, my Lord; know that you are a king.

K. EDW. THIRD. Villain!

Y. MOR. How now, my Lord!

K. EDW. THIRD. Think not that I am frighted with thy words!

My father's murdered through thy treachery;
And thou shalt die, and on his mournful hearse<sup>53</sup>

Thy hateful and accursed head shall lie,
To witness to the world that by thy means
His kingly body was too soon interr'd. 31

Q. ISAB. Weep not, sweet Son!

K. EDW. THIRD. Forbid me not to weep;
he was my father;

And, had you lov'd him half so well as I,
You could not bear his death thus patiently.
But you, I fear, conspir'd with Mortimer.

1 LORD. Why speak you not unto my Lord the King?

Y. MOR. Because I think scorn to be accus'd.

Who is the man dare say I murdered him?

K. EDW. THIRD. Traitor! in me my loving father speaks, 40

And plainly saith 't was thou that murd'redest him.

Y. MOR. But has your Grace no other proof than this?

K. EDW. THIRD. Yes, if this be the hand of Mortimer. [Showing letter.]

Y. MOR. [aside to the QUEEN] False Gurney hath betray'd me and himself.

Q. ISAB. [aside] I fear'd as much; murder cannot be hid.

Y. MOR. 'T is my hand; what gather you by this?

K. EDW. THIRD. That thither thou didst send a murderer.

Y. MOR. What murderer? Bring forth the man I sent.

K. EDW. THIRD. Ah, Mortimer, thou knowest that he is slain;

And so shalt thou be too.—Why stays he here? 50

Bring him unto a hurdle, drag him forth;
Hang him, I say, and set his quarters up;
But bring his head back presently to me.

Q. ISAB. For my sake, sweet son, pity Mortimer.

Y. MOR. Madam, entreat not; I will rather die

Than sue for life unto a paltry boy.

K. EDW. THIRD. Hence with the traitor, with the murderer!

Y. MOR. Base Fortune, now I see that in thy wheel

There is a point, to which when men aspire,
They tumble headlong down; that point I touch'd, 60

And, seeing there was no place to mount up higher,

Why should I grieve at my declining fall?—
Farewell, fair Queen; weep not for Mortimer,
That scorns the world, and, as a traveller,
Goes to discover countries yet unknown.

K. EDW. THIRD. What! suffer you the traitor to delay?

[YOUNG MORTIMER is taken away by 1 Lord and Attendants.]

Q. ISAB. As thou receiv'd'st thy life from me,

Spill not the blood of gentle Mortimer!

K. EDW. THIRD. This argues that you spilt my father's blood;

Else would you not entreat for Mortimer. 70

Q. ISAB. I spill his blood? No!

K. EDW. THIRD. Ay, madam, you; for so the rumor runs.

Q. ISAB. That rumor is untrue; for loving thee,

Is this report rais'd on poor Isabel.

K. EDW. THIRD. I do not think her so unnatural.

[2 LORD.]<sup>54</sup> My Lord, I fear me it will prove too true.

K. EDW. THIRD. Mother, you are suspected for his death,

And therefore we commit you to the Tower
Till further trial may be made thereof;

If you be guilty, though I be your son, 80
Think not to find me slack or pitiful.

Q. ISAB. Nay, to my death, for too long have I liv'd

Whenas my son thinks to abridge my days.

<sup>54</sup> See on l. 23.

K. EDW. THIRD. Away with her ; her words enforce these tears,
And I shall pity her if she speak again.

Q. ISAB. Shall I not mourn for my beloved
Lord,

And with the rest accompany him to his grave ?

2 LORD. Thus, madam, 't is the King's will you shall hence.

Q. ISAB. He hath forgotten me ; stay, I am his mother.

2 LORD. That boots not ; therefore, gentle madam, go. 90

Q. ISAB. Then come, sweet death, and rid me of this grief. [Exit, guarded.]

[Re-enter 1 Lord, with the head of Young Mortimer.]

1 LORD. My Lord, here is the head of Mortimer.

K. EDW. THIRD. Go fetch my father's hearse, where it shall lie ;
And bring my funeral robes. —

[Exeunt Attendants.]

Accursed head,

Could I have rul'd thee then, as I do now,
Thou hadst not hatch'd this monstrous treach-ery ! —

Here comes the hearse ; help me to mourn, my Lords. —

[Re-enter Attendants with the hearse and funeral robes.]

Sweet father, here unto thy murdered ghost
I offer up this wicked traitor's head ;
And let these tears, distilling from mine
eyes, 100

Be witness of my grief and innocence.

[Exeunt.]

ENDIMION,
The Man in the Moone.

Playd before the Queenes Maiestie at Greenewich on Candlemas day at night, by the Chyldren of Paules.

AT LONDON,
Printed by I. Charlewood, for the widdowe Broome.
1591.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

ACCORDING to the title page of the earliest edition (1591), Endymion was "Playd before the Queenes Maiestie at Greenwich on Candelmas day at night, by the Chyldren of Paules." Nothing further is known of its stage history, if it had any; and speculation regarding the date of its composition and first performance has ranged from 1579 to 1588. Sir Edmund Chambers (Elizabethan Stage, III, 415) follows Fleay in favoring 1588, on the ground that only in that year have we any records that point to a Candelmas performance at Greenwich by the Paul's boys. Bond thinks the play was written about the middle of Lyly's dramatic career.

Nothing could be more sharply in contrast with the robust drama of Marlowe than this bloodless and overliterary play. Had the Jacobean masters followed the lead of the early court playwrights instead of cultivating the coarser but livelier entertainments of the popular theatres, the greatest triumphs of the greatest age of English drama would never have been achieved. None the less, Lyly exercised a salutary and civilizing influence on Shakespeare and his colleagues. It was not instruction in the human heart they needed so much as the example of a considered style. The drama of passion might be powerful, but it was too often crude and flamboyant. If Lyly's writing is precious in its euphuism and anaemic in its avoidance of strong emotion, it is a virtuoso prose, and the delicacy of its flavor is not without a certain charm. Prattled by little boys it was probably more amusing to a fastidious audience, unused to grace in the theatre, than it seems to us, who expect it.

Aside from the classical myth of Endymion's sleep and the kiss of Cynthia, no source is known for Lyly's play; but elaborate attempts have been made to read an allegory into it. The Queen's relations with Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, and her rivalry with Mary Stuart (Tellus), have been suggested; James VI of Scotland has been proposed for Endymion instead of Leicester; and even minor characters have been variously identified as the Earl of Shrewsbury (Geron) and his Countess (Dipsas), Sir Philip Sidney or the Earl of Sussex (Eumenides), Stephen Gosson or Gabriel Harvey (Sir Tophas), and Penelope Devereux or Frances Sidney (Semele), to mention only a few. A contrast between heavenly and earthly love has also been offered as the key to the play. But recent opinion, while not challenging the obvious references to Elizabeth, nor denying the presence of topical allusions, is sceptical of the proposed allegories. (See P. W. Long's articles, Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, XXIV, 164-184, and Modern Philology, VIII, 599-605.)

It seems probable that the play was produced at court with a multiple stage setting; whether or not they were physically represented, the vicinity of the palace, the lunar bank, the fountain, and the castle in the desert are all supposed to occupy various parts of the stage simultaneously and continuously.

The standard edition of Lyly's Works is that of R. W. Bond (1902). Endymion was separately edited by G. P. Baker (1894). It originally appeared, without Lyly's name, in quarto, in 1591. In 1632 it was republished as the first of Six Court Comedies. Often Presented and Acted before Queene Elizabeth, by the Children of her Maiesties Chapell, and the Children of Paules. Written By the only Rare Poet of that Time The Wittie, Comickall, Facetiously-Quicke and vnparalleled: Iohn Lilly, Master of Arts. The publisher was Edward Blount. The second edition corrects some errors and introduces others. It also supplies the texts of the songs, the ascription of which to Lyly has been questioned, and has been defended by Bond. (For bibliography of the controversy see his articles, Review of English Studies, VI, 295-299; VII, 442-447.) The present text is based on the Quarto, with the additions, and a few corrections, from the Blount edition.

Fairies; Three Ladies and an Old Man in the Dumb Show.]

THE PROLOGUE

Most high and happy Princess, we must tell you a tale of the Man in the Moon, which, if it seem ridiculous for the method, or superfluous for the matter, or for the means incredible, for three faults we can make but one excuse: it is a tale of the Man in the Moon.<sup>1</sup>

It was forbidden in old time to dispute of Chimæra because it was a fiction; we hope in our times none will apply pastimes,<sup>2</sup> because they are fancies; for there liveth none under the sun that knows what to make of the Man in the Moon. We present neither Comedy, nor tragedy, nor story, nor anything but that whosoever heareth may say this: Why, here is a tale of the Man in the Moon.

ACT I — SCENE I<sup>3</sup>

[Enter] ENDYMION [and] EUMENIDES.

ENDYMION. I find, Eumenides, in all things both variety to content, and satiety to glut, saving only in my affections, which are so staid, and withal so stately, that I can neither satisfy my heart with love, nor mine eyes with wonder. My thoughts, Eumenides, are stitched to the stars, which being as high as I can see, thou mayst imagine how much higher they are than I can reach.

EUM. If you be enamored of anything [10 above the moon, your thoughts are ridiculous, for that things immortal are not subject to affections; if allured or enchanted with these transitory things under the moon, you show yourself senseless to attribute such lofty titles to such [low] <sup>4</sup> trifles.

END. My love is placed neither under the moon nor above.

EUM. I hope you be not sotted <sup>5</sup> upon the Man in the Moon. 20

END. No; but settled either to die or possess the moon herself.

EUM. Is Endymion mad, or do I mistake? Do you love the moon, Endymion?

END. Eumenides, the moon.

EUM. There was never any so peevish <sup>6</sup> to imagine the moon either capable of affection or shape of a mistress ; for as impossible it is to make love fit to her humor, which no man knoweth, as a coat to her form, which [30] continueth not in one bigness whilst she is measuring. Cease off, Endymion, to feed so much upon fancies. That melancholy blood must be purged which draweth you to a dotage no less miserable than monstrous.

END. My thoughts have no veins, and yet unless they be let blood, I shall perish.

EUM. But they have vanities, which being reformed, you may be restored.

END. O fair Cynthia, why do others [40] term thee unconstant whom I have ever found unmovable? Injurious time, corrupt manners, unkind men, who, finding a constancy not to be matched in my sweet mistress, have christened her with the name of wavering, waxing, and waning! Is she inconstant that keepeth a settled course ; which, since her first creation, altereth not one minute in her moving? There is nothing thought more admirable or commendable in the sea than the ebbing [50] and flowing ; and shall the moon, from whom the sea taketh this virtue, be accounted fickle for increasing and decreasing? (Flowers in their buds are nothing worth till they be blown, nor blossoms accounted till they be ripe fruit ; and shall we then say they be changeable for that they grow from seeds to leaves, from leaves to buds, from buds to their perfection? Then, why be not twigs that become trees, children that become men, and mornings [60] that grow to evenings, termed wavering, for that they continue not at one stay? Ay, but Cynthia, being in her fullness, decayeth, as not delighting in her greatest beauty, or withering when she should be most honored. When malice cannot object anything, folly will, making that a vice which is the greatest virtue. What thing (my mistress excepted), being in the pride of her beauty and latter minute of her age, that waxeth young [70] again? Tell me, Eumenides, what is he that having a mistress of ripe years and infinite virtues, great honors and unspeakable beauty, but would wish that she might grow tender again, getting youth by years, and never-decaying beauty by time ; whose fair face neither the summer's blaze can scorch, nor winter's blast chap, nor the numbing of years breed altering of colors? Such is my sweet Cynthia, whom time cannot touch [80] because she is divine, nor will offend because she is delicate. O Cynthia, if thou shouldest always continue at thy fullness, both gods and men would conspire to ravish thee. But thou, to abate the pride of our affections, dost detract from thy perfections, thinking it sufficient if once in a month we enjoy a glimpse of thy majesty ; and then, to increase our griefs, thou dost decrease thy gleams, coming out of thy royal robes, wherewith thou daz- [90] zlest our eyes, down into thy swathe clouts <sup>7</sup> beguiling our eyes ; and then —

EUM. Stay there, Endymion ; thou that committest idolatry wilt straight blaspheme, if thou be suffered. Sleep would do thee more good than speech ; the moon heareth thee not, or, if she do, regardeth thee not.

END. Vain Eumenides, whose thoughts never grow higher than the crown of thy head ! Why troublest thou me, having neither [100] head to conceive the cause of my love or a heart to receive the impressions? Follow thou thine own fortunes, which creep on the earth, and suffer me to fly to mine, whose fall, though it be desperate, yet shall it come by daring. Farewell. [Exit.]

EUM. Without doubt Endymion is bewitched ; otherwise in a man of such rare virtues there could not harbor a mind of such extreme madness. I will follow him, lest [110] in this fancy of the moon he deprive himself of the sight of the sun. [Exit.]

SCENE II <sup>8</sup>

[Enter] TELLUS <sup>9</sup> [and] FLOSCULA.

TELLUS. Treacherous and most perjur'd Endymion, is Cynthia the sweetness of thy life and the bitterness of my death? What revenge may be devised so full of shame as my thoughts are replenished with <sup>10</sup> malice? Tell me, Floscula, if falseness in love can possibly be punished with extremity of hate? As long as sword, fire, or poison may be hired, no traitor to my love shall live unrevenged. Were thy oaths without number, thy kisses [10] without measure, thy sighs without end, forged to deceive a poor credulous virgin, whose simplicity had been worth thy favor and better

fortune? If the gods sit unequal <sup>11</sup> beholders of injuries, or laughers at lovers' deceits, then let mischief be as well forgiven in women as perjury winked at in men.

FLOSC. Madam, if you would compare the state <sup>12</sup> of Cynthia with your own, and the height of Endymion his thoughts with the [20] meanness of your fortune, you would rather yield than contend, being between you and her no comparison; and rather wonder than rage at the greatness of his mind, being affected with a thing more than mortal.

TELLUS. No comparison, Floscula? And why so? Is not my beauty divine, whose body is decked with fair flowers, and veins are vines, yielding sweet liquor to the dullest spi[ri]ts; whose ears are corn, to bring strength; and [30] whose hairs are grass, to bring abundance? Doth not frankincense and myrrh breathe out of my nostrils, and all the sacrifice of the gods breed in my bowels? Infinite are my creatures, without which neither thou, nor Endymion, nor any, could love or live.

FLOSC. But know you not, fair lady, that Cynthia governeth all things? Your grapes would be but dry husks, your corn but chaff, and all your virtues vain, were it not Cynthia that preserveth the one in the bud and nourisheth the other in the blade, and by her influence both comforteth all things, and by her authority commandeth all creatures. Suffer, then, Endymion to follow his affections, though to obtain her be impossible; and let him flatter himself in his own imaginations, because they are immortal.

TELLUS. Loath I am, Endymion, thou shouldst die, because I love thee well; [50] and that thou shouldst live, it grieveth me, because thou lovest Cynthia too well. In these extremities, what shall I do? Floscula, no more words; I am resolved. He shall neither live nor die.

FLOSC. A strange practice, <sup>13</sup> if it be possible.

TELLUS. Yes. I will entangle him in such a sweet net that he shall neither find the means to come out, nor desire it. All allurements of pleasure will I cast before his eyes, inso- [60] much that he shall slake that love which he now voweth to Cynthia, and burn in mine, of which he seemeth careless. In this languishing, between my amorous devices and his own loose desires, there shall such dissolute thoughts take root in his head, and over his heart grow so thick a skin, that neither hope of preferment, nor fear of punishment, nor counsel of the wisest, nor company of the worthiest, shall alter his humor, nor make [70] him once to think of his honor.

FLOSC. A revenge incredible, and, if it may be, unnatural.

TELLUS. He shall know the malice of a woman to have neither mean nor end; and of a woman deluded in love to have neither rule nor reason. I can do it; I must; I will! All his virtues will I shadow with vices; his person (ah, sweet person!) shall he deck with such rich robes as he shall forget it is [80] his own person; his sharp wit (ah, wit too sharp that hath cut off all my joys!) shall he use in flattering of my face and devising sonnets in my favor. The prime of his youth and pride of his time shall be spent in melancholy passions, careless behavior, untamed thoughts, and unbridled affections.

FLOSC. When this is done, what then? Shall it continue till his death, or shall he dote forever in this delight? 90

TELLUS. Ah, Floscula, thou rendest my heart in sunder in putting me in remembrance of the end.

FLOSC. Why, if this be not the end, all the rest is to no end.

TELLUS. Yet suffer me to imitate Juno, who would turn Jupiter's lovers to beasts on the earth, though she knew afterwards they should be stars in heaven.

FLOSC. Affection that is bred by en- [100] chantment is like a flower that is wrought in silk: in color and form most like, but nothing at all in substance or savor.

TELLUS. It shall suffice me if the world talk that I am favored of Endymion.

FLOSC. Well, use your own will; but you shall find that love gotten with witchcraft is as unpleasant as fish taken with medicines <sup>14</sup> unwholesome.

TELLUS. Floscula, they that be so poor [110] that they have neither net nor hook will rather poison dough than pine with hunger; and she that is so oppress'd with love that she is neither able with beauty nor wit to obtain her friend, <sup>15</sup> will rather use unlawful means than try <sup>16</sup> intolerable pains. I will do it. Exit.

FLOSC. Then about it. Poor Endymion, what traps are laid for thee because thou honorest one that all the world wond'reth at!

<sup>15</sup> Lover.

And what plots are cast to make thee [120 unfortunate that studiest of all men to be the faithfulest !

Exit.

SCENE III <sup>17</sup>

[Enter] DARES [and] SAMIAS.

DARES. Now our masters are in love up to the ears, what have we to do but to be in knavery up to the crowns?

SAMIAS. Oh, that we had Sir Tophas, that brave squire, in the midst of our mirth — et ecce autem, "Will you see the Devil?"

Enter SIR TOPHAS [and EPITON].

TOP. Epi !

EPI. Here, sir.

TOP. I brook not this idle humor of love ; it tickleth not my liver, from whence the [10 lovenlongers in former age seemed to infer they should proceed.

EPI. Love, sir, may lie in your lungs ; and I think it doth, and that is the cause you blow and are so pursy.

TOP. Tush, boy, I think it <sup>18</sup> but some device of the poet to get money.

EPI. A poet? What's that?

TOP. Dost thou not know what a poet is?

EPI. No. 20

TOP. Why, fool, a poet is as much as one should say — a poet. But soft, yonder be two wrens ; may I shoot at them?

EPI. They are two lads.

TOP. Larks or wrens, I will kill them.

EPI. Larks ! Are you blind? They are two little boys.

TOP. Birds or boys, they are both but a pittance for my breakfast ; therefore have at them, for their brains must as it were em- [30
broider my bolts. <sup>19</sup>

SAM. Stay your courage, valiant knight, for your wisdom is so weary that it stayeth itself.

DAR. Why, Sir Tophas, have you forgotten your old friends?

TOP. Friends? Nego argumentum.

SAM. And why not friends?

TOP. Because amicitia (as in old [annals] <sup>20</sup> we find) is inter pares. Now, my pretty companions, you shall see how unequal you be [40 to me ; but I will not cut you quite off, you shall be my half-friends for reaching to my middle ; so far as from the ground to the waist I will be your friend.

DAR. Learnedly. But what shall become of the rest of your body, from the waist to the crown?

TOP. My children, quod supra vos nihil ad vos ; you must think the rest immortal, because you cannot reach it. 50

EPI. Nay, I tell ye my master is more than a man.

DAR. And thou less than a mouse.

TOP. But what be you two?

SAM. I am Samias, page to [Eumenides]. <sup>21</sup>

DAR. And I Dares, page to [Endymion].

TOP. Of what occupation <sup>22</sup> are your masters?

DAR. Occupation, you clown ! Why, they are honorable and warriors. 60

TOP. Then are they my prentices.

DAR. Thine ! And why so?

TOP. I was the first that ever devised war, and therefore by Mars himself given me for my arms a whole armory ; and thus I go, as you see, clothed with artillery. It is not silks — milksops — nor tissues, nor the fine wool of [Seres], <sup>23</sup> but iron, steel, swords, flame, shot, terror, clamor, blood, and ruin, that rocks asleep my thoughts, which never had any [70 other cradle but cruelty. Let me see, do you not bleed?

DAR. Why so?

TOP. Commonly my words wound.

SAM. What then do your blows?

TOP. Not only [wound], <sup>24</sup> but also confound.

SAM. How dar'st thou come so near thy master, Epi? Sir Tophas, spare us.

TOP. You shall live : you, Samias, because you are little ; you, Dares, because you are [80 no bigger ; and both of you, because you are but two ; for commonly I kill by the dozen, and have for every particular adversary a peculiar weapon.

SAM. May we know the use, for our better skill in war?

TOP. You shall. Here is a bird-bolt <sup>25</sup> for the ugly beast the blackbird.

DAR. A cruel sight.

TOP. Here is the musket for the un- [90
tamed or, as the vulgar sort term it, the wild mallard.

SAM. O desperate attempt !

EPI. Nay, my master will match them.

DAR. [aside] Ay, if he catch them.

TOP. Here is a spear and shield, and both necessary, the one to conquer, the other to subdue or overcome the terrible trout, which although he be under the water, yet tying a string to the top of my spear and an engine [100 of iron to the end of my line, I overthrow him, and then herein I put him.

SAM. O wonderful war!—[aside] Dares, didst thou ever hear such a dolt?

DAR. [aside] All the better; we shall have good sport hereafter, if we can get leisure.

SAM. [aside] Leisure! I will rather lose my master's service than his company! Look how he struts.<sup>26</sup>—But what is this? Call you it your sword? 110

TOP. No, it is my scimitar; which I, by construction often studying to be compendious, call my smiter.

DAR. What, are you also learned, sir?

TOP. Learned? I am all Mars and Ars.

SAM. Nay, you are all mass and ass.

TOP. Mock you me? You shall both suffer, yet with such weapons as you shall make choice of the weapon wherewith you shall perish. Am I all a mass or lump; is there [120 no proportion in me? Am I all ass; is there no wit in me? Epi, prepare them to the slaughter.

SAM. I pray, sir, hear us speak! We call you mass, which your learning doth well understand is all man, for mas, maris is a man. Then as (as you know) is a weight, and we for your virtues account you a weight.

TOP. The Latin hath saved your lives, the which a world of silver could not have [130 ransom'd. I understand you, and pardon you.

DAR. Well, Sir Tophas, we bid you farewell, and at our next meeting we will be ready to do you service.

TOP. Samias, I thank you; Dares, I thank you; but especially I thank you both.

SAM. [aside] Wisely. Come, next time we'll have some pretty gentlewomen with us to walk, for without doubt with them he will be very dainty. 140

DAR. Come, let us see what our masters do; it is high time. Exeunt [SAMIAS and DARES].

TOP. Now will I march into the field, where, if I cannot encounter with my foul enemies, I will withdraw myself to the river, and there fortify for fish, for there resteth no minute free from fight.

Exit [Sir TOPHAS with EPITON].

<sup>26</sup> Swells, puffs up.

SCENE IV <sup>27</sup>

[Enter at one side] TELLUS [and] FLOSCULA, [at the other] DIPSAS.

TELLUS. Behold, Floscula, we have met with the woman by chance that we sought for by travail. I will break my mind to her without ceremony or circumstance, lest we lose that time in advice that should be spent in execution.

FLOSC. Use your discretion; I will in this case neither give counsel nor consent, for there cannot be a thing more monstrous than to force affection by sorcery, neither do I [10 imagine anything more impossible.

TELLUS. Tush, Floscula, in obtaining of love, what impossibilities will I not try? And for the winning of Endymion, what impieties will I not practise?—Dipsas, whom as many honor for age as wonder at for cunning, listen in few words to my tale, and answer in one word to the purpose, for that neither my burning desire can afford long speech, nor the short time I have to stay many delays. Is [20 it possible by herbs, stones, spells, incantation, enchantment, exorcisms, fire, metals, planets, or any practice, to plant affection where it is not, and to supplant it where it is?

DIPSAS. Fair lady, you may imagine that these hoary hairs are not void of experience, nor the great name that goeth of my cunning to be without cause. I can darken the sun by my skill and remove the moon out of her course; I can restore youth to the aged [30 and make hills without bottoms. There is nothing that I cannot do but that only which you would have me do; and therein I differ from the gods, that I am not able to rule hearts; for were it in my power to place affection by appointment, I would make such evil appetites, such inordinate lusts, such cursed desires, as all the world should be filled both with superstitious heats and extreme love.

TELLUS. Unhappy Tellus, whose de- [40 sires are so desperate that they are neither to be conceived of any creature, nor to be cured by any art!

DIPSAS. This I can: breed slackness in love, though never root it out. What is he whom you love, and what she that he honoreth?

TELLUS. Endymion, sweet Endymion is he that hath my heart; and Cynthia, too, too fair Cynthia, the miracle of nature, of time, of fortune, is the lady that he delights in, [50

DIPSAS. Would you have his love either by absence or sickness aslaked? <sup>28</sup> Would you that Cynthia should mistrust him, or be jealous of him without color? <sup>29</sup>

TELLUS. It is the only thing I crave, that, seeing my love to Endymion, unspotted, cannot be accepted, his truth to Cynthia, though it be unspeakable, may be suspected. <sup>60</sup>

DIPSAS. I will undertake it, and overtake <sup>30</sup> him, that <sup>31</sup> all his love shall be doubted of, and therefore become desperate; but this will wear out with time, that treadeth all things down but truth.

TELLUS. Let us go.

DIPSAS. I follow.

Exeunt.

ACT II — SCENE I <sup>1</sup>

[Enter] ENDYMION.

END. O fair Cynthia! O unfortunate Endymion! Why was not thy birth as high as thy thoughts, or her beauty less than heavenly; or why are not thine honors as rare as her beauty or thy fortunes as great as thy deserts? Sweet Cynthia, how wouldst thou be pleased, how possessed? Will labors, patient of all extremities, obtain thy love? There is no mountain so steep that I will not climb, no monster so cruel that I will not tame, no [10] action so desperate that I will not attempt. Desirest thou the passions of love, the sad and melancholy moods of perplexed minds, the not-to-be-expressed torments of racked thoughts? Behold my sad tears, my deep sighs, my hollow eyes, my broken sleeps, my heavy countenance. Wouldst thou have me vow'd only to thy beauty and consume every minute of time in thy service? Remember my solitary life almost these seven years. [20] Whom have I entertained but mine own thoughts and thy virtues? What company have I used but contemplation? Whom have I wond'ered at but thee? Nay, whom have I not contemned for thee? Have I not crept to those on whom I might have trodden, only because thou didst shine upon them? Have not injuries been sweet to me, if thou vouchsafest I should bear them? Have I not spent my golden years in hopes, waxing old with [30] wishing, yet wishing nothing but thy love? With Tellus, fair Tellus, have I dissembled, using her but as a cloak for mine affections; that others, seeing my mangled and disordered mind, might think it were for one that loveth me, not for Cynthia, whose perfection alloweth no companion nor comparison. In the midst of these distemp'ered thoughts of mine thou art not only jealous of my truth, but careless, suspicious, and secure; which strange [40] humor maketh my mind as desperate as thy conceits are doubtful. I am none of those wolves that bark most when thou shinest brightest, but that fish (thy fish, Cynthia, in the flood [Araris])<sup>2</sup> which at thy waxing is as white as the driven snow, and at thy waning as black as deepest darkness. I am that Endymion, sweet Cynthia, that have carried my thoughts in equal balance with my actions, being always as free from imagining ill as [50] enterprising;<sup>3</sup> that Endymion whose eyes never esteemed anything fair but thy face, whose tongue termed nothing rare but thy virtues, and whose heart imagined nothing miraculous but thy government; yea, that Endymion who, divorcing himself from the amiableness of all ladies, the bravery <sup>4</sup> of all courts, the company of all men, hath chosen in a solitary cell to live only by feeding on thy favor, accounting in the world — but thyself — [60] nothing excellent, nothing immortal: thus mayst thou see every vein, sinew, muscle, and artery of my love, in which there is no flattery, nor deceit, error, nor art. But soft, here cometh Tellus. I must turn my other face to her, like Janus, lest she be as suspicious as Juno.

Enter TELLUS, [FLOSCULA, and DIPSAS].<sup>4</sup>

TELLUS. Yonder I espy Endymion. I will seem to suspect nothing, but soothe him, that, seeing I cannot obtain the depth of his [70] love, I may learn the height of his dissembling. Floscula and Dipsas, withdraw yourselves out of our sight, yet be within the hearing of our saluting. — How now, Endymion, always solitary? No company but your own thoughts, no friend but melancholy fancies?

END. You know, fair Tellus, that the sweet remembrance of your love is the only com-

panion of my life, and thy presence, my paradise ; so that I am not alone when nobody [80 is with me, and in Heaven itself when thou art with me.

TELLUS. Then you love me, Endymion ?

END. Or else I live not, Tellus.

TELLUS. Is it not possible for you, Endymion to dissemble ?

END. Not, Tellus, unless I could make me a woman.

TELLUS. Why, is dissembling joined to their sex inseparable, as heat to fire, heaviness [90 to earth, moisture to water, thinness to air ?

END. No, but found in their sex as common as spots upon doves, moles upon faces, caterpillars upon sweet apples, cobwebs upon fair windows.

TELLUS. Do they all dissemble ?

END. All but one.

TELLUS. Who is that ?

END. I dare not tell ; for if I should say you, then would you imagine my flattery [100 to be extreme ; if another, then would you think my love to be but indifferent.

TELLUS. You will be sure I shall take no vantage of your words. But, in sooth, Endymion, without more ceremonies, is it not Cynthia ?

END. You know, Tellus, that of the gods we are forbidden to dispute, because their deities come not within the compass of our reasons ; and of Cynthia we are allowed [110 not to talk but to wonder, because her virtues are not within the reach of our capacities.

TELLUS. Why, she is but a woman.

END. No more was Venus.

TELLUS. She is but a virgin.

END. No more was Vesta.

TELLUS. She shall have an end.

END. So shall the world.

TELLUS. Is not her beauty subject to time ?

END. No more than time is to standing still.

TELLUS. Wilt thou make her immortal ?

END. No, but incomparable. 122

TELLUS. Take heed, Endymion, lest like the wrestler in Olympia, that striving to lift an impossible weight catch'd an incurable strain, thou, by fixing thy thoughts above thy reach, fall into a disease without all recure ! But I see thou art now in love with Cynthia.

END. No, Tellus ; thou knowest that the stately cedar, whose top reacheth unto [130 the clouds, never boweth his head to the shrubs that grow in the valley ; nor ivy, that climbeth up by the elm, can ever get hold of the beams of the sun. Cynthia I honor in all humility, whom none ought or dare adventure to love, whose affections are immortal, and virtues infinite. Suffer me, therefore, to gaze on the moon, at whom, were it not for thyself, I would die with wondering. Exeunt.

SCENE II <sup>5</sup>

[Enter] DARES, SAMIAS, SCINTILLA, [and] FAVILLA.

DAR. Come, Samias, diddest thou ever hear such a sighing, the one for Cynthia, the other for Semele, and both for moonshine in the water ?

SAM. Let them sigh, and let us sing. How say you, gentlewomen ; are not our masters too far in love ?

SCINT. Their tongues, happily,<sup>6</sup> are dipp'd to the root in amorous words and sweet discourses, but I think their hearts are scarce [10 tipp'd on the side <sup>7</sup> with constant desires.

DAR. How say you, Favilla, is not love a lurcher,<sup>8</sup> that taketh men's stomachs<sup>9</sup> away that <sup>10</sup> they cannot eat, their spleen that they cannot laugh, their hearts that they cannot fight, their eyes that they cannot sleep, and leaveth nothing but livers to make nothing but lovers ?

FAVIL. Away, peevish boy ; a rod were better under thy girdle than love in thy [20 mouth ! It will be a forward cock that croweth in the shell.

DAR. Alas, good old gentlewoman, how it becometh you to be grave !

SCINT. Favilla, though she be but a spark, yet is she fire.

FAVIL. And you, Scintilla, be not much more than a spark, though you would be esteemed a flame.

SAM. [aside to DARES] It were good sport [30 to see the fight between two sparks.

DAR. [aside to SAMIAS] Let them to it, and we will warm us by their words.

SCINT. You are not angry, Favilla ?

FAVIL. That is, Scintilla, as you list to take it.

SAM. That, that ! <sup>11</sup>

SCINT. This it is to be matched with girls, who coming but yesterday from making of

babies,<sup>12</sup> would before to-morrow be ac- [40 counted matrons.

FAVIL. I cry your Matronship mercy. Because your pantables<sup>13</sup> be higher with cork, therefore your feet must needs be higher in the insteps. You will be mine elder because you stand upon a stool and I on the floor.

SAM. Good, good!

DAR. [aside to SAMIAS] Let them alone, and see with what countenance they will become friends. 50

SCINT. Nay, you think to be the wiser, because you mean to have the last word.

SAM. [aside to DARES] Step between them lest they scratch. — In faith, gentlewomen, seeing we came out to be merry, let not your jarring mar our jests; be friends. How say you?

SCINT. I am not angry, but it spited me to see how short<sup>14</sup> she was.

FAVIL. I meant nothing till she would [60 needs cross me.

DAR. Then, so let it rest.

SCINT. I am agreed.

FAVIL. And I. Yet I never took anything so unkindly in my life. [Weeps.]

SCINT. 'Tis I have the cause, that never offered the occasion. [Weeps.]

DAR. Excellent, and right like a woman.

SAM. A strange sight to see water come out of fire. 70

DAR. It is their property to carry in their eyes fire and water, tears and torches, and in their mouths honey and gall.

SCINT. You will be a good one if you live. But what is yonder formal fellow?

Enter Sir TOPHAS [and EPITON].

DAR. Sir Tophas, Sir Tophas, of whom we told you. If you be good wenches, make as though you love him, and wonder at him.

FAVIL. We will do our parts.

DAR. But first let us stand aside, and [80 let him use his garb,<sup>15</sup> for all consisteth in his gracing. [The four retire.]

TOP. Epi!

EPI. At hand, sir.

TOP. How likest thou this martial life, where nothing but blood besprinkleth our bosoms? Let me see, be our enemies<sup>16</sup> fat?

EPI. Passing fat; and I would not change this life to be a lord; and yourself passeth all comparison, for other captains kill and [90 beat, and there is nothing you kill but you also eat.

TOP. I will draw out their guts out of their bellies, and tear the flesh with my teeth, so mortal is my hate and so eager my unstaunch'd stomach.

EPI. [aside] My master thinks himself the valiantest man in the world if he kill a wren; so warlike a thing he accounteth to take away life, though it be from a lark. [100

TOP. Epi, I find my thoughts to swell and my spirit to take wings, insomuch that I cannot continue within the compass of so slender combats.

FAVIL. [aside] This passeth! <sup>17</sup>

SCINT. [aside] Why, is he not mad?

SAM. [aside] No, but a little vainglorious.

TOP. Epi!

EPI. Sir.

TOP. I will encounter that black and [110 cruel enemy that beareth rough and untewed<sup>18</sup> locks upon his body, whose sire throweth down the strongest walls, whose legs are as many as both ours, on whose head are placed most horrible horns by nature as a defence from all harms.

EPI. What mean you, master, to be so desperate?

TOP. Honor inciteth me, and very hunger compelleth me. 120

EPI. What is that monster?

TOP. The monster Ovis. I have said, — let thy wits work.

EPI. I cannot imagine it. Yet let me see — a black enemy with rough locks. It may be a sheep, and Ovis is a sheep. His sire so strong — a ram is a sheep's sire, that being also an engine of war. Horns he hath, and four legs — so hath a sheep. Without doubt, this monster is a black sheep. Is it not a [130 sheep that you mean?

TOP. Thou hast hit it; that monster will I kill and sup with.

SAM. [aside] Come let us take him off. [SAMIAS, DARES, FAVILLA, and SCINTILLA come forward.] Sir Tophas, all hail!

TOP. Welcome, children; I seldom cast mine eyes so low as to the crowns of your heads, and therefore pardon me that I spake not all this while. 139

DAR. No harm done. Here be fair ladies come to wonder at your person, your valor, your wit, the report whereof hath made them careless of their own honors, to glut their eyes and hearts upon yours.

TOP. Report cannot but injure me, for that not knowing fully what I am, I fear she hath been a niggard in her praises.

SCINT. No, gentle knight, report hath been prodigal, for she hath left you no equal, nor herself credit, so much hath she told, yet [150 no more than we now see.

DAR. [aside] A good wench.

FAVIL. If there remain as much pity toward women as there is in you courage against your enemies, then shall we be happy, who, hearing of your person, came to see it, and seeing it are now in love with it.

TOP. Love me, ladies? I easily believe it, but my tough heart receiveth no impression with sweet words. Mars may pierce it; [160 Venus shall not paint on it.

FAVIL. A cruel saying.

SAM. [aside] There's a girl.

DAR. Will you cast these ladies away, and all for a little love? Do but speak kindly.

TOP. There cometh no soft syllable within my lips; custom hath made my words bloody and my heart barbarous. That pelting<sup>19</sup> word love, how wat'rish it is in my mouth; it carrieth no sound. Hate, horror, [170 death, are speeches that nourish my spirits. I like honey, but I care not for the bees; I delight in music, but I love not to play on the bagpipes; I can vouchsafe to hear the voice of women, but to touch their bodies I disdain it as a thing childish and fit for such men as can digest nothing but milk.

SCINT. A hard heart! Shall we die for your love and find no remedy?

TOP. I have already taken a surfeit. 180

EPI. Good master, pity them.

TOP. Pity them, Epi? No, I do not think that this breast shall be pest'ed with such a foolish passion. What is that the gentlewoman carrieth in a chain?

EPI. Why, it is a squirrel.

TOP. A squirrel? O gods, what things are made for money!

DAR. [aside] Is not this gentleman over-wise? 190

FAVIL. [aside] I could stay all day with him, if I feared not to be shent.<sup>20</sup>

SCINT. [aside] Is it not possible to meet again?

DAR. [aside] Yes, at any time.

FAVIL. [aside] Then let us hasten home.

SCINT. Sir Tophas, the god of war deal better with you than you do with the god of love. 199

FAVIL. Our love we may dissemble, digest we cannot; but I doubt not but time will hamper you and help us.

TOP. I defy time, who hath no interest in my heart. Come, Epi, let me to the battle with that hideous beast. Love is pap, and hath no relish in my taste because it is not terrible.

DAR. [aside] Indeed a black sheep is a perilous beast; but let us in till another time.

FAVIL. [aside] I shall long for that time. Exeunt.

SCENE III<sup>21</sup>

[Enter] ENDYMION; DIPSAS [and] BAGOA [in the background.]

END. No rest, Endymion! Still uncertain how to settle thy steps by day or thy thoughts by night! Thy truth is measured by thy fortune, and thou art judged unfaithful because thou art unhappy. I will see if I can beguile myself with sleep, and if no slumber will take hold in my eyes, yet will I embrace the golden thoughts in my head, and wish to melt by musing; that as ebony, which no fire can scorch, is yet consumed with sweet savors, [10 so my heart, which cannot be bent by the hardness of fortune, may be bruised by amorous desires. On yonder bank never grew anything but lunary,<sup>22</sup> and hereafter I will never have any bed but that bank. O Endymion, Tellus was fair. But what availeth beauty without wisdom? Nay, Endymion, she was wise. But what availeth wisdom without honor? She was honorable, Endymion; belie her not. Ay, but how obscure is honor [20 without fortune. Was she not fortunate whom so many followed? Yes, yes, but base is fortune without majesty; thy majesty, Cynthia, all the world knoweth and wondereth at, but not one in the world that can imitate it or comprehend it. No more, Endymion. Sleep or die. Nay, die; for to sleep, it is impossible — and yet I know not how it cometh to pass, I feel such a heaviness both in mine eyes and heart that I am sud- [30 denly benumbed, yea, in every joint. It may be weariness, for when did I rest? It may be deep melancholy, for when did I not sigh? Cynthia! Ay, so. — I say, Cynthia!

He falls asleep.

DIPSAS [advancing] Little dost thou know, Endymion, when thou shalt wake; for hadst thou placed thy heart as low in love as thy head lieth now in sleep, thou mightest have commanded Tellus, whom now, instead of a mistress, thou shalt find a tomb. These [40 eyes must I seal up by art, not nature, which are to be opened neither by art nor nature. Thou that lay'st down with golden locks shalt not awake until they be turned to silver hairs; and that chin on which scarcely appeareth soft down shall be filled with bristles as hard as broom. Thou shalt sleep out thy youth and flow'ring time, and become dry hay before thou knewest thyself green grass; and ready by age to step into the grave when thou [50 wakest, that was youthful in the court when thou laid'st thee down to sleep. The malice of Tellus hath brought this to pass, which if she could not have entreated of me by fair means, she would have commanded by menacing, for from her gather we all our simples to maintain our sorceries. — [to BAGO] Fan with this hemlock over his face, and sing the enchantment for sleep, whilst I go in and finish those ceremonies that are required in our [60 art. Take heed ye touch not his face, for the fan is so seasoned that whoso it toucheth with a leaf shall presently die, and over whom the wind of it breatheth, he shall sleep forever.

BAGO. Let me alone; <sup>25</sup> I will be careful. [Exit DIPSAS.] — What hap hadst thou, Endymion, to come under the hands of Dipsas? O fair Endymion, how it grieveth me that that fair face must be turned to a withered skin and taste the pains of death before it feel the [70 reward of love! I fear Tellus will repent that which the Heavens themselves seemed to rue. But I hear Dipsas coming! I dare not repine, lest she make me pine, and rock me into such a deep sleep that I shall not awake to my marriage.

Re-enter DIPSAS.

DIPSAS. How now, have you finished?

BAGO. Yea.

DIPSAS. Well then, let us in; and see that you do not so much as whisper that I did [80 this, for if you do, I will turn thy hairs to ad-ders and all thy teeth in thy head to tongues. Come away, come away.

Exeunt [DIPSAS and BAGO].

A DUMB SHOW <sup>26</sup>

Music sounds. Three ladies enter: one with a knife and a looking-glass, who, by the procurement of one of the other two, offers to stab Endymion as he sleeps; but the third wrings her hands, lamenteth, offering still to prevent it, but dares not. At last, the first lady, looking in the glass, casts down the knife. Exeunt.

Enters an ancient man with books with three leaves; offers the same twice. Endymion refuseth. He rendeth <sup>25</sup> two, and offers the third, where he stands awhile; and then Endymion offers to take it. Exit [the Old Man].

ACT III — SCENE I <sup>26</sup>

[Enter] CYNTHIA, TELLUS, [SEMELE, EUMENIDES, CORSITES, PANELION, and ZONTES].

CYNTHIA. Is the report true, that Endymion is stricken into such a dead sleep that nothing can either wake him or move him?

EUM. Too true, madam, and as much to be pitied as wondered at.

TELLUS. As good sleep and do no harm as wake and do no good.

CYNTH. What maketh you, Tellus, to be so short? The time was Endymion only was.

EUM. It is an old saying, madam, that [10 a waking dog doth afar off bark at a sleeping lion.

SEM. It were good, Eumenides, that you took a nap with your friend, for your speech beginneth to be heavy.

EUM. Contrary to your nature, Semele, which hath been always accounted light.

CYNTH. What, have we here before my face these unseemly and malapert overthwarts? <sup>27</sup> I will tame your tongues and your [20 thoughts, and make your speeches answerable to your duties, and your conceits fit for my dignity, else will I banish you both my person and the world.

EUM. Pardon, I humbly ask ; but such is my unspotted faith to Endymion that whatsoever seemeth a needle to prick his finger is a dagger to wound my heart.

CYNTH. If you be so dear to him, how happeneth it you neither go to see him, nor [30 search for remedy for him?

EUM. I have seen him to my grief, and sought recure with despair, for that I cannot imagine who should restore him that is the wonder to all men. Your Highness, on whose hands the compass of the earth is at command, though not in possession, may show yourself both worthy your sex, your nature, and your favor, if you redeem that honorable Endymion, whose ripe years foretell rare [40 virtues, and whose unmellowed conceits promise ripe counsel.

CYNTH. I have had trial of Endymion, and conceive greater assurance of his age than I could hope of his youth.

TELLUS. But timely, madam, crooks that tree that will be a cammock,<sup>28</sup> and young it pricks that will be a thorn ; and therefore he that began without care to settle his life, it is a sign without amendment he will end it. [50

CYNTH. Presumptuous girl, I will make thy tongue an example of unrecoverable displeasure. — Corsites, carry her to the castle in the desert, there to remain and weave.

CORS. Shall she work stories or poetries?

CYNTH. It skilleth<sup>29</sup> not which. Go to, in both ; for she shall find examples infinite in either what punishment long tongues have. Eumenides, if either the soothsayers in Egypt, or the enchanters in Thessaly, or the phi- [60 losophers in Greece, or all the sages of the world can find remedy, I will procure it ; therefore, dispatch with all speed : you, Eumenides, into Thessaly ; you, Zontes, into Greece, because you are acquainted in Athens ; you, Pan[ellion, to Egypt ; saying that Cynthia sendeth, and, if you will, commandeth.

EUM. On bowed knee I give thanks, and with wings on my legs, I fly for remedy.

ZON. We are ready at your Highness' [70 command, and hope to return to your full content.

CYNTH. It shall never be said that Cynthia, whose mercy and goodness filleth the Heavens with joys and the world with marvels, will suffer either Endymion or any to perish, if he may be protected.

EUM. Your Majesty's words have been always deeds, and your deeds virtues. Exeunt.

SCENE II<sup>30</sup>

[Enter] CORSITES [and] TELLUS.

CORS. Here is the castle, fair Tellus, in which you must weave, till either time end your days, or Cynthia her displeasure. I am sorry so fair a face should be subject to so hard a fortune, and that the flower of beauty, which is honored in courts, should here wither in prison.

TELLUS. Corsites, Cynthia may restrain the liberty of my body, of my thoughts she cannot ; and therefore do I esteem myself [10 most free, though I am in greatest bondage.

CORS. Can you then feed on fancy, and subdue the malice of envy by the sweetness of imagination?

TELLUS. Corsites, there is no sweeter music to the miserable than despair ; and therefore the more bitterness I feel, the more sweetness I find ; for so vain were liberty, and so unwelcome the following of higher fortune, that I choose rather to pine in this castle than to [20 be a prince in any other court.

CORS. A humor contrary to your years and nothing agreeable to your sex ; the one commonly allured with delights, the other always with sovereignty.

TELLUS. I marvel, Corsites, that you being a captain, who should sound nothing but terror and suck nothing but blood, can find in your heart to talk such smooth words, for that it agreeth not with your calling to use words [30 so soft as that of love.

CORS. Lady, it were unfit of wars to discourse with women, into whose minds nothing can sink but smoothness ; besides, you must not think that soldiers be so rough-hewn, or of such knotty mettle, that beauty cannot allure, and you, being beyond perfection, enchant.

TELLUS. Good Corsites, talk not of love, but let me to my labor. The little beauty I have shall be bestowed on my loom, which [40 I now mean to make my lover.

CORS. Let us in ; and what favor Corsites can show, Tellus shall command.

<sup>30</sup> Before a castle.

SCENE III <sup>31</sup>

[Enter] Sir TOPHAS and EPITON.

TOPHAS. Epi!

EPI. Here, sir.

TOPHAS. Unrig me. Heigho!

EPI. What's that?

TOPHAS. An interjection, whereof some are of mourning; as, eho, vah.<sup>32</sup>

EPI. I understand you not.

TOPHAS. Thou seest me.

EPI. Ay.

TOPHAS. Thou hear'st me. 10

EPI. Ay.

TOPHAS. Thou feelest me.

EPI. Ay.

TOPHAS. And not understand'st me?

EPI. No.

TOPHAS. Then am I but three-quarters of a noun substantive. But alas, Epi, to tell thee the troth, I am a noun adjective.

EPI. Why?

TOPHAS. Because I cannot stand with- [20 out another.

EPI. Who is that?

TOPHAS. Dipsas.

EPI. Are you in love?

TOPHAS. No; but love hath, as it were, milk'd my thoughts and drained from my heart the very substance of my accustomed courage; it worketh in my head like new wine, so as I must hoop my sconce with iron, lest my head break, and so I bewray<sup>33</sup> my [30 brains. But, I pray thee, first discover<sup>34</sup> me in all parts, that I may be like a lover, and then will I sigh and die. Take my gun and give me a gown: C[e]dant arma togæ.<sup>35</sup>

EPI. Here.

TOPHAS. Take my sword and shield and give me beard-brush and scissors: Bella gerant alii, tu Pari semper ama.<sup>36</sup>

EPI. Will you be trimm'd, sir?

TOPHAS. Not yet; for I feel a conten- [40 tion within me whether I shall frame the bodkin beard or the bush. But take my pike and give me pen: Dicere quæ puduit, scribere jussit amor.<sup>37</sup><sup>31</sup> Unlocated; presumably the same as I, i.<sup>32</sup> These and the following allusions are to the Latin Grammar of William Lilly.<sup>33</sup> Expose.<sup>34</sup> Uncover, undress; i.e., disarrange my apparel.<sup>35</sup> Let arms give way to the toga (the garb of peace). (Cicero, De Officiis, I, xxii, 76.)<sup>36</sup> Let others war; thou, Paris, ever love. (Adapted from Ovid, Heroides, xvii, 254. Cf. xiii, 84.)<sup>37</sup> Love bade me write those things I shamed to speak. (Ovid, Heroides, iv, 10.)

EPI. I will furnish you, sir.

TOPHAS. Now, for my bow and bolts give me ink and paper, for my smiter a pen-knife; for

Scalpellum, calami, atramentum, charta, libelli, Sint semper studiis arma parata meis.<sup>38</sup> 50

EPI. Sir, will you give over wars and play with that bauble called love?

TOPHAS. Give over wars? No, Epi, Militat omnis amans, et habet sua cast[r]a Cupido.<sup>39</sup>

EPI. Love hath made you very eloquent, but your face is nothing fair.

TOPHAS. Non formosus erat, sed erat facundus Ulysses.<sup>40</sup>

EPI. Nay, I must seek a new master if [60 you can speak nothing but verses.

TOPHAS. Quicquid conabar dicere, versus erat.<sup>41</sup> Epi, I feel all Ovid De Arte Amandi lie as heavy at my heart as a load of logs. Oh, what a fine, thin hair hath Dipsas! What a pretty low forehead! What a tall<sup>42</sup> and stately nose! What little hollow eyes! What great and goodly lips! How harmless she is, being toothless; her fingers fat and short, adorned with long nails like a bitter[n]! [70 In how sweet a proportion her cheeks hang down to her breasts like dugs and her paps to her waist like bags! What a low stature she is, and yet what a great foot she carrieth! How thrifty must she be in whom there is no waist! How virtuous is she like to be, over whom no man can be jealous!

EPI. Stay, master, you forget yourself.

TOPHAS. O Epi, even as a dish melteth by the fire, so doth my wit increase by love. [80

EPI. Pithily, and to the purpose! But what, begin you to nod?

TOPHAS. Good Epi, let me take a nap; for as some man may better steal a horse than another look over the hedge, so divers shall be sleepy when they would faintest take rest.

*He sleeps.*EPI. Who ever saw such a woodcock? <sup>43</sup> Love Dipsas! Without doubt all the world<sup>38</sup> These two lines seem to be of Lyly's composition. (Bond.) They may be translated:May knife, reeds, ink, books, paper, ever be A ready armament for studious me.<sup>39</sup> Every lover's in the army, and Cupid has his camp. (Ovid, Amores, I, ix, 1.)<sup>40</sup> Not handsome, but eloquent was Ulysses. will now account him valiant, that ventureth on her whom none durst undertake. But [90 here cometh two wags.

Enter DARES and SAMIAS.

SAM. Thy master hath slept his share.

DAR. I think he doth it because he would not pay me my board-wages.

SAM. It is a thing most strange; and I think mine will never return, so that we must both seek new masters, for we shall never live by our manners.

EPI. If you want masters, join with me and serve Sir Tophas, who must needs keep [100 more men, because he is toward marriage.

SAM. What, Epi, where's thy master?

EPI. Yonder, sleeping in love.

DAR. Is it possible?

EPI. He hath taken his thoughts a hole lower,<sup>44</sup> and saith, seeing it is the fashion of the world, he will vail <sup>45</sup> bonnet to beauty.

SAM. How is he attired?

EPI. Lovely.<sup>46</sup>

DAR. Whom loveth this amorous knight?

EPI. Dipsas. 111

SAM. That ugly creature? Why, she is a fool, a scold, fat, without fashion, and quite without favor.<sup>47</sup>

EPI. Tush, you be simple; my master hath a good marriage.

DAR. Good! As how?

EPI. Why, in marrying Dipsas he shall have every day twelve dishes of meat to his dinner, though there be none but Dipsas with [120 him: four of flesh, four of fish, four of fruit.

SAM. As how, Epi?

EPI. For flesh these: woodcock, goose, bitter[n], and rail.

DAR. Indeed, he shall not miss, if Dipsas be there.

EPI. For fish these: crab, carp, lump, and pouting.

SAM. Excellent, for of my word she is both crabbish, lumpish, and carping. 130

EPI. For fruit these: fretters,<sup>48</sup> medlars,<sup>49</sup>

<sup>49</sup> Fruit resembling small apples; it rots prematurely. As Professor Kittredge observes, all these are puns, the viands being selected because their names are capable of meaning various kinds of annoyances. At every dinner Dipsas will be fretful and meddlesome, will choke his heart (make him heart-sick), and will trouble him with her ladylike longings (with an illusion to the extravagant longings of pregnant women.)

hartichokes, and lady-longings. Thus you see he shall fare like a king, though he be but a beggar.

DAR. Well, Epi, dine thou with him, for I had rather fast than see her face. But see, thy master is asleep; let us have a song to wake this amorous knight.

EPI. Agreed.

SAM. Content. 140

THE FIRST SONG<sup>50</sup>

EPI. Here snores Tophas,
That amorous ass,
Who loves Dipsas,
With face so sweet
Nose and chin meet.

ALL THREE. { At sight of her each Fury skips
And flings into her lap their whips. 148

DAR. Holla, holla in his ear.

SAM. The witch, sure, thrust her fingers there.

EPI. Cramp him, or wring the fool by th' nose;

DAR. Or clap some burning flax to his toes.

SAM. What music's best to wake him?

EPI. Baw-wow, let bandogs shake him!

DAR. Let adders hiss in 's ear;

SAM. Else earwigs wriggle there.

EPI. No, let him batten; when his tongue

Once goes, a cat is not worse strung.

ALL THREE. { But if he ope nor mouth nor eyes,

He may in time sleep himself wise.

TOP. Sleep is a binding of the senses, love a loosing. 161

EPI. [aside] Let us hear him awhile.

TOP. There appeared in my sleep a goodly owl, who, sitting upon my shoulder, cried "Twit, twit"; and before mine eyes presented herself the express image of Dipsas. I marvelled what the owl said, till at the last I perceived "Twit, twit," "To it, to it," only by contraction admonished by this vision to make account of my sweet Venus. 170

SAM. Sir Tophas, you have overslept yourself.

TOP. No, youth, I have but slept over my love.

DAR. Love? Why, it is impossible that into so noble and unconquered a courage love should creep, having first a head as hard to pierce as steel, then to pass to a heart arm'd with a shirt of mail. 179

EPI. Ay, but my master yawning one day in the sun, Love crept into his mouth before he could close it, and there kept such a tumbling in his body that he was glad to untruss the points<sup>51</sup> of his heart and entertain Love as a stranger.

TOP. If there remain any pity in you, plead for me to Dipsas.

DAR. Plead! Nay, we will press her to it. — [aside to SAMIAS] Let us go with him to [189] Dipsas, and there shall we have good sport. — But, Sir Tophas, when shall we go? For I find my tongue voluble, and my heart venturous, and all myself like myself.

SAM. [aside to DARES] Come, Dares, let us not lose him until we find our masters, for as long as he liveth, we shall lack neither mirth nor meat.

EPI. We will [traverse].<sup>52</sup> Will you go, sir?

TOP. I præ; sequar.<sup>53</sup> Exeunt. [200]

SCENE IV <sup>54</sup>

[Enter] EUMENIDES [and] GERON.

EUM. Father, your sad music <sup>55</sup> being tuned on the same key that my hard fortune is, hath so melted my mind that I wish to hang at your mouth's end till my life end.

GER. These tunes, gentleman, have I been accustomed with these fifty winters, having no other house to shroud myself but the broad heavens; and so familiar with me hath use made misery that I esteem sorrow my chiefest solace, and welcomest is that guest to me [10] that can rehearse the saddest tale or the bloodiest tragedy.

EUM. A strange humor.<sup>56</sup> Might I inquire the cause?

GER. You must pardon me if I deny to tell it, for knowing that the revealing of griefs is, as it were, a renewing of sorrow, I have vowed therefore to conceal them, that I might not only feel the depth of everlasting discontentment, but despair of remedy. But whence [20] are you? What fortune hath thrust you to this distress?

EUM. I am going to Thessaly, to seek remedy for Endymion, my dearest friend, who hath been cast into a dead sleep almost these twenty years, waxing old and ready for the grave, being almost but newly come forth of the cradle.

GER. You need not for recure travel far, for whoso can clearly see the bottom of this [30] fountain shall have remedy for anything.

EUM. That methinketh is impossible. Why, what virtue can there be in water?

GER. Yes, whosoever can shed the tears of a faithful lover shall obtain anything he would. Read these words engraven about the brim.

EUM. Have you known this by experience, or is it placed here of purpose to delude men?

GER. I only would have experience of it, and then should there be an end of my [40] misery; and then would I tell the strangest discourse that ever yet was heard.

EUM. Ah, Eumenides!

GER. What lack you, gentleman; are you not well?

EUM. Yes, father, but a qualm that often cometh over my heart doth now take hold of me. But did never any lovers come hither?

GER. Lusters, but not lovers; for often have I seen them weep, but never could I [50] hear they saw the bottom.

EUM. Came there women also?

GER. Some.

EUM. What did they see?

GER. They all wept, that the fountain overflowed with tears; but so thick became the water with their tears that I could scarce discern the brim, much less behold the bottom.

EUM. Be faithful lovers so scant?

GER. It seemeth so, for yet heard I [60] never of any.

EUM. Ah, Eumenides, how art thou perplexed! Call to mind the beauty of thy sweet mistress and the depth of thy never-dying affections. How oft hast thou honored her, not only without spot, but suspicion of falsehood! And how hardly hath she rewarded thee without cause or color <sup>57</sup> of despite. How secret hast thou been these seven years, that hast not, nor once darest not to name her, [70] for discontenting her. How faithful, that hast offered to die for her, to please her! Unhappy Eumenides!

GER. Why, gentleman, did you once love?

EUM. Once! Ay, father, and ever shall.

GER. Was she unkind and you faithful?

EUM. She of all women the most froward, and I of all creatures the most fond.

GER. You doted then, not loved; for affection is grounded on virtue, and virtue is [80] never peevish; or on beauty, and beauty loveth to be praised.

EUM. Ay, but if all virtuous ladies should yield to all that be loving, or all amiable gentlewomen entertain all that be amorous, their virtues would be accounted vices and their beauties deformities ; for that love can be but between two, and that not proceeding of him that is most faithful but most fortunate.

GER. I would you were so faithful that [90 your tears might make you fortunate.

EUM. Yea, father, if that my tears clear not this fountain, then may you swear it is but a mere mockery.

GER. So saith every one yet that wept.

EUM. Ah, I faint, I die ! Ah, sweet Semele, let me alone, and dissolve,<sup>58</sup> by weeping, into water. [He gazes into the fountain.]

GER. This affection seemeth strange ; if he see nothing, without doubt this dissem- [100 bling passeth,<sup>59</sup> for nothing shall draw me from the belief.

EUM. Father, I plainly see the bottom, and there in white marble engraven these words : " Ask one for all, and but one thing at all."

GER. O fortunate Eumenides (for so have I heard thee call thyself), let me see. I cannot discern any such thing. I think thou dreamest.

EUM. Ah, father, thou art not a faithful [110 lover, and therefore canst not behold it.

GER. Then ask, that I may be satisfied by the event, and thyself blessed.

EUM. Ask ? So I will. And what shall I do but ask, and whom should I ask but Semele, the possessing of whose person is a pleasure that cannot come within the compass of comparison ; whose golden locks seem most curious when they seem most careless ; whose sweet looks seem most alluring when they [120 are most chaste ; and whose words the more virtuous they are, the more amorous they be accounted ? I pray thee, Fortune, when I shall first meet with fair Semele, dash my delight with some light disgrace, lest embracing sweetness beyond measure, I take a surfeit without recure. Let her practise her accustomed coyness, that I may diet myself upon my desires ; otherwise, the fulness of my joys will diminish the sweetness, and I shall [130 perish by them before I possess them.

Why do I trifle the time in words ? The least minute being spent in the getting of Semele is more worth than the whole world ; therefore let me ask. — What now, Eumenides ! Whither art thou drawn ? Hast thou forgotten both friendship and duty, care of Endymion, and the commandment of Cynthia ? Shall he die in a leaden sleep because thou sleepest in a golden dream ? — [140 Ay, let him sleep ever, so I slumber but one minute with Semele. * Love knoweth neither friendship nor kindred. Shall I not hazard the loss of a friend for the obtaining of her for whom I would often lose myself ? — Fond<sup>60</sup> Eumenides, shall the enticing beauty of a most disdainful lady be of more force than the rare fidelity of a tried friend ? The love of men to women is a thing common and of course ; the friendship of man to man in- [150 finite and immortal. — Tush ! Semele doth possess my love. — Ay, but Endymion hath deserved it. I will help Endymion. I found Endymion unspotted in his truth. — Ay, but I shall find Semele constant in her love. I will have Semele. — What shall I do ? Father, thy gray hairs are ambassadors of experience. Which shall I ask ?

GER. Eumenides, release Endymion, for all things, friendship excepted, are subject [160 to fortune : * love is but an eye-worm, which only tickleth the head with hopes and wishes ; friendship the image of eternity, in which there is nothing movable, nothing mischievous. As much difference as there is between beauty and virtue, bodies and shadows, colors and life, so great odds is there between love and friendship.

Love is a chameleon, which draweth nothing into the mouth but air, and nourisheth [170 nothing in the body but lungs. Believe me, Eumenides, desire dies in the same moment that beauty sickens, and beauty fadeth in the same instant that it flourisheth. When adversities flow, then love ebbs ; but friendship standeth stiffly in storms. * Time draweth wrinkles in a fair face, but addeth fresh colors to a fast friend, which neither heat, nor cold, nor misery, nor place, nor destiny, can alter or diminish. O friendship ! of all things [180 the most rare, and therefore most rare because most excellent, whose comforts in misery is always sweet, and whose counsels in prosperity are ever fortunate ! Vain love, that, only coming near to friendship in name, would seem to be the same or better in nature !

EUM. Father, I allow your reasons, and will therefore conquer mine own. Virtue shall subdue affections, wisdom lust, friendship beauty. Mistresses are in every place, [190 and as common as hares in Atho[s], bees in Hybla, fowls in the air ; but friends to be found are like the phoenix in Arabia, but one ; or the philadelphi in Arays,<sup>61</sup> never above two. I will have Endymion. Sacred fountain, in whose bowels are hidden divine secrets, I have increased your waters with the tears of unspotted thoughts, and therefore let me receive the reward you promise. Endymion, the truest friend to me, and faithfulest [200 lover to Cynthia, is in such a dead sleep that nothing can wake or move him.

GER. Dost thou see anything?

EUM. I see in the same pillar these words : "When she whose figure of all is the perfectest, and never to be measured; always one, yet never the same; still inconstant, yet never wavering; shall come and kiss Endymion in his sleep, he shall then rise; else never." This is strange. 210

GER. What see you else?

EUM. There cometh over mine eyes either a dark mist, or upon the fountain a deep thickness, for I can perceive nothing. But how am I deluded, or what difficult, nay impossible, thing is this?

GER. Methinketh it easy.

EUM. Good father, and how?

GER. Is not a circle of all figures the perfectest? 220

EUM. Yes.

GER. And is not Cynthia of all circles the most absolute?

EUM. Yes.

GER. Is it not impossible to measure her, who still worketh by her influence, never standing at one stay?

EUM. Yes.

GER. Is she not always Cynthia, yet seldom in the same bigness; always wavering in [230 her waxing or waning, that our bodies might the better be governed, our seasons the dailier give their increase; yet never to be removed from her course, as long as the heavens continue theirs?

EUM. Yes.

GER. Then who can it be but Cynthia, whose virtues being all divine must needs bring things to pass that be miraculous? Go, humble thyself to Cynthia; tell her the [240 success,<sup>62</sup> of which myself shall be a witness. And this assure thyself, that she that sent to find means for his safety will now work her cunning.

<sup>61</sup> Possibly, as Peck suggests (cited by Baker), for the Spanish Aranjuez, famous for its gardens; and the plant may be the mock-orange (philadelphus hirsutus), the flowers of which grow usually in pairs.

<sup>62</sup> Sequel, outcome.

EUM. How fortunate am I, if Cynthia be she that may do it!

GER. How fond art thou, if thou do not believe it!

EUM. I will hasten thither that I may entreat on my knees for succor, and embrace in mine arms my friend. 251

GER. I will go with thee, for unto Cynthia must I discover all my sorrows, who also must work in me a contentment.

EUM. May I now know the cause?

GER. That shall be as we walk, and I doubt not but the strangeness of my tale will take away the tediousness of our journey.

EUM. Let us go. 259

GER. I follow.

Exeunt.

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] TELLUS.

TELLUS. I marvel Corsites giveth me so much liberty — all the world knowing his charge to be so high and his nature to be most strange, — who hath so ill entreated ladies of great honor that he hath not suffered them to look out of windows, much less to walk abroad. It may be he is in love with me, for, Endymion, hardhearted Endymion, excepted, what is he that is not enamor'd of my beauty? But what respectest thou the love of all the world? [10 Endymion hates thee. Alas, poor Endymion, my malice hath exceeded my love, and thy faith to Cynthia quenched my affections. Quenched, Tellus? Nay, kindled them afresh; insomuch that I find scorching flames for dead embers, and cruel encounters of war in my thoughts instead of sweet parleys. Ah, that I might once again see Endymion! Accursed girl, what hope hast thou to see Endymion, on whose head already are grown gray [20 hairs, and whose life must yield to nature, before Cynthia end her displeasure? Wicked Dipsas, and most devilish Tellus, the one for cunning too exquisite, the other for hate too intolerable! Thou wast commanded to weave the stories and poetries wherein were showed both examples and punishments of tattling tongues, and thou hast only embroidered the sweet face of Endymion, devices of love, melancholy imaginations, and what not, out [30 of thy work, that thou shouldst study to pick out of thy mind. But here cometh Corsites.

I must seem yielding, and stout ; full of mildness, yet tempered with a majesty ; for if I be too flexible, I shall give him more hope than I mean ; if too froward, enjoy less liberty than I would. Love him I cannot, and therefore will practise that which is most contrary <sup>2</sup> to our sex, to dissemble.

Enter CORSITES.

COR. Fair Tellus, I perceive you rise [40 with the lark, and to yourself sing with the nightingale.

TELLUS. My Lord, I have no playfellow but fancy ; being barred of all company, I must question <sup>3</sup> with myself, and make my thoughts my friends.

COR. I would you would account my thoughts also your friends, for they be such as are only busied in wondering at your beauty and wisdom ; and some such as [50 have esteemed your fortune too hard ; and divers of that kind that offer to set you free, if you will set them free.

TELLUS. There are no colors so contrary as white and black, nor elements so disagreeing as fire and water, nor anything so opposite as men's thoughts and their words.

COR. He <sup>4</sup> that gave Cassandra the gift of prophesying, with the curse that, spake she never so true, she should never be believed, [60 hath I think poisoned the fortune of men, that, uttering the extremities of their inward passions, are always suspected of outward perjuries.

TELLUS. Well, Corsites, I will flatter myself and believe you. What would you do to enjoy my love ?

COR. Set all the ladies of the castle free, and make you the pleasure of my life ; more I cannot do, less I will not. 70

TELLUS. These be great words, and fit your calling ; for captains must promise things impossible. But will you do one thing for all ?

COR. Anything, sweet Tellus, that am ready for all.

TELLUS. You know that on the lunar bank sleepeth Endymion.

COR. I know it.

TELLUS. If you will remove him from that place by force, and convey him into some [80

obscure cave by policy, I give you here the faith of an unspotted virgin that you only shall possess me as a lover, and in spite of malice have me for a wife.

COR. Remove him, Tellus ? Yes, Tellus, he shall be removed, and that so soon as <sup>5</sup> thou shalt as much commend my diligence as my force. I go.

TELLUS. Stay ; will yourself attempt it ?

COR. Ay, Tellus ; as I would have none [90 partaker of my sweet love, so shall none be partners of my labors. But I pray thee go at your best leisure, for Cynthia beginneth to rise, and if she discover our love, we both perish ; for nothing pleaseth her but the fairness of virginity. All things must be not only without lust but without suspicion of lightness.

TELLUS. I will depart, and go you to Endymion.

COR. I fly, Tellus, being of all men the [100 most fortunate. Exit.

TELLUS. Simple Corsites, I have set thee about a task, being but a man, that the gods themselves cannot perform ; for little dost thou know how heavy his head lies, how hard his fortune ; but such shifts must women have to deceive men, and under color of things easy entreat that which is impossible ; otherwise we should be cumb'ed with importunities, oaths, sighs, letters, and all implements of love, [110 which to one resolved to the contrary are most loathsome. I will in, and laugh with the other ladies at Corsites' sweating. Exit.

SCENE II <sup>6</sup>

[Enter] SAMIAS and DARES.

SAM. Will thy master never awake ?

DAR. No ; I think he sleeps for a wager. But how shall we spend the time ? Sir Tophas is so far in love that he pineth in his bed and cometh not abroad.

SAM. But here cometh Epi in a pelting chafe. <sup>7</sup>

[Enter EPITON.]

EPI. A pox of all false proverbs, and were a proverb a page, I would have him by the ears !

SAM. Why art thou angry ? 10

EPI. Why ? You know it is said, "The tide tarrieth no man."

SAM. True.

EPI. A monstrous lie ; for I was tied two hours, and tarried for him to unloose me.

DAR. Alas, poor Epi !

EPI. Poor ! No, no, you base-conceited <sup>8</sup> slaves ; I am a most complete gentleman, although I be in disgrace with Sir Tophas.

DAR. Art thou out with him ? 20

EPI. Ay, because I cannot get him a lodging with Endymion. He would fain take a nap for forty or fifty years.

DAR. A short sleep, considering our long life.

SAM. Is he still in love ?

EPI. In love ? Why he doth nothing but make sonnets.

SAM. Canst thou remember any one of his poems ? 30

EPI. Ay, this is one : —

The beggar, Love, that knows not where to lodge,
At last within my heart, when I slept,
He crept,
I wak'd, and so my fancies began to fodge.<sup>9</sup>

SAM. That's a very long verse.

EPI. Why, the other was short. The first is called from the thumb to the little finger ; the second from the little finger to the elbow ; and some he hath made to reach to the [40 crown of his head, and down again to the sole of his foot. It is set to the tune of the black Sauce ; <sup>10</sup> ratio est, because Dipsas is a black saint.

DAR. Very wisely. But pray thee, Epi, how art thou complete ; and being from thy master, what occupation wilt thou take ?

EPI. [Know],<sup>11</sup> my hearts, I am an absolute microcosmus, a petty world of myself : my library is my head, for I have no other [50 books but my brains ; my wardrobe on my back, for I have no more apparel than is on my body ; my armory at my fingers' ends, for I use no other artillery than my nails ; <sup>12</sup> my treasure in my purse. Sic omnia mea mecum porto.<sup>13</sup>

DAR. Good !

EPI. [Know],<sup>14</sup> sirs, my palace is pav'd with grass, and tiled with stars ; for C[æ]lo tegitur qui non habet urnam,<sup>15</sup> — he that hath no [60 house must lie in the yard.

SAM. A brave resolution ! But how wilt thou spend thy time ?

EPI. Not in any melancholy sort ; for mine exercise I will walk horses.

DAR. Too bad !

EPI. Why, is it not said, " It is good walking when one hath his horse in his hand " ?

SAM. Worse and worse ! But how wilt thou live ? 70

EPI. By angling. Oh, 't is a stately occupation to stand four hours in a cold morning, and to have his nose bitten with frost before his bait be mumbled with a fish.

DAR. A rare attempt ! But wilt thou never travel ?

EPI. Yes, in a western barge,<sup>16</sup> when with a good wind and lusty pugs,<sup>17</sup> one may go ten miles in two days.

SAM. Thou art excellent at thy choice. [80 But what pastime wilt thou use ? None ?

EPI. Yes, the quickest of all.

SAM. What, dice ?

EPI. No, when I am in haste, one-and-twenty<sup>18</sup> games at chess, to pass a few minutes.

DAR. A life for a little lord, and full of quickness.

EPI. Tush, let me alone ! But I must needs see if I can find where Endymion lieth, and then go to a certain fountain hard by, [90 where they say faithful lovers shall have all things they will ask. If I can find out any of these, Ego et magister meus erimus in tuto : I and my master shall be friends. He is resolved to weep some three or four pailfuls to avoid the rheum of love that wambleth <sup>19</sup> in his stomach.

Enter [Master Constable and two of] the Watch.

SAM. Shall we never see thy master, Dares ?

DAR. Yes ; let us go now, for to-morrow Cynthia will be there. 100

EPI. I will go with you. But how shall we see for the Watch ?

SAM. Tush, let me alone ! I'll begin to them. — Masters, God speed you.

1 WATCH. Sir boy, we are all sped already.

EPI. [aside] So, methinks ; for they smell all of drink, like a beggar's beard.

<sup>15</sup> Prince, if your noble ashes lack an urn,

The sheltering sky will have to serve your turn. (Lucan, vii, 819.)

<sup>14</sup> Emend. Baker ; old eds. Now.

DAR. But I pray, sirs, may we see Endymion?

2 WATCH. No, we are commanded in [110 Cynthia's name, that no man shall see him.

SAM. No man! Why, we are but boys.

1 WATCH. Mass, neighbors, he says true; for if I swear I will never drink my liquor by the quart, and yet call for two pints, I think with a safe conscience I may carouse both.

DAR. Pithily, and to the purpose.

2 WATCH. Tush, tush, neighbors; take me with you.<sup>20</sup>

SAM. [aside] This will grow hot. 120

DAR. [aside] Let them alone.

2 WATCH. If I say to my wife, "Wife, I will have no raisins in my pudding," she puts in currants; small raisins are raisins, and boys are men; even as my wife should have put no raisins in my pudding, so shall there no boys see Endymion.

DAR. Learnedly.

EPI. Let Master Constable speak; I think he is the wisest among you. 130

MAST. CONST. You know, neighbors, 't is an old said saw, "Children and fools speak true."

ALL say. True.

MAST. CONST. Well, there you see the men be the fools, because it is provided from the children.<sup>21</sup>

DAR. Good.

MAST. CONST. Then, say I, neighbors, that children must not see Endymion, because children and fools speak true. 140

EPI. O wicked application!

SAM. Scurvily brought about!

1 WATCH. Nay, he says true, and therefore till Cynthia have been here, he shall not be uncovered. Therefore, away!

DAR. [aside to SAMIAS and EPITON] A watch, quoth you! A man may watch seven years for a wise word, and yet go without it. Their wits are all as rusty as their bills.<sup>22</sup>—But come on, Master Constable, shall we have [150 a song before we go?

MAST. CONST. With all my heart.

THE SECOND SONG<sup>23</sup>

WATCH. Stand!<sup>24</sup> Who goes there?
We charge you appear

<sup>25</sup> Let me understand you.

<sup>26</sup> I.e., having said "true," they all come under the provisions of the saw, and the men are fools; but, since the conclusion that the boys are also fools is explicitly provided against (from) by the terms of the saw, their saying "true" does not make them fools.

<sup>29</sup> Halt!

'Fore our constable here,
In the name of the Man in the Moon.

To us billmen relate

Why you stagger so late,
And how you come drunk so soon.

PAGES. What are ye, scabs? <sup>26</sup>
WATCH. The Watch; 160

This the Constable.

PAGES.

A patch.<sup>27</sup>

CONST. Knock 'em down unless they all stand;
If any run away,

'T is the old watchman's play,
To reach him a bill of his hand.

PAGES. O gentlemen, hold,

Your gowns freeze <sup>27</sup> with cold,

And your rotten teeth dance in your head;

EPI. Wine nothing shall cost ye;

SAM. Nor huge fires to roast ye; 170

DARES. Then soberly let us be led.

CONST. Come, my brown bills,<sup>28</sup> we'll roar,<sup>29</sup>

Bounce loud at tavern door,

OMNES. And i' th' morning steal all to bed.

Ereunt.

SCENE III<sup>30</sup>

CORSITES solus, [ENDYMION asleep.]

CORSITES. I am come in sight of the lunar bank. Without doubt Tellus doteth upon me; and cunningly, that I might not perceive her love, she hath set me to a task that is done before it is begun. Endymion, you must change your pillow; and if you be not weary of sleep, I will carry you where at ease you shall sleep your fill. It were good that without more ceremonies I took him, lest being espied, I be entrapp'd, and so incur the displeasure of [10 Cynthia, who commonly setteth watch that Endymion have no wrong. (He lifts.) What now, is your Mastership so heavy, or are you nail'd to the ground? Not stir one whit? Then use all thy force, though he feel it and wake. What, stone-still? Turn'd, I think, to earth with lying so long on the earth. Didst not thou, Corsites, before Cynthia, pull up a tree that forty years was fast'ned with roots and wreathed in knots to the ground? [20 Didst not thou, with main force, pull open the iron gates which no ram or engine could move? Have my weak thoughts made brawn-fallen <sup>31</sup> my strong arms, or is it the nature of love, or the quintessence of the mind, to breed numbness or litherness,<sup>32</sup> or I know not what lan-

guishing in my joints and sinews, being but the base strings of my body? Or doth the remembrance of Tellus so refine my spirits into a matter so subtle and divine that the other [30] fleshy parts cannot work whilst they muse? Rest thyself, rest thyself; nay, rent thyself in pieces, Corsites, and strive, in spite of love, fortune, and nature, to lift up this dulled body, heavier than dead and more senseless than death.

Enter Fairies.

But what are these so fair fiends that cause my hairs to stand upright and spirits to fall down? Hags, — out alas, nymphs, I crave pardon. Ay me, out! what do I hear? 40

The Fairies dance, and with a song pinch him, and he falleth asleep. They kiss ENDYMION and depart.

THE THIRD SONG, BY FAIRIES <sup>33</sup>

OMNES. Pinch him, pinch him, black and blue,
Saucy mortals must not view
What the Queen of Stars is doing,
Nor pry into our fairy wooing.

1 FAIRY. Pinch him blue.

2 FAIRY. And pinch him black;

3 FAIRY. Let him not lack

Sharp nails to pinch him blue and red,
Till sleep has rock'd his addle head.

4 FAIRY. For the trespass he hath done, 50
Spots o'er all his flesh shall run.
Kiss Endymion, kiss his eyes;
Then to our midnight heidegyes.<sup>34</sup>

[Enter] CYNTHIA, FLOSCULA, SEMELE, PANELION, ZONTES, PYTHAGORAS, and GYPTES.

CYNTH. You see, Pythagoras, what ridiculous opinions you hold, and I doubt not but you are now of another mind.

PYTHAG. Madam, I plainly perceive that the perfection of your brightness hath pierced through the thickness that covered my mind; inasmuch that I am no less glad to be re- [60] formed than ashamed to remember my grossness.

GYPTES. They are thrice fortunate that live in your palace, where truth is not in colors but life, virtues not in imagination but execution.

CYNTH. I have always studied to have rather living virtues than painted gods, the body of truth than the tomb. But let us walk to Endymion; it may be it lieth in your arts to deliver him; as for Eumenides, I fear he [70] he is dead.

PYTHAG. I have alleged all the natural reasons I can for such a long sleep.

GYPTES. I can do nothing till I see him.

CYNTH. Come, Floscula; I am sure you are glad that you shall behold Endymion.

FLOSC. I were blessed, if I might have him recovered.

CYNTH. Are you in love with his person?

FLOSC. No, but with his virtue. [80]

CYNTH. What say you, Semele?

SEM. Madam, I dare say nothing for fear I offend.

CYNTH. Belike you cannot speak except you be spiteful; but as good be silent as saucy. Panelion, what punishment were fit for Semele, in whose speech and thoughts is only contempt and sourness?

PANEL. I love not, madam, to give any judgment; yet, sith your Highness com- [90] mandeth, I think to commit her tongue close prisoner to her mouth.

CYNTH. Agreed. Semele, if thou speak this twelvemonth, thou shalt forfeit thy tongue. — Behold Endymion! Alas, poor gentleman, hast thou spent thy youth in sleep, that once vowed all to my service? Hollow eyes, gray hairs, wrinkled cheeks, and decayed limbs! Is it destiny or deceit that hath brought this to pass? If the first, who could prevent thy [100] wretched stars? If the latter, I would I might know thy cruel enemy. I favored thee, Endymion, for thy honor, thy virtues, thy affections; but to bring thy thoughts within the compass of thy fortunes, I have seemed strange,<sup>35</sup> that I might have thee staid; and now are thy days ended before my favor begin. But whom have we here? Is it not Corsites?

ZON. It is, but more like a leopard <sup>36</sup> than a man. 110

CYNTH. Awake him. — How now, Corsites, what make you here? How came you deformed? Look on thy hands, and then thou seest the picture of thy face.

CORS. Miserable wretch, and accursed! How am I deluded! Madam, I ask pardon for my offence, and you see my fortune deserveth pity.

CYNTH. Speak on; thy offence cannot deserve greater punishment; but see thou [120] rehearse the truth, else shalt thou not find me as thou wishest me.

CORS. Madam, as it is no offence to be in love, being a man mortal, so I hope can it be no shame to tell with whom, my lady being heavenly. Your Majesty committed to my charge fair Tellus, whose beauty in the same moment took my heart captive that I undertook to carry her body prisoner. Since that time have I found such combats in my thoughts between love and duty, reverence and affection, that I could neither endure the conflict, nor hope for the conquest.

CYNTH. In love? A thing far unfitting the name of a captain, and (as I thought) the tough and unsmoothed nature of Corsites. But forth!

CORS. Feeling this continual war, I thought rather by parley to yield than by certain danger to perish. I unfolded to Tellus the [140 depth of my affections, and framed my tongue to utter a sweet tale of love, that was wont to sound nothing but threats of war. She, too fair to be true and too false for one so fair, after a nice<sup>37</sup> denial, practised a notable deceit, commanding me to remove Endymion from this cabin,<sup>38</sup> and carry him to some dark cave; which I, seeking to accomplish, found impossible; and so by fairies or fiends have been thus handled. 150

CYNTH. How say you, my Lords, is not Tellus always practising of some deceits? In sooth, Corsites, thy face is now too foul for a lover, and thine heart too fond for a soldier. You may see when warriors become wantons how their manners alter with their faces. Is it not a shame, Corsites, that having lived so long in Mars his camp, thou shouldst now be rock'd in Venus' cradle? Dost thou wear Cupid's quiver at thy girdle and make [160 lances of looks? Well, Corsites, rouse thyself and be as thou hast been; and let Tellus, who is made all of love, melt herself in her own looseness.

CORS. Madam, I doubt not but to recover my former state, for Tellus' beauty never wrought such love in my mind as now her deceit hath despite; and yet to be revenged of a woman were a thing than love itself more womanish. 170

GYPTES. These spots, gentleman, are to be worn out, if you rub them over with this lunar; so that in place where you received this maim<sup>39</sup> you shall find a medicine.

CORS. I thank you for that. The gods bless me from love and these pretty ladies that haunt this green.

FLOSC. Corsites, I would Tellus saw your amiable face.

ZONT. How spitefully Semele laugheth, [180 that dare not speak.

CYNTH. Could you not stir Endymion with that doubled strength of yours?

CORS. Not so much as his finger with all my force.

CYNTH. Pythagoras and Gyptes, what think you of Endymion? What reason is to be given, what remedy?

PYTH. Madam, it is impossible to yield reason for things that happen not in compass [190 of nature. It is most certain that some strange enchantment hath bound all his senses.

CYNTH. What say you, Gyptes?

GYPTES. With Pythagoras, that it is enchantment, and that so strange that no art can undo it; for that heaviness argueth a malice unremovable in the enchantress, and that no power can end it, till she die that did it, or the heavens show some means more than [200 miraculous.

FLOSC. O Endymion, could spite itself devise a mischief so monstrous as to make thee dead with life, and living, being altogether dead? Where others number their years, their hours, their minutes, and step to age by stairs, thou only hast thy years and times in a cluster, being old before you rememb'rest thou wast young.

CYNTH. No more, Floscula; pity doth [210 him no good. I would anything else might; and I vow by the unspotted honor of a lady he should not miss it. But is this all, Gyptes, that is to be done?

GYPTES. All as yet. It may be that either the enchantress shall die or else be discovered; if either happen, I will then practise the utmost of my art. In the mean season, about this grove would I have a watch, and the first living thing that toucheth Endymion to be [220 taken.

CYNTH. Corsites, what say you, will you undertake this?

CORS. Good madam, pardon me! I was overtaken too late.<sup>40</sup> I should rather break into the midst of a main battle than again fall into the hands of those fair babies.<sup>41</sup>

CYNTH. Well, I will provide others. Pythagoras and Gyptes, you shall yet remain in my

ACT V — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] SAMIAS [and] DARES.

SAMIAS. Eumenides hath told such strange tales as I may well wonder at them, but never believe them.

DAR. The other old man, what a sad speech used he, that caused us almost all to weep. Cynthia is so desirous to know the experiment of her own virtue, and so willing to ease Endymion's hard fortune, that she no sooner heard the discourse but she made herself in a readiness to try the event.<sup>2</sup>

SAM. We will also see the event. But whist! here cometh Cynthia with all her train. Let us sneak in amongst them.

Enter CYNTHIA, FLOSCULA, SEMELE, [EUMENIDES,] PANELION, etc.

CYNTH. Eumenides, it cannot sink into my head that I should be signified by that sacred fountain, for many things are there in the world to which those words may be applied.

EUM. Good madam, vouchsafe but to try; else shall I think myself most unhappy that I asked not my sweet mistress.<sup>3</sup>

CYNTH. Will you not yet tell me her name?

EUM. Pardon me, good madam, for if Endymion awake, he shall; myself have sworn never to reveal it.

CYNTH. Well, let us to Endymion. — I will not be so stately, good Endymion, not to stoop to do thee good; and if thy liberty consist in a kiss from me, thou shalt have it; and although my mouth hath been heretofore as untouched as my thoughts, yet now to recover thy life, [30 though to restore thy youth it be impossible, I will do that to Endymion which yet never mortal man could boast of heretofore, nor shall ever hope for hereafter. She kisseth him.

EUM. Madam, he beginneth to stir.

CYNTH. Soft, Eumenides; stand still.

EUM. Ah, I see his eyes almost open.

CYNTH. I command thee once again, stir not. I will stand behind him.

PAN. What do I see? Endymion al- [40 most awake?

EUM. Endymion, Endymion, art thou deaf or dumb, or hath this long sleep taken away thy memory? Ah, my sweet Endymion, seest thou not Eumenides, thy faithful friend, thy faithful Eumenides, who for thy safety hath been careless of his own content? Speak, Endymion! Endymion! Endymion!

END. Endymion? I call to mind such a name.

EUM. Hast thou forgotten thyself, Endymion? Then do I not marvel thou rememb'rest not thy friend. I tell thee thou art Endymion, and I Eumenides. Behold also Cynthia, by whose favor thou art awaked, and by whose virtue thou shalt continue thy natural course.

CYNTH. Endymion, speak, sweet Endymion! Knowest thou not Cynthia?

END. O Heavens, whom do I behold? [60 Fair Cynthia, divine Cynthia?

CYNTH. I am Cynthia, and thou Endymion.

END. Endymion! What do I here? What, a gray beard, hollow eyes, withered body, decayed limbs, — and all in one night?

EUM. One night! Thou hast here slept forty years, by what enchantress as yet it is not known; and behold, the twig to which thou layed'st thy head is now become a tree. Callest thou not Eumenides to remembrance? [70

END. Thy name I do remember by the sound, but thy favor<sup>4</sup> I do not yet call to mind; only divine Cynthia, to whom time, fortune, destiny, and death are subject, I see and remember, and in all humility I regard and reverence.

CYNTH. You have good cause to remember Eumenides, who hath for thy safety forsaken his own solace.

END. Am I that Endymion who was [80 wont in court to lead my life, and in jousts, tourneys, and arms, to exercise my youth? Am I that Endymion?

EUM. Thou art that Endymion, and I Eumenides. Wilt thou not yet call me to remembrance?

END. Ah, sweet Eumenides, I now perceive thou art he, and that myself have the name of Endymion; but that this should be my body I doubt, for how could my curled locks be [90 turned to gray hairs and my strong body to a dying weakness, having waxed old, and not knowing it?

CYNTH. Well, Endymion, arise. Awhile sit down, for that thy limbs are stiff and not able to stay<sup>5</sup> thee, and tell what hast thou seen in thy sleep all this while, what dreams, visions, thoughts, and fortunes ; for it is impossible but in so long time thou shouldest see things strange. 100

END. Fair Cynthia, I will rehearse what I have seen, humbly desiring that when I exceed in length, you give me warning, that I may end ; for to utter all I have to speak would be troublesome, although happily the strangeness may somewhat abate the tediousness.

CYNTH. Well, Endymion, begin.

END. Methought I saw a lady passing fair, but very mischievous, who in the one hand carried a knife with which she offered to cut [110 my throat, and in the other a looking-glass, wherein seeing how ill anger became ladies, she refrained from intended violence. She was accompanied with other damsels, one of which, with a stern countenance, and as it were with a settled malice engraven in her eyes, provoked her to execute mischief ; another, with visage sad, and constant only in sorrow, with her arms crossed, and watery eyes, seemed to lament my fortune, but durst not offer to prevent the [120 force. I started in my sleep, feeling my very veins to swell and my sinews to stretch with fear ; and such a cold sweat bedewed all my body that death itself could not be so terrible as the vision.

CYNTH. A strange sight ! Gyptes, at our better leisure, shall expound it.

END. After long debating with herself, mercy overcame anger, and there appeared in her heavenly face such a divine majesty [130 mingled with a sweet mildness that I was ravished with the sight above measure, and wished that I might have enjoyed the sight without end ; and so she departed with the other ladies, of which the one retained still an unmovable cruelty, the other a constant pity.

CYNTH. Poor Endymion, how wast thou affrighted ! What else ?

END. After her, immediately appeared an aged man with a beard as white as snow, [140 carrying in his hand a book with three leaves, and speaking, as I remember, these words : " Endymion, receive this book with three leaves, in which are contained counsels, policies, and pictures," and with that he offered me the book, which I rejected ; wherewith, moved with a disdainful pity, he rent the first leaf in a thousand shivers. The second time he offered it, which I refused also ; at which, bending his brows, and pitching his eyes fast to the [150 ground, as though they were fixed to the earth and not again to be removed, then suddenly casting them up to the heavens, he tore in a rage the second leaf, and offered the book only with one leaf. I know not whether fear to offend or desire to know some strange thing moved me ; I took the book, and so the old man vanished.

CYNTH. What diddest thou imagine was in the last leaf ? 160

END. There<sup>6</sup> portray'd to life, with a cold quaking in every joint, I beheld many wolves barking at thee, Cynthia, who, having ground their teeth to bite, did with striving bleed themselves to death. There might I see Ingratitude with an hundred eyes gazing for benefits, and with a thousand teeth gnawing on the bowels wherein she was bred ; Treachery stood all clothed in white, with a smiling countenance, but both her hands bathed [170 in blood ; Envy with a pale and meager face (whose body was so lean that one might tell all her bones, and whose garment was so totter'd that it was easy to number every thread) stood shooting at stars, whose darts fell down again on her own face. There might I behold drones or beetles — I know not how to term them — creeping under the wings of a princely eagle, who, being carried into her nest, sought there to suck that vein that would have [180 killed the eagle. I mused that things so base should attempt a fact<sup>7</sup> so barbarous, or durst imagine a thing so bloody. And many other things, madam, the repetition whereof may at your better leisure seem more pleasing ; for bees surfeit sometimes with honey, and the gods are gluttied with harmony, and your Highness may be dulled with delight.

CYNTH. I am content to be dieted ; therefore, let us in. Eumenides, see that Endymion be well tended, lest either eating immoderately or sleeping again too long, he fall into a deadly surfeit or into his former sleep. See this also be proclaimed : that whosoever will discover this practice<sup>8</sup> shall have of Cynthia infinite thanks and no small rewards.

[Exeunt all except ENDYMION, EUMENIDES, FLOSCULA, and SEMELE.]

FLOSC. Ah, Endymion, none so joyful as Floscula of thy restoring.

EUM. Yes, Floscula, let Eumenides be somewhat gladder, and do not that wrong to [200 the settled friendship of a man as to compare it with the light affection of a woman. Ah, my dear friend Endymion, suffer me to die with gazing at thee.

END. Eumenides, thy friendship is immortal and not to be conceived; and thy good will, Floscula, better than I have deserved; but let us all wait on Cynthia. I marvel Semele speaketh not a word.

EUM. Because if she do, she loseth her [210 tongue.

END. But how prospereth your love?

EUM. I never yet spake word since your sleep.

END. I doubt not but your affection is old and your appetite cold.

EUM. No, Endymion; thine hath made it stronger, and now are my sparks grown to flames and my fancies almost to frenzies. But let us follow, and within we will debate all [220 this matter at large. Exeunt.

SCENE II<sup>9</sup>

[Enter] Sir TOPHAS [and] EPITON.

TOP. Epi, Love hath justled my liberty from the wall,<sup>10</sup> and taken the upper hand of my reason.

EPI. Let me then trip up the heels of your affection and thrust your good will into the gutter.

TOP. No, Epi; Love is a Lord of Misrule<sup>11</sup> and keepeth Christmas in my corpse.

EPI. No doubt there is good cheer. What dishes of delight doth his Lordship feast [10 you withal?

TOP. First, with a great platter of plum porridge of pleasure, wherein is stewed the mutton of distrust.

EPI. Excellent love-lap.<sup>12</sup>

TOP. Then cometh a pie of patience, a hen of honey, a goose of gall, a capon of care, and many other viands, some sweet and some sour, which proveth love to be, as it was said of in old years, Dulce venenum.<sup>13</sup> 20

EPI. A brave banquet!

<sup>9</sup> Unlocated; presumably the same as I, i.

<sup>10</sup> I.e., love has proved superior to my freedom, as one man, meeting another on the street jostles him from the most desirable place, that next the wall.

TOP. But, Epi, I pray thee feel on my chin; something pricketh me. What dost thou feel or see?

EPI. There are three or four little hairs.

TOP. I pray thee call it my beard. How shall I be troubled when this young spring<sup>14</sup> shall grow to a great wood!

EPI. Oh, sir, your chin is but a quiller<sup>15</sup> yet; you will be most majestic when it is [30 full fledge. But I marvel that you love Dipsas, that old crone.

TOP. Agnosco veteris vestigia flammæ<sup>16</sup>: I love the smoke of an old fire.

EPI. Why she is so cold that no fire can thaw her thoughts.

TOP. It is an old goose, Epi, that will eat no oats; old kine will kick, old rats gnaw cheese, and old sacks will have much patching. I prefer an old cony<sup>17</sup> before a rabbit-sucker,<sup>18</sup> [40 and an ancient hen before a young chicken-peeper.

EPI. [aside] Argumentum ab antiquitate; my master loveth antique work.

TOP. Give me a pippin that is withered like an old wife!

EPI. Good, sir.

TOP. Then — a contrario sequitur argumentum — give me a wife that looks like an old pippin. 50

EPI. [aside] Nothing hath made my master a fool but flat scholarship.

TOP. Knowest thou not that old wine is best?

EPI. Yes.

TOP. And thou knowest that like will to like?

EPI. Ay.

TOP. And thou knowest that Venus loved the best wine? 60

EPI. So.

TOP. Then I conclude that Venus was an old woman in an old cup of wine, for est Venus in vinis, ignis in igne fuit.<sup>19</sup>

EPI. O lepidum caput,<sup>20</sup> O madcap master! You were worthy to win Dipsas, were she as old again; for in your love you have worn the nap of your wit quite off and made it thread-bare. But soft, who comes here?

Within the fire of wine, the fire of love! (Ovid, Ars Amatoria, i, 244.)

<sup>20</sup> Terence, Adelphi, V, ix, 9.

[Enter SAMIAS and DARES.]

TOP. My solicitors. 70

SAM. All hail, Sir Tophas; how feel you yourself?

TOP. Stately in every joint, which the common people term stiffness. Doth Dipsas stoop? Will she yield? Will she bend?

DAR. Oh, sir, as much as you would wish, for her chin almost toucheth her knees.

EPI. Master, she is bent, I warrant you.

TOP. What conditions doth she ask?

SAM. She hath vowed she will never love [80 any that hath not a tooth in his head less than she.

TOP. How many hath she?

DAR. One.

EPI. That goeth hard, master, for then you must have none.

TOP. A small request, and agreeable to the gravity of her years. What should a wise man do with his mouth full of bones like a charnel house? <sup>21</sup> The turtle <sup>22</sup> true hath ne'er a [90 tooth.

SAM [aside] Thy master is in a notable vein, that will lose his teeth to be like a turtle.

EPI. [aside] Let him lose his tongue, too; I care not.

DAR. Nay, you must also have no nails, for she long since hath cast hers.

TOP. That I yield to. What a quiet life shall Dipsas and I lead when we can neither bite nor scratch! You may see, youths, [100 how age provides for peace.

SAM [aside] How shall we do to make him leave his love? For we never spake to her.

DAR. [aside] Let me alone. — [to Sir TOPHAS] She is a notable witch, and hath turn'd her maid Bagoa to an aspen tree, for bewraying her secrets.

TOP. I honor her for her cunning; for now, when I am weary of walking on two legs, what a pleasure may she do me to turn me to [110 some goodly ass, and help me to four.

DAR. Nay, then I must tell you the truth. Her husband, Geron, is come home, who this fifty years hath had her to wife.

TOP. What do I hear? Hath she an husband? Go to the sexton <sup>23</sup> and tell him Desire is dead, and will him to dig his grave. O Heavens, an husband! What death is agreeable to <sup>24</sup> my fortune?

SAM. Be not desperate, and we will [120 help you to find a young lady.

TOP. I love no grissels <sup>25</sup>; they are so brittle they will crack like glass, or so dainty that if they be touched they are straight of the fashion of wax; animus majoribus instat <sup>26</sup>: I desire old matrons. What a sight would it be to embrace one whose hair were as orient as the pearl, whose teeth shall be so pure a watchet <sup>27</sup> that they shall stain the truest turquoise, whose nose shall throw more [130 beams from it than the fiery carbuncle, whose eyes shall be environ'd about with redness exceeding the deepest coral, and whose lips might compare with silver for the paleness! Such a one if you can help me to, I will by piecemeal curtail <sup>28</sup> my affections towards Dipsas, and walk my swelling thoughts till they be cold.

EPI. Wisely provided. How say you, my friends; will you angle for my master's [140 cause?

SAM. Most willingly.

DAR. If we speed him <sup>29</sup> not shortly, I will burn my cap. We will serve him of the spades, and dig an old wife out of the grave that shall be answerable to his gravity.

TOP. Youths, adieu; he that bringeth me first news shall possess mine inheritance.

[Exit.]

DAR. What, is thy master landed?

EPI. Know you not that my master is [150 liber tenens?

SAM. What 's that?

EPI. A freeholder. But I will after him.

SAM. And we to hear what news of Endymion for the conclusion. Exeunt.

SCENE III <sup>30</sup>

[Enter] PANELION [and] ZONTES.

PAN. Who would have thought that Tellus, being so fair by nature, so honorable by birth, so wise by education, would have ent'red into a mischief to the gods so odious, to men so detestable, and to her friend <sup>31</sup> so malicious.

ZON. If Bagoa had not bewrayed it, how then should it have come to light? But we see that gold and fair words are of force to corrupt the strongest men, and therefore able to work silly women like wax. 10

PAN. I marvel what Cynthia will determine in this cause.

ZON. I fear, as in all causes: hear of it in justice, and then judge of it in mercy; for how can it be that she that is unwilling to punish her deadliest foes with disgrace, will revenge injuries of her train with death?

PAN. That old witch, Dipsas, in a rage, having understood her practice to be discovered, turned poor Bagoa to an aspen tree. But [20 let us make haste and bring Tellus before Cynthia, for she was coming out after us.

ZON. Let us go. Exeunt.

[Enter] CYNTHIA, SEMELE, FLOSCULA, DIPAS, ENDYMION, EUMENIDES, [GERON, PYTHAGORAS, GYPTES, and Sir TOPHAS].

CYNTH. Dipsas, thy years are not so many as thy vices, yet more in number than commonly nature doth afford or justice should permit. Hast thou almost these fifty years practised that detested wickedness of witchcraft? Wast thou, so simple as for to know the nature of simples, of all creatures to be [30 most sinful? Thou hast threat'ned to turn my course awry and alter by thy damnable art the government that I now possess by the eternal gods; but know thou, Dipsas, and let all the enchanters know, that Cynthia, being placed for light on earth, is also protected by the powers of Heaven. Breathe out thou mayst words; gather thou mayst herbs; find out thou mayst stones agreeable to thine art; yet of no force to appal my heart, in [40 which courage is so rooted, and constant persuasion of the mercy of the gods so grounded, that all thy witchcraft I esteem as weak as the world doth thy case wretched.

This noble gentleman, Geron, once thy husband but now thy mortal hate, didst thou procure to live in a desert, almost desperate; Endymion, the flower of my court and the hope of succeeding time, hast thou bewitched by art, before thou wouldest suffer him to flourish [50 by nature.

DIPSAS. Madam, things past may be repented, not recalled; there is nothing so wicked that I have not done, nor anything so wished for as death; yet among all the things that I committed, there is nothing so much tor-menteth my rented<sup>32</sup> and ransack'd thoughts as that in the prime of my husband's youth I divorced him by my devilish art; for which if to die might be amends, I would not live [60 till to-morrow; if to live and still be more miserable would better content him, I would wish of all creatures to be oldest and ugliest.

GERON. Dipsas, thou hast made this difference between me and Endymion, that being both young, thou hast caused me to wake in melancholy, losing the joys of my youth, and him to sleep, not rememb'ring youth.

CYNTH. Stay, here cometh Tellus; we shall now know all. 70

[Re-enter] PANELION [and ZONTES with] COR-SITES [and] TELLUS.

CORS. I would to Cynthia thou couldest make as good an excuse in truth as to me thou hast done by wit.

TELLUS. Truth shall be mine answer, and therefore I will not study for an excuse.

CYNTH. Is it possible, Tellus, that so few years should harbor so many mischiefs? Thy swelling pride have I borne, because it is a thing that beauty maketh blameless, which the more it exceedeth fairness in measure, the [80 more it stretcheth itself in disdain. Thy devices against Corsites I smile at, for that wits, the sharper they are, the shrewder<sup>33</sup> they are; but this unacquainted<sup>34</sup> and most unnatural practice with a vile enchantress against so noble a gentleman as Endymion I abhor as a thing most malicious, and will revenge as a deed most monstrous.

And as for you, Dipsas, I will send you into the desert amongst wild beasts, and try [90 whether you can cast lions, tigers, boars, and bears into as dead a sleep as you did Endymion, or turn them to trees, as you have done Bagoa. — But tell me, Tellus, what was the cause of this cruel part, far unfitting thy sex, in which nothing should be but simple-ness, and much disagreeing from thy face, in which nothing seemed to be but softness?

TELLUS. Divine Cynthia, by whom I receive my life and am content to end it, I [100 can neither excuse my fault without lying, nor confess it without shame; yet were it possible that in so heavenly thoughts as yours there could fall such earthly motions as mine, I would then hope, if not to be pardoned without extreme punishment, yet to be heard without great marvel.

CYNTH. Say on, Tellus; I cannot imagine anything that can color <sup>35</sup> such a cruelty.

TELLUS. Endymion, that Endymion, in [110 the prime of his youth so ravish'd my heart with love that to obtain my desires I could not find means, nor to resi[s]t <sup>36</sup> them reason. What was she that favored not Endymion, being young, wise, honorable, and virtuous; besides, what metal was she made of (be she mortal) that is not affected with the spice, nay, infected with the poison of that not-to-be-expressed yet always-to-be-felt love, which breaketh the brains and never bruises the [120 brow, consumeth the heart and never toucheth the skin, and maketh a deep wound to be felt before any scar at all be seen? <sup>37</sup> My heart, too tender to withstand such a divine fury, yielded to love. Madam, I not without blushing confess, yielded to love.

CYNTH. A strange effect of love, to work such an extreme hate. How say you, Endymion? All this was for love!

END. I say, madam, then the gods send [130 me a woman's hate.

CYNTH. That were as bad, for then by contrary you should never sleep. But on, Tellus; let us hear the end.

TELLUS. Feeling a continual burning in all my bowels, and a bursting almost in every vein, I could not smother the inward fire, but it must needs be perceived by the outward smoke; and, by the flying abroad of divers sparks, divers judged of my scalding [140 flames. Endymion, as full of art as wit, marking mine eyes, (in which he might see almost his own,) my sighs, (by which he might ever hear his name sounded,) aimed at my heart, in which he was assured his person was imprinted, and by questions wrung out that which was ready to burst out. When he saw the depth of my affections, he swore that mine in respect of his were as fumes to Ætna, valleys to Alps, ants to eagles, and nothing could [150 be compared to my beauty but his love and eternity. Thus drawing a smooth shoe upon a crooked foot, <sup>38</sup> he made me believe that (which all of our sex willingly acknowledge) I was beautiful, and to wonder (which indeed is a thing miraculous) that any of his sex should be faithful.

CYNTH. Endymion, how will you clear yourself?

END. Madam, by mine own accuser. 160

CYNTH. Well, Tellus, proceed; but briefly, lest taking delight in uttering thy love, thou offend us with the length of it.

TELLUS. I will, madam, quickly make an end of my love and my tale. Finding continual increase of my tormenting thoughts, and that the enjoying of my love made deeper wounds than the entering into it, I could find no means to ease my grief but to follow Endymion, and continually to have him in [170 the object of mine eyes who had me slave and subject to his love. But in the moment that I feared his falsehood and fried myself most in mine affections, I found — ah, grief, even then I lost myself! — I found him in most melancholy and desperate terms cursing his stars, his state, the earth, the heavens, the world, and all for the love of —

CYNTH. Of whom? Tellus, speak boldly.

TELLUS. Madam, I dare not utter, for [180 fear to offend.

CYNTH. Speak, I say; who dare take offence, if thou be commanded by Cynthia?

TELLUS. For the love of Cynthia.

CYNTH. For my love, Tellus? That were strange. — Endymion, is it true?

END. In all things, madam, Tellus doth not speak false.

CYNTH. What will this breed to in the end? Well, Endymion, we shall hear all. 190

TELLUS. I, seeing my hopes turn'd to mishaps, and a settled dissembling towards me, and an unmovable desire to Cynthia, forgetting both myself and my sex, fell unto this unnatural hate; for knowing your virtues, Cynthia, to be immortal, I could not have an imagination to withdraw him; and finding mine own affections unquenchable, I could not carry the mind that any else should possess what I had pursued. For though in maj- [200 esty, beauty, virtue, and dignity, I always humbled and yielded myself to Cynthia, yet in affections I esteemed myself equal with the goddesses, and all other creatures, according to their states, with myself; for stars to their bigness have their lights, and the sun hath no more, and little pitchers, when they can hold no more, are as full as great vessels that run over. Thus, madam, in all truth have I uttered the unhappiness of my love and [210

the cause of my hate, yielding wholly to that divine judgment which never erred for want of wisdom or envied <sup>39</sup> for too much partiality.

CYNTH. How say you, my Lords, to this matter?—But what say you, Endymion; hath Tellus told truth?

END. Madam, in all things but in that she said I loved her and swore to honor her.

CYNTH. Was there such a time whenas for my love thou didst vow thyself to death, [220 and in respect of it loath'd thy life? Speak, Endymion; I will not revenge it with hate.

END. The time was, madam, and is, and ever shall be, that I honored your Highness above all the world; but to stretch it so far as to call it love I never durst. There hath none pleased mine eye but Cynthia, none delighted mine ears but Cynthia, none possessed my heart but Cynthia. I have forsaken all other fortunes to follow Cynthia, and here I [230 stand ready to die, if it please Cynthia. Such a difference hath the gods set between our states that all must be duty, loyalty, and reverence; nothing (without it vouchsafe your Highness) be termed love. My unspotted thoughts, my languishing body, my discontented life, let them obtain by princely favor that which to challenge they must not presume, only wishing of impossibilities; with imagination of which I will spend my spirits, and to my- [240 self, that no creature may hear, softly call it love; and if any urge to utter what I whisper, then will I name it honor. From this sweet contemplation if I be not driven, I shall live of all men the most content, taking more pleasure in mine aged thoughts than ever I did in my youthful actions.

CYNTH. Endymion, this honorable respect of thine shall be christ'ned love in thee, and my reward for it, favor. Persevere, Endy- [250 mion, in loving me, and I account more strength in a true heart than in a walled city. I have labored to win all, and study to keep such as I have won; but those that neither my favor can move to continue constant, nor my offered benefits get to be faithful, the gods shall either reduce to truth, or revenge their treacheries with justice. Endymion, continue as thou hast begun, and thou shalt find that Cynthia shineth not on thee in vain. [260

END. Your Highness hath blessed me, and your words have again restored my youth; methinks I feel my joints strong and these mouldy hairs to moult, and all by your virtue,

Cynthia, into whose hands the balance that weigheth time and fortune are committed.

CYNTH. What, young again? Then it is pity to punish Tellus.

TELLUS. Ah, Endymion, now I know thee and ask pardon of thee; suffer me still to [270 wish thee well.

END. Tellus, Cynthia must command what she will.

FLOSC. Endymion, I rejoice to see thee in thy former estate.

END. Good Floscula, to thee also am I in my former affections.

EUM. Endymion, the comfort of my life, how am I ravished with a joy matchless, saving only the enjoying of my mistress. 280

CYNTH. Endymion, you must now tell who Eumenides shrineth for his saint.

END. Semele, madam.

CYNTH. Semele, Eumenides? Is it Semele, the very wasp of all women, whose tongue stingeth as much as an adder's tooth?

EUM. It is Semele, Cynthia, the possessing of whose love must only prolong my life.

CYNTH. Nay, sith Endymion is restored, we will have all parties pleased. Semele, [290 are you content after so long trial of his faith, such rare secrecy, such unspotted love, to take Eumenides? Why speak you not? Not a word?

END. Silence, madam, consents; that is most true.

CYNTH. It is true, Endymion. Eumenides, take Semele; take her, I say.

EUM. Humble thanks, madam; now only do I begin to live. 300

SEM. A hard choice, madam, either to be married if I say nothing, or to lose my tongue if I speak a word. Yet do I rather choose to have my tongue cut out than my heart distempered; I will not have him.

CYNTH. Speaks the parrot? She shall nod hereafter with signs. Cut off her tongue, nay her head, that having a servant of honorable birth, honest manners, and true love, will not be persuaded. 310

SEM. He is no faithful lover, madam; for then would he have asked <sup>40</sup> his mistress.

GER. Had he not been faithful, he had never seen into the fountain, and so lost <sup>41</sup> his friend and mistress.

EUM. Thine own thoughts, sweet Semele, witness against thy words; for what hast thou found in my life but love? And as yet what have I found in my love but bitterness? Madam, pardon Semele, and let my [320 tongue ransom hers.

CYNTH. Thy tongue, Eumenides? What, shouldst thou live wanting a tongue to blaze the beauty of Semele? Well, Semele, I will not command love, for it cannot be enforced; 'let me entreat it.

SEM. I am content your Highness shall command, for now only do I think Eumenides faithful, that is willing to lose his tongue for my sake; yet loath, because it should [330 do me better service. Madam, I accept of Eumenides.

CYNTH. I thank you, Semele.

EUM. Ah, happy Eumenides, that hast a friend so faithful and a mistress so fair! With what sudden mischief will the gods daunt this excess of joy? Sweet Semele, I live or die as thou wilt.

CYNTH. What shall become of Tellus? Tellus, you know Endymion is vowed to [340 a service from which death cannot remove him. Corsites casteth still a lovely <sup>42</sup> [look] <sup>43</sup> towards you. How say you, will [you] <sup>44</sup> have your Corsites, and so receive pardon for all that is past?

TELLUS. Madam, most willingly.

CYNTH. But I cannot tell whether Corsites be agreed.

CORS. Ay, madam, more happy to enjoy Tellus than the monarchy of the world. 350

EUM. Why, she caused you to be pinch'd with fairies.

CORS. Ay, but her fairness hath pinched my heart more deeply.

CYNTH. Well, enjoy thy love. — But what have you wrought in the castle, Tellus?

TELLUS. Only the picture of Endymion.

CYNTH. Then so much of Endymion as his picture cometh to, possess and play withal.

CORS. Ah, my sweet Tellus, my love shall be as thy beauty is, matchless. 361

CYNTH. Now it resteth, <sup>45</sup> Dipsas, that if thou wilt forswear that vile art of enchanting, Geron hath promised again to receive thee; otherwise, if thou be wedded to that wickedness, I must and will see it punished to the uttermost.

DIPSAS. Madam, I renounce both substance and shadow of that most horrible and hateful trade, vowing to the gods continual penance, and to your Highness obedience.

CYNTH. How say you, Geron; will you admit her to your wife?

GER. Ay, with more joy than I did the first day, for nothing could happen to make me happy but only her forsaking that lewd <sup>46</sup> and detestable course. — Dipsas, I embrace thee.

DIPSAS. And I thee, Geron, to whom I will hereafter recite the cause of these my first follies. 380

CYNTH. Well, Endymion, nothing resteth now but that we depart. Thou hast my favor, Tellus her friend, Eumenides in Paradise with his Semele, Geron contented with Dipsas.

SIR TOP. Nay, soft; I cannot handsomely go to bed without Bagoa.

CYNTH. Well, Sir Tophas, it may be there are more virtues in me than myself knoweth of, for Endymion I awaked, and at my words [390 he waxed young. I will try whether I can turn this tree again to thy true love.

TOP. Turn her to a true love or false, so she be a wench I care not.

CYNTH. Bagoa, Cynthia putteth an end to thy hard fortunes; for, being turn'd to a tree for revealing a truth, I will recover thee again, if in my power be the effect of truth.

[BAGOA recovers human shape.]

TOP. Bagoa, a bots <sup>47</sup> upon thee!

CYNTH. Come, my Lords, let us in. [400 You, Gyptes and Pythagoras, if you [can] <sup>48</sup> content yourselves in our court, to fall from vain follies of philosophers to such virtues as are here practised, you shall be entertained according to your deserts, for Cynthia is no stepmother to strangers.

PYTHAG. I had rather in Cynthia's court spend [one hour] <sup>49</sup> than in Greece [ten years]. <sup>49</sup>

GYPTES. And I choose rather to live by the sight of Cynthia than by the possessing [410 of all Egypt.

CYNTH. Then follow.

EUM. We all attend.

THE EPILOGUE

A MAN walking abroad, the Wind and Sun strove for sovereignty, the one with his blast, the other with his beams. The Wind blew hard; the man wrapped his garment about him harder. It blust'ered more strongly; he then girt it fast to him. "I cannot prevail," said the Wind. The Sun, casting her crystal beams, began to warm the man; he unloosed his gown. Yet it shined brighter; he then put it off. "I yield," said the Wind, "for if thou continue shining, he will also put off his coat."

Dread Sovereign, the malicious that seek to overthrow us with threats, do but stiffen our thoughts, and make them sturdier in storms; but if your Highness vouchsafe with your favorable beams to glance upon us, we shall not only stoop, but with all humility lay both our hands and hearts at your Majesty's feet.

THE HONORABLE HISTORIE
of frier Bacon, and frier Bongay.

As it was plaide by her Maiesties seruants.

Made by Robert Greene Maister of Arts.

LONDON,
Printed for Edward White, and are to be sold at his shop, at the little North dore of Poules, at the signe of the Gun. 1594.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

IN this charming comedy a great thirteenth-century scientist, long reputed a magician, is extolled because he practises for England's glory an art less devilish but no less astounding than that of Faustus. Though the dates of composition and production are uncertain, 1589 or just after seems most likely; and there can be little doubt that it was Marlowe's play which prompted Greene to glorify Roger Bacon. His source for that part of his theme is The Famous History of Friar Bacon, probably written late in the sixteenth century, though the earliest extant edition was in 1627. From it Greene also took the feud of the two neighbors and their sons.

The love story, however, seems to be original. The historical background is almost entirely fictitious; there is no warrant in fact for the Prince's relations with either Bacon or Margaret. But the latter has a higher claim to our regard: she is the first thoroughly admirable heroine of the Elizabethan theatre. Whatever delight the spectator may have taken in the conjuring tricks of Bacon and in his triumph over his German rival, the most delightful part of the play for the modern reader is the dewy story of the Fair Maid of Fressingfield. This is sheer romance; we are not to ask embarrassing questions about historicity, nor apply to the cruel test imposed by Lacy the criteria of realism. Here is fairy-tale material, gracefully woven into a play otherwise compounded of patriotic fervor and somewhat clumsy burlesque.

Henslowe's "Diary" furnishes several clues which indicate the play's survival on the stage. It was being acted in 1592 and 1593 by Lord Strange's Men, by the Queen's and Sussex's Men jointly in 1594, and by the Admiral's Men in 1602, when Thomas Middleton wrote for it a prologue and an epilogue which have not been preserved. The Quarto of 1630 states that the company of the Prince Palatine (successors of the Admiral's) has "lately" played it.

The standard edition of Greene's Plays and Poems is that of J. C. Collins (1905). Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay was edited by A. W. Ward with Faustus (Fourth Edition, 1901), by C. M. Gayley (Representative English Comedies, 1903), by J. S. Farmer (1914), and by W. W. Greg (1926). It first appeared, in quarto, in 1594 (reprinted 1630, 1655). The present text is based on the Harvard copy of the first edition, of which but two other copies seem to have survived. The text has also been collated with Greg's reprint of the British Museum copy. Since the Harvard copy lacks leaves A 4, I 1, 2, the present edition rests at those points on photographs of the Huntington Library copy.

[ACT I — SCENE I] <sup>7</sup>

*Enter [PRINCE] EDWARD <sup>8</sup> malcontented; with LACY, EARL OF LINCOLN; JOHN WARREN,
EARL OF SUSSEX; ERMSBY, gentleman; and RALPH <sup>9</sup> SIMNELL, the King's Fool.*

LACY. [aside to WARREN and ERMSBY] Why looks my Lord like to a troubled sky
When heaven's bright shine is shadowed with a fog?

<sup>1</sup> He was brother-in-law to Henry III.

<sup>2</sup> Henry de Lacy, afterwards one of the counsellors of Edward I.

lectured at both Oxford and Cambridge.

<sup>6</sup> No original is known for this character, whose name is Dutch; the Netherlands still were part of the Empire.

<sup>7</sup> Unlocated. Presumably the Prince's lodgings at Framlingham (see II, i, 33).

Alate <sup>10</sup> we ran the deer, and through the lawnds

Stripp'd <sup>11</sup> with our nags the lofty frolic bucks,
That scudded 'fore the teasers <sup>12</sup> like the wind.
Ne'er was the deer of merry Fressingfield
So lustily pull'd down by jolly mates,
Nor shar'd the farmers such fat venison,
So frankly <sup>13</sup> dealt, this hundred years before;
Nor have I seen my Lord more frolic in the chase, <sup>10</sup>
And now — chang'd to a melancholy dump.

WAR. After the Prince got to the Keeper's lodge,
And had been jocund in the house awhile,
Tossing off ale and milk in country cans,
Whether it was the country's sweet content,
Or else the bonny damsel fill'd us drink,
That seem'd so stately in her stammel <sup>14</sup> red,

<sup>14</sup> A kind of coarse woollen.

Or that a qualm did cross his stomach then —
But straight he fell into his passions.<sup>15</sup>

ERMS. Sirrah Ralph, what say you to your master? 20

Shall he thus all amort <sup>16</sup> live malcontent?

RALPH. Hearest thou, Ned? — Nay, look if he will speak to me!

EDW. What say'st thou to me, fool?

RALPH. I prithee, tell me, Ned, art thou in love with the Keeper's daughter?

EDW. How if I be? what then?

RALPH. Why, then, sirrah, I'll teach thee
how to deceive Love.

EDW. How, Ralph? 30

RALPH. Marry, Sirrah Ned, thou shalt put on my cap and my coat and my dagger, and I will put on thy clothes and thy sword; and so thou shalt be my fool.

EDW. And what of this?

RALPH. Why, so thou shalt beguile Love; for Love is such a proud scab,<sup>17</sup> that he will never meddle with fools nor children. Is not Ralph's counsel good, Ned?

EDW. Tell me, Ned Lacy, didst thou mark the maid, 40
How lively in her country weeds she look'd?

A bonnier wench all Suffolk cannot yield —
All Suffolk! nay, all England holds none such.

RALPH. Sirrah Will Ermsby, Ned is deceived.

ERMS. Why, Ralph?

RALPH. He says all England hath no such,
and I say, and I'll stand to it, there is one better in Warwickshire.

WAR. How provest thou that, Ralph? 50

RALPH. Why, is not the abbot a learned man, and hath read many books, and thinkest thou he hath not more learning than thou to choose a bonny wench? Yes, I warrant thee, by his whole grammar.

ERMS. A good reason, Ralph.

EDW. I tell thee, Lacy, that her sparkling
eyes

Do lighten forth sweet love's alluring fire;
And in her tresses she doth fold the looks
Of such as gaze upon her golden hair; 60
Her bashful white, mix'd with the morning's red,

Luna doth boast upon her lovely cheeks;
Her front <sup>18</sup> is Beauty's table, where she paints
The glories of her gorgeous excellence;
Her teeth are shelves of precious marguerites,<sup>19</sup>
Richly enclosed with ruddy coral cliffs.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>18</sup> Forehead. <sup>19</sup> Pearls. <sup>20</sup> Old eds. clews.

Tush, Lacy, she is Beauty's overmatch,
If thou survey'st her curious imagery.<sup>21</sup>

LACY. I grant, my Lord, the damsel is as fair

As simple Suffolk's homely towns can yield; [70
But in the court be quainter <sup>22</sup> dames than she,
Whose faces are enrich'd with honor's taint,<sup>23</sup>
Whose beauties stand upon the stage of Fame,
And vaunt their trophies in the courts of love.

EDW. Ah, Ned, but hadst thou watch'd her as myself,

And seen the secret beauties of the maid,
Their courtly coyness were but foolery.

ERMS. Why, how watch'd you her, my
Lord?

EDW. Whenas she swept like Venus through the house,

And in her shape fast folded up my thoughts,
Into the milkhouse went I with the maid, [81
And there amongst the cream bowls she did shine

As Pallas 'mongst her princely huswifery.

She turn'd her smock over her lily arms,
And dived them into milk to run her cheese;
But, whiter than the milk, her crystal skin,
Checked with lines of azure, made her blush <sup>24</sup>
That art or nature durst bring for compare.
Ermsby, if thou hadst seen, as I did note it
well,

How Beauty play'd the huswife, how this girl,
Like Lucrece, laid her fingers to the work, [91
Thou wouldest, with Tarquin, hazard Rome
and all

To win the lovely maid of Fressingfield.

RALPH. Sirrah Ned, wouldst fain have her?

EDW. Ay, Ralph.

RALPH. Why, Ned, I have laid the plot in my head; thou shalt have her already.

EDW. I'll give thee a new coat, an learn <sup>25</sup> me that.

RALPH. Why, Sirrah Ned, we'll ride to [100
Oxford to Friar Bacon. O, he is a brave scholar, sirrah; they say he is a brave necro-mancer, that he can make women of devils, and he can juggle cats into costermongers.

EDW. And how then, Ralph?

RALPH. Marry, sirrah, thou shalt go to him;
and because thy father Harry shall not miss thee, he shall turn me into thee; and I'll to the court, and I'll prince it out; and he shall make

<sup>24</sup> Would have made that woman blush whom art, etc.

<sup>25</sup> If thou teachest.

thee either a silken purse full of gold, or [110
else a fine wrought smock.

EDW. But how shall I have the maid?

RALPH. Marry, sirrah, if thou beest a silken purse full of gold, then on Sundays she'll hang thee by her side, and you must not say a word.
Now, sir, when she comes into a great press of people, for fear of the cutpurse on a sudden she'll swap <sup>26</sup> thee into her plackerd; <sup>27</sup> then, sirrah, being there, you may plead for yourself. 120

ERMS. Excellent policy!

EDW. But how if I be a wrought smock?

RALPH. Then she'll put thee into her chest and lay thee into lavender, and upon some good day she'll put thee on; and at night when you go to bed, then being turn'd from a smock to a man, you may make up the match.

LACY. Wonderfully wisely counselled, Ralph.

EDW. Ralph shall have a new coat.

RALPH. God thank you when I have [130
it on my back, Ned.

EDW. Lacy, the fool hath laid a perfect plot;

Forwhy <sup>28</sup> our country Margaret is so coy,
And stands so much upon her honest points, <sup>29</sup>
That marriage or no market with the maid.
Ermsby, it must be necromantic spells
And charms of art that must enchain her love,
Or else shall Edward never win the girl.

Therefore, my wags, we'll horse us in the morn,

And post to Oxford to this jolly friar; 140
Bacon shall by his magic do this deed.

WAR. Content, my Lord; and that's a speedy way

To wean these headstrong puppies from the teat.

EDW. I am unknown, not taken for the prince;

They only deem us frolic courtiers,
That revel thus among our liege's game;
Therefore I have devised a policy.

Lacy, thou know'st next Friday is Saint
James', <sup>30</sup>

And then the country flocks to Harleston Fair;
Then will the Keeper's daughter frolic there,
And overshine the troop of all the maids 151
That come to see and to be seen that day.

Haunt thee disguis'd among the country
swains;

<sup>27</sup> Placket, slit in skirt or petticoat.

<sup>29</sup> Insists to such an extent on considerations of chastity.

<sup>30</sup> July 25.

Feign th'art a farmer's son, not far from thence;

Espy her loves, and who she liketh best;

Cote <sup>31</sup> him, and court her, to control the clown;

Say that the courtier tired all in green,
That help'd her handsomely to run her cheese,
And fill'd her father's lodge with venison,
Commends him, and sends fairings to herself.
Buy something worthy of her parentage, 161
Not worth her beauty; for, Lacy, then the fair

Affords no jewel fitting for the maid.

And when thou talkest of me, note if she blush:
O, then she loves; but if her cheeks wax pale,
Disdain it is. Lacy, send how she fares,
And spare no time nor cost to win her loves.

LACY. I will, my Lord, so execute this charge

As if that Lacy were in love with her.

P. EDW. Send letters speedily to Oxford of the news. 170

RALPH. And, Sirrah Lacy, buy me a thousand thousand million of fine bells.

LACY. What wilt thou do with them, Ralph?

RALPH. Marry, every time that Ned sighs for the Keeper's daughter, I'll tie a bell about him; and so within three or four days I will send word to his father Harry that his son and my master Ned is become love's morris dance.

P. EDW. Well, Lacy, look with care unto thy charge,

And I will haste to Oxford to the friar, 180
That he by art and thou by secret gifts

Mayst make me lord of merry Fressingfield.

LACY. God send your Honor your heart's desire.

Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>32</sup>

Enter FRIAR BACON, with MILES, his poor scholar, with books under his arm; with them BURDEN, MASON, [and] CLEMENT, three doc- tors.

BACON. Miles, where are you?

MILES. Hic sum, do[c]tissime et reverendis- sime doctor.

BACON. [Attulisti'] <sup>33</sup> libros meos de necro- mantia?

MILES. Ecce quam bonum et quam jucundum

<sup>35</sup> A parody of Psalm cxxxiii, 1.

BACON. Now, masters of our academic state,
That rule in Oxford, viceroys in your place, [9
Whose heads contain maps of the liberal arts,
Spending your time in depth of learned skill,
Why flock you thus to Bacon's secret cell,
A friar newly stall'd in Brazen-nose? <sup>36</sup>
Say what's your mind, that I may make reply.

BURD. Bacon, we hear that <sup>37</sup> long we have
suspect,
That thou art read in magic's mystery ;
In pyromancy, to divine by flames ;
To tell, by [hydromantic], <sup>38</sup> ebbs and tides ;
By aeromancy to discover doubts,
To plain out <sup>39</sup> questions, as Apollo did. 20 BACON. Well, Master Burden, what of all
this?

MILES. Marry, sir, he doth but fulfil, by rehearsing of these names, the fable of the Fox and the Grapes ; that which is above us pertains nothing to us.

BURD. I tell thee, Bacon, Oxford makes report,
Nay, England and the court of Henry says,
Th'art making of a brazen head by art,
Which shall unfold strange doubts and aphorisms,

And read a lecture in philosophy ; 30
And, by the help of devils and ghastly fiends,
Thou mean'st, ere many years or days be past,
To compass England with a wall of brass.

BACON. And what of this?

MILES. What of this, master ! Why, he doth speak mystically ; for he knows, if your skill fail to make a brazen head, yet Mother Waters' strong ale will fit his turn to make him have a copper nose.

CLEM. Bacon, we come not grieving at thy
skill, 40
But joying that our academy <sup>40</sup> yields
A man suppos'd the wonder of the world ;
For if thy cunning work these miracles,
England and Europe shall admire thy fame,
And Oxford shall in characters of brass,
And statues, such as were built up in Rome,
Eternize <sup>41</sup> Friar Bacon for his art.

MASON. Then, gentle friar, tell us thy intent.

BACON. Seeing you come as friends unto the friar, 49

<sup>42</sup> Brasenose College was not founded till 1509, but one of its buildings, "Brasen Nose Hall," was very old.

<sup>47</sup> Accented on second syllable.

Resolve you, <sup>42</sup> Doctors, Bacon can by books
Make storming Boreas thunder from his cave,
And dim fair Luna to a dark eclipse.
The great archruler, potentate of hell,
Trembles when Bacon bids him or his fiends
Bow to the force of his [pentagonon]. <sup>43</sup>
What art can work, the frolic friar knows ;
And therefore will I turn my magic books,
And strain out necromancy to the deep.
I have contriv'd and fram'd a head of brass
(I made Belcephon hammer out the stuff), [40
And that by art shall read philosophy ;
And I will strengthen England by my skill,
That if ten Cæsars liv'd and reign'd in Rome,
With all the legions Europe doth contain,
They should not touch a grass of English ground.

The work that Ninus rear'd at Babylon,
The brazen walls fram'd by Semiramis,
Carved out like to the portal of the sun,
Shall not be such as rings the English strand
From Dover to the marketplace of Rye. 70

BURD. Is this possible?

MILES. I'll bring ye two or three witnesses.

BURD. What be those?

MILES. Marry, sir, three or four as honest devils and good companions as any be in hell.

MASON. No doubt but magic may do much
in this ;

For he that reads but mathematic rules
Shall find conclusions that avail to work Wonders that pass the common sense of
men.

BURD. But Bacon roves a bow beyond his reach, <sup>44</sup> 80

And tells of more than magic can perform,
Thinking to get a fame by fooleries.
Have I not pass'd as far in state <sup>45</sup> of schools,
And read of many secrets? Yet to think
That heads of brass can utter any voice,
Or more, to tell of deep philosophy,
This is a fable Æsop had forgot.

BACON. Burden, thou wrong'st me in detracting thus ;

Bacon loves not to stuff himself with lies.
But tell me 'fore these doctors, if thou dare, 90
Of certain questions I shall move to thee.

<sup>47</sup> Old eds. Pentageron, but cf. IV, iii, 92. Pen-taele or pentagram, the five-rayed star, made by projecting the sides of a regular pentagon, and from ancient times a mystic symbol.

<sup>48</sup> I.e., is shooting (that is, trying to shoot) beyond the extent of his power. "To rove" = to shoot, not at a fixed target, but for distance. "Bow" = bow-length, or (possibly) bow-shot. The stone markers set up for distance-shooting were called "rovers."

<sup>49</sup> Rank ; i.e., degrees, "honors."

BURD. I will ; ask what thou can.

MILES. Marry, sir, he'll straight be on your pick-pack,<sup>46</sup> to know whether the feminine or the masculine gender be most worthy.

BACON. Were you not yesterday, Master Burden, at Henley upon the Thames?

BURD. I was ; what then?

BACON. What book studied you there on all night? 100

BURD. I? none at all ; I read not there a line.

BACON. Then, Doctors, Friar Bacon's art knows naught.

CLEM. What say you to this, Master Burden? Doth he not touch you?

BURD. I pass not of <sup>47</sup> his frivolous speeches.

MILES. Nay, Master Burden, my master, ere he hath done with you, will turn you from a doctor to a dunce, and shake you so small that he will leave no more learning in you than is in Balaam's ass. 110

BACON. Masters, for that learned Burden's skill is deep,
And sore he doubts of Bacon's cabalism,
I'll show you why he haunts to Henley oft :
Not, Doctors, for to taste the fragrant air,
But there to spend the night in alchemy,
To multiply with secret spells of art ;
Thus private steals he learning from us all.
To prove my saying's true, I'll show you straight

The book he keeps at Henley for himself.

MILES. Nay, now my master goes to conjuration, take heed. 121

BACON. Masters, stand still ; fear not ; I'll show you but his book. Here he conjures.
Per omnes deos infernales, Belcephon!

Enter a Woman with a shoulder of mutton on a spit, and a Devil.

MILES. O master, cease your conjuration, or you spoil all ; for here's a she-devil come with a shoulder of mutton on a spit. You have marr'd the Devil's supper ; but no doubt he thinks our college fare is slender, and so hath sent you his cook with a shoulder of mut- [130 ton, to make it exceed.

HOSTESS. O, where am I, or what's become of me?

BACON. What art thou?

HOSTESS. Hostess at Henley, mistress of the Bell.

BACON. How camest thou here?

HOSTESS. As I was in the kitchen 'mongst the maids,

Spitting the meat against supper for my [guests],<sup>48</sup>

A motion moved me to look forth of door.

No sooner had I pried into the yard,

But straight a whirlwind hoisted me from thence, 140

And mounted me aloft unto the clouds.

As in a trance, I thought nor feared naught,

Nor know I where or whither I was ta'en,

Nor where I am nor what these persons be.

BACON. No? Know you not Master Burden?

HOSTESS. O, yes, good sir ; he is my daily guest. —

What, Master Burden ! 't was but yesternight That you and I at Henley play'd at cards.

BURD. I know not what we did. — A pox of all conjuring friars ! 150

CLEM. Now, jolly friar, tell us, is this the book

That Burden is so careful to look on?

BACON. It is. — But, Burden, tell me now, Thinkest thou that Bacon's necromantic skill Cannot perform his head and wall of brass, When he can fetch thine hostess in such post?

MILES. I'll warrant you, master, if Master Burden could conjure as well as you, he would have his book every night from Henley to study on at Oxford. 160

MASON. Burden,

What, are you mated <sup>49</sup> by this frolic friar? — Look how he droops ; his guilty conscience Drives him to bash,<sup>50</sup> and makes his hostess blush.

BACON. Well, mistress, for I will not have you miss'd,

You shall to Henley to cheer up your guests 'Fore supper 'gin. — Burden, bid her adieu ; Say farewell to your hostess 'fore she goes. — Sirrah, away, and set her safe at home.

HOSTESS. Master Burden, when shall [170 we see you at Henley?

Exeunt Hostess and the Devil.

BURD. The Devil take thee and Henley too.

MILES. Master, shall I make a good motion?

BACON. What's that?

MILES. Marry, sir, now that my hostess is gone to provide supper, conjure up another spirit, and send Doctor Burden flying after.

<sup>46</sup> Pick-a-back, on your shoulders, at you.

<sup>50</sup> Be abashed.

BACON. Thus, rulers of our academic state,
 You have seen the friar frame his art by proof ;
 And as the college called Brazen-nose 180
 Is under him, and he the master there,
 So surely shall this head of brass be fram'd,
 And yield forth strange and uncouth <sup>51</sup> aphorisms ;
 And hell and Hecate <sup>52</sup> shall fail the friar,
 But I will circle England round with brass.
 Miles. So be it et nunc et semper, amen.
Exeunt omnes.

[SCENE III] <sup>53</sup>

Enter MARGARET, the fair maid of Fressingfield, with JOAN, THOMAS, [RICHARD,] and other Clowns ; [and] LACY disguised in country apparel.

THOM. By my troth, Margaret, <sup>54</sup> here's a weather is able to make a man call his father whoreson ; if this weather hold, we shall have hay good cheap, <sup>55</sup> and butter and cheese at Harleston will bear no price.

MAR. Thomas, maids when they come to see the fair
 Count not to make a cope <sup>56</sup> for dearth of hay ;
 When we have turn'd our butter to the salt,
 And set our cheese safely upon the racks,
 Then let our fathers price it as they please. 10
 We country sluts of merry Fressingfield
 Come to buy needless naughts to make us fine,
 And look that young men should be frank <sup>57</sup>
 this day,
 And court us with such fairings as they can.
 Phœbus <sup>58</sup> is blithe, and frolic looks from Heaven,

As when he courted lovely Semele,
 Swearing the pedlars shall have empty packs,
 If that fair weather may make chapmen buy.

LACY. But, lovely Peggy, Semele is dead,
 And therefore Phœbus from his palace pries,
 And, seeing such a sweet and seemly saint, 21
 Shows all his glories for to court yourself.

MAR. This is a fairing, gentle sir, indeed,
 To soothe me up with such smooth flattery ;
 But learn of me, your scoff 's too broad before. — <sup>59</sup>

Well, Joan, our beauties must abide their jests ;
 We serve the turn in jolly Fressingfield.

JOAN. Margaret, a farmer's daughter for a farmer's son !

I warrant you, the meanest of us both
 Shall have a mate to lead us from the church.— But, Thomas, what's the news? What, in a dump? 31

Give me your hand, we are near a pedlar's shop ;

Out with your purse : we must have fairings
 now.

THOM. Faith, Joan, and shall. I'll bestow
 a fairing on you, and then we will to the tavern, and snap off a pint of wine or two.

All this while LACY whispers MARGARET in the ear.

MAR. Whence are you, sir? Of Suffolk?
 For your terms

Are finer than the common sort of men.

LACY. Faith, lovely girl, I am of Beccles by,
 Your neighbor, not above six miles from
 hence, 40

A farmer's son, that never was so quaint <sup>60</sup>
 But that he could do courtesy to such dames.
 But trust me, Margaret, I am sent in charge
 From him that revell'd in your father's house,
 And fill'd his lodge with cheer and venison,
 Tired in green. He sent you this rich purse,
 His token that he help'd you run your cheese,
 And in the milkhouse chatted with yourself.

MAR. To me? You forget yourself. <sup>61</sup> 49

LACY. Women are often weak in memory.

MAR. O, pardon, sir, I call to mind the man.
 'T were little manners to refuse his gift,
 And yet I hope he sends it not for love ;
 For we have little leisure to debate of that.

JOAN. What, Margaret ! blush not ; maids must have their loves.

THOM. Nay, by the mass, she looks pale as if she were angry.

RICH. Sirrah, are you of Beccles? I pray, how doth Goodman Cob? My father bought a horse of him. — I'll tell you, Margaret, <sup>62</sup>
 'a were good to be a gentleman's jade, for of all things the foul hilding <sup>63</sup> could not abide a doongcart.

MAR. [aside] How different is this farmer
 from the rest
 That erst <sup>64</sup> as yet hath pleas'd my wand'ring sight !

His words are witty, quickened with a smile,

<sup>60</sup> Fastidious.

His courtesy gentle, smelling of the court ;
 Facile and debonair in all his deeds,
 Proportion'd as was Paris, when, in gray,<sup>64</sup>
 He courted CEnon in the vale by Troy. 70
 Gréat lords have come and pleaded for my
 love —

Who but the Keeper's lass of Fressingfield?
 And yet methinks this farmer's jolly son
 Passeth the proudest that hath pleas'd mine eye.

But, Peg, disclose not that thou art in love,
 And show as yet no sign of love to him,
 Although thou well wouldst wish him for thy
 love ;

Keep that to thee till time doth serve thy turn,
 To show the grief wherein thy heart doth burn. —

Come, Joan and Thomas, shall we to the fair? — 80

You, Beccles man, will not forsake us now.

LACY. Not whilst I may have such quaint<sup>65</sup> girls as you.

MAR. Well, if you chance to come by Fressingfield,

Make but a step into the Keeper's lodge,
 And such poor fare as woodmen can afford,
 Butter and cheese, cream, and fat venison,
 You shall have store, and welcome therewithal.

LACY. Gramercies, Peggy ; look for me ere long. Exeunt omnes.

[ACT II — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter [KING] HENRY THE THIRD, the EMPEROR,
the KING of CASTILE, ELINOR his daughter,
[and] JACQUES VANDERMAST a German.

HEN. Great men of Europe, monarchs of the West,

Ring'd with the walls of old Oceanus,
 Whose lofty [surge is]<sup>2</sup> like the battlements
 That compass'd high-built Babel in with towers,

Welcome, my Lords, welcome, brave western
 kings,

To England's shore, whose promontory cliffs
 Shows Albion is another little world ;
 Welcome says English Henry to you all ;
 Chiefly unto the lovely Elinor,

Who dar'd for Edward's sake cut through the seas, 10

And venture as Agenor's<sup>3</sup> damsel through the deep,

To get the love of Henry's wanton<sup>4</sup> son.

CAST. England's rich monarch, brave Plan-
 tagenet,

The Pyren Mounts swelling above the clouds,
 That ward the wealthy Castile in with walls,
 Could not detain the beauteous Elinor ;
 But, hearing of the fame of Edward's youth,
 She dar'd to brook Neptunus' haughty pride,
 And bide the brunt of froward Æolus : 19
 Then may fair England welcome her the more.

ELIN. After that English Henry by his lords
 Had sent Prince Edward's lovely counterfeit,
 A present to the Castile Elinor,

The comely portrait of so brave a man,
 The virtuous fame discoursed of his deeds,
 Edward's courageous resolution,
 Done at the Holy Land 'fore Damas'<sup>5</sup> walls,
 Led both mine eye and thoughts in equal links
 To like so of the English monarch's son

That I attempted perils for his sake. 30

EMP. Where is the Prince, my Lord?

HEN. He posted down, not long since, from the court,

To Suffolk side, to merry Framlingham,<sup>6</sup>
 To sport himself amongst my fallow deer ;
 From thence, by packets sent to Hampton
 House,<sup>7</sup>

We hear the Prince is ridden with his lords
 To Oxford, in the academy there
 To hear dispute amongst the learned men.
 But we will send forth letters for my son,
 To will him come from Oxford to the court. 40

EMP. Nay, rather, Henry, let us, as we be,
 Ride for to visit Oxford with our train.

Fain would I see your universities,
 And what learned men your academy yields.
 From Ha[p]sburg<sup>8</sup> have I brought a learned clerk

To hold dispute with English orators.
 This doctor, surnam'd Jacques Vandermast,
 A German born, pass'd into Padua,
 To Florence and to fair Bologna,<sup>9</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Damascus'. Edward never fought there. He had been married to Eleanor for sixteen years when he went on this crusade.

To Paris, Rheims, and stately Orleans, 50
And, talking there with men of art, put down
The chiefest of them all in aphorisms,<sup>10</sup>
In magic, and the mathematic rules;
Now let us, Henry, try him in your schools.

HEN. He shall, my Lord; this motion<sup>11</sup> likes me well.

We'll progress straight to Oxford with our trains,

And see what men our academy brings. —

And, wonder Vandermast, welcome to me.

In Oxford shalt thou find a jolly friar

Call'd Friar Bacon, England's only flower: [60

Set him but nonplus in his magic spells,

And make him yield in mathematic rules,

And for thy glory I will bind thy brows,

Not with a poet's garland made of bays,

But with a coronet of choicest gold.

Whilst,<sup>12</sup> then, we set<sup>13</sup> to Oxford with our troops,

Let's in and banquet in our English court.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE II]<sup>14</sup>

Enter RALPH SIMNELL in [PRINCE] EDWARD'S apparel; and [PRINCE] EDWARD, WARREN,
[and] ERMSBY, disguised.

RALPH. Where be these vagabond knaves, that they attend no better on their master?

EDW. If it please your Honor, we are all ready at an inch.<sup>15</sup>

RALPH. Sirrah Ned, I'll have no more post-horse to ride on; I'll have another fetch.<sup>16</sup>

ERMS. I pray you, how is that, my Lord?

RALPH. Marry, sir, I'll send to the Isle of Ely for four or five dozen of geese, and I'll have them ti'd six and six together with whip- [10 cord. Now upon their backs will I have a fair field-bed with a canopy; and so, when it is my pleasure, I'll flee into what place I please.
This will be easy.

WAR. Your Honor hath said well; but shall we to Brazen-nose College before we pull off our boots?

ERMS. Warren, well motion'd; we will to the friar

Before we revel it within the town. —

Ralph, see you keep your countenance like a
prince. 20

RALPH. Wherefore have I such a company of cutting<sup>17</sup> knaves to wait upon me, but to keep and defend my countenance against all mine enemies? Have you not good swords and bucklers?

Enter [FRIAR] BACON and MILES.

ERMS. Stay, who comes here?

WAR. Some scholar; and we'll ask him where Friar Bacon is.

BACON. Why, thou arrant dunce, shall I never make thee good scholar? Doth not [30 all the town cry out and say, Friar Bacon's subsizar<sup>18</sup> is the greatest blockhead in all Oxford? Why, thou canst not speak one word of true Latin.

MILES. No, sir — yes, what is this else?
Ego sum tuus homo: I am your man — I warrant you, sir, as good Tully's phrase<sup>19</sup> as any is in Oxford.

BACON. Come on, sirrah; what part of speech is Ego? 40

MILES. Ego, that is "I"; marry, nomen
substantivo.

BACON. How prove you that?

MILES. Why, sir, let him prove himself an
'a will; I can be heard, felt, and understood.<sup>20</sup>

BACON. O gross dunce! Here beat him.

EDW. Come, let us break off this dispute between these two. — Sirrah, where is Brazennose College?

MILES. Not far from Coppersmith's Hall.

EDW. What, doest thou mock me? 51

MILES. Not I, sir; but what would you at Brazen-nose?

ERMS. Marry, we would speak with Friar
Bacon.

MILES. Whose men be you?

ERMS. Marry, scholar, here's our master.

RALPH. Sirrah, I am the master of these good fellows; mayst thou not know me to be a lord by my repanel? 60

MILES. Then here's good game for the hawk; for here's the master-fool and a covey of coxcombs. One wise man, I think, would spring you<sup>21</sup> all.

EDW. Gog's wounds! Warren, kill him.

WAR. Why, Ned, I think the Devil be in my sheath; I cannot get out my dagger.

ERMS. Nor I mine. 'Swones, Ned, I think I am bewitch'd.

MILES. A company of scabs! The [70 proudest of you all draw your weapon, if he can. — [to the audience] See how boldly I speak, now my master is by.

EDW. I strive in vain; but, if my sword be shut
And conjured fast by magic in my sheath,
Villain, here is my fist.

Strike him a box on the ear.

MILES. O, I beseech you conjure his hands too, that he may not lift his arms to his head, for he is light-fingered! 79

RALPH. Ned, strike him; I'll warrant thee, by mine honor.

BACON. What means the English Prince to wrong my man?

EDW. To whom speakest thou?

BACON. To thee.

EDW. Who art thou?

BACON. Could you not judge when all your swords grew fast,

That Friar Bacon was not far from hence?

Edward, King Henry's son and Prince of Wales,

Thy fool disguis'd cannot conceal thyself.

I know both Ermsby and the Sussex Earl, 90
Else Friar Bacon had but little skill.

Thou comest in post from merry Fressingfield,

Fast-fancied to <sup>22</sup> the Keeper's bonny lass,

To crave some succor of the jolly friar;

And Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, hast thou left

To treat fair Margaret to allow thy loves;

But friends are men, and love can baffle lords;
The Earl both woos and courts her for himself.

WAR. Ned, this is strange; the friar knoweth all.

ERMS. Apollo could not utter more than this. 100

EDW. I stand amazed to hear this jolly friar Tell even the very secrets of my thoughts. —
But, learned Bacon, since thou knowest the cause

Why I did post so fast from Fressingfield, Help, friar, at a pinch, that I may have
The love of lovely Margaret to myself,
And, as I am true Prince of Wales, I'll give Living and lands to strength thy college state.<sup>23</sup>

WAR. Good friar, help the Prince in this. [109

RALPH. Why, servant Ned, will not the friar do it? Were not my sword glued to my scabbard by conjuration, I would cut off his head, and make him do it by force.

MILES. In faith, my Lord, your manhood and your sword is all alike; they are so fast conjured that we shall never see them.

ERMS. What, Doctor, in a dump? Tush, help the Prince,
And thou shalt see how liberal he will prove.

BACON. Crave not such actions greater dumps than these? 119

I will, my Lord, strain out my magic spells;
For this day comes the Earl to Fressingfield,
And 'fore that night shuts in the day with dark,

They'll be betrothed each to other fast.

But come with me; we'll to my study straight,
And in a glass prospective I will show

What's done this day in merry Fressingfield.

EDW. Gramercies, Bacon; I will quit thy pain.

BACON. But send your train, my Lord, into the town;

My scholar shall go bring them to their inn.
Meanwhile we'll see the knavery of the Earl.

EDW. Warren, leave me; and, Ermsby, take the Fool; 131

Let him be master, and go revel it,

Till I and Friar Bacon talk awhile.

WAR. We will, my Lord.

RALPH. Faith, Ned, and I'll lord it out till that comest. I'll be Prince of Wales over all the blackpots <sup>24</sup> in Oxford. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>25</sup>

[FRIAR] BACON and [PRINCE] EDWARD goes into the study.

BACON. Now, frolic Edward, welcome to my cell;

Here tempers Friar Bacon many toys,<sup>26</sup>

And holds this place his consistory court,
Wherein the devils pleads homage to his words.

Within this glass prospective thou shalt see

This day what's done in merry Fressingfield

'Twixt lovely Peggy and the Lincoln Earl.

EDW. Friar, thou gladd'st me. Now shall Edward try

How Lacy meaneth to his sovereign lord.

BACON. Stand there and look directly in the glass. 10

Enter MARGARET and FRIAR BUNGAY.

What sees my Lord?

EDW. I see the Keeper's lovely lass appear,
As [brightsome]<sup>27</sup> as the paramour of Mars,
Only attended by a jolly friar.

BACON. Sit still, and keep the crystal in your eye.

MAR. But tell me, Friar Bungay, is it true
That this fair,<sup>28</sup> courteous country swain,
Who says his father is a farmer nigh,
Can be Lord Lacy, Earl of Lincolnshire?

BUN. Peggy, 't is true, 't is Lacy for my life, 20

Or else mine art and cunning both doth fail,
Left by Prince Edward to procure his loves;
For he in green, that help you run your cheese,
Is son to Henry and the Prince of Wales.

MAR. Be what he will, his lure is but for lust.

But did Lord Lacy like poor Margaret,
Or would he deign to wed a country lass,
Friar, I would his humble handmaid be,
And for great wealth quit him with courtesy.

BUN. Why, Margaret, doest thou love him?

MAR. His personage, like the pride of vaunting Troy, 31
Might well avouch to shadow<sup>29</sup> Helen's [scape];<sup>30</sup>

His wit is quick and ready in conceit,
As Greece afforded in her chiefest prime;
Courteous, ah, friar, full of pleasing smiles!
Trust me, I love too much to tell thee more;
Suffice, to me he's England's paramour.

BUN. Hath not each eye that view'd thy pleasing face

Surnamed thee Fair Maid of Fressingfield?

MAR. Yes, Bungay; and would God the lovely Earl 40

Had that in esse that so many sought.

BUN. Fear not, the friar will not be behind
To show his cunning to entangle love.

EDW. I think the friar courts the bonny
wench;

Bacon, methinks he is a lusty churl.

BACON. Now look, my Lord.

Enter LACY [disguised as before].

EDW. Gog's wounds, Bacon, here comes Lacy!

BACON. Sit still, my Lord, and mark the comedy.

BUN. Here's Lacy, Margaret; step aside awhile.

LACY. Daphne, the damsel that caught
Phœbus fast, 50

And lock'd him in the brightness of her looks,
Was not so beauteous in Apollo's eyes
As is fair Margaret to the Lincoln Earl.

Recant thee, Lacy; thou art put in trust:
Edward, thy sovereign's son, hath chosen thee,
A secret friend, to court her for himself;
And darest thou wrong thy prince with treach-ery?

Lacy, love makes no exception of a friend,
Nor deems it of a prince but as a man.

Honor bids thee control him in his lust; 60
His wooing is not for to wed the girl,
But to entrap her and beguile the lass.

Lacy, thou lovest; then brook not such abuse,
But wed her, and abide thy prince's frown;
For better die than see her live disgrac'd.

MAR. Come, friar, I will shake him from his dumps. —

[coming forward] How cheer you, sir? A penny for your thought!

You're early up; pray God it be the near.<sup>31</sup>
What, come from Beccles in a morn so soon?

LACY. Thus watchful are such men as live in
love, 70

Whose eyes brook broken slumbers for their sleep.

I tell thee, Peggy, since last Harleston Fair
My mind hath felt a heap of passions.

MAR. A trusty man, that court it for your friend.

Woo you still for the courtier all in green?
I marvel that he sues not for himself.

LACY. Peggy,

I pleaded first to get your grace for him;
But when mine eyes survey'd your beauteous
looks,

Love, like a wag, straight dived into my heart,
And there did shrine the idea<sup>32</sup> of yourself. 81
Pity me, though I be a farmer's son,
And measure not my riches, but my love.

MAR. You are very hasty; for, to garden
well,
Seeds must have time to sprout before they spring.

Love ought to creep as doth the dial's shade,
For timely<sup>33</sup> ripe is rotten too, too soon.

<sup>31</sup> Nearer; alluding to the proverb, "Early up and never the nearer."

<sup>28</sup> Dissyllabic; the line is regular, save that the initial unstressed syllable is lacking.

<sup>30</sup> Sin. (N. E. D.) (Cf. II, iv, 145). Emend. Gayley; old eds. cape.

BUN. [coming forward] Deus hic ; room for a merry friar !

What, youth of Beccles, with the Keeper's lass ?

'T is well ; but tell me, hear you any news ? 90

MAR. No, friar. What news ?

BUN. Hear you not how the pursuivants <sup>34</sup> do post

With proclamations through each country town ?

LACY. For what, gentle friar ? Tell the news.

BUN. Dwell'st thou in Beccles, and hear'st not of these news ?

Lacy, the Earl of Lincoln, is late fled
From Windsor court, disguised like a swain,
And lurks about the country here unknown.
Henry suspects him of some treachery,
And therefore doth proclaim in every way, [100
That who can take the Lincoln Earl shall have, Paid in the Exchequer, twenty thousand
crowns.

LACY. The Earl of Lincoln ! Friar, thou art mad.

It was some other ; thou mistakest the man.
The Earl of Lincoln ! Why, it cannot be.

MAR. Yes, very well, my Lord, for you are he :

The Keeper's daughter took you prisoner.
Lord Lacy, yield ; I'll be your jailer once.

EDW. How familiar they be, Bacon !

BACON. Sit still, and mark the sequel of their loves. 110

LACY. Then am I double prisoner to thyself.
Peggy, I yield. But are these news in jest ?

MAR. In jest with you, but earnest unto me ;

Forwhy <sup>35</sup> these wrongs do wring me at the heart.

Ah, how these earls and noble men of birth
Flatter and feign to forge poor women's ill !

LACY. Believe me, lass, I am the Lincoln Earl ;

I not deny but, tired thus in rags,
I liv'd disguis'd to win fair Peggy's love.

MAR. What love is there where wedding ends not love ? 120

LACY. I meant, fair girl, to make thee Lacy's wife.

MAR. I little think that earls will stoop so low.

LACY. Say, shall I make thee countess ere I sleep ?

MAR. Handmaid unto the Earl, so please himself ;

A wife in name, but servant in obedience.

LACY. The Lincoln Countess, for it shall be so ;

I'll plight the bands, <sup>36</sup> and seal it with a kiss.

EDW. Gog's wounds, Bacon, they kiss !
I'll stab them.

BACON. O, hold your hands, my Lord ; it is the glass !

EDW. Choler to see the traitors gree so well 130

Made me think the shadows substances.

BACON. 'T were a long poniard, my Lord, to reach between

Oxford and Fressingfield ; but sit still and see more.

BUN. Well, Lord of Lincoln, if your loves be knit,

And that <sup>37</sup> your tongues and thoughts do both agree,

To avoid ensuing jars, I'll hamper <sup>38</sup> up the match.

I'll take my portage <sup>39</sup> forth and wed you here.
Then go to bed and seal up your desires.

LACY. Friar, content. — Peggy, how like you this ?

MAR. What likes my Lord is pleasing unto me. 140

BUN. Then handfast <sup>40</sup> hand, and I will to my book.

BACON. What sees my Lord now ?

EDW. Bacon, I see the lovers hand in hand,
The friar ready with his portage there

To wed them both ; then am I quite undone.
Bacon, help now, if e'er thy magic serv'd ;

Help, Bacon ! Stop the marriage now,
If devils or necromancy may suffice,

And I will give thee forty thousand crowns.

BACON. Fear not, my Lord, I'll stop the jolly friar 150

For <sup>41</sup> mumbling up his orisons this day.

LACY. Why speak'st not, Bungay ? Friar, to thy book.

Bungay is mute, crying, "Hud, hud."

MAR. How lookest thou, friar, as a man distraught !

Reft of thy senses, Bungay ? Show by signs,
If thou be dumb, what passions <sup>42</sup> holdeth thee.

Enchanted him, or else some strange disease
Or apoplexy hath possess'd his lungs.
But, Peggy, what he cannot with his book,
We'll 'twixt us both unite it up in heart. 160

MAR. Else let me die, my Lord, a miscreant.<sup>43</sup>

EDW. Why stands Friar [Bungay]<sup>44</sup> so amaz'd?

BACON. I have struck him dumb, my Lord ;
and, if your Honor please,
I'll fetch this Bungay straightway from Fressingfield

And he shall dine with us in Oxford here.

EDW. Bacon, do that, and thou contentest me.

LACY. Of courtesy, Margaret, let us lead the friar Unto thy father's lodge, to comfort him
With broths, to bring him from this hapless trance.

MAR. Or else, my Lord, we were passing unkind 170
To leave the friar so in his distress.

Enter a Devil, and carry [out] BUNGAY on his back.

O, help, my Lord ! a devil, a devil, my Lord !
Look how he carries Bungay on his back !
Let's hence, for Bacon's spirits be abroad.

Exeunt [MARGARET and LACY].

EDW. Bacon, I laugh to see the jolly friar Mounted upon the devil, and how the Earl
Flees with his bonny lass for fear.
As soon as Bungay is at Brazen-nose,
And I have chatted with the merry friar,
I will in post hie me to Fressingfield, 180
And quit these wrongs on Lacy ere it be long.

BACON. So be it, my Lord ; but let us to our dinner ;
For ere we have taken our repast awhile,
We shall have Bungay brought to Brazen-nose.
Exeunt.

[SCENE IV]<sup>45</sup>

Enter three Doctors, BURDEN, MASON, [and] CLEMENT.

MASON. Now that we are gathered in the Regent House,
It fits us talk about the King's repair ;
For he, troop'd with all the western kings,
That lie alongst the Danzig seas by east,
North by the clime of frosty Germany,

The Almain monarch, and the [Saxon]<sup>46</sup> duke,
Castile and lovely Elinor with him,
Have in their [gests]<sup>47</sup> resolv'd for Oxford town.

BURD. We must lay plots of stately tragedies,

Strange comic shows, such as proud Roscius [10
Vaunted before the Roman emperors,
To welcome all the western potentates.<sup>48</sup>

CLEM. But more ; the King by letters hath foretold

That Frederick, the Almain Emperor,
Hath brought with him a German of esteem,
Whose surname is Don Jaques Vandermast,
Skillful in magic and those secret arts.

MASON. Then must we all make suit unto the friar,

To Friar Bacon, that he vouch<sup>49</sup> this task,
And undertake to countervail<sup>50</sup> in skill 20
The German ; else there's none in Oxford can Match and dispute with learned Vandermast.

BURD. Bacon, if he will hold the German play,
[Will]<sup>51</sup> teach him what an English friar can do.

The Devil, I think, dare not dispute with him.

CLEM. Indeed, Mas' Doctor, he pleased you,

In that he brought your hostess with her spit
From Henley, posting unto Brazen-nose.

BURD. A vengeance on the friar for his pains !

But leaving that, let's hie to Bacon straight,
To see if he will take this task in hand. 31

CLEM. Stay, what rumor<sup>52</sup> is this ? The town is up in a mutiny. What hurly-burly is this ?

Enter a Constable, with RALPH [SIMNELL], WARREN, ERMSBY, [all three disguised as before], and MILES.

CONS. Nay, masters, if you were ne'er so good, you shall before the doctors to answer your misdemeanor.

BURD. What's the matter, fellow ?

CONS. Marry, sir, here's a company of rufflers,<sup>53</sup> that, drinking in the tavern, have [40 made a great brawl, and almost kill'd the vintner.

MILES. Salve, Doctor Burden !

This lubberly lurdien,<sup>54</sup>
Ill-shap'd and ill-faced,
Disdain'd and disgraced,
What he tells unto vobis
Mentitur de nobis.

BURD. Who is the master and chief of this crew? 50

MILES. Ecce asinum mundi
F[?]gura rotundi,
Neat, [feat],<sup>55</sup> and fine,
As brisk as a cup of wine.

BURD. What are you?

RALPH. I am, Father Doctor, as a man would say, the bellwether of this company ; these are my lords, and I the Prince of Wales.

CLEM. Are you Edward, the King's son?

RALPH. Sirrah Miles, bring hither the tapster that drew the wine, and, I warrant, [61 when they see how soundly I have broke his head, they'll say 't was done by no less man than a prince.

MASON. I cannot believe that this is the Prince of Wales.

WAR. And why so, sir?

MASON. For they say the Prince is a brave and a wise gentleman.

WAR. Why, and thinkest thou, Doctor, that he is not so? 70

Dar'st thou detract and derogate from him,
Being so lovely and so brave a youth?

ERMS. Whose face, shining with many a sug'red smile,
Bewrays that he is bred of princely race.

MILES. And yet, Master Doctor,
To speak like a proctor,
And tell unto you
What is veriment and true ;
To cease of this quarrel,
Look but on his apparel ; 80
Then mark but my talis,
He is great Prince of Walis,
The chief of our gregis,
And filius regis :

Then 'ware what is done,
For he is Henry's white<sup>56</sup> son.

RALPH. Doctors, whose doting nightcaps are not capable of my ingenious dignity, know that I am Edward Plantagenet, whom if you displease will make a ship that shall hold all your colleges, and so carry away the nini- [91 versity with a fair wind to the Bankside in Southwark. — How say'st thou, Ned Warren, shall I not do it?

WAR. Yes, my good Lord ; and, if it please your Lordship, I will gather up all your old pantofles,<sup>57</sup> and with the cork<sup>58</sup> make you a pinnace of five hundred ton, that shall serve the turn marvellous well, my Lord.

ERMS. And I, my Lord, will have pioners to undermine the town, that the very gar- [101 dens and orchards be carried away for your summer-walks.

MILES. And I, with scientia

And great diligentia,
Will conjure and charm,
To keep you from harm ;

That utrum horum mavis,

Your very great navis,

Like Bartlet's<sup>59</sup> ship,

From Oxford do skip

With colleges and schools,

Full loaden with fools.

Quid dic[i]s ad hoc,

Worshipful Domine Dawcock?

CLEM. Why, hare-brain'd courtiers, are you drunk or mad,

To taunt us up with such scurrility?

Deem you us men of base and light esteem,

To bring us such a fop for Henry's son? —

Call out the beadies and convey them hence

Straight to Bocardo ;<sup>60</sup> let the roisters lie 121

Close clapp'd in bolts, until their wits be tame.

ERMS. Why, shall we to prison, my Lord?

RALPH. What say'st, Miles ; shall I honor the prison with my presence?

MILES. No, no ; out with your blades,

And hamper these jades ;

Have a flurt and a crash,

Now play revel-dash,

And teach these sacerdos 130

That the Bocardos,

Like peasants and elves,

Are meet for themselves.

MASON. To the prison with them, constable.

WAR. Well, Doctors, seeing I have sported me

With laughing at these mad and merry wags,
Know that Prince Edward is at Brazen-nose,

And this, attired like the Prince of Wales,

Is Ralph, King Henry's only loved fool ;

<sup>57</sup> Embroidered shoes.

I, Earl of [Sussex],<sup>61</sup> and this Ermsby,<sup>62</sup> 140
One of the privy chamber to the King ;
Who, while the Prince with Friar Bacon stays,
Have revell'd it in Oxford as you see.

MASON. My Lord, pardon us ; we knew not what you were ;
But courtiers may make greater scapes<sup>63</sup> than
these.

Wilt please your Honor dine with me to-day ?

WAR. I will, Master Doctor, and satisfy the vintner for his hurt ; only, I must desire you to imagine him all this forenoon the Prince of Wales. 150

MASON. I will, sir.

RALPH. And upon that I will lead the way ;
only, I will have Miles go before me, because I have heard Henry say that wisdom must go before majesty. Exeunt omnes.

[ACT III — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter PRINCE EDWARD with his poniard in his hand, LACY, and MARGARET.

EDW. Lacy, thou canst not shroud thy traitorous thoughts,
Nor cover, as did Cassius all his wiles ;
For Edward hath an eye that looks as far
As Lynceus<sup>2</sup> from the shores of Græcia.
Did not I sit in Oxford by the friar,
And see thee court the maid of Fressingfield,
Sealing thy flattering fancies with a kiss ?
Did not proud Bungay draw his portage forth,
And, joining hand in hand, had married you,
If Friar Bacon had not struck him dumb, 10
And mounted him upon a spirit's back,
That we might chat at Oxford with the friar ?
Traitor, what answer'st ? Is not all this true ?

LACY. Truth all, my Lord ; and thus I make reply :

At Harleston Fair, there courting for your Grace,

Whenas mine eye survey'd her curious shape,
And drew the beauteous glory of her looks
To dive into the centre of my heart, Love taught me that your Honor did but jest,

That princes were in fancy<sup>3</sup> but as men ; 20
How that the lovely maid of Fressingfield

eyesight.

<sup>3</sup> Love.

Was fitter to be Lacy's wedded wife
Than concubine unto the Prince of Wales.

EDW. Injurious Lacy, did I love thee more Than Alexander his Hephæstion ?

Did I unfold the [passions]<sup>4</sup> of my love,
And lock them in the closet of thy thoughts ?
Wert thou to Edward second to himself,
Sole friend, and partner of his secret loves ?
And could a glance of fading beauty break [30
The enchained fetters of such private friends ?
Base coward, false, and too effeminate
To be corival<sup>5</sup> with a prince in thoughts !
From Oxford have I posted since I din'd,
To quit<sup>6</sup> a traitor 'fore that Edward sleep.

MAR. 'T was I, my Lord, not Lacy stepp'd
awry :

For oft he sued and courted for yourself,
And still woo'd for the courtier all in green ;
But I, whom fancy made but overfond,
Pleaded myself with looks as if I lov'd ; 40
I fed mine eye with gazing on his face,
And still bewitch'd lov'd Lacy with my looks ;
My heart with sighs, mine eyes pleaded with
tears,

My face held pity and content at once,
And more I could not cipher out by signs
But that I lov'd Lord Lacy with my heart.
Then, worthy Edward, measure with thy mind
If women's favors will not force men fall,
If beauty, and if darts of piercing love,
Is not of force to bury thoughts of friends. 50

EDW. I tell thee, Peggy, I will have thy loves ;

Edward or none shall conquer Margaret.
In frigates bottom'd with rich Sethin<sup>7</sup> planks,
Topp'd with the lofty firs of Lebanon,
Stemm'd and incas'd with burnish'd ivory,
And overlaid with plates of Persian wealth,
Like Thetis shalt thou wanton on the waves,
And draw the dolphins to thy lovely eyes,
To dance lavoltas in the purple streams ;
Sirens, with harps and silver psalteries, 60
Shall wait with music at thy frigate's stem,
And entertain fair Margaret with [their]<sup>8</sup> lays.
England and England's wealth shall wait on
thee ;

Britain shall bend unto her prince's love,
And do due homage to thine excellence,
If thou wilt be but Edward's Margaret.

MAR. Pardon, my Lord : if Jove's great royalty

Sent me such presents as to Danaë ;

If Phœbus, [tired] * in Latona's webs,
Come courting from the beauty of his lodge ;
The dulcet tunes of frolic Mercury, 71
[Nor]<sup>10</sup> all the wealth Heaven's treasury affords,

Should make me leave Lord Lacy or his love.

Edw. I have learn'd at Oxford, then, this point of schools :

Ab[li]ata causa, tollitur effectus.<sup>11</sup>

Lacy, the cause that Margaret cannot love
Nor fix her liking on the English prince,
Take him away, and then th' effects will fail.
Villain, prepare thyself ; for I will bathe
My poniard in the bosom of an earl. 80

Lacy. Rather than live, and miss fair Margaret's love,

Prince Edward, stop not at the fatal doom,
But stab it home ; end both my loves and life.

Mar. Brave Prince of Wales, honored for royal deeds,

'T were sin to stain fair Venus' courts with
blood ;

Love's conquests ends, my Lord, in courtesy.
Spare Lacy, gentle Edward ; let me die,
For so both you and he do cease your loves.

Edw. Lacy shall die as traitor to his lord.

Lacy. I have deserved it, Edward ; act it
well. 90

Mar. What hopes the Prince to gain by Lacy's death ?

Edw. To end the loves 'twixt him and Margaret.

Mar. Why, thinks King Henry's son that Margaret's love

Hangs in the uncertain balance of proud time ?
That death shall make a discord of our
thoughts ?

No, stab the Earl, and, 'fore the morning sun
Shall vaunt him<sup>12</sup> thrice over the lofty east,
Margaret will meet her Lacy in the Heavens.

Lacy. If aught betides to lovely Margaret
That wrongs or wrings her honor from content, 100

Europe's rich wealth nor England's monarchy
Should not allure Lacy to overlive.<sup>13</sup>

Then, Edward, short my life, and end her loves.

Mar. Rid me, and keep a friend worth many loves.

Lacy. Nay, Edward, keep a love worth many friends.

Mar. An if thy mind be such as fame hath blaz'd,

Then, princely Edward, let us both abide
The fatal resolution of thy rage.

Banish thou fancy<sup>14</sup> and embrace revenge,
And in one tomb knit both our carcasses, 110
Whose hearts were linked in one perfect love.

Edw. [aside] Edward, art thou that famous
Prince of Wales,

Who at Damasco beat the Saracens,
And brought'st home triumph on thy lance's
point ?

And shall thy plumes be pull'd by Venus
down ?

Is it princely to dissever lovers' leagues,
To part such friends as glory in their loves ?
Leave, Ned, and make a virtue of this fault,
And further Peg and Lacy in their loves ;
So, in subduing fancy's passion, 120
Conquering thyself, thou gett'st the richest
spoil. —

Lacy, rise up. — Fair Peggy, here's my hand.
The Prince of Wales hath conquered all his
thoughts,

And all his loves he yields unto the Earl. —
Lacy, enjoy the maid of Fressingfield ;
Make her thy Lincoln Countess at the church,
And Ned, as he is true Plantagenet,
Will give her to thee frankly for thy wife.

Lacy. Humbly I take her of my sovereign,
As if that Edward gave me England's right,
And rich'd me with the Albion diadem. 131

Mar. And doth the English Prince mean
true ?

Will he vouchsafe to cease his former loves,
And yield the title of a country maid
Unto Lord Lacy ?

Edw. I will, fair Peggy, as I am true lord.

Mar. Then, lordly sir, whose conquest is as great,

In conquering love, as Cæsar's victories,
Margaret, as mild and humble in her thoughts
As was Aspasia<sup>15</sup> unto Cyrus' self, 140
Yields thanks, and, next Lord Lacy, doth enshrine

Edward the second secret in her heart.

Edw. Gramercy, Peggy. — Now that vows are past,

And that your loves are not [to]<sup>16</sup> be revolt,<sup>17</sup>
Once, Lacy, friends again ; come, we will post
To Oxford ; for this day the King is there,

 Beside, Lord Lincoln, we shall hear dispute [150
 'Twixt Friar Bacon and learned Vander-mast. —

Peggy, we'll leave you for a week or two.

MAR. As it please Lord Lacy ; but love's foolish looks

Think footsteps miles and minutes to be hours.

LACY. I'll hasten, Peggy, to make short return. —

But please your Honor go unto the lodge,
 We shall have butter, cheese, and venison ;
 And yesterday I brought for Margaret
 A lusty bottle of neat claret wine :

Thus can we feast and entertain your Grace.

EDW. 'T is cheer, Lord Lacy, for an emperor, 161

If he respect the person and the place.

Come, let us in ; for I will all this night

Ride post until I come to Bacon's cell.

Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>18</sup>

Enter [KING] HENRY, [the] EMPEROR, [the KING OF] CASTILE, [the] DUKE OF SAXONY,
 ELINOR, VANDERMAST, [and] BUNGAY.

EMP. Trust me, Plantagenet, these Oxford schools

Are richly seated near the riverside ;

The mountains full of fat and fallow deer,
 The battling <sup>19</sup> pastures lade with kine and
 flocks,

The town gorgeous with high-built colleges,
 And scholars seemly in their grave attire,

Learned in searching principles of art. —

What is thy judgment, Jaques Vandermast ?

VAN. That lordly are the buildings of the town, 9

Spacious the rooms, and full of pleasant walks ;
 But for the doctors, how that they be learned,

It may be meanly, for aught I can hear.

BUN. I tell thee, German, Hapsburg holds none such,

None read so deep as Oxenford contains.

There are within our academic state

Men that may lecture it in Germany

To all the doctors of your Belgic schools.

HEN. Stand to him, Bungay ; charm this Vandermast,

And I will use thee as a royal king.

VAN. Wherein darest thou dispute with
 me? 20

BUN. In what a doctor and a friar can.

VAN. Before rich Europe's worthies put thou forth

The doubtful question unto Vandermast.

BUN. Let it be this, — Whether the spirits of pyromancy or geomancy be most predominant in magic ?

VAN. I say, of pyromancy.

BUN. And I, of geomancy.

VAN. The cabalists that write of magic spells,

As Hermes,<sup>20</sup> Melchie,<sup>21</sup> and Pythagoras, 30

Affirm that, 'mongst the quadruplicity

Of elemental essence,<sup>22</sup> terra is but thought

To be a punctum squared to the rest ; <sup>23</sup>

And that the compass <sup>24</sup> of ascending elements

Exceed in bigness as they do in height ;

Judging the concave circle of the sun

To hold the rest in his circumference.

If, then, as Hermes says, the fire be great'st,
 Purest, and only giveth shape to spirits,

Then must these demons that haunt that place
 Be every way superior to the rest. 41

BUN. I reason not of elemental shapes,

Nor tell I of the concave latitudes,

Noting their essence nor their quality,

But of the spirits that pyromancy calls,

And of the vigor of the geomantic fiends.

I tell thee, German, magic haunts the [ground] ; <sup>25</sup>

And those strange necromantic spells,

That work such shows and wondering in the
 world,

Are acted by those geomantic spirits 50

That Hermes calleth terræ filii.

The fiery spirits are but transparent shades,

That lightly pass as heralds to bear news ;

But earthly fiends, clos'd in the lowest deep,

Dissever mountains, if they be but charg'd,

Being more gross and massy in their power.

VAN. Rather these earthly geomantic spirits

Are dull and like the place where they remain ;

For when proud Lucifer fell from the Heavens,

The spirits and angels that did sin with him

Retain'd their local essence as their faults, 61

All subject under Luna's continent.

They which offended less hang in the fire,

And second<sup>26</sup> faults did rest within the air ;
But Lucifer and his proud-hearted fiends
Were thrown into the centre of the earth,
Having less understanding than the rest,
As having greater sin and lesser grace.
Therefore such gross and earthly spirits do serve

For jugglers, witches, and vild sorcerers ; 70
Whereas the pyromantic ge[n]ii
Are mighty, swift, and of far-reaching power.
But grant that geomancy hath most force ;
Bungay, to please these mighty potentates,
Prove by some instance what thy art can do.

BUN. I will.

EMP. Now, English Harry, here begins the game ;

We shall see sport between these learned men.

VAN. What wilt thou do ?

BUN. Show thee the tree, leav'd with refin'd gold, 80

Whereon the fearful dragon held his seat,
That watch'd the garden call'd Hesperides,
Subdu'd and won by conquering Hercules.

VAN. Well done !

Here BUNGAY conjures, and the tree appears with the dragon shooting fire.

HEN. What say you, royal Lordings, to my friar ?

Hath he not done a point of cunning skill ?

VAN. Each scholar in the necromantic spells
Can do as much as Bungay hath perform'd.
But as Alcmena's bastard raz'd this tree,
So will I raise him up as when he lived, 90
And cause him pull the dragon from his seat,
And tear the branches piecemeal from the root. —

Hercules ! [Prodi],<sup>27</sup> prodi, Hercules !

HERCULES appears in his lion's skin.

HER. Quis me vult ?

VAN. Jove's bastard son, thou Libyan Hercules,

Pull off the sprigs from off the Hesperian tree,

As once thou didst to win the golden fruit.

HER. Fiat.

Here he begins to break the branches.

VAN. Now, Bungay, if thou canst by magic charm

The fiend, appearing like great Hercules, 100
From pulling down the branches of the tree,
Then art thou worthy to be counted learned.

BUN. I cannot.

VAN. Cease, Hercules, until I give thee
charge. —

Mighty commander of this English isle,
Henry, come from the stout Plantagenets,
Bungay is learned enough to be a friar ;
But to compare with Jaques Vandermast,
Oxford and Cambridge must go seek their cells
To find a man to match him in his art. 110
I have given nonplus to the Paduans,
To them of Sien, Florence, and Bologna,
Rheims, Louvain, and fair Rotterdam,
Frankfort,<sup>28</sup> [Lutetia],<sup>29</sup> and Orleans ;
And now must Henry, if he do me right,
Crown me with laurel, as they all have done.

Enter BACON.

BACON. All hail to this royal company,
That sit to hear and see this strange dispute ! —

Bungay, how stand'st thou as a man amaz'd !
What, hath the German acted more than thou ? 120

VAN. What art thou that questions thus ?

BACON. Men call me Bacon.

VAN. Lordly thou lookest, as if that thou wert learn'd ;

Thy countenance as if science held her seat
Between the circled arches of thy brows.

HEN. Now, monarchs, hath the German found his match.

EMP. Bestir thee, Jaques, take not now the foil,
Lest thou doest lose what foretime thou didst gain.

VAN. Bacon, wilt thou dispute ?

BACON. No, unless he were more learn'd than Vandermast ; 130

For yet, tell me, what hast thou done ?

VAN. Rais'd Hercules to ruinat that tree
That Bungay mounted by his magic spells.

BACON. Set Hercules to work.

VAN. Now, Hercules, I charge thee to thy task ;

Pull off the golden branches from the root.

HER. I dare not. Seest thou not great Bacon here,

Whose frown doth act more than thy magic
can ?

VAN. By all the thrones, and dominations,
Virtues, powers, and mighty hierarchies, 140
I charge thee to obey to Vandermast.

HER. Bacon, that bridles headstrong Bel-cephon,
And rules Asmenoth, guider of the north,
Binds me from yielding unto Vandermast.

HEN. How now, Vandermast? Have you met with your match?

VAN. Never before was't known to Vander-mast
That men held devils in such obedient awe.
Bacon doth more than art, or else I fail.<sup>30</sup>

EMP. Why, Vandermast, art thou over-
come? —

Bacon, dispute with him, and try his skill. [150

BACON. I come not, monarchs, for to hold dispute

With such a novice as is Vandermast;
I come to have your royalties to dine
With Friar Bacon here in Brazen-nose;
And, for <sup>31</sup> this German troubles but the place,
And holds this audience with a long suspense,
I'll send him to his academy hence. —
Thou Hercules, whom Vandermast did raise,
Transport the German unto Hapsburg straight,
That he may learn by travail, 'gainst <sup>32</sup> the [spring],<sup>33</sup> 160

More secret dooms and aphorisms of art.
Vanish the tree, and thou away with him!

Exit the spirit [of HERCULES] with VANDERMAST and the tree.

EMP. Why, Bacon, whither dost thou send
him?

BACON. To Hapsburg; there your Highness at return
Shall find the German in his study safe.

HEN. Bacon, thou hast honored England with thy skill,
And made fair Oxford famous by thine art;
I will be English Henry to thyself.

But tell me, shall we dine with thee to-day?

BACON. With me, my Lord; and while I
[flit my cheer, 170
See where Prince Edward comes to welcome
you,

Gracious <sup>34</sup> as the morning star of Heaven.

Exit.

Enter [PRINCE] EDWARD, LACY, WARREN, [and] ERMSBY.

EMP. Is this Prince Edward, Henry's royal
son?
How martial is the figure of his face!
Yet lovely and beset with amoretts.<sup>35</sup>

<sup>35</sup> Love-kindling looks.

HEN. Ned, where hast thou been?

Edw. At Framlingham, my Lord, to try your bucks

If they could scape [the] <sup>36</sup> teasers or the toil.
But hearing of these lordly potentates 179
Landed, and progress'd <sup>37</sup> up to Oxford town,
I posted to give entertain to them:
Chief, to the Almain monarch; next to him,
And joint with him, Castile and Saxony
Are welcome as they may be to the English court.

Thus for the men; but see, Venus appears,
Or one that overmatcheth Venus in her shape!
Sweet Elinor, beauty's high-swelling pride,
Rich nature's glory and her wealth at once,
Fair of all fairs, welcome to Albion; 189
Welcome to me, and welcome to thine own,
If that thou deign'st the welcome from myself.

ELIN. Martial Plantagenet, Henry's high-minded son,

The mark that Elinor did count her aim,
I lik'd thee 'fore I saw thee; now I love,
And so as in so short a time I may,
Yet so as time shall never break that so,
And therefore so accept of Elinor.

CAST. Fear not, my Lord, this couple will agree,

If love may creep into their wanton eyes: —
And therefore, Edward, I accept thee here, [200
Without suspense, as my adopted son.

HEN. Let me that joy in these consorting greetings,

And glory in these honors done to Ned,
Yield thanks for all these favors to my son,
And rest a true Plantagenet to all.

Enter MILES with a cloth and trenchers and salt.

MILES. Salvete, omnes reges,
That govern your greges
In Saxony and Spain,
In England and in Almain!
For all this frolic rabble 210
Must I cover [the] <sup>38</sup> table
With trenchers, salt, and cloth;
And then look for your broth.

EMP. What pleasant fellow is this?

HEN. 'Tis, my Lord, Doctor Bacon's poor scholar.

MILES. [aside] My master hath made me sewer <sup>39</sup> of these great lords; and, God knows,
I am as serviceable at a table as a sow is

under an apple tree. 'Tis no matter ; [220 their cheer shall not be great, and therefore what skills <sup>40</sup> where the salt stand, before or behind? [Exit.]

CAST. These scholars knows more skill in axioms,
How to use quips and sleights of sophistry,
Than for to cover courtly for a king.

Re-enter MILES with a mess of pottage and broth ;
and, after him, BACON.

MILES. Spill, sir ? why, do you think I never carried twopenny chop <sup>41</sup> before in my life ?
By your leave, nobile decus,
For here comes Doctor Bacon's pecus, 230
Being in his full age
To carry a mess of pottage.

BACON. Lordings, admire <sup>42</sup> not if your cheer be this,
For we must keep our academic fare ;
No riot where philosophy doth reign.
And therefore, Henry, place these potentates,
And bid them fall unto their frugal cates.

EMP. Presumptuous friar ! What, scoff'st thou at a king ?
What, doest thou taunt us with thy peasants'
fare, 239
And give us cates <sup>43</sup> fit for country swains ? —
Henry, proceeds this jest of thy consent,
To twit us with such a pittance of such price ?
Tell me, and Frederick will not grieve thee
long.

HEN. By Henry's honor, and the royal faith
The English monarch beareth to his friend,
I knew not of the friar's feeble fare,
Nor am I pleas'd he entertains you thus.

BACON. Content thee, Frederick ; for I show'd the cates,
To let thee see how scholars use to feed, 249
How little meat refines our English wits. —
Miles, take away, and let it be thy dinner.

MILES. Marry, sir, I will.
This day shall be a festival day with me ;
For I shall exceed in the highest degree.

Exit MILES.

BACON. I tell thee, monarch, all the German peers
Could not afford thy entertainment such,
So royal and so full of majesty,
As Bacon will present to Frederick.
The basest waiter that attends thy cups

(Gayley.)

Shall be in honors <sup>44</sup> greater than thyself ; 260
And for thy cates, rich Alexandria drugs, <sup>45</sup>
Fetch'd by carvels from Egypt's richest straits,
Found in the wealthy strand of Africa,
Shall royalize the table of my king ;
Wines richer than the 'Gyptian courtesan
Quaff'd to Augustus' kingly countermatch <sup>46</sup>
Shall be carous'd in English Henry's feast ;
Candy shall yield the richest of her canes ;
Persia, down her Volga by canoes,
Send down the secrets of her spicery ; 270
The Afric dates, myrobalans <sup>47</sup> of Spain,
Conserves and suckets <sup>48</sup> from Tiberias,
Cates from Judæa, choicer than the lamp <sup>49</sup>
That fired Rome with sparks of gluttony,
Shall beautify the board for Frederick :
And therefore grudge not at a friar's feast.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE III] <sup>50</sup>

Enter two gentlemen, LAMBERT and SERLSBY, with the Keeper.

LAM. Come, frolic Keeper of our liege's gane,
Whose table spread hath ever venison
And jacks <sup>51</sup> of wine to welcome passengers,
Know I am in love with jolly Margaret,
That overshines our damsels as the moon
Dark'neth the brightest sparkles of the night.
In Laxfield here my land and living <sup>52</sup> lies ;
I'll make thy daughter jointer <sup>53</sup> of it all,
So <sup>54</sup> thou consent to give her to my wife ;
And I can spend five hundred marks a year. [10

SER. I am the landslord, Keeper, of thy holds ;

By copy all thy living lies in me ; <sup>55</sup>
Laxfield did never see me raise my due.
I will enfeof fair Margaret in all,
So she will take her to a lusty squire.

KEEP. Now, courteous gentles, if the Keeper's girl

<sup>55</sup> All your income is derived from land of mine which you occupy by copyhold tenure. (A tenant by copyhold had only a copy of the record of the manorial court to show for his right of occupancy.)

Hath pleased the liking fancy of you both,
And with her beauty hath subdued your
thoughts,

'T is doubtful to decide the question.

It joys me that such men of great esteem 20
Should lay their liking on this base estate,
And that her state should grow so fortunate
To be a wife to meaner men than you.<sup>56</sup>
But sith such squires will stoop to keeper's fee,<sup>57</sup>

I will, to avoid displeasure of you both,
Call Margaret forth, and she shall make her choice. Exit.

LAM. Content, Keeper; send her unto us.
Why, Serslsby, is thy wife so lately dead,
Are all thy loves so lightly passed over,
As thou canst wed before the year be out? 30

SER. I live not, Lambert, to content the
dead,

Nor was I wedded but for life to her;
The [grave]<sup>58</sup> ends and begins a married state.

Enter MARGARET.

LAM. Peggy, the lovely flower of all towns,
Suffolk's fair Helen, and rich England's star,
Whose beauty, tempered with her huswifery,
Makes England talk of merry Fressingfield!

SER. I cannot trick it up with poesies,
Nor paint my passions with comparisons,<sup>59</sup>
Nor tell a tal[e] of Phœbus and his loves; 40
But this believe me: Laxfield here is mine,
Of ancient rent seven hundred pounds a year;
And if thou canst but love a country squire,
I will enfeof thee, Margaret, in all.
I cannot flatter; try me, if thou please.

MAR. Brave neighboring squires, the stay of Suffolk's clime,
A keeper's [daughter]<sup>60</sup> is too base in gree<sup>61</sup>
To match with men accounted of such worth;
But might I not displease, I would reply.

LAM. Say, Peggy; naught shall make us discontent. 50

MAR. Then, gentles, note that love hath little stay,<sup>62</sup>
Nor can the flames that Venus sets on fire
Be kindled but by fancy's motion;<sup>63</sup>
Then pardon, gentles, if a maid's reply
Be doubtful, while<sup>64</sup> I have debated with myself,
Who, or of whom, love shall constrain me like.

<sup>56</sup> I.e., it would please me if she should be so fortunate as to marry even a man of less wealth than you, much more one as wealthy as you.

<sup>62</sup> Steadiness. <sup>63</sup> Love's impulse. <sup>64</sup> Till.

SER. Let it be me; and trust me, Margaret,
The meads environed with the silver streams,
Whose battling pastures fatt'neth all my
flocks,

Yielding forth fleeces stapled with such wool<sup>65</sup>
As Leominster<sup>66</sup> cannot yield more finer stuff, 61

And forty kine with fair and burnish'd heads,
With strouting<sup>67</sup> dugs that paggle<sup>68</sup> to the ground,

Shall serve thy dairy, if thou wed with me.

LAM. Let pass the country wealth, as flocks and kine,

And lands that wave with Ceres' golden sheaves,

Filling my barns with plenty of the fields;

But, Peggy, if thou wed thyself to me,
Thou shalt have garments of embroid'ed silk,
Lawns, and rich networks for thy head-attire; 70

Costly shall be thy fair [h]abiliments,

If thou wilt be but Lambert's loving wife.

MAR. Content you, gentles; you have proffer'd fair,

And more than fits a country maid's degree.

But give me leave to counsel me a time,
For fancy blooms not at the first assault;
Give me but ten days' respite, and I will reply,
Which or to whom myself affectionates.

SER. Lambert, I tell thee, thou art importunate;

Such beauty fits not such a base esquire; 80
It is for Serslsby to have Margaret.

LAM. Think'st thou with wealth to overreach me?

Serslsby, I scorn to brook thy country braves.<sup>69</sup>
I dare thee, coward, to maintain this wrong,
At dint of rapier, single in the field.

SER. I'll answer, Lambert, what I have avouch'd. —

Margaret, farewell; another time shall serve.

Exit SERSLSBY.

LAM. I'll follow. — Peggy, farewell to thy-
self;

Listen how well I'll answer for thy love.

Exit LAMBERT.

MAR. How Fortune tempers lucky haps with frowns, 90
And wrongs me with the sweets of my delight!
Love is my bliss, and love is now my bale.

Shall I be Helen in my forward fates,
As I am Helen in my matchless hue,
And set rich Suffolk with my face afire?
If lovely Lacy were but with his Peggy,
The cloudy darkness of his bitter frown
Would check the pride of these aspiring squires.
Before the term of ten days be expired,
Whenas they look for answer of their loves, 100
My lord will come to merry Fressingfield,
And end their fancies and their follies both :
Till when, Peggy, be blithe and of good cheer.

Enter a Post with a letter and a bag of gold.

POST. Fair lovely damsel, which way leads this path?

How might I post me unto Fressingfield?
Which footpath leadeth to the Keeper's lodge?

MAR. Your way is ready, and this path is right ;

Myself do dwell hereby in Fressingfield,
And if the Keeper be the man you seek,
I am his daughter ; may I know the cause? 110

POST. Lovely, and once beloved of my
lord, —

No marvel if his eye was lodg'd so low,
When brighter beauty is not in the heavens, —
The Lincoln Earl hath sent you letters here,
And, with them, just an hundred pounds in gold.

Sweet, bonny wench, read them, and make reply.

MAR. The scrolls that Jove sent Danaë,
Wrapp'd in rich closures of fine burnish'd gold,
Were not more welcome than these lines to me.
Tell me, whilst that I do unrip the seals, 120
Lives Lacy well? How fares my lovely lord?

POST. Well, if that wealth may make men to live well.

The letter, and MARGARET reads it.

MAR. "The blooms of the almond tree grow in a night, and vanish in a morn ; the flies hamerae,<sup>70</sup> fair Peggy, take life with the sun, and die with the dew ; fancy, that slippeth in with a gaze, goeth out with a wink ; and too timely<sup>71</sup> loves have ever the shortest length. I write this as thy grief, and my folly, who at Fressingfield lov'd that which [130
time hath taught me to be but mean dainties.
Eyes are dissemblers, and fancy is but queasy ;
therefore know, Margaret, I have chosen a Spanish lady to be my wife, chief waiting woman to the Princess Elinor ; a lady fair, and no less fair than thyself, honorable and wealthy. In that I forsake thee, I leave thee to thine own liking ; and for thy dowry I have sent thee an hundred pounds ; and ever assure thee of my favor, which shall avail thee [140 and thine much. Farewell.

Not thine, nor his own,
EDWARD LACY."

Fond Ate, doomer of bad-boding fates,
That wraps proud Fortune in thy snaky locks, Didst thou enchant my birthday with such stars

As light'ned mischief from their infancy?
If Heavens had vow'd, if stars had made decree,

To show on me their froward influence,
If Lacy had but lov'd, Heavens, hell, and all Could not have wrong'd the patience of my mind. 151

POST. It grieves me, damsel ; but the Earl is forc'd

To love the lady by the King's command.

MAR. The wealth combin'd within the English shelves,<sup>72</sup>

Europe's commander, nor the English King, Should not have mov'd the love of Peggy from her lord.

POST. What answer shall I return to my
Lord?

MAR. First, for thou cam'st from Lacy, whom I lov'd, —

Ah, give me leave to sigh at every thought ! — Take thou, my friend, the hundred pound he sent, 160

For Margaret's resolution craves no dower.
The world shall be to her as vanity ;
Wealth, trash ; love, hate ; pleasure, despair :
For I will straight to stately Framlingham,
And in the abbey there be shorn a nun,
And yield my loves and liberty to God.
Fellow, I give thee this, not for the news,
For those be hateful unto Margaret,
But for th'art Lacy's man, once Margaret's
love.

POST. What I have heard, what passions I have seen, 170
I'll make report of them unto the Earl.

Exit Post.

MAR. Say that she joys his fancies be at
rest,
And prays that his misfortune may be hers.

Exit.

[ACT IV — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter FRIAR BACON drawing the curtains with a white stick, a book in his hand, and a lamp lighted by him; and the Brazen Head, and MILES with weapons by him.

BACON. Miles, where are you?

MILES. Here, sir.

BACON. How chance you tarry so long?

MILES. Think you that the watching of the Brazen Head craves no furniture?<sup>2</sup> I warrant you, sir, I have so armed myself that if all your devils come, I will not fear them an inch.

BACON. Miles, thou knowest that I have dived into hell,

And sought the darkest palaces of fiends; [10
That with my magic spells great Belcephon
Hath left his lodge and kneeled at my cell;
The rafters of the earth rent from the poles,
And three-form'd<sup>3</sup> Luna hid her silver looks,
Trembling upon her concave continent,
When Bacon read upon his magic book.

With seven years' tossing<sup>4</sup> necromantic charms,

Poring upon dark Hecate's principles,
I have fram'd out a monstrous head of brass, 19

That, by the enchanting forces of the Devil,
Shall tell out strange and uncouth aphorisms,
And girt fair England with a wall of brass.
Bungay and I have watch'd these threescore
days,

And now our vital spirits crave some rest.
If Argus liv'd, and had his hundred eyes,
They could not overwatch Phobeter's<sup>5</sup> night.
Now, Miles, in thee rests Friar Bacon's weal:
The honor and renown of all his life
Hangs in the watching of this Brazen

Head; 29

Therefore I charge thee by the immortal God,
That holds the souls of men within his fist,
This night thou watch; for ere the morning star

Sends out his glorious glister on the north,
The Head will speak: then, Miles, upon thy
life,

Wake me; for then by magic art I'll work
To end my seven years' task with excellence.

If that a wink but shut thy watchful eye,
Then farewell Bacon's glory and his fame!
Draw close the curtains, Miles; now, for thy
life, 39

Be watchful, and — Here he falleth asleep.

MILES. So; I thought you would talk yourself asleep anon; and 't is no marvel, for Bungay on the days, and he on the nights, have watch'd just these ten and fifty days: now this is the night, and 't is my task, and no more. Now, Jesus bless me, what a goodly head it is! and a nose! you talk of nos autem glorificare; <sup>6</sup> but here's a nose that I warrant may be call'd nos autem pop[u]lare for the [49 people of the parish. Well, I am furnished with weapons: now, sir, I will set me down by a post, and make it as good as a watchman to wake me, if I chance to slumber. I thought, Goodman Head, I would call you out of your memento . . . (Sit down and knock your head.)<sup>7</sup> — Passion o' God, I have almost broke my pate! Up, Miles, to your task; take your brown bill in your hand; here's some of your master's hobgoblins abroad.

With this a great noise. The Head speaks.

THE BRAZEN HEAD. Time is! 60

MILES. Time is! Why, Master Brazen
Head, have you such a capital nose, and answer you with syllables, "Time is"? Is this all my master's cunning, to spend seven years' study about "Time is"? Well, sir, it may be we shall have some better orations of it anon.
Well, I'll watch you as narrowly as ever you were watch'd, and I'll play with you as the nightingale with the slowworm; I'll set a prick against my breast.<sup>8</sup> Now rest there, [70 Miles. . . . (He falls.) — Lord have mercy upon me, I have almost kill'd myself! [A great noise.] Up, Miles; list how they rumble.

THE BRAZEN HEAD. Time was!

MILES. Well, Friar Bacon, you spent your seven years' study well, that can make your Head speak but two words at once, "Time was." Yea, marry, time was when my master was a wise man, but that was before he began to make the Brazen Head. You [80 shall lie while<sup>9</sup> your arse ache, an your head speak no better. Well, I will watch, and walk up and down, and be a peripatetian and a phi-of an introit.

<sup>7</sup> Greg gives this marginal note, which has been partly cut away in the Harvard copy of Q<sub>1</sub>.

losopher of Aristotle's stamp. [A great noise.] — What, a fresh noise? Take thy pistols in hand, Miles.

Here the Head speaks, and a lightning flasheth forth, and a hand appears that breaketh down the Head with a hammer.

THE BRAZEN HEAD. Time is past!

MILES. Master, master, up! Hell's broken loose! Your Head speaks; and there's such a thunder and lightning that I [90 warrant all Oxford is up in arms. Out of your bed, and take a brown bill in your hand; the Latter Day is come.

BACON. Miles, I come. O, passing warily watch'd!

Bacon will make thee next himself in love. When spake the Head?

MILES. When spake the Head! Did not you say that he should tell strange principles of philosophy? Why, sir, it speaks but two words at a time. 100

BACON. Why, villain, hath it spoken oft?

MILES. Oft! ay, marry, hath it, thrice; but in all those three times it hath uttered but seven words.

BACON. As how?

MILES. Marry, sir, the first time he said "Time is," as if Fabius Cumentator<sup>10</sup> should have pronounc'd a sentence; [the second time]<sup>11</sup> he said, "Time was"; and the third time, with thunder and lightning, as in [110 great choler, he said, "Time is past."

BACON. 'Tis past indeed. Ah, villain! time is past;

My life, my fame, my glory, all are past. — Bacon, the turrets of thy hope are ruin'd down, Thy seven years' study lieth in the dust! Thy Brazen Head lies broken through a slave That watch'd, and would not when the Head did will. —

What said the Head first?

MILES. Even, sir, "Time is."

BACON. Villain, if thou hadst call'd to Bacon then, 120 If thou hadst watch'd, and wak'd the sleepy friar,

The Brazen Head had uttered aphorisms, And England had been circled round with brass;

But proud [Asmenoth],<sup>12</sup> ruler of the north,

And Demogorgon, master of the fates, Grudge that a mortal man should work so much.

Hell trembled at my deep, commanding spells; Fiends frown'd to see a man their overmatch; Bacon might boast more than a man might boast. 129

But now the braves of Bacon hath an end; Europe's conceit of Bacon hath an end; His seven years' practice sorteth to ill end; And, villain, sith<sup>13</sup> my glory hath an end, I will appoint thee to some fatal<sup>14</sup> end. Villain, avoid! Get thee from Bacon's sight! Vagrant, go roam and range about the world, And perish as a vagabond on earth!

MILES. Why, then, sir, you forbid me your service?

BACON. My service, villain! with a fatal curse, 139

That direful plagues and mischief fall on thee.

MILES. 'Tis no matter; I am against you with the old proverb: The more the fox is curs'd,<sup>15</sup> the better he fares. God be with you, sir. I'll take but a book in my hand, a wide-sleeved gown on my back, and a crowned<sup>16</sup> cap on my head, and see if I can want promotion.

BACON. Some fiend or ghost haunt on thy weary steps,

Until they do transport thee quick to hell; For Bacon shall have never merry day, To lose the fame and honor of his Head. 150 [Exeunt.]

[SCENE II]<sup>17</sup>

Enter [the] EMPEROR, [the KING OF] CASTILE, [KING] HENRY, ELINOR, [PRINCE] EDWARD, LACY, [and] RALPH [SIMNELL].

EMP. Now, lovely Prince, the prince<sup>18</sup> of Albion's wealth,

How fares the Lady Elinor and you?

What, have you courted and found Castile fit To answer England in equivalence?

Will't be a match 'twixt bonny Nell and thee?

Edw. Should Paris enter in the courts of Greece,

And not lie fettered in fair Helen's looks? Or Phœbus scape those piercing amoretts That Daphne glanced at his deity?

<sup>12</sup> Cf. III, ii, 143; old eds. Asmeroth.

Can Edward, then, sit by a flame and freeze, [10
Whose heat puts Helen and fair Daphne
down?

Now, monarchs, ask the lady if we gree.

HEN. What, madam, hath my son found grace or no?

ELIN. Seeing, my Lord, his lovely counterfeit,<sup>19</sup>

And hearing how his mind and shape agreed,
I come not, troop'd with all this warlike train,
Doubting of love, but so affectionate
As Edward hath in England what he won in Spain.<sup>20</sup>

CAST. A match, my Lord; these wantons needs must love;
Men must have wives, and women will be
wed. 20

Let's haste the day to honor up the rites.

RALPH. Sirrah Harry, shall Ned marry
Nell?

HEN. Ay, Ralph: how then?

RALPH. Marry, Harry, follow my counsel:
send for Friar Bacon to marry them, for he'll so conjure him and her with his necromancy, that they shall love together like pig and lamb whilst they live.

CAST. But hear'st thou, Ralph, art thou content to have Elinor to thy lady? 31

RALPH. Ay, so she will promise me two things.

CAST. What's that, Ralph?

RALPH. That she will never scold with Ned, nor fight with me. — Sirrah Harry, I have put her down with a thing impossible.

HEN. What's that, Ralph?

RALPH. Why, Harry, didst thou ever see that a woman could both hold her tongue [40 and her hands? No; but when egg-pies grows on apple trees, then will thy grey mare prove a bagpiper.

EMP. What says the Lord of Castile and the Earl of Lincoln, that they are in such earnest and secret talk?

CAST. I stand, my Lord, amazed at his talk,
How he discourseth of the constancy
Of one surnam'd, for beauty's excellence,
The Fair<sup>21</sup> Maid of merry Fressingfield. 50

HEN. 'Tis true, my Lord, 'tis wondrous for to hear;
Her beauty passing Mars's paramour,
Her virgin's right as rich as Vesta's was.<sup>22</sup>
Lacy and Ned hath told me miracles.

CAST. What says Lord Lacy? Shall she be his wife?

LACY. Or else Lord Lacy is unfit to live. —
May it please your Highness give me leave to post

To Fressingfield, I'll fetch the bonny girl,
And prove, in true appearance at the court, 59
What I have vouch'd often with my tongue.

HEN. Lacy, go to the 'query of my stable,
And take such coursers as shall fit thy turn;
Hie thee to Fressingfield, and bring home the lass;

And, for her fame flies through the English coast,

If it may please the Lady Elinor,
One day shall match your excellence and her.

ELIN. We Castile ladies are not very coy;
Your Highness may command a greater boon;
And glad were I to grace the Lincoln Earl

With being partner of his marriage day. 70
EDW. Gramercy, Nell, for I do love the
lord,

As he that's second to myself in love.

RALPH. You love her! — Madam Nell, never believe him you, though he swears he loves you.

ELIN. Why, Ralph?

RALPH. Why, his love is like unto a tap-ster's glass, that is broken with every touch;
for he loved the fair maid of Fressingfield once out of all ho.<sup>23</sup> — Nay, Ned, never [80 wink upon me; I care not, I.

HEN. Ralph tells all; you shall have a good secretary of him. —

But, Lacy, haste thee post<sup>24</sup> to Fressingfield;
For ere thou hast fitted all things for her state,
The solemn marriage day will be at hand.

LACY. I go, my Lord. Exit LACY.

EMP. How shall we pass this day, my
Lord?

HEN. To horse, my Lord; the day is passing fair;
We'll fly the partridge, or go rouse the deer. 90

Follow, my Lords; you shall not want for sport.

Exeunt.

[SCENE III]<sup>25</sup>

Enter FRIAR BACON with FRIAR BUNGAY to his cell.

BUN. What means the friar that frolick'd
it of late,

<sup>22</sup> Her right to the name of virgin equal in worth to that of Vesta.

To sit as melancholy in his cell

As if he had neither lost nor won to-day?

BACON. Ah, Bungay, my Brazen Head is spoil'd,

My glory gone, my seven years' study lost!

The fame of Bacon, bruited through the world,
Shall end and perish with this deep disgrace.

BUN. Bacon hath built foundation [of]<sup>26</sup> his fame

So surely on the wings of true report,
With<sup>27</sup> acting strange and uncouth miracles,
As this cannot infringe what he deserves. 11

BACON. Bungay, sit down, for by prospective skill

I find this day shall fall out ominous.

Some deadly act shall 'tide me ere I sleep,
But what and wherein little can I guess.

BUN. My mind is heavy, whatso'er shall hap.<sup>28</sup>

*Enter two Scholars, sons to Lambert and Serlsby.
Knock.*

BACON. Who's that knocks?

BUN. Two scholars that desires to speak with you.

BACON. Bid them come in. —

Now, my youths, what would you have? 20

FIRST SCHOL. Sir, we are Suffolk men and neighboring friends;

Our fathers in their countries lusty squires;
Their lands adjoin: in Cratfield<sup>29</sup> mine doth dwell,

And his in Laxfield. We are college mates,
Sworn brothers, as our fathers lives as friends.

BACON. To what end is all this?

SECOND SCHOL. Hearing your Worship kept within your cell

A glass prospective, wherein men might see Whatso their thoughts or hearts' desire could wish,

We come to know how that our fathers fare. 30

BACON. My glass is free for every honest
man.

Sit down, and you shall see ere long,

How or in what state your friendly [fathers live].<sup>30</sup>

Meanwhile, tell me your names.

FIRST SCHOL. Mine Lambert.

SECOND SCHOL. And mine Serlsby.

BACON. Bungay, I smell there will be a tragedy.

Enter LAMBERT and SERLSBY with rapiers and daggers.

LAM. Serlsby, thou hast kept thine hour
like a man;

Th'art worthy of the title of a squire,

That durst, for proof of thy affection 40

And for thy mistress' favor, prize<sup>31</sup> thy blood.

Thou know'st what words did pass at Fressingfield,

Such shameless braves as manhood cannot
brook:

Ay, for I scorn to bear such piercing taunts,

Prepare thee, Serlsby; one of us will die.

SER. Thou seest I single [meet]<sup>32</sup> thee [in]<sup>33</sup>
the field,

And what I spake, I'll maintain with my
sword.

Stand on thy guard: I cannot scold it out.

An if thou kill me, think I have a son, 49

That lives in Oxford in the Broadgates Hall,<sup>34</sup>

Who will revenge his father's blood with blood.

LAM. And, Serlsby, I have there a lusty
boy,

That dares at weapon buckle with thy son,

And lives in Broadgates too, as well as thine.

But draw thy rapier, for we'll have a bout.

BACON. Now, lusty youngers, look within the glass,

And tell me if you can discern your sires.

FIRST SCHOL. Serlsby, 't is hard; thy father offers wrong,

To combat with my father in the field.

SECOND SCHOL. Lambert, thou liest; my father's is th' abuse;<sup>34</sup> 60

And thou shalt find it, if my father harm.

BUN. How goes it, sirs?

FIRST SCHOL. Our fathers are in combat hard by Fressingfield.

BACON. Sit still, my friends, and see the event.

LAM. Why stand'st thou, Serlsby?
Doubt'st thou of thy life?

A veney,<sup>35</sup> man! Fair Margaret craves so
much.

SER. Then this for her.

FIRST SCHOL. Ah, well thrust!

SECOND SCHOL. But mark the ward.

[LAMBERT and SERLSBY] *fight and kill each
other.*

LAM. O, I am slain!

70

SER. And I, Lord have mercy on me!

FIRST SCHOL. My father slain! — Serlsby, ward that.

The two Scholars stab one another [and die].

SECOND SCHOL. And so is mine! — Lambert, I'll quit thee well.

BUN. O strange stratagem!

BACON. See, friar, where the fathers both lie dead! —

Bacon, thy magic doth effect this massacre;
This glass prospective worketh many woes.
And therefore, seeing these brave, lusty
Brutes,<sup>36</sup>

These friendly youths, did perish by thine art,
End all thy magic and thine art at once. 80
The poniard that did end the fatal<sup>37</sup> lives,
Shall break the cause [efficient]<sup>38</sup> of their woes.
So fade the glass, and end with it the shows
That necromancy did infuse the crystal with.

He breaks the glass.

BUN. What means learned Bacon thus to break his glass?

BACON. I tell thee, Bungay, it repents me sore

That ever Bacon meddled in this art.
The hours I have spent in pyromantic spells,
The fearful tossing<sup>39</sup> in the latest night
Of papers full of necromantic charms, 90
Conjuring and adjuring devils and fiends,
With stole and alb and strange pentag[o]non,<sup>40</sup>
The wresting of the holy name of God,
As Soter, Elohim<sup>41</sup> and Adonai,
Alpha, [Sabaoth] and Tetragrammaton,
With praying to the fivefold powers of [hell]<sup>42</sup>
Are instances that Bacon must be damn'd
For using devils to countervail<sup>43</sup> his God. —
Yet, Bacon, cheer thee; drown not in despair:
Sins have their salves, repentance can do
much; 100

Think Mercy sits where Justice holds her seat,
And from those wounds those bloody Jews did pierce,

Which by thy magic oft did bleed afresh,

<sup>43</sup> Equal in strength.

From thence for thee the dew of mercy drops,
To wash the wrath of high Jehovah's ire,
And make thee as a newborn babe from sin. —
Bungay, I'll spend the remnant of my life
In pure devotion, praying to my God
That he would save what Bacon vainly lost.

[Exeunt.]

[ACT V — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter MARGARET in nun's apparel, [the] Keeper her father, and their Friend.

KEEPER. Margaret, be not so headstrong in these vows;

O, bury not such beauty in a cell,
That England hath held famous for the hue!
Thy father's hair, like to the silver blooms
That beautify the shrubs of Africa,
Shall fall before the dated time of death,
Thus to forgo his lovely Margaret.

MAR. Ah, Father, when the harmony of Heaven

Soundeth the measures of a lively faith,
The vain illusions of this flattering world 10
Seems odious to the thoughts of Margaret.
I loved once — Lord Lacy was my love;
And now I hate myself for that I lov'd,
And doted more on him than on my God;
For this I scourge myself with sharp renews.
But now the touch of such aspiring sins
Tells me all love is lust but love of [Heaven];<sup>2</sup>
That beauty us'd for love is vanity;
The world contains naught but alluring baits:
Pride, flattery, and inconstant thoughts. 20
To shun the pricks of death, I leave the world,
And vow to meditate on heavenly bliss,
To live in Framlingham<sup>3</sup> a holy nun,
Holy and pure in conscience and in deed;
And for to wish all maids to learn of me
To seek Heaven's joy before earth's vanity.

FRIEND. And will you, then, Margaret, be shorn a nun, and so leave us all?

MAR. Now farewell world, the engine of all woe!

Farewell to friends and father; welcome Christ! 30

Adieu to dainty robes; this base attire
Better befits an humble mind to God
Than all the show of rich [h]abiliments.
[Farewell,] <sup>4</sup> O love! and, with fond love, farewell

<sup>4</sup> Emend. Dyce; old eds. Loue.

Sweet Lacy, whom I loved once so dear !
 Ever be well, but never in my thoughts,
 Lest I offend to think on Lacy's love ;
 But even to that, as to the rest, farewell !

Enter LACY, WARREN, [and] ERMSBY, booted and spurr'd.

LACY. Come on, my wags, we're near the Keeper's lodge.

Here have I oft walk'd in the wat'ry meads, 40
 And chatted with my lovely Margaret.

WAR. Sirrah Ned, is not this the Keeper?

LACY. 'T is the same.

ERM. The old lecher hath gotten holy mutton <sup>5</sup> to him : a nun, my Lord.

LACY. Keeper, how farest thou? Holla, man, what cheer?

How doth Peggy, thy daughter and my love?

KEEPER. Ah, good my Lord! O, woe is me for Pegg[y]!

See where she stands clad in her nun's attire,
 Ready for to be shorn in Framlingham; 50
 She leaves the world because she left your love.
 O, good my Lord, persuade her if you can!

LACY. Why, how now, Margaret! What,
 a malcontent?

A nun? What holy father taught you this,
 To task yourself to such a tedious life
 As die a maid? 'T were injury to me,
 To smother up such beauty in a cell.

MAR. Lord Lacy, thinking of thy former miss, <sup>6</sup>

How fond <sup>7</sup> the prime of wanton years were spent

In love (oh, fie upon that fond conceit, 60
 Whose hap and essence hangeth in the eye!),
 I leave both love and love's content at once,
 Betaking me to Him that is true love,
 And leaving all the world for love of Him.

LACY. Whence, Peggy, comes this metamorphosis?

What, shorn a nun? and I have from the court
 Posted with coursers to convey thee hence
 To Windsor, where our marriage shall be kept!
 Thy wedding robes are in the tailor's hands.

Come, Peggy, leave these peremptory vows. 70

MAR. Did not my Lord resign his interest,
 And make divorce 'twixt Margaret and him?

LACY. 'T was but to try sweet Peggy's constancy.

But will fair Margaret leave her love and lord?

MAR. Is not Heaven's joy before earth's fading bliss,
 And life above sweeter than life in love?

LACY. Why, then, Margaret will be shorn a nun?

MAR. Margaret hath made a vow which may not be revok'd.

WAR. We cannot stay, my Lord; an if she be so strict,

Our leisure grants us not to woo afresh. 80

ERMS. Choose you, fair damsel; yet the choice is yours,

Either a solemn nunnery or the court,
 God or Lord Lacy. Which contents you best,
 To be a nun or else Lord Lacy's wife?

LACY. A good motion.—Peggy, your answer must be short.

MAR. The flesh is frail; my Lord doth know it well,

That when he comes with his enchanting face,
 Whatsoe'er betide, I cannot say him nay.

Off goes the habit <sup>8</sup> of a maiden's heart, 89

And, seeing fortune will, fair Framlingham,
 And all the show of holy nuns, farewell!

Lacy for me, if he will be my lord.

LACY. Peggy, thy lord, thy love, thy husband.

Trust me, by truth of knighthood, that the
 King

Stays for to marry matchless Elinor,
 Until I bring thee richly to the court,
 That one day may both marry her and thee.—
 How say'st thou, Keeper? Art thou glad of this?

KEEP. As if the English King had given
 The park and deer of Fressingfield to me. 100

ERM. I pray thee, my Lord of Sussex, why art thou in a brown study?

WAR. To see the nature of women; that be they never so near God, yet they love to die in a man's arms.

LACY. What have you fit for breakfast?
 We have hied

And posted all this night to Fressingfield.

MAR. Butter and cheese, and umbles <sup>9</sup> of a deer,

Such as poor keepers have within their lodge.

LACY. And not a bottle of wine? 110

MAR. We'll find one for my lord.

LACY. Come, Sussex, let's in; we shall have more,

For she speaks least, to hold her promise sure

Exeunt.

<sup>5</sup> Mutton was a cant word for an unchaste woman.

<sup>6</sup> Fault; i.e., your former mistaken love for me.
 But possibly we should read my for thy.

[SCENE II]<sup>10</sup>Enter a Devil to seek MILES.

DEVIL. How restless are the ghosts of hellish spirits,
When every charmer with his magic spells
Calls us from ninefold-trenched [Phlegethon],<sup>11</sup>

To scud and overscour the earth in post
Upon the speedy wings of swiftest winds !
Now Bacon hath rais'd me from the darkest
deep,

To search about the world for Miles, his man,
For Miles, and to torment his lazy bones
For careless watching of his Brazen Head.
See where he comes. Oh, he is mine ! 10

Enter MILES with a gown and a corner-cap.

MILES. A scholar, quoth you ! Marry, sir,
I would I had been made a bottlemaker when I was made a scholar ; for I can get neither to be a deacon, reader,<sup>12</sup> nor schoolmaster, no, not the clerk of a parish. Some call me dunce ; another saith my head is as full of Latin as an egg's full of oatmeal. Thus I am tormented, that the Devil and Friar Bacon haunts me.
— Good Lord, here's one of my master's devils ! I'll go speak to him. — What, [20
Master Plutus,<sup>13</sup> how cheer you ?

DEV. Dost thou know me ?

MILES. Know you, sir ! Why, are not you one of my master's devils, that were wont to come to my master, Doctor Bacon, at Brazennose ?

DEV. Yes, marry, am I.

MILES. Good Lord, Master Plutus, I have seen you a thousand times at my master's, and yet I had never the manners to make you [30 drink. But, sir, I am glad to see how conformable you are to the statute.<sup>14</sup> — I warrant you, he's as yeomanly a man as you shall see ;
mark you, masters,<sup>15</sup> here's a plain honest man, without welt or guard.<sup>16</sup> But I pray you, sir, do you come lately from hell ?

DEV. Ay, marry ; how then ?

MILES. Faith, 't is a place I have desired long to see. Have you not good tippling-

of cards, a swinging<sup>18</sup> piece of chalk, and a brown toast that will clap a white waistcoat on a cup of good drink ?

DEV. All this you may have there.

MILES. You are for me, friend, and I am for you. But I pray you, may I not have an office there ?

DEV. Yes, a thousand. What wouldst
thou be ? 50

MILES. By my troth, sir, in a place where I may profit myself. I know hell is a hot place, and men are marvellous dry, and much drink is spent there ; I would be a tapster.

DEV. Thou shalt.

MILES. There's nothing lets<sup>19</sup> me from going with you but that 't is a long journey and I have never a horse.

DEV. Thou shalt ride on my back.

MILES. Now surely here's a courteous [60 devil, that, for to pleasure his friend, will not stick to make a jade of himself. — But I pray you, Goodman friend, let me move a question to you.

DEV. What's that ?

MILES. I pray you, whether is your pace a trot or an amble ?

DEV. An amble.

MILES. 'T is well, but take heed it be not a trot ; but 't is no matter — I'll prevent it. [70

DEV. What dost ?

MILES. Marry, friend, I put on my spurs ;
for if I find your pace either a trot or else uneasy, I'll put you to a false gallop ;<sup>20</sup> I'll make you feel the benefit of my spurs.

DEV. Get up upon my back.

MILES. O Lord, here's even a goodly marvel, when a man rides to hell on the Devil's back !

EDW. Great potentates, earth's miracles for state,
Think that Prince Edward humbles at your
feet,

And, for these favors, on his martial sword
He vows perpetual homage to yourselves,
Yielding these honors unto Elinor.

HEN. Gramercies, Lordlings; old Planta-genet,

That rules and sways the Albion diadem,
With tears discovers those conceived joys,
And vows requital, if his men at arms,
The wealth of England, or due honors done 10
To Elinor, may quit his favorites.

But all this while what say you to the dames,
'That shine like to the crystal lamps of heaven?

EMP. If but a third were added to these two,
They did surpass those gorgeous images
That gloried Ida with rich beauty's wealth.

MAR. 'Tis I, my Lords, who humbly on my knee

Must yield her orisons to mighty Jove
For lifting up his handmaid to this state, 19
Brought from her homely cottage to the court,
And grac'd with <sup>26</sup> kings, princes, and emperors;

To whom, next to the noble Lincoln Earl,
I vow obedience and such humble love
As may a handmaid to such mighty men.

ELIN. Thou martial man that wears the Almain crown,

And you, the western potentates of might,
The Albion Princess, English Edward's wife,
Proud that the lovely star of Fressingfield,
Fair Margaret, Countess to the Lincoln Earl, Attends on Elinor, — gramercies, Lord, for
her, — 30

'Tis I give thanks for Margaret to you all,
And rest for her due bounden to yourselves.

HEN. Seeing the marriage is solemnized,
Let's march in triumph to the royal feast. —
But why stands Friar Bacon here so mute?

BACON. Repentant for the follies of my youth,

That magic's secret mysteries misled,
And joyful that this royal marriage
Portends such bliss unto this matchless realm.

HEN. Why, Bacon, 40

<sup>26</sup> Honored by.

What strange event shall happen to this land?

Or what shall grow from Edward and his Queen?

BACON. I find by deep prescience of mine
art,

Which once I temp'red in my secret cell,
That here where Brute did build his Troynovant,

From forth the royal garden of a king
Shall flourish out so rich and fair a bud <sup>27</sup>
Whose brightness shall deface proud Phœbus' flow'r,

And overshadow Albion with her leaves.

Till then Mars shall be master of the field; 50
But then the stormy threats of wars shall
cease,

The horse shall stamp as careless of the pike,
Drums shall be turn'd to timbrels of delight;
With wealthy favors plenty shall enrich
The strond that gladdened wand'ring Brute to sec,

And peace from Heaven shall harbor in these leaves

That gorgeous beautifies this matchless flower.

Apollo's heliotropion then shall stoop,
And Venus' hyacinth shall vail her top;

Juno shall shut her gilliflowers up, 60
And Pallas' bay shall 'bash her brightest green;

Ceres' carnation, in consort with those,
Shall stoop and wonder at Diana's rose.

HEN. This prophecy is mystical. —

But, glorious commanders of Europa's love,
That makes fair England like that wealthy
isle

Circled with Gihon <sup>28</sup> and [swift] <sup>29</sup> Euphrates,
In royalizing Henry's Albion

With presence of your princely mightiness,
Let's march; the tables all are spread, 70
And viands, such as England's wealth affords,
Are ready set to furnish out the boards.

You shall have welcome, mighty potentates;
It rests to furnish up this royal feast;
Only your hearts be frolic, for the time
Craves that we taste of naught but jouissance.
Thus glories England over all the west.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

Few, if any of the Elizabethan plays equalled The Spanish Tragedy in popularity or influence. Playgoers and play readers alike devoured it, and many of its features may be traced in subsequent tragedies. To be sure, there are bombast and rawness and clumsiness in The Spanish Tragedy; to be sure, it lacks the winged imagination and superb rhetoric that redeem Marlowe's bombast. But a lively melodrama is always preferable to a dead tragedy, and Kyd's play is no ordinary melodrama. Its great merit, as a piece of the 1580's, resides in the author's sincerity and his absorption in the human passions which his story involves. Of all the immediate predecessors of Shakespeare, Kyd is the one with the real flair for the stage. As an example of construction, this play is open to much objection, especially for its labored beginning; and Kyd is stylistically quite inferior to his colleagues. But he surpasses them all in building his scenes around the emotional responses of his characters to the pressure of circumstances, in effective preparation for scenes of rapid action, and in employing a more definitely theatrical technique to move the hearts of his audience. All of which is only saying that Kyd's genius was a more dramatic genius than that of the others.

No source for the plot has been found; yet it is not unlikely that Kyd took it from some romantic tale which has not survived. The political and military background of the play is un-historical, though there was war between Spain and Portugal in 1580. The influence of Seneca (translated in 1581) is obvious in the frequent stichomythia, the messenger, the ghost, and the revenge theme with its attendant horrors. It is highly significant that the Senecan machinery appears here in, not an academic, but a popular play. Elizabethan tragedy was to continue to be molded more or less of the Senecan clay; it was Kyd who breathed life into it. Besides Seneca, Garnier (translated in 1585) and Vergil are drawn upon for some details.

As the London drama developed, and taste and craft were more refined, The Spanish Tragedy, though still a great popular success, became an object of scorn to the sophisticated. From a derisive reference by Jonson in the induction to Bartholemew Fair, it seems likely that the play was produced between 1584 and 1589. The absence of any allusion to the Armada suggests an earlier date than 1588; c. 1586 cannot be far out of the way. Apparently the play was often called simply Jeronimo. Of its long theatrical career there can be no doubt, but records of actual performances are scanty. It was played sixteen times at the Rose by Lord Strange's Men between March 14, 1592, and January 22, 1593, sometimes in conjunction with The Spanish Comedy of Don Horatio. Neither that play, nor The Comedy of Jeronimo (their texts have not survived, and they may be alternative titles for the same piece), nor the (probably) later First Part of Jeronimo (printed in 1605) had, as far as is known, any connection with Kyd himself. Another substantial run of The Spanish Tragedy is recorded, this time by the Admiral's Men, who acted it thirteen times between January 7 and October 11, 1597.

The standard edition of Kyd's works is that of F. S. Boas (1901). The Spanish Tragedy has been separately edited by Josef Schick (1898) and by W. W. Greg (1925). No copy of the original edition of the play is known to have survived and but one of the second, an undated octavo in the British Museum, conjecturally assigned by Greg to 1592. The second surviving edition appeared in 1594, and the third in 1599. The next was the Quarto of 1602, "newly corrected, amended, and enlarged." It was reprinted in 1603, 1611, 1615, 1618, 1623, and 1633, the last four quartos carrying on their title pages a woodcut which depicts the discovery of Horatio's body. This second version (1602, et seq.) contains the added passages printed in smaller type in the present edition. They have been ascribed to Ben Jonson because Henslowe twice during the season of 1601-1602 records advancing him considerable sums for additions to this play. It is argued, without much cogency, that these cannot be the additions of Quarto

1602, because their romantic fervor is unlike the bulk of Jonson's work. More impressive are Dr. Greg's suggestions that Jonson appears to have received as large a fee as was ordinarily paid for a new play, that the surviving additions are not sufficiently extensive to warrant it, and that it seems unlikely that the company would have permitted the publication of a version so newly made. The additions of Quarto 1602 may, therefore, represent a still earlier revision. There must have been at least one such, for in 1597 Henslowe entered the play in his "Diary" as "new", and in Cynthia's Revels (1600) Jonson refers to it "as it was first acted."

As for Kyd's authorship of the original, our chief reliance is on the quotation and ascription to him of V, i, 83-85, by Thomas Heywood in his Apology for Actors (1612). The present text is based on Boas's reprint of the first surviving edition and on his and Greg's reprints of the additions of 1602. It has also been collated throughout with Greg's text of Q 1602 and with his list of the variants between that edition and the earliest.

ACT I

[CHORUS]

Enter the GHOST OF ANDREA, and with him
 REVENGE.

GHOST. When this eternal substance of my
 soul
 Did live imprison'd in my wanton flesh,
 Each in their function serving other's need,
 I was a courtier in the Spanish court.
 My name was Don Andrea ; my descent,
 Though not ignoble, yet inferior far
 To gracious fortunes of my tender youth.

<sup>1</sup> An Italian word. = confusion.

For there in prime and pride of all my years,
 By duteous service and deserving love,
 In secret I possess'd a worthy dame, 10
 Which hight sweet Bel-imperia by name.
 But in the harvest of my summer joys
 Death's winter nipp'd the blossoms of my bliss,
 Forcing divorce betwixt my love and me.
 For in the late conflict with Portingale
 My valor drew me into danger's mouth
 Till life to death made passage through my wounds.
 When I was slain, my soul descended straight<sup>2</sup>

To pass the flowing stream of Acheron ;
 But churlish Charon, only boatman there, 20
 Said that, my rites of burial not perform'd,
 I might not sit amongst his passengers.
 Ere Sol had slept three nights in Thetis' lap,
 And slak'd his smoking chariot in her flood,
 By Don Horatio, our knight marshal's son,
 My funerals and obsequies were done.
 Then was the ferryman of Hell content
 To pass me over to the slimy strond
 That leads to fell Avernus' ugly waves.
 There, pleasing Cerberus with honey'd
 speech, 30
 I pass'd the perils of the foremost porch.
 Not far from hence, amidst ten thousand souls,
 Sat Minos, Aeacus, and Rhadamanth ;
 To whom no sooner 'gan I make approach,
 To crave a passport for my wand'ring ghost,
 But Minos, in graven leaves of lottery,
 Drew forth the manner of my life and death.
 "This knight," quoth he, "both liv'd and died in love,
 And for his love tried fortune of the wars,
 And by war's fortune lost both love and
 life." 40
 "Why then," said Aeacus, "convey him
 hence,
 To walk with lovers in our fields of love,
 And spend the course of everlasting time
 Under green myrtle trees and cypress shades."
 "No, no," said Rhadamanth, "it were not
 well
 With loving souls to place a martialist.
 He died in war and must to martial fields,
 Where wounded Hector lives in lasting pain,
 And Achilles' Myrmidons do scour the plain."
 Then Minos, mildest censor of the three, 50
 Made this device to end the difference :
 "Send him," quoth he, "to our infernal King,
 To doom him as best seems his Majesty."
 To this effect my passport straight was drawn.
 In keeping on my way to Pluto's court,
 Through dreadful shades of ever-glooming
 night,
 I saw more sights than thousand tongues can tell,
 Or pens can write, or mortal hearts can think.
 Three ways there were : that on the right-hand side
 Was ready way unto the 'foresaid fields, 60
 Where lovers live and bloody martialists,
 But either sort contain'd within his bounds.
 The left-hand path, declining fearfully,
 Was ready downfall to the deepest hell,

Where bloody Furies shakes their whips of steel,
 And poor Ixion turns an endless wheel ;
 Where usurers are chok'd with melting gold,
 And wantons are embrac'd with ugly snakes,
 And murderers groan with never-killing
 wounds,
 And perjur'd wights scalded in boiling lead, [70
 And all foul sins with torments overwhelm'd.
 'Twixt these two ways I trod the middle path,
 Which brought me to the fair Elysian green,<sup>3</sup>
 In midst whereof there stands a stately tower,
 The walls of brass, the gates of adamant.
 Here finding Pluto with his Proserpine,
 I show'd my passport, humbled on my knee ;
 Whereat fair Proserpine began to smile,
 And begg'd that only she might give my doom.
 Pluto was pleas'd, and seal'd it with a kiss. 80
 Forthwith, Revenge, she rounded ' thee in th'
 ear,
 And bade thee lead me through the gates of horn[en],
 Where dreams have passage in the silent night.
 No sooner had she spoke but we were here
 (I wot not how) in twinkling of an eye.
 REVENGE. Then know, Andrea, that thou art arriv'd
 Where thou shalt see the author of thy death,
 Don Balthazar, the Prince of Portingale,
 Depriv'd of life by Bel-imperia.
 Here sit we down to see the mystery, 90
 And serve for Chorus in this tragedy.

[SCENE I] <sup>5</sup>

Enter SPANISH KING, General, CASTILE, [and] HIERONIMO.

KING. Now say, Lord General, how fares
 our camp?

GEN. All well, my sovereign Liege, except some few

That are deceas'd by fortune of the war.

KING. But what portends thy cheerful countenance,

And posting to our presence thus in haste?
 Speak, man, hath fortune given us victory?

GEN. Victory, my Liege, and that with little loss.

KING. Our Portingals will pay us tribute
 then?

<sup>3</sup> In the prefatory epistle to Menaphon, Nash sneers at "those that thrust Elysium into hell."

<sup>5</sup> Before a castle of the Spanish King.

GEN. Tribute and wonted homage there-withal.

KING. Then bless'd be Heaven and Guider of the Heavens, 10
From whose fair influence such justice flows.

CAST. O multum dilecte Deo, tibi militat aether,

Et conjuratae curvato poplit[e] gentes

Succumbunt: recti soror est victoria juris.<sup>6</sup>

KING. Thanks to my loving brother of Castile. —

But, General, unfold in brief discourse
Your form of battle and your war's success,
That, adding all the pleasure of thy news
Unto the height of former happiness,
With deeper wage and greater dignity 20
We may reward thy blissful chivalry.

GEN. Where Spain and Portingale do jointly knit

Their frontiers, leaning on each other's bound,
There met our armies in their proud array;
Both furnish'd well, both full of hope and fear,
Both menacing alike with daring shows,
Both vaunting sundry colors of device,<sup>7</sup>
Both cheerly sounding trumpets, drums, and fifes,

Both raising dreadful clamors to the sky,
That<sup>8</sup> valleys, hills, and rivers made rebound, 30

And heaven itself was frighted with the sound.
Our battles<sup>9</sup> both were pitch'd in squadron form,

Each corner strongly fenc'd with wings of shot;

But ere we join'd and came to push of pike,
I brought a squadron of our readiest shot
From out our rearward to begin the fight.

They brought another wing to encounter us.
Meanwhile, our ordnance play'd on either side,
And captains strove to have their valors tried.

Don Pedro, their chief horsemen's colonel, 40
Did with his cornet<sup>10</sup> bravely make attempt
To break the order of our battle ranks;
But Don Rogero, worthy man of war,
March'd forth against him with our musketeers,

And stopp'd the malice of his fell approach.
While they maintain hot skirmish to and fro,
Both battles join and fall to handy-blows,
Their violent shot resembling th' ocean's rage,
When, roaring loud, and with a swelling tide,
It beats upon the rampires<sup>11</sup> of huge rocks [56
And gapes to swallow neighbor-bounding lands.

Now, while Bellona rageth here and there,
Thick storms of bullets [rain]<sup>12</sup> like winter's hail,

And shivered lances dark<sup>13</sup> the troubled air.

Pede pes et cuspide cuspis;

[Arma] sonant [armis],<sup>14</sup> vir petiturque viro.

On every side drop captains to the ground,
And soldiers, some ill-main'd, some slain outright;

Here falls a body s[un]d' red from his head,
There legs and arms lie bleeding on the grass, 60

Mingled with weapons and unbowell'd steeds,
That scattering overspread the purple plain.
In all this turmoil, three long hours and more,
The victory to neither part inclin'd;

Till Don Andrea, with his brave lancers,
In their main battle made so great a breach,
That, half dismay'd, the multitude retir'd;
But Balthazar, the Portingals' young Prince,
Brought rescue and encourag'd them to stay.

Here-hence the fight was eagerly renew'd, 70
And in that conflict was Andrea slain,
Brave man at arms, but weak to Balthazar.

Yet while the Prince, insulting<sup>15</sup> over him,
Breath'd out proud vaunts, sounding to our reproach,

Friendship and hardy valor, join'd in one,
Prick'd forth Horatio, our knight marshal's son,

To challenge forth that Prince in single fight.
Not long between these twain the fight endur'd,

But straight the Prince was beaten from his horse,

And forc'd to yield him prisoner to his foe. 80
When he was taken, all the rest they fled,
And our carbines pursued them to the death,
Till, Phoebus waving<sup>16</sup> to the western deep,
Our trumpeters were charg'd to sound retreat.

<sup>16</sup> Declining. (N. E. D.)

KING. Thanks, good Lord General, for these good news ;
And for some argument <sup>17</sup> of more to come,
Take this and wear it for thy sovereign's sake.
Give him his chain.

But tell me now, hast thou confirm'd a peace?

GEN. No peace, my Liege, but peace conditional,
That if with homage tribute be well paid, 90
The fury of your forces will be stay'd ;
And to this peace their viceroy hath subscribed,

Give the KING a paper.

And made a solemn vow that, during life,
His tribute shall be truly paid to Spain.

KING. These words, these deeds, become thy person well.

But now, Knight Marshal, frolic with thy king,

For 't is thy son that wins this battle's prize.

HIER. Long may he live to serve my sovereign Liege,

And soon decay, unless he serve my Liege.

KING. Nor thou nor he shall die without reward. A tucket afar off. [100

What means this warning of this trumpet's sound?

GEN. This tells me that your Grace's men of war,

Such as war's fortune hath reserv'd from death,

Come marching on towards your royal seat,

To show themselves before your Majesty ;

For so I gave in charge at my depart.

Whereby by demonstration shall appear

That all, except three hundred or few more,

Are safe return'd, and by their foes enrich'd.

The Army enters ; BALTHAZAR, between LORENZO and HORATIO, captive.

KING. A gladsome sight ! I long to see them here. They enter and pass by. 110

Was that the warlike Prince of Portingale,

That by our nephew was in triumph led?

GEN. It was, my Liege, the Prince of Portingale.

KING. But what was he that on the other side

Held him by th' arm, as partner of the prize?

HIER. That was my son, my gracious Sovereign ;

Of whom though from his tender infancy
My loving thoughts did never hope but well,
He never pleas'd his father's eyes till now,

<sup>17</sup> Evidence.

Nor fill'd my heart with overcloying joys. 120

KING. Go, let them march once more about these walls.

That, staying them, we may confer and talk
With our brave prisoner and his double guard.

[Exit a Messenger.]

Hieronimo, it greatly pleaseth us

That in our victory thou have a share,

By virtue of thy worthy son's exploit.

Enter again.

Bring hither the young Prince of Portingale.

The rest march on ; but, ere they be dismiss'd,
We will bestow on every soldier

Two ducats and on every leader ten, 130

That they may know our largess welcomes them.

Exeunt all [the Army] but BALTHAZAR,

LORENZO, [and] HORATIO.

Welcome, Don Balthazar ! welcome, Nephew !

And thou, Horatio, thou art welcome too.

Young Prince, although thy father's hard misdeeds,

In keeping back the tribute that he owes,

Deserve but evil measure at our hands,

Yet shalt thou know that Spain is honorable.

BAL. The trespass that my father made in peace

Is now controll'd <sup>18</sup> by fortune of the wars ;
And cards once dealt, it boots not ask why

so. 140

His men are slain, a weakening to his realm ;

His colors seiz'd, a blot unto his name ;

His son distress'd, a corsive <sup>19</sup> to his heart :

These punishments may clear his late offence.

KING. Ay, Balthazar, if he observe this truce,

Our peace will grow the stronger for these wars.

Meanwhile live thou, though not in liberty,

Yet free from bearing any servile yoke ;

For in our hearing thy deserts were great,

And in our sight thyself art gracious. 150

BAL. And I shall study to deserve this grace.

KING. But tell me — for their holding makes me doubt —

To which of these twain art thou prisoner?

LOR. To me, my Liege.

HOR. To me, my Sovereign.

LOR. This hand first took his courser by the reins.

HOR. But first my lance did put him from his horse.

LOR. I seiz'd his weapon, and enjoy'd it first.

HOR. But first I forc'd him lay his weapons down.

KING. Let go his arm, upon our privilege.<sup>20</sup>

Say, worthy Prince, to whether<sup>21</sup> didst thou yield? 160

BAL. To him in courtesy, to this perforce. He spake me fair, this other gave me strokes; He promis'd life, this other threat'ned death; He won my love, this other conquered me, And, truth to say, I yield myself to both.

HIER. But that I know your Grace for just and wise, And might seem partial in this difference, Enforc'd by nature and by law of arms My tongue should plead for young Horatio's right.

He hunted well that was a lion's death, 170
Not he that in a garment wore his skin;
So hares may pull dead lions by the beard.

KING. Content thee, Marshal, thou shalt have no wrong;
And, for thy sake, thy son shall want no right.

Will both abide the censure of my doom?

LOR. I crave no better than your Grace awards.

HOR. Nor I, although I sit beside my right.

KING. Then, by my judgment, thus your strife shall end:

You both deserve, and both shall have reward. —

Nephew, thou took'st his weapon and his horse; 180

His weapons and his horse are thy reward. —
Horatio, thou didst force him first to yield;
His ransom therefore is thy valor's fee:

Appoint the sum, as you shall both agree. —
But, Nephew, thou shalt have the Prince in guard,

For thine estate best fitteth such a guest;
Horatio's house were small for all his train.
Yet, in regard thy substance passeth his,
And that just guerdon may befall desert,
To him we yield the armor of the Prince. —
How likes Don Balthazar of this device? 191

BAL. Right well, my Liege, if this proviso were,

That Don Horatio bear us company, /
Whom I admire and love for chivalry.

KING. Horatio, leave him not that loves thee so. —

Now let us hence to see our soldiers paid,
And feast our prisoner as our friendly guest.
Exeunt.

[SCENE II]<sup>22</sup>

Enter VICEROY, ALEXANDRO, VILLUPPO, [and Attendants.]

VIC. Is our ambassador despatch'd for Spain?

ALEX. Two days, my Liege, are past since his depart.

VIC. And tribute payment gone along with him?

ALEX. Ay, my good Lord.

VIC. Then rest we here awhile in our unrest,

And feed our sorrows with some inward sighs,
For deepest cares break never into tears.

But wherefore sit I in a regal throne?

This better fits a wretch's endless moan. —

Yet this is higher than my fortunes reach, 10
And therefore better than my state deserves. —

Falls to the ground.

Ay, ay, this earth, image of melancholy,
Seeks him whom fates adjudge to misery.

Here let me lie; now am I at the lowest.

Qui jacet in terra, non habet unde cadat.

In me consumpsit vires fortuna nocendo;

Nil superest ut jam possit obesse magis.<sup>23</sup>

Yes, Fortune may bereave me of my crown:
Here, take it now; let Fortune do her worst,
She will not rob me of this sable weed. 20

O no, she envies none but pleasant things.

Such is the folly of spiteful chance.

Fortune is blind, and sees not my deserts;

So is she deaf, and hears not my laments;

And could she hear, yet is she wilful-mad,

And therefore will not pity my distress.

Suppose that she could pity me, what then?

What help can be expected at her hands

Whose foot [is]<sup>24</sup> standing on a rolling stone,

And mind more mutable than fickle winds? [30

Why wail I, then, where 's hope of no redress?

O yes, complaining makes my grief seem less.

My late ambition hath distain'd my faith;

My breach of faith occasion'd bloody wars ;
 Those bloody wars have spent my treasure ;<sup>25</sup>
 And with my treasure<sup>25</sup> my people's blood ;
 And with their blood, my joy and best beloved,
 My best beloved, my sweet and only son.
 O, wherefore went I not to war myself ?
 The cause was mine ; I might have died for both. 40
 My years were mellow, his but young and
 green ;

My death were natural, but his was forced.

ALEX. No doubt, my Liege, but still the Prince survives.

VIC. Survives ! Ay, where ?

ALEX. In Spain, a prisoner by mischance of
 war.

VIC. Then they have slain him for his father's fault.

ALEX. That were a breach to common law
 of arms.

VIC. They reckon no laws that meditate revenge.

ALEX. His ransom's worth will stay from foul revenge.

VIC. No ; if he lived, the news would soon be here. 50

ALEX. Nay, evil news fly faster still<sup>26</sup> than good.

VIC. Tell me no more of news, for he is dead.

VIL. My Sovereign, pardon the author of ill news,

And I'll bewray<sup>27</sup> the fortune of thy son.

VIC. Speak on ; I'll guerdon thee, whate'er it be.

Mine ear is ready to receive ill news,
 My heart grown hard 'gainst mischief's battery.

Stand up, I say, and tell thy tale at large.

VIL. Then hear that truth which these mine eyes have seen.

When both the armies were in battle join'd, 60
 Don Balthazar, amidst the thickest troops,
 To win renown did wondrous feats of arms.
 Amongst the rest, I saw him, hand to hand,
 In single fight with their lord general ;
 Till Alexandro, that here counterfeits
 Under the color of a duteous friend,
 Discharged his pistol at the Prince's back
 As though he would have slain their general ;
 But therewithal Don Balthazar fell down ;
 And when he fell, then we began to fly ; 70
 But, had he lived, the day had sure been ours.

ALEX. O wicked forgery ! O traitorous miscreant !

<sup>25</sup> Trisyllabic.      <sup>26</sup> Always.      <sup>27</sup> Reveal.

VIC. Hold thou thy peace ! — But now,
 Villuppo, say,

Where then became<sup>28</sup> the carcass of my son ?

VIL. I saw them drag it to the Spanish
 tents.

VIC. Ay, ay, my nightly dreams have told me this. —

Thou false, unkind, unthankful, traitorous
 beast,

Wherein had Balthazar offended thee,

That thou shouldst thus betray him to our
 foes ?

Was't Spanish gold that bleared so thine
 eyes 80

That thou couldst see no part of our deserts ?
 Perchance, because thou art Terceira's<sup>29</sup> lord,

Thou hadst some hope to wear this diadem,
 If first my son and then myself were slain ;

But thy ambitious thought shall break thy neck.

Ay, this was it that made thee spill his blood ;

Take the crown and put it on again.

But I'll now wear it till thy blood be spilt.

ALEX. Vouchsafe, dread Sovereign, to hear
 me speak.

VIC. Away with him ! His sight is second hell.

Keep him till we determine of his death. — 90

If Balthazar be dead, he shall not live.

Villuppo, follow us for thy reward.

Exit VICEROY, [with ALEXANDRO, guarded.]

VIL. Thus have I with an envious,<sup>30</sup> forged tale

Deceived the King, betray'd mine enemy,

And hope for guerdon of my villainy. Exit.

[SCENE III]<sup>31</sup>

Enter HORATIO and BEL-IMPERIA.

BEL. Signior Horatio, this is the place and hour

Wherein I must entreat thee to relate

The circumstance of Don Andrea's death,

Who, living, was my garland's sweetest flower,
 And in his death hath buried my delights.

HOR. For love of him and service to yourself,

I will<sup>32</sup> refuse this heavy doleful charge ;

Yet tears and sighs, I fear, will hinder me.

 it does not become localized as such till l. 110.

<sup>32</sup> Will not.

When both our armies were enjoin'd in fight,
 Your worthy chevalier amidst the thick'st, 10
 For glorious cause still aiming at the fairest,
 Was at the last by young Don Balthazar Encount'ring hand to hand. Their fight was long,
 Their hearts were great, their clamors menac-
 ing,
 Their strength alike, their strokes both dangerous.

But wrathful Nemesis, that wicked power,
 Envy<sup>33</sup> at Andrea's praise and worth,
 Cut short his life, to end his praise and worth.
 She, she herself, disguis'd in armor's mask,
 As Pallas was before proud Pergamus,<sup>34</sup> 20
 Brought in a fresh supply of halberdiers,
 Which paunch'd<sup>35</sup> his horse and ding'd<sup>36</sup> him to the ground.

Then young Don Balthazar with ruthless rage,
 Taking advantage of his foe's distress,
 Did finish what his halberdiers begun,
 And left not till Andrea's life was done.
 Then, though too late, incens'd with just remorse,<sup>37</sup>

I with my band<sup>38</sup> set forth against the Prince,
 And brought him prisoner from his halber-diers.

BEL. Would thou hadst slain him that so slew my love ! 30

But then was Don Andrea's carcass lost ?

HOR. No, that was it for which I chiefly strove ;

Nor stepp'd I back till I recover'd him.

I took him up and wound him in mine arms,
 And wielding him unto my private tent
 There laid him down and dew'd him with my
 tears,

And sighed and sorrowed as became a friend.
 But neither friendly sorrow, sighs, nor tears
 Could win pale Death from his usurped right.
 Yet this I did, and less I could not do : 40
 I saw him honored with due funeral.
 This scarf I pluck'd from off his lifeless arm,
 And wear it in remembrance of my friend.

BEL. I know the scarf ; would he had kept it still !

For had he lived, he would have kept it still,
 And worn it for his Bel-imperia's sake ;
 For 't was my favor at his last depart.
 But now wear thou it both for him and me ;
 For after him thou hast deserved it best.
 But, for thy kindness in his life and death, 50

<sup>38</sup> So Greg ; Boas hand.

Be sure, while Bel-imperia's life endures,
 She will be Don Horatio's thankful friend.

HOR. And, madam, Don Horatio will not slack

Humbly to serve fair Bel-imperia.

But now, if your good liking stand thereto,
 I'll crave your pardon to go seek the Prince ;
 For so the Duke, your father, gave me charge.

Exit.

BEL. Ay, go, Horatio ; leave me here alone ;

For solitude best fits my cheerless mood. —

Yet what avails to wail Andrea's death, 60
 From whence Horatio proves my second
 love ?

Had he not loved Andrea as he did,

He could not sit in Bel-imperia's thoughts.

But how can love find harbor in my breast

Till I revenge the death of my beloved ?

Yes, second love shall further my revenge :

I'll love Horatio, my Andrea's friend,

The more to spite the Prince, that wrought his end.

And where<sup>39</sup> Don Balthazar, that slew my
 love,

Himself now pleads for favor at my hands, 70

He shall, in rigor of my just disdain,

Reap long repentance for his murderous
 deed !

For what was 't else but murderous cowardice,
 So many to oppress one valiant knight,
 Without respect of honor in the fight ?

And here he comes that murd'ring my delight.

Enter LORENZO and BALTHAZAR.

LOR. Sister, what means this melancholy
 walk ?

BEL. That for a while I wish no company.

LOR. But here the Prince is come to visit
 you.

BEL. That argues that he lives in liberty. 80

BAL. No, madam, but in pleasing servitude.

BEL. Your prison then, belike, is your conceit.<sup>40</sup>

BAL. Ay, by conceit my freedom is enthrall'd.

BEL. Then with conceit enlarge yourself
 again.

BAL. What, if conceit have laid my heart to gage ?

BEL. Pay that you borrowed, and recover
 it.

BAL. I die, if it return from whence it lies.

<sup>40</sup> Imagination.

BEL. A heartless man, and live? A miracle!

BAL. Ay, lady, love can work such miracles.

LOR. Tush, tush, my Lord! let go these ambages,<sup>41</sup> 90

And in plain terms acquaint her with your love.

BEL. What boots complaint, when there's no remedy?

BAL. Yes, to your gracious self must I complain,

In whose fair answer lies my remedy,
On whose perfection all my thoughts attend,
On whose aspect mine eyes find beauty's bower,

In whose translucent breast my heart is lodg'd.

BEL. Alas, my Lord, these are but words of course,<sup>42</sup>

And but [devis'd] <sup>43</sup> to drive me from this place.
She, in going in, lets fall her glove,
which HORATIO, coming out, takes up.

HOR. Madam, your glove. 100

BEL. Thanks, good Horatio; take it for thy pains.

BAL. Signior Horatio stoop'd in happy time.

HOR. I reap'd more grace than I deserv'd or hop'd.

LOR. My Lord, be not dismay'd for what is past;

You know that women oft are humorous.<sup>44</sup>
These clouds will overblow with little wind;
Let me alone; <sup>45</sup> I'll scatter them myself.
Meanwhile, let us devise to spend the time
In some delightful sports and revelling.

HOR. The King, my Lords, is coming hither straight, 110

To feast the Portingale ambassador;
Things were in readiness before I came.

BAL. Then here it fits us to attend the King,

To welcome hither our ambassador,
And learn my father and my country's health.

Enter <sup>46</sup> the banquet, Trumpets, the KING, [DON CYPRIAN, Lords, Ladies,] and Ambassador.

KING. See, Lord Ambassador, how Spain entreats

Their prisoner Balthazar, thy viceroy's son.
We pleasure more in kindness than in wars.

AMB. Sad is our king, and Portingale laments,

Supposing that Don Balthazar is slain. 120

BAL. [aside to BEL-IMPERIA]. So am I slain, by beauty's tyranny!—

You see, my Lord, how Balthazar is slain:
I frolic with the Duke of Castile's son,
Wrapp'd every hour in pleasures of the court,
And grac'd with favors of his Majesty.

KING. Put off your greetings, till our feast be done;

Now come and sit with us, and taste our cheer.
Sit to the banquet.

Sit down, young Prince; you are our second guest.

Brother, sit down; and, Nephew, take your place.

Signior Horatio, wait thou upon our cup; 130
For well thou hast deserved to be honored.

Now, Lordings, fall to; Spain is Portugal,
And Portugal is Spain; we both are friends;
Tribute is paid, and we enjoy our right.

But where is old Hieronimo, our marshal?

He promis'd us, in honor of our guest,
To grace our banquet with some pompous <sup>47</sup> jest.—

Enter HIERONIMO, with a drum, three Knights, each his scutcheon; then he fetches three Kings; they take their crowns and them captive.

Hieronimo, this masque contents mine eye,
Although I sound not well the mystery.

HIER. The first arm'd knight, that hung his scutcheon up, 140

He takes the scutcheon and gives it to the KING.

Was English Robert, Earl of Gloucester,
Who, when King Stephen bore sway in Albion,
Arrived with five-and-twenty thousand men
In Portingale, and by success of war
Enforc'd the king, then but a Saracen,
To bear the yoke of the English monarchy.<sup>48</sup>

KING. My Lord of Portingale, by this you see

That which may comfort both your king and you,

And make your late discomfort seem the less.—

But say, Hieronimo, what was the next? 150

HIER. The second knight, that hung his scutcheon up, (He doth as he did before.)
Was Edmund, Earl of Kent in Albion,
When English Richard wore the diadem.
He came likewise, and razed Lisbon walls,
And took the King of Portingale in fight;
For which and other such like service done,
He after was created Duke of York.<sup>49</sup>

KING. This is another special argument,
That Portingale may deign to bear our yoke,
When it by little England hath been yok'd. —
But now, Hieronimo, what were the last? 161

HIER. The third and last, not least, in our account, Doing as before.
Was, as the rest, a valiant Englishman,
Brave John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster,
As by his scutcheon plainly may appear.
He with a puissant army came to Spain
And took our King of Castile prisoner.<sup>50</sup>

AMB. This is an argument for our viceroy
That Spain may not insult for her success,
Since English warriors likewise conquered
Spain, 170
And made them bow their knees to Albion.

KING. Hieronimo, I drink to thee for this device,
Which hath pleas'd both the ambassador and
me.
Pledge me, Hieronimo, if thou love the
King. — Takes the cup of HORATIO.
My Lord, I fear we sit but overlong,
Unless our dainties were more delicate;
But welcome are you to the best we have.
Now let us in, that you may be despatch'd;
I think our council is already set.

Exeunt omnes.

[CHORUS]

ANDREA. Come we for this from depth of underground, 180
To see him feast that gave me my death's
wound?
These pleasant sights are sorrow to my soul!
Nothing but league, and love, and banquet-
ing?

REVENGE. Be still, Andrea; ere we go from
hence,
I'll turn their friendship into fell despite,
Their love to mortal hate, their day to night,

<sup>49</sup> Edmund Langley, fifth son of Edward III, made an expedition to Portugal in 1381, but it came to nothing. His dukedom was awarded later, for service against the Scots.

<sup>50</sup> On the contrary he had to retreat from Spain, though he afterwards married one of his daughters to the heir of Castile.

Their hope into despair, their peace to war,
Their joys to pain, their bliss to misery.

ACT II — [SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter LORENZO and BALTHAZAR.

LOR. My Lord, though Bel-imperia seem thus coy,

Let reason hold you in your wonted joy.
In time the savage bull sustains the yoke,<sup>2</sup>
In time all haggard<sup>3</sup> hawks will stoop to lure,
In time small wedges cleave the hardest oak,
In time the flint is pierc'd with softest shower,
And she in time will fall from her disdain
And rue the sufferance of your friendly pain.

BAL. No, she is wilder, and more hard withal,
Than beast, or bird, or tree, or stony wall. 10
But wherefore blot I Bel-imperia's name?
It is my fault, not she, that merits blame.
My feature is not to content her sight;
My words are rude and work her no delight.
The lines I send her are but harsh and ill,
Such as do drop from Pan and Marsyas' quill.
My presents are not of sufficient cost,
And being worthless, all my labor's lost.
Yet might she love me for my valiancy —
Ay, but that's sland'ring by captivity. 20
Yet might she love me to content her sire —
Ay, but her reason masters his desire.
Yet might she love me as her brother's
friend —
Ay, but her hopes aim at some other end.
Yet might she love me to uprear her state —
Ay, but perhaps she hopes some nobler mate.
Yet might she love me as her [beauty's]<sup>4</sup> thrall —

Ay, but I fear she cannot love at all.

LOR. My Lord, for my sake leave [this ecstasy.]<sup>5</sup>

And doubt not but we'll find some remedy. 30
Some cause there is that lets you not be loved;
First that must needs be known, and then removed.

What if my sister love some other knight?

BAL. My summer's day will turn to winter's
night.

LOR. I have already found a stratagem
To sound the bottom of this doubtful theme.
My Lord, for once you shall be rul'd by me ;
Hinder me not, whate'er you hear or see.
By force or fair means will I cast about
To find the truth of all this question out. — 40
Ho, Pedringano !

PED. [within] Signior !

LOR. Vien qui presto.<sup>6</sup>

Enter PEDRINGANO.

PED. Hath your Lordship any service to command me ?

LOR. Ay, Pedringano, service of import ;
And, not to spend the time in trifling words,
Thus stands the case : it is not long, thou know'st,
Since I did shield thee from my father's wrath,
For thy conveyance ' in Andrea's love,
For which thou wert adjudg'd to punishment.
I stood betwixt thee and thy punishment ;
And since, thou knowest how I have favored
thee. 50

Now to these favors will I add reward,
Not with fair words, but store of golden coin,
And lands and living join'd with dignities,
If thou but satisfy my just demand.
Tell truth, and have me for thy lasting friend.

PED. Whate'er it be your Lordship shall demand,

My bounden duty bids me tell the truth,
If case it lie in me to tell the truth.

LOR. Then, Pedringano, this is my demand :
Whom loves my sister Bel-imperia ? 60
For she reposes all her trust in thee.
Speak, man, and gain both friendship and reward.

I mean, whom loves she in Andrea's place ?

PED. Alas, my Lord, since Don Andrea's
death

I have no credit with her as before,
And therefore know not if she love or no.

LOR. Nay, if thou dally, then I am thy foe ;
[Draw his sword.]<sup>8</sup>

And fear shall force what friendship cannot win.

Thy death shall bury what thy life conceals ;
Thou diest for more esteeming her than me. 70

PED. O, stay, my Lord.

LOR. Yet speak the truth, and I will guer-don thee,

And shield thee from whatever can ensue,

And will conceal whate'er proceeds from thee.
But if thou dally once again, thou diest.

PED. If madam Bel-imperia be in love —

LOR. What, villain, — if's and and's ?<sup>9</sup>
[Offer to kill him.]<sup>9</sup>

PED. O, stay, my Lord : she loves Horatio.
BALTHAZAR starts back.

LOR. What, Don Horatio, our knight marshal's son ?

PED. Even him, my Lord. 80

LOR. Now say but how knowest thou he is her love,

And thou shalt find me kind and liberal.

Stand up, I say, and fearless tell the truth.

PED. She sent him letters, which myself
perus'd,

Full-fraught with lines and arguments of love,
Preferring him before Prince Balthazar.

LOR. Swear on this cross<sup>10</sup> that what thou sayest is true,

And that thou wilt conceal what thou hast told.

PED. I swear to both, by Him that made
us all.

LOR. In hope thine oath is true, here's thy reward ; 90

But if I prove thee perjur'd and unjust,
This very sword whereon thou took'st thine oath

Shall be the worker of thy tragedy.

PED. What I have said is true, and shall,
for me,<sup>11</sup>

Be still conceal'd from Bel-imperia.

Besides, your Honor's liberality

Deserves my duteous service, even till death.

LOR. Let this be all that thou shalt do for
me :

Be watchful when and where these lovers meet,
And give me notice in some secret sort. 100

PED. I will, my Lord.

LOR. Then shalt thou find that I am liberal.
Thou know'st that I can more advance thy
state

Than she ; be therefore wise, and fail me not.
Go and attend her, as thy custom is,

Lest absence make her think thou dost amiss.
Exit PEDRINGANO.

Why so ! Tam armis quam ingenio :

Where words prevail not, violence prevails ;
But gold doth more than either of them both.
How likes Prince Balthazar this stratagem ?

<sup>6</sup> In his jeering allusions to Kyd in the prefatory epistle to Menaphon, Nash accuses him of "bodging up a blank verse with 'if's' and 'and's.'"

<sup>9</sup> Probably the hilt of his sword.

<sup>8</sup> Add. Q 1602.

BAL. Both well and ill ; it makes me glad and sad : 111

Glad that I know the hinderer of my love,
Sad that I fear she hates me whom I love ;
Glad that I know on whom to be reveng'd,
Sad that she'll fly me if I take revenge.
Yet must I take revenge, or die myself,
For love resisted grows impatient.

I think Horatio be my destin'd plague !
First, in his hand he brandished a sword, 119
And with that sword he fiercely waged war,
And in that war he gave me dangerous wounds,
And by those wounds he forced me to yield,
And by my yielding I became his slave ;
Now in his mouth he carries pleasing words,
Which pleasing words do harbor sweet conceits,

Which sweet conceits are lim'd with sly deceits,
Which sly deceits smooth Bel-imperia's ears,
And through her ears dive down into her heart,
And in her heart set him where I should stand.
Thus hath he ta'en my body by his force, 130
And now by sleight would captivate my soul ;
But in his fall I'll tempt the Destinies,
And either lose my life or win my love.

LOR. Let's go, my Lord ; your staying stays revenge.

Do you but follow me, and gain your love ;
Her favor must be won by his remove. Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>12</sup>

Enter HORATIO and BEL-IMPERIA.

HOR. Now, madam, since by favor of your
love

Our hidden smoke is turned to open flame,
And that <sup>13</sup> with looks and words we feed our
thoughts

(Two chief contents, where more cannot be
had) ;

Thus, in the midst of love's fair blandishments,
Why show you sign of inward languishments ?

PEDRINGANO showeth all to the PRINCE and LORENZO, placing them in secret.

BEL. My heart, sweet friend, is like a ship at sea :

She wisheth port, where, riding all at ease,
She [may] <sup>14</sup> repair what stormy times have worn,

And, leaning on the shore, may sing with joy
That pleasure follows pain, and bliss annoy. 11
Possession of thy love is th' only port

Wherein my heart, with fears and hopes long toss'd,

Each hour doth wish and long to make resort,
There to repair the joys that it hath lost,
And, sitting safe, to sing in Cupid's choir
That sweetest bliss is crown of love's desire.

BALTHAZAR [and LORENZO speak]
above.

BAL. O sleep, mine eyes : see not my love
profan'd ;

Be deaf, my ears : hear not my discontent ;
Die, heart : another joys what thou deservest.

LOR. Watch still, mine eyes, to see this love disjoin'd ; 21
Hear still, mine ears, to hear them both lament ;

Live, heart, to joy at fond Horatio's fall.

BEL. Why stands Horatio speechless all this while ?

HOR. The less I speak, the more I meditate.

BEL. But whereon dost thou chiefly meditate ?

HOR. On dangers past, and pleasures to ensue.

BAL. On pleasures past, and dangers to ensue.

BEL. What dangers and what pleasures dost thou mean ?

HOR. Dangers of war, and pleasures of our
love. 30

LOR. Dangers of death, but pleasures none
at all.

BEL. Let dangers go ; thy war shall be with
me,

But such a warring as breaks no bond of peace.
Speak thou fair words, I'll cross them with fair words ;

Send thou sweet looks, I'll meet them with sweet looks ;

Write loving lines, I'll answer loving lines ;

Give me a kiss, I'll countercheck thy kiss :

Be this our warring peace, or peaceful war.

HOR. But, gracious madam, then appoint
the field

Where trial of this war shall first be made. [40

BAL. Ambitious villain, how his boldness grows !

BEL. Then be thy father's pleasant bower
the field,

Where first we vow'd a mutual amity.

The court were dangerous ; that place is safe.
Our hour shall be when Vesper 'gins to rise,

That summons home distressful travailleurs.<sup>15</sup>
There none shall hear us but the harmless
birds ;

Happily the gentle nightingale
Shall carol us asleep, ere we be 'ware,
And, singing with the prickle<sup>16</sup> at her breast,
Tell our delight and mirthful dalliance. 51
Till then each hour will seem a year and more.

HOR. But, honey-sweet and honorable love,
Return we now into your father's sight ;
Dangerous suspicion waits on our delight.

LOR. Ay, danger mix'd with jealous<sup>17</sup> despite
Shall send thy soul into eternal night.

Exeunt.

[SCENE III]<sup>18</sup>

Enter KING OF SPAIN, Portingale Ambassador, DON CYPRIAN, etc.

KING. Brother of Castile, to the Prince's
love

What says your daughter, Bel-imperia?

CYP. Although she coy it, as becomes her kind,

And yet dissemble that she loves the Prince,
I doubt not, I, but she will stoop in time.
And were she froward, which she will not be,
Yet herein shall she follow my advice,
Which is to love him, or forgo my love.

KING. Then, Lord Ambassador of Portingale,

Advise thy King to make this marriage up, 10
For strengthening of our late-confirmed
league ;

I know no better means to make us friends.

Her dowry shall be large and liberal ;

Besides that she is daughter and half heir

Unto our brother here, Don Cyprian,

And shall enjoy the moiety of his land,

I'll grace her marriage with an uncle's gift ;

And this it is, in case the match go forward :

The tribute which you pay shall be releas'd ;

And if by Balthazar she have a son, 20

He shall enjoy the kingdom after us.

AMB. I'll make the motion to my sovereign
liege,

And work it, if my counsel may prevail.

KING. Do so, my Lord ; and, if he give consent,

<sup>18</sup> A room in the royal palace.

I hope his presence here will honor us,
In celebration of the nuptial day ;
And let himself determine of the time.

AMB. Will't please your Grace command me aught beside?

KING. Commend me to the King, and so farewell.

But where's Prince Balthazar to take his leave? 30

AMB. That is perform'd already, my good
Lord.

KING. Amongst the rest of what you have in charge,

The Prince's ransom must not be forgot.

That's none of mine, but his that took him prisoner ;

And well his forwardness deserves reward.

It was Horatio, our knight marshal's son.

AMB. Between us there's a price already pitch'd,

And shall be sent with all convenient speed.

KING. Then once again farewell, my Lord.

AMB. Farewell, my Lord of Castile, and the rest. / Exit. [40

KING. Now, Brother, you must take some little pains

To win fair Bel-imperia from her will.

Young virgins must be ruled by their friends.

The Prince is amiable, and loves her well ;

If she neglect him and forgo his love,

She both will wrong her own estate and ours.

Therefore, whiles I do entertain the Prince

With greatest pleasure that our court affords,

Endeavor you to win your daughter's

[thought] : <sup>19</sup> 49

If she give back, all this will come to naught.

Exeunt.

[SCENE IV]<sup>20</sup>

Enter HORATIO, BEL-IMPERIA, and PEDRIN-GANO.

HOR. Now that the night begins with sable
wings

To overcloud the brightness of the sun,

And that in darkness pleasures may be done,

Come, Bel-imperia, let us to the bower,

And there in safety pass a pleasant hour.

BEL. I follow thee, my love, and will not
back,

Although my fainting heart controls my
soul.

<sup>20</sup> Hieronimo's garden, the inner stage representing the arbor.

HOR. Why, make you doubt of Pedringano's faith?

BEL. No, he is as trusty as my second self. —

Go, Pedringano, watch without the gate, 10
And let us know if any make approach.

PED. [aside] Instead of watching, I'll deserve more gold

By fetching Don Lorenzo to this match.

Exit PEDRINGANO.

HOR. What means my love?

BEL. I know not what myself ;
And yet my heart foretells me some mischance.

HOR. Sweet, say not so ; fair fortune is our friend,

And heavens have shut up day to pleasure us.
The stars, thou seest, hold back their twinkling shine,

And Luna hides herself to pleasure us.

BEL. Thou hast prevail'd ; I'll conquer my misdoubt, 20

And in thy love and counsel drown my fear.
I fear no more ; love now is all my thoughts.
Why sit we not? for pleasure asketh ease.

HOR. The more thou sitt'st within these leafy bowers,

The more will Flora deck it with her flowers.

BEL. Ay, but if Flora spy Horatio here,
Her jealous eye will think I sit too near.

HOR. Hark, madam, how the birds record <sup>21</sup>
by night,

For joy that Bel-imperia sits in sight.

BEL. No, Cupid counterfeits the nightingale, 30

To frame sweet music to Horatio's tale.

HOR. If Cupid sing, then Venus is not far ;
Ay, thou art Venus, or some fairer star.

BEL. If I be Venus, thou must needs be Mars ;

And where Mars reigneth, there must needs be [wars]. <sup>22</sup>

HOR. Then thus begin our wars : put forth thy hand,

That it may combat with my ruder hand.

BEL. Set forth thy foot to try the push of mine.

HOR. But first my looks shall combat against thine.

BEL. Then ward thyself : I dart this kiss at thee. 40

HOR. Thus I retort the dart thou threw'st at me.

BEL. Nay, then, to gain the glory of the field,

My twining arms shall yoke and make thee yield.

HOR. Nay, then, my arms are large and strong withal :

Thus elms by vines are compass'd, till they fall.

BEL. O, let me go, for in my troubled eyes
Now mayst thou read that life in passion dies.

HOR. O, stay awhile, and I will die with thee ;

So shalt thou yield, and yet have conquer'd me.

BEL. Who's there, Pedringano? We are betray'd ! 50

Enter LORENZO, BALTHAZAR, SERBERINE, [and] PEDRINGANO, disguised.

LOR. My Lord, away with her ; take her aside. —

O, sir, forbear ; your valor is already tri'd.
Quickly dispatch, my masters.

They hang him in the arbor.

HOR. What, will you murder me?

LOR. Ay, thus, and thus! these are the fruits of love. They stab him.

BEL. O, save his life, and let me die for him !

O, save him, Brother ; save him, Balthazar !
I loved Horatio but he loved not me.

BAL. But Balthazar loves Bel-imperia.

LOR. Although his life were still ambitious-proud,

Yet is he at the highest now he is dead. 60

BEL. Murder! murder! Help, Hieronimo, help !

LOR. Come, stop her mouth ; away with her. Exeunt.

Enter HIERONIMO in his shirt, etc.

HIER. What outcries pluck me from my naked bed,

And chill my throbbing heart with trembling fear,

Which never danger yet could daunt before?

Who calls Hieronimo? Speak, here I am. —

I did not slumber ; therefore 't was no dream.

No, no, it was some woman cri'd for help,

And here within this garden did she cry,

And in this garden must I rescue her. — 70

But stay, what murd'rous spectacle is this?

A man hang'd up and all the murderers gone !

And in my bower, to lay the guilt on me !

This place was made for pleasure, not for death.

He cuts him down.

Alas, it is Horatio, my sweet son!
 O no, but he that whilom was my son!
 O, was it thou that call'dst me from my bed?
 O speak, if any spark of life remain!
 I am thy father. Who hath slain my son? 80
 What savage monster, not of human kind,
 Hath here been glutted with thy harmless
     blood,
 And left thy bloody corpse dishonored here,
 For me, amidst [these]<sup>23</sup> dark and deathful shades,
 To drown thee with an ocean of my tears?
 O Heavens, why made you night to cover sin?
 By day this deed of darkness had not been.
 O earth, why didst thou not in time devour
 The vild profaner of this sacred bower?
 O poor Horatio, what hadst thou misdone, 90
 To leese<sup>24</sup> thy life, ere life was new begun?
 O wicked butcher, whatsoe'er thou wert,
 How could thou strangle virtue and desert?
 Ay me most wretched, that have lost my joy,
 In leessing my Horatio, my sweet boy!

Enter ISABELLA.

ISAB. My husband's absence makes my heart to throb! —
 Hieronimo!

HIER. Here, Isabella, help me to lament;
 For sighs are stopp'd, and all my tears are spent.

ISAB. What world of grief! my son, Horatio! 100

Oh, where's the author of this endless woe?

HIER. To know the author were some ease of grief,

For in revenge my heart would find relief.

ISAB. Then is he gone? and is my son gone
     too?

O, gush out, tears, fountains and floods of
     tears;

Blow, sighs, and raise an everlasting storm;
 For outrage fits our cursed wretchedness.

<sup>25</sup> [Ay me, Hieronimo, sweet husband, speak!

HIER. He suppd with us to-night, frolic and merry,
 And said he would go visit Balthazar 110
 At the Duke's palace; there the Prince doth lodge.
 He had no custom to stay out so late;
 He may be in his chamber; some go see.
 Roderigo, ho!

Enter PEDRO and JAKUES.

ISAB. Ay me, he raves! — Sweet Hieronimo!

HIER. True, all Spain takes note of it.
 Besides, he is so generally beloved;
 His Majesty the other day did grace him

<sup>28</sup> First passage of additions begins here.

With waiting on his cup: these be favors
 Which do assure me he cannot be short-lived. 120
 ISAB. Sweet Hieronimo!

HIER. I wonder how this fellow got his clothes! —
 Sirrah, sirrah, I'll know the truth of all! —
 Jaques, run to the Duke of Castile's presently,
 And bid my son Horatio to come home.
 I and his mother have had strange dreams to-night.
 Do ye hear me, sir?

JAKUES. Ay, sir.

HIER. Well, sir, begone. —
 Pedro, come hither; knowest thou who this is?

PED. Too well, sir.

HIER. Too well! Who, who is it? — Peace, Isa-bella! — 130

Nay, blush not, man.

PED. It is my Lord Horatio.

HIER. Ha, ha, St. James! but this doth make me laugh,

That there are more deluded than myself.

PED. Deluded?

HIER. Ay! I would have sworn, myself, within this hour,

That this had been my son Horatio —

His garments are so like.

Ha! are they not great persuasions?

ISAB. O, would to God it were not so!

HIER. Were not, Isabella? Doest thou dream
     it is? 140

Can thy soft bosom entertain a thought

That such a black deed of mischief should be done

On one so [pure]<sup>26</sup> and spotless as our son?

Away, I am ashamed.

ISAB.

Dear Hieronimo,

Cast a more serious eye upon thy grief;

Weak apprehension gives but weak belief.

HIER. It was a man, sure, that was hanged up
     here;

A youth, as I remember. I cut him down.

If it should prove my son now after all!

Say you? say you? — Light! lend me a taper; 150

Let me look again. — O God!

Confusion, mischief, torment, death, and hell,

Drop all your stings at once in my cold bosom,

That now is stiff with horror; kill me quickly!

Be gracious to me, thou infective<sup>27</sup> night,

And drop this deed of murder down on me;

Gird in my waste of grief with thy large darkness.

And let me not survive to see the light

May put me in the mind I had a son.

ISAB. O sweet Horatio! O my dearest son! 160

HIER. How strangely had I lost my way to grief!

Sweet, lovely rose, ill-pluck'd before thy time,

Fair, worthy son, not conquer'd, but betray'd,

I'll kiss thee now, for words with tears are

[stay'd].<sup>28</sup>

ISAB. And I'll close up the glasses of his
     sight,

For once these eyes were only my delight.

HIER. Seest thou this handkercher besmear'd with blood?

It shall not from me till I take revenge.

Seest thou those wounds that yet are bleeding fresh?

I'll not entomb them till I have reveng'd. 170

Then will I joy amidst my discontent;

Till then my sorrow never shall be spent.

ISAB. The Heavens are just ; murder cannot be hid ;
Time is the author both of truth and right,
And time will bring this treachery to light.

HIER. Meanwhile, good Isabella, cease thy plaints,
Or, at the least, dissemble them awhile ;
So shall we sooner find the practice <sup>29</sup> out,
And learn by whom all this was brought about.
Come, Isabel, now let us take him up, 180

They take him up.

And bear him in from out this cursed place.
I'll say his dirge ; singing fits not this case.

<sup>30</sup> This passage is a hodgepodge of tags from classical poetry and lines of Kyd's own composition. (Boas.) "Oh, may someone blend me the herbs that beauteous Spring doth bear, and let our anguish be medicined ; or let him proffer potions, if such there be that cause forgetfulness of the years. May I myself reap throughout the wide world whatever plants the sun's warmth brings forth to earthly realms of light. May I drink any poison the wise woman may prepare, and whatever herbs her incantation unites in occult power. Let me endure all, nay death also, if once for all may die all feeling in a heart that is dead. Nevermore, then, shall I see thy eyes, my life ? And has an everlasting slumber buried thy light ? With thee may I perish : so would I go into the shadows. But nevertheless I shall hold off from yielding speedily to death, lest then no vengeance follow thy death."

ACT III — [SCENE I] <sup>1</sup>

Enter VICEROY OF PORTINGALE, Nobles, [and] VILLUPPO.

VIC. Infortunate condition of kings,
Seated amidst so many helpless doubts !
First we are plac'd upon extremest height,
And oft supplanted with exceeding [hate],<sup>2</sup>
But ever subject to the wheel of chance ;
And at our highest never joy we so
As we both doubt and dread our overthrow.
So striveth not the waves with sundry winds
As Fortune toileth in the affairs of kings,
That would be fear'd, yet fear to be beloved, 10
Sith fear or love to kings is flattery.<sup>3</sup>
For instance, Lordings, look upon your king,
By hate deprived of his dearest son,
The only hope of our successive line.

[1] NOB. I had not thought that Alexandro's
  heart
Had been envenom'd with such extreme hate ;

But now I see that words have several works,
And there's no credit in the countenance.

VIL. No ; for, my Lord, had you beheld the train <sup>4</sup>

That feigned love had colored in his looks, [20
When he in camp consorted <sup>5</sup> Balthazar, Far more inconstant had you thought the sun,

That hourly coasts <sup>6</sup> the centre of the earth,
Than Alexandro's purpose to the Prince.

VIC. No more, Villuppo ; thou hast said
  enough ;
And with thy words thou slayest our wounded
  thoughts.

Nor shall I longer dally with the world,

Procrastinating Alexandro's death. —

Go some of you, and fetch the traitor forth,
[Exit a Nobleman.]

That, as he is condemned, he may die. 30

Enter ALEXANDRO with a Nobleman and Halberds.

[1] NOB. In such extremes will nought but patience serve.

ALEX. But in extremes what patience shall I use?

Nor discontents it me to leave the world,
With whom there nothing can prevail but wrong.

NOB. Yet hope the best.

ALEX. 'T is Heaven is my hope.
As for the earth, it is too much infect
To yield me hope of any of her mold.

VIC. Why linger ye? Bring forth that daring fiend,
And let him die for his accursed deed.

ALEX. Not that I fear the extremity of death 40

(For nobles cannot stoop to servile fear)

Do I, O King, thus discontented live.

But this, O this, torments my laboring soul,
That thus I die suspected of a sin

Whereof, as Heavens have known my secret thoughts,

So am I free from this suggestion.<sup>7</sup>

VIC. No more, I say! to the tortures!
When!<sup>8</sup>

Bind him, and burn his body in those flames
They bind him to the stake.

That shall prefigure those unquenched fires
Of Phlegethon,<sup>9</sup> prepared for his soul. 50

ALEX. My guiltless death will be aveng'd
on thee,

On thee, Villuppo, that hath malic'd<sup>10</sup> thus,
Or for thy meed hast falsely me accus'd.

VIL. Nay, Alexandro, if thou menace me,
I'll lend a hand to send thee to the lake
Where those thy words shall perish with thy works,

Injurious traitor! monstrous homicide!

Enter Ambassador [and Attendants].

AMB. Stay, hold a while;
And here, with pardon of his Majesty,
Lay hands upon Villuppo.

VIC. Ambassador, 60
What news hath urg'd this sudden entrance?

AMB. Know, Sovereign Lord, that Balthazar doth live.

VIC. What sayest thou? Liveth Balthazar, our son?

AMB. Your Highness' son, Lord Balthazar, doth live;

And, well entreated in the court of Spain,
Humbly commends him to your Majesty.
These eyes beheld, and these my followers;
With these, the letters of the King's commands,
Gives him letters.
Are happy witnesses of his Highness' health.

The King looks on the letters, and proceeds.

VIC. "Thy son doth live; your tribute is receiv'd; 70

Thy peace is made, and we are satisfied.
The rest resolve upon as things propos'd
For both our honors and thy benefit."

AMB. These are his Highness' farther articles. He gives him more letters.

VIC. Accursed wretch, to intimate these ills

Against the life and reputation

Of noble Alexandro! — Come, my Lord, unbind him. —

Let him unbind thee, that is bound to death,
To make a quital<sup>11</sup> for thy discontent.

They unbind him.

ALEX. Dread Lord, in kindness<sup>12</sup> you could do no less 80

Upon report of such a damned fact;<sup>13</sup>

But thus we see our innocence hath sav'd

The hopeless life which thou, Villuppo, sought
By thy suggestions to have massacred.

VIC. Say, false Villuppo, wherefore didst thou thus Falsely betray Lord Alexandro's life?

Him whom thou knowest that no unkindness else

But even the slaughter of our dearest son
Could once have moved us to have misconceived.

ALEX. Say, treacherous Villuppo, tell the King: 90

Or wherein hath Alexandro used thee ill?

VIL. Rent with remembrance of so foul a deed,

My guilty soul submits me to thy doom;
For not for Alexandro's injuries,

But for reward and hope to be preferr'd,
Thus have I shamelessly hazarded his life.

VIC. Which, villain, shall be ransomed with thy death;

<sup>13</sup> Deed.

And not so mean <sup>14</sup> a torment as we here Devis'd for him who, thou said'st, slew our
son,

But with the bitterest torments and extremes 100

That may be yet invented for thine end.

ALEXANDRO seems to entreat.

Entreat me not. — Go, take the traitor
hence. —

Exit VILLUPPO [guarded].

And, Alexandro, let us honor thee
With public notice of thy loyalty. —
To end those things articulated here
By our great lord, the mighty King of Spain,
We with our council will deliberate.
Come, Alexandro, keep us company.

Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>15</sup>

Enter HIERONIMO.

HIER. O eyes! no eyes, but fountains fraught with tears; <sup>16</sup>

O life! no life, but lively form of death;
O world! no world, but mass of public wrongs,
Confus'd and fill'd with murder and misdeeds.

O sacred Heav'ns! if this unhallowed deed,

If this inhuman and barbarous attempt,

If this incomparable murder thus

Of mine, but now no more my son,

Shall unreveal'd and unrevenged pass,

How should we term your dealings to be just, 10

If you unjustly deal with those that in your justice trust? <sup>17</sup>

The night, sad secretary <sup>18</sup> to my moans,

With direful visions wake my vexed soul,

And with the wounds of my distressful son

Solicit me for notice of his death.

The ugly fiends do sally forth of hell,

And frame my steps to unfrequented paths,

And fear my heart with fierce inflamed
thoughts.

The cloudy day my discontents records,

Early begins to register my dreams, 20

And drive me forth to seek the murderer.

Eyes, life, world, Heav'ns, hell, night, and
day,

See, search, show, send some man, some mean,
that may — A letter falleth.

What's here? a letter? Tush! it is not
so! —

A letter written to Hieronimo! — Red ink.

"For want of ink, receive this bloody writ.

Me hath my hapless brother hid from thee;

Revenge thyself on Balthazar and him:

For these were they that murd'ed thy son.

Hieronimo, revenge Horatio's death, 30

And better fare than Bel-imperia doth." —

What means this unexpected miracle?

My son slain by Lorenzo and the Prince!

What cause had they Horatio to malign? <sup>19</sup>

Or what might move thee, Bel-imperia,

To accuse thy brother, had he been the mean?

Hieronimo, beware! — thou art betray'd,

And to entrap thy life this train <sup>20</sup> is laid.

Advise thee, therefore; be not credulous:

This is devised to endanger thee, 40

That thou, by this, Lorenzo shouldst accuse;

And he, for thy dishonor done, should draw

Thy life in question and thy name in hate.

'Dear was the life of my beloved son,

And of his death behoves me be reveng'd.

Then hazard not thine own, Hieronimo,

But live t' effect thy resolution.

I therefore will by circumstances <sup>21</sup> try,

What I can gather to confirm this writ;

And, hearkening near the Duke of Castile's
house, 50

Close, if I can, with Bel-imperia,

To listen more, but nothing to bewray.

Enter PEDRINGANO.

Now, Pedringano.

PED. Now, Hieronimo.

HIER. Where's thy lady?

PED. I know not; here's my lord.

Enter LORENZO.

LOR. How now, who's this? Hieronimo?

HIER. My Lord.

PED. He asketh for my Lady Bel-imperia.

LOR. What to do, Hieronimo? The Duke, my father, hath

Upon some disgrace awhile remov'd her hence;

But, if it be aught I may inform her of,

Tell me, Hieronimo, and I'll let her know
it.

HIER. Nay, nay, my Lord, I thank you;
it shall not need. 61

I had a suit unto her, but too late;

And her disgrace makes me unfortunate.

LOR. Why so, Hieronimo; use me.

<sup>14</sup> Moderate.

<sup>16</sup> The opening lines of this speech were much

<sup>18</sup> I.e., confidant.

HIER. O no, my Lord, I dare not ; it must not be.
I humbly thank your Lordship.

<sup>22</sup> [HIER. Who? you, my Lord?
I reserve your favor for a greater honor;
This is a very toy,<sup>23</sup> my Lord, a toy.

LOR. All 's one,<sup>24</sup> Hieronimo ; acquaint me with it.
HIER. I' faith, my Lord, it is an idle thing ; 70
I must confess I ha' been too slack, too tardy,
Too remiss unto your Honor.

LOR. How now, Hieronimo ?
HIER. In troth, my Lord, it is a thing of nothing :
The murder of a son, or so —
A thing of nothing, my Lord !]

LOR. Why then, farewell.

[HIER. aside My grief no heart, my thoughts no tongue can tell. Exit.

LOR. Come hither, Pedringano ; seest thou this?

PED. My Lord, I see it, and suspect it too.

LOR. This is that damned villain, Serberine,
That hath, I fear, reveal'd Horatio's death. 80

PED. My Lord, he could not, 't was so lately done ;

And since, he hath not left my company.

LOR. Admit he have not, his condition<sup>25</sup>'s such

As fear or flattering words may make him false.

I know his humor,<sup>26</sup> and therewith repent

That e'er I us'd him in this enterprise.

But, Pedringano, to prevent the worst,

And 'cause I know thee secret as my soul,

Here, for thy further satisfaction, take thou this, Gives him more gold.

And hearken to me : thus it is devis'd. 90

This night thou must (and, prithee, so resolve),
Meet Serberine at Saint Luigi's Park —

Thou knowest 't is here hard by behind the house ; —

There take thy stand, and see thou strike him sure,

For die he must, if we do mean to live.

PED. But how shall Serberine be there, my Lord?

LOR. Let me alone ; I'll send to him to meet

The Prince and me, where thou must do this deed.

PED. It shall be done, my Lord ; it shall be done ;

And I'll go arm myself to meet him there. 100

LOR. When things shall alter, as I hope they will,
Then shalt thou mount for this ; thou knowest my mind. Exit PEDRINGANO.

Che le Ieron ! <sup>28</sup>

Enter Page.

PAGE. My Lord?

LOR. Go, sirrah,
To Serberine, and bid him forthwith meet
The Prince and me at Saint Luigi's Park,
Behind the house, this evening, boy.

PAGE. I go, my Lord.

LOR. But, sirrah, let the hour be eight a'clock :

Bid him not fail.

[LOR. Now to confirm the complot thou hast cast <sup>27</sup> 109

Of all these practices,<sup>28</sup> I'll spread the watch,
Upon precise commandment from the King,
Strongly to guard the place where Pedringano
This night shall murder hapless Serberine.

Thus must we work that will avoid distrust ;

Thus must we practise to prevent mishap,

And thus one ill another must expulse.

This sly enquiry of Hieronimo

For Bel-imperia breeds suspicion,

And this suspicion bodes a further ill.

As for myself, I know my secret fault, 120

And so do they ; but I have dealt for them.

They that for coin their souls endangered,

To save my life for coin shall venture theirs ;

And better it's that base companions <sup>29</sup> die

Than by their life to hazard our good haps.

Nor shall they live, for me to fear their faith :

I'll trust myself, myself shall be my friend ;

For die they shall : slaves are ordain[ed] to no other end.<sup>30</sup> Exit.

[SCENE III] <sup>31</sup>

Enter PEDRINGANO, with a pistol.

PED. Now, Pedringano, bid thy pistol hold ;
And hold on, Fortune ! once more favor me ;
Give but success to mine attempting spirit,
And let me shift <sup>32</sup> for taking of mine aim.
Here is the gold : this is the gold propos'd ;
It is no dream that I adventure for,
But Pedringano is possess'd thereof.

<sup>22</sup> Second passage of additions begins here, replacing ll. 65, 66.

<sup>32</sup> Leave it to me.

And he that would not strain his conscience
For him that thus his liberal purse hath stretch'd,

Unworthy such a favor, may he fail, 10
And, wishing, want when such as I prevail.

As for the fear of apprehension,
I know, if need should be, my noble lord
Will stand between me and ensuing harms ;
Besides, this place is free from all suspect.
Here therefore will I stay and take my stand.

Enter the Watch [unobserved by PEDRINGANO].

1 [WATCH]. I wonder much to what intent
it is

That we are thus expressly charg'd to watch.

2 [WATCH]. 'T is by commandment in the King's own name.

3 [WATCH]. But we were never wont to watch and ward 20
So near the Duke his brother's house before.

2 [WATCH]. Content yourself ; stand close ;
there's somewhat in 't.

Enter SERBERINE.

SER. Here, Serberine, attend and stay thy pace ;
For here did Don Lorenzo's page appoint
That thou by his command shouldst meet with him.

How fit a place, if one were so dispos'd,
Methinks this corner is to close with one.<sup>33</sup>

PED. [aside] Here comes the bird that I must seize upon.

Now, Pedringano, or never, play the man !

SER. I wonder that his Lordship stays so long, 30
Or wherefore should he send for me so late.

PED. For this, Serberine ; and thou shalt ha 't. Shoots the dag.<sup>34</sup>

So, there he lies ; my promise is perform'd.

The Watch [advances].

1 [WATCH]. Hark, gentlemen, this is a pistol shot.

2 [WATCH]. And here's one slain. Stay the murderer.<sup>35</sup>

PED. Now by the sorrows of the souls in hell, He strives with the Watch.
Who first lays hand on me, I'll be his priest.<sup>36</sup>

3 [WATCH]. Sirrah, confess, and therein play the priest ;

Why hast thou thus unkindly<sup>37</sup> kill'd the
man ?

PED. Why ? Because he walk'd abroad so
late. 40

3 [WATCH]. Come, sir, you had been better kept your bed,

Than have committed this misdeed so late.

2 [WATCH]. Come, to the Marshal's with the murderer.

1 [WATCH]. On to Hieronimo's ! Help me
here

To bring the murd' red body with us too.

PED. Hieronimo ? Carry me before whom you will.

Whate'er he be, I'll answer him and you ;

And do your worst, for I defy you all.

Exeunt.

[SCENE IV]<sup>38</sup>

Enter LORENZO and BALTHAZAR.

BAL. How now, my Lord, what makes you rise so soon ?

LOR. Fear of preventing our mishaps too
late.

BAL. What mischief is it that we not mistrust ?

LOR. Our greatest ills we least mistrust, my
Lord,

And unexpected harms do hurt us most.

BAL. Why, tell me, Don Lorenzo, tell me,
man,

If aught concerns our honor and your own.

LOR. Nor you, nor me, my Lord, but both in one ;

For I suspect, and the presumption's great,
That by those base confederates in our fault
Touching the death of Don Horatio, 11
We are betray'd to old Hieronimo.

BAL. Betray'd, Lorenzo ? Tush, it cannot be.

LOR. A guilty conscience, urged with the thought

Of former evils, easily cannot err.

I am persuaded, and dissuade me not,

That all's revealed to Hieronimo.

And therefore know that I have cast it thus —

[Enter Page.]<sup>39</sup>

But here's the page. How now ? what news with thee ?

<sup>33</sup> To meet a person secretly.

<sup>39</sup> Add, Q 1615.

BAL. Who? Serberine, my man? 20

PAGE. Your Highness' man, my Lord.

LOR. Speak, page, who murdered him?

PAGE. He that is apprehended for the fact.<sup>40</sup>

LOR. Who?

PAGE. Pedringano.

BAL. Is Serberine slain, that lov'd his lord so well?

Injurious villain, murderer of his friend!

LOR. Hath Pedringano murdered Serberine?

My Lord, let me entreat you to take the pains To exasperate and hasten his revenge

With your complaints unto my Lord the King. This their dissension breeds a greater doubt. 31

BAL. Assure thee, Don Lorenzo, he shall die,

Or else his Highness hardly shall deny.<sup>41</sup>

Meanwhile I'll haste the marshal sessions, For die he shall for this his damned deed.

Exit BALTHAZAR.

LOR. [aside] Why, so; this fits our former policy,

And thus experience bids the wise to deal.

I lay the plot; he prosecutes the point.

I set the trap; he breaks the worthless twigs, And sees not that wherewith the bird was lim'd.<sup>42</sup> 40

Thus hopeful men, that mean to hold their own,

Must look like fowlers to their dearest friends.

He runs to kill whom I have help<sup>43</sup> to catch,

And no man knows it was my reaching f[e]tch.<sup>44</sup>

'T is hard to trust unto a multitude,

Or any one, in mine opinion,

When men themselves their secrets will reveal. —

Enter a Messenger with a letter.

Boy!

PAGE. My Lord.

LOR. What's he?

MES. I have a letter to your Lordship. [50

LOR. From whence?

MES. From Pedringano, that's imprisoned.

LOR. So he is in prison, then?

MES. Ay, my good Lord.

<sup>40</sup> Deed.

LOR. What would he with us? — He writes us here,

To stand good lord, and help him in distress. —

Tell him I have his letters, know his mind;

And what we may, let him assure him of.

Fellow, begone; my boy shall follow thee. —

Exit Messenger.

[aside] This works like wax; yet once more try thy wits. —

Boy, go, convey this purse to Pedringano;

Thou knowest the prison; closely<sup>45</sup> give it him, 60

And be advis'd that none be thereabout.

Bid him be merry still, but secret;

And though the marshal sessions be to-day,

Bid him not doubt of his delivery.

Tell him his pardon is already sign'd,

And thereon bid him boldly be resolved;

For, were he ready to be turned off<sup>46</sup> —

As 't is my will the uttermost be tri'd —

Thou with his pardon shalt attend him still.

Show him this box, tell him his pardon's in 't; 70

But open 't not, an if thou lovest thy life;

But let him wisely keep his hopes unknown.

He shall not want while Don Lorenzo lives.

Away!

PAGE. I go, my Lord, I run.

LOR. But, sirrah, see that this be cleanly<sup>47</sup> done. — Exit Page.

Now stands our fortune on a tickle<sup>48</sup> point,

And now or never ends Lorenzo's doubts.

One only thing is uneffected yet,

And that's to see the executioner. 80

But to what end? I list not trust the air

With utterance of our pretence<sup>49</sup> therein,

For fear the privy whisp'ring of the wind

Convey our words amongst unfriendly ears,

That lie too open to advantages.

[E]<sup>50</sup> quel che voglio i[o], nessun lo sa;

[SCENE V]<sup>52</sup>

Enter Boy with the box.

[Boy.] My master hath forbidden me to look in this box; and, by my troth, 't is likely, if he had not warned me, I should not have had so much idle time; for we men's-kind in our

minority are like women in their uncertainty : that they are most forbidden, they will soonest attempt. So I now. — By my bare honesty, here's nothing but the bare empty box ! Were it not sin against secrecy, I would say it were a piece of gentlemanlike knavery. [10 I must go to Pedringano, and tell him his pardon is in this box ; nay, I would have sworn it, had I not seen the contrary. I cannot choose but smile to think how the villain will flout the gallows, scorn the audience, and descant on the hangman, and all presuming of his pardon from hence. Will 't not be an odd jest for me to stand and grace every jest he makes, pointing my finger at this box, as who would say, "Mock on ; here's thy war- [20 rant." Is't not a scurvy jest that a man should jest himself to death ? Alas ! poor Pedringano, I am in a sort sorry for thee ; but if I should be hanged with thee, I cannot weep. Exit.

[SCENE VI] <sup>53</sup>

Enter HIERONIMO and the Deputy.

HIER. Thus must we toil in other men's extremes,

That know not how to remedy our own,
And do them justice, when unjustly we,
For all our wrongs, can compass no redress.
But shall I never live to see the day
That I may come, by justice of the Heavens,
To know the cause that may my cares allay ?
This toils my body, this consumeth age,
That only I to all men just must be,
And neither gods nor men be just to me. 10

DEP. Worthy Hieronimo, your office asks
A care to punish such as do transgress.

HIER. So is't my duty to regard his death
Who, when he lived, deserved my dearest blood.

But come, for that we came for. Let's begin,
For here lies that <sup>54</sup> which bids me to be gone.

Enter Officers, Boy, and PEDRINGANO, with a letter in his hand, bound.

DEP. Bring forth the prisoner, for the court is set.

PED. Gramercy, boy, but it was time to
come ;

For I had written to my Lord anew
A nearer matter that concerneth him, 20

<sup>54</sup> The handkerchief besmeared with Horatio's blood.

For fear his Lordship had forgotten me.
But sith <sup>55</sup> he hath rememb'ed me so well,
Come, come, come on, when shall we to this
gear ? <sup>56</sup>

HIER. Stand forth, thou monster, murderer of men,

And here, for satisfaction of the world,
Confess thy folly, and repent thy fault ;
For there's thy place of execution.

PED. This is short work. Well, to your Marshalship

First I confess, nor fear I death therefore,
I am the man, 't was I slew Serberine. 30
But, sir, then you think this shall be the place
Where we shall satisfy you for this gear ?

DEP. Ay, Pedringano.

PED. Now I think not so.

HIER. Peace, impudent ; for thou shalt find it so ;

For blood with blood shall, while I sit as judge,
Be satisfied, and the law discharg'd.

And though myself cannot receive the like,
Yet will I see that others have their right.
Despatch ; the fault's approved <sup>57</sup> and confess'd,

And by our law he is condemn'd to die. 40

[Enter Hangman.] <sup>58</sup>

HANGM. Come on, sir ; are you ready ?

PED. To do what, my fine, officious knave ?

HANGM. To go to this gear.

PED. O sir, you are too forward : thou wouldst fain furnish me with a halter, to dis-furnish me of my habit. <sup>59</sup> So I should go out of this gear, my raiment, into that gear, the rope. But, hangman, now I spy your knavery, I'll not change without boot, <sup>60</sup> that's flat.

HANGM. Come, sir. 50

PED. So, then, I must up ?

HANGM. No remedy.

PED. Yes, but there shall be for my coming down.

HANGM. Indeed, here's a remedy for that.

PED. How ? be turn'd off ?

HANGM. Ay, truly. Come, are you ready ?

I pray, sir, dispatch ; the day goes away.

PED. What, do you hang by the hour ? If you do, I may chance to break your old custom. 61

<sup>58</sup> Add. Q 1615, though the hangman might well enter with the other officers.

<sup>59</sup> The hangman got the clothes of those he executed.

HANGM. Faith, you have reason ; for I am like to break your young neck.

PED. Dost thou mock me, hangman? Pray God, I be not preserved to break your knave's pate for this.

HANGM. Alas, sir, you are a foot too low to reach it, and I hope you will never grow so high while I am in the office.

PED. Sirrah, dost see yonder boy with the box in his hand? 71

HANGM. What, he that points to it with his finger?

PED. Ay, that companion.

HANGM. I know him not ; but what of him?

PED. Dost thou think to live till his old doublet will make thee a new truss? <sup>61</sup>

HANGM. Ay, and many a fair year after, to truss up many an honest man than either thou or he. 81

PED. What hath he in his box, as thou think'st?

HANGM. Faith, I cannot tell, nor I care not greatly. Methinks you should rather hearken to your soul's health.

PED. Why, sirrah hangman, I take it that that is good for the body is likewise good for the soul ; and it may be in that box is balm for both. 90

HANGM. Well, thou art even the merriest piece of man's flesh that e'er groan'd at my office door.

PED. Is your roguery become an office with a knave's name?

HANGM. Ay, and that shall all they witness that see you seal it with a thief's name.

PED. I prithee, request this good company to pray with me. 99

HANGM. Ay, marry, sir, this is a good motion.<sup>62</sup> My masters, you see here's a good fellow.

PED. Nay, nay, now I remember me, let them alone till some other time ; for now I have no great need.

HIER. I have not seen a wretch so impudent.

O monstrous times, where murder's set so light,

And where the soul, that should be shrin'd in Heaven,

Solely delights in interdicted things,
Still wand'ring in the thorny passages 110
That intercepts itself of <sup>63</sup> happiness.

Murder ! O bloody monster ! God forbid

<sup>61</sup> Jacket.      <sup>62</sup> Proposal.      <sup>63</sup> Bar it from.

A fault so foul should scape unpunished.
Dispatch, and see this execution done ! —
This makes me to remember thee, my son.

Exit HIERONIMO.

PED. Nay, soft, no haste.

DEF. Why, wherefore stay you? Have you hope of life?

PED. Why, ay.

HANGM. As how?

PED. Why, rascal, by my pardon from the King. 120

HANGM. Stand you on that? Then you shall off with this.

He turns him off.

DEF. So, executioner ; convey him hence ; But let his body be unburied :

Let not the earth be choked or infect

With that which Heavens contemns, and men neglect. Exeunt.

[SCENE VII] <sup>64</sup>

Enter HIERONIMO.

HIER. Where shall I run to breathe abroad my woes,

My woes, whose weight hath wearied the earth?

Or mine exclaims, that have surcharg'd the air With ceaseless plaints for my deceased son?

The blust'ring winds, conspiring with my words,

At my lament have moved the leafless trees,
Disrob'd the meadows of their flow'ed green,
Made mountains marsh with spring tides of my tears,

And broken through the brazen gates of hell. Yet still tormented is my tortured soul 10

With broken sighs and restless passions,
That, winged, mount and, hovering in the air,
Beat at the windows of the brightest Heavens,
Soliciting for justice and revenge.

But they are plac'd in those empyreal <sup>65</sup> heights,
Where, countermur'd <sup>66</sup> with walls of diamond,
I find the place impregnable ; and they Resist my woes, and give my words no way.

Enter Hangman with a letter.

HANGM. O Lord, sir ! God bless you, sir ! the man, sir, Petergade, sir, he that was so full of merry conceits — 21

HIER. Well, what of him?

HANGM. O Lord, sir, he went the wrong way; the fellow had a fair commission to the contrary. Sir, here is his passport; I pray you, sir, we have done him wrong.

HIER. I warrant thee; give it me.

HANGM. You will stand between the gallows and me?

HIER. Ay, ay.

HANGM. I thank your Lord Worship. 30

Exit Hangman.

HIER. And yet, though somewhat nearer me concerns,

I will, to ease the grief that I sustain,
Take truce with sorrow while I read on this.
"My lord, I [writ] <sup>67</sup> as mine extremes requir'd,

That you would labor my delivery;
If you neglect, my life is desperate,
And in my death I shall reveal the troth.
You know, my Lord, I slew him for your sake,
And was confederate with the Prince and you;

Won by rewards and hopeful promises, 40
I help to murder Don Horatio too." —
Help he to murder mine Horatio?
And actors in th' accursed tragedy
Wast thou, Lorenzo, Balthazar and thou,
Of whom my son, my son, deserved so well?
What have I heard, what have mine eyes beheld?

O sacred Heavens, may it come to pass
That such a monstrous and detested deed,
So closely smother'd, and so long conceal'd,
Shall thus by this be venged or reveal'd? 50
Now see I what I durst not then suspect,
That Bel-imperia's letter was not feign'd.
Nor feigned she, though falsely they have wrong'd

Both her, myself, Horatio, and themselves.
Now may I make compare 'twixt hers and this,

Of every accident I ne'er could find
Till now, and now I feelingly perceive
They did what Heav'n unpunish'd would not leave.

O false Lorenzo, are these thy flattering looks?
Is this the honor that thou didst my son? 60
And Balthazar — bane to thy soul and me —
Was this the ransom he reserv'd thee for?
Woe to the cause of these constrained wars!
Woe to thy baseness and captivity!
Woe to thy birth, thy body, and thy soul,
Thy cursed father, and thy conquered self!

<sup>67</sup> Emend. Manly; old eds. writes. (Cf. IV, ii, 7.)

And bann'd with bitter execrations be
The day and place where he did pity thee!
But wherefore waste I mine unfruitful words,
When naught but blood will satisfy my woes?
I will go plain me to my Lord the King, 71
And cry aloud for justice through the court,
Wearing the flints with these my withered feet,
And either purchase justice by entreats,
Or tire them all with my revenging threats.

Exit.

[ACT IV — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter ISABELL[A] and her Maid.

ISAB. So that you say this herb will purge
the eye,
And this, the head?
Ah, but none of them will purge the heart.
No, there's no medicine left for my disease,
Nor any physic to recure<sup>2</sup> the dead.

She runs lunatic.

Horatio! O, where's Horatio?

MAID. Good madam, affright not thus yourself
With outrage<sup>3</sup> for your son Horatio.
He sleeps in quiet in the Elysian fields.

ISAB. Why, did I not give you gowns and goodly things, 10
Bought you a whistle and a whipstalk too,
To be revenged on their villainies?

MAID. Madam, these humors<sup>4</sup> do torment
my soul.

ISAB. "My soul" — poor soul, thou talks of things
Thou know'st not what — my soul hath silver
wings,

That mounts me up unto the highest Heavens.
To Heaven! Ay, there sits my Horatio,
Back'd with a troop of fiery cherubins,
Dancing about his newly healed wounds,
Singing sweet hymns and chanting heavenly
notes, 20

Rare harmony to greet his innocence,
That died, ay died, a mirror in our days.
But say, where shall I find the men, the murderers,

<sup>1</sup> Unlocated; presumably the same. According to the old eds. the play is in four acts, separated by the Chorus. If this division is correct, Act III constitutes nearly half the play. There may have been no Chorus to introduce Act IV, or it may have been omitted, as Greg suggests, accidentally. The present edition follows Hawkins in beginning Act IV here.

That slew Horatio? Whither shall I run
To find them out that murdered my son?
Exeunt.

[SCENE II] <sup>5</sup>

BEL-IMPERIA, at a window.

BEL. What means this outrage that is offered me?

Why am I thus sequest'ed from the court?
No notice! Shall I not know the cause
Of this <sup>6</sup> my secret and suspicious ills?
Accursed brother, unkind murderer,
Why bends thou thus thy mind to martyr me?
Hieronimo, why writ I of thy wrongs,
Or why art thou so slack in thy revenge?
Andrea, O Andrea! that thou sawest
Me for thy friend Horatio handled thus, 10
And him for me thus causeless murdered!—
Well, force perforce, I must constrain myself
To patience, and apply me <sup>7</sup> to the time,
Till Heaven, as I have hoped, shall set me free.

Enter CHRISTOPHIL.

CHRIS. Come, Madam Bel-imperia, this may not be. Exeunt.

[SCENE III] <sup>8</sup>

Enter LORENZO, BALTHAZAR, and the Page.

LOR. Boy, talk no further; thus far things go well.
Thou art assur'd that thou sawest him dead?
PAGE. Or else, my Lord, I live not.

LOR. That's enough.
As for his resolution in his end,
Leave that to him with whom he sojourns now.
Here, take my ring and give it Christophil,
And bid him let my sister be enlarg'd,
And bring her hither straight. — Exit Page.
This that I did was for a policy,
To smooth and keep the murder secret, 10
Which, as a nine-days' wonder, being o'er-blown,
My gentle sister will I now enlarge.

BAL. And time, Lorenzo; for my Lord the Duke,
You heard, inquired for her yesternight.

LOR. Why, and, my Lord, I hope you heard me say

Sufficient reason why she kept away;
But that's all one.<sup>9</sup> My Lord, you love her?
BAL. Ay.

LOR. Then in your love beware; deal cunningly;
Salve all suspicions; only soothe me up; <sup>10</sup>
And if she hap to stand on terms <sup>11</sup> with us, 20
As for her sweetheart and concealment so,
Jest with her gently: under feigned jest
Are things conceal'd that else would breed unrest.

But here she comes.

Enter BEL-IMPERIA.

Now, Sister —

BEL. Sister? No!
Thou art no brother, but an enemy;
Else wouldst thou not have used thy sister so:
First, to affright me with thy weapons drawn,
And with extremes abuse my company; <sup>12</sup>
And then to hurry me, like whirlwind's rage,
Amidst a crew of thy confederates, 30
And clap me up where none might come at me,
Nor I at any to reveal my wrongs.
What madding fury did possess thy wits?
Or wherein is't that I offended thee?

LOR. Advise you better, Bel-imperia,
For I have done you no disparagement;
Unless, by more discretion than deserv'd,
I sought to save your honor and mine own.

BEL. Mine honor? Why, Lorenzo, wherein
is't
That I neglect my reputation so, 40
As you, or any, need to rescue it?

LOR. His Highness and my father were
resolv'd
To come confer with old Hieronimo
Concerning certain matters of estate
That by the Viceroy was determined.

BEL. And wherein was mine honor touch'd in that?

BAL. Have patience, Bel-imperia; hear the rest.

LOR. Me, next in sight, as messenger they sent
To give him notice that they were so nigh.
Now, when I came, consorted with the Prince,
And unexpected in an arbor there 51
Found Bel-imperia with Horatio —

BEL. How then?

LOR. Why, then, rememb'ring that old disgrace,

<sup>9</sup> It makes no difference.

Which you for Don Andrea had endur'd,
And now were likely longer to sustain,
By being found so meanly accompanied,
Thought rather, for I knew no readier mean,
To thrust Horatio forth my father's way.

BAL. And carry you obscurely somewhere else, 60
Lest that his Highness should have found you
there.

BEL. Ev'n so, my Lord? And you are witness
That this is true which he entreateth of?
You, gentle Brother, forged this for my sake,
And you, my Lord, were made his instrument!
A work of worth, worthy the noting too!
But what's the cause that you conceal'd me since?

LOR. Your melancholy, Sister, since the news
Of your first favorite Don Andrea's death,
My father's old wrath hath exasperate. 70

BAL. And better was't for you, being in disgrace,
To absent yourself, and give his fury place.

BEL. But why had I no notice of his ire?

LOR. That were to add more fuel to your
fire,
Who burnt like Aetna for Andrea's loss.

BEL. Hath not my father then inquir'd for me?

LOR. Sister, he hath; and thus excus'd I thee: He whispereth in her ear.

But Bel-imperia, see the gentle Prince;
Look on thy love, behold young Balthazar,
Whose passions by thy presence are increas'd;
And in whose melancholy thou mayest see 81
Thy hate, his love; thy flight, his following
thee.

BEL. Brother, you are become an orator —
I know not, I, by what experience —
Too politic for me, past all compare,
Since last I saw you; but content yourself:
The Prince is meditating higher things.

BAL. 'Tis of thy beauty, then, that conquers kings;
Of those thy tresses, Ariadne's twines,
Wherewith my liberty thou hast surpris'd; 90
Of that thine ivory front,<sup>13</sup> my sorrow's map,
Wherein I see no haven to rest my hope.

BEL. To love and fear, and both at once,
my Lord,

In my conceit, are things of more import
Than women's wits are to be busied with.

BAL. 'Tis I that love.

<sup>13</sup> Face.

BEL. Whom?
BAL. Bel-imperia.

BEL. But I that fear.

BAL. Whom?
BEL. Bel-imperia.

LOR. Fear yourself?

BEL. Ay, Brother.

LOR. How?

BEL. As those
That what they love are loth and fear to lose.

BAL. Then, fair, let Balthazar your keeper
be. 100

BEL. No, Balthazar doth fear as well as we:
Et<sup>14</sup> tremulo metui pavidum iunxere timorem —
Est vanum stolidæ proditiōis opus.<sup>15</sup>

LOR. Nay, and you argue things so cunningly,

We'll go continue this discourse at court.

BAL. Led by the loadstar of her heavenly
looks,

Wends poor oppressed Balthazar,
As o'er the mountains walks the wanderer,
Uncertain to effect his pilgrimage. Exeunt.

[SCENE IV]<sup>16</sup>

*Enter two Portingales, and HIERONIMO meets
them.*

1 [PORT]. By your leave, sir.

HIER.<sup>17</sup> 'T is neither as you think, nor as you
think,
Nor as you think;<sup>18</sup> you're wide all:
These slippers are not mine; they were my son Ho-ratio's.

My son — and what's a son? A thing begot
Within a pair of minutes, thereabout;
A lump bred up in darkness, and doth serve
To ballace<sup>19</sup> these light creatures we call women;
And, at nine months' end, creeps forth to light. 10
What is there yet in a son,
To make a father dote, rave, or run mad?
Being born, it pouts, cries, and breeds teeth.
What is there yet in a son? He must be fed,
Be taught to go,<sup>20</sup> and speak. Ay, or yet
Why might not a man love a calf as well?
Or melt in passion o'er a frisking kid,
As for a son? Methinks, a young bacon,<sup>21</sup>
Or a fine little smooth horse colt,
Should move a man as much as doth a son. 20
For one of these, in very little time,
Will grow to some good use; whereas a son,
The more he grows in stature and in years,
The more unsquar'd, unbevelled,<sup>22</sup> he appears,
Reckons his parents among the rank of fools,

<sup>14</sup> Transposed with Est in old eds.

<sup>15</sup> Another patchwork. "And I feared to add dreadful alarm to a trembling man — vain is the work of senseless treachery."

<sup>22</sup> I.e., uneven [and] unsmoothed.

Strikes care upon their heads with his mad riots,
 Makes them look old before they meet with age.
 This is a son! And what a loss were this,
 Consider'd truly? — O, but my Horatio
 Grew out of reach of these insatiate humors:
 He loved his loving parents; 30
 He was my comfort, and his mother's joy,
 The very arm that did hold up our house:
 Our hopes were stored up in him.
 None but a damned murderer could hate him.
 He had not seen the back of nineteen year,
 When his strong arm unhors'd
 The proud Prince Balthazar, and his great mind,
 Too full of honor, took him [unto] <sup>23</sup> mercy,
 That valiant but ignoble Portingale.
 Well, Heaven is Heaven still; 40
 And there is Nemesis, and Furies,
 And things call'd whips,
 And they sometimes do meet with murderers;
 They do not always scape; that's some comfort.
 Ay, ay, ay; and then time steals on,
 And steals, and steals, till violence leaps forth
 Like thunder wrapp'd in a ball of fire,
 And so doth bring confusion to them all.]

Good leave have you; nay, I pray you go,
 For I'll leave you, if you can leave me so. 50
 2 [PORT]. Pray you, which is the next way to my Lord the Duke's?

HIER. The next way from me.

1 [PORT]. To his house, we mean.

HIER. O, hard by; 't is yon house that you see.

2 [PORT]. You could not tell us if his son were there?

HIER. Who, my Lord Lorenzo?

1 [PORT]. Ay, sir.

He goeth in at one door and comes out at another.

HIER. O, forbear!

For other talk for us far fitter were.
 But if you be importunate to know
 The way to him, and where to find him out,
 Then list to me, and I'll resolve your doubt.
 There is a path upon your left-hand side 60
 That leadeth from a guilty conscience
 Unto a forest of distrust and fear,
 A darksome place, and dangerous to pass.
 There shall you meet with melancholy
 thoughts,
 Whose baleful humors if you but uphold,<sup>24</sup>
 It will conduct you to despair and death;
 Whose rocky cliffs when you have once beheld,
 Within a hugh dale of lasting night,
 That, kindled with the world's iniquities,
 Doth cast up filthy and detested fumes, — 70
 Not far from thence, where murderers have built

A habitation for their cursed souls,
 There, in a brazen caldron, fix'd by Jove,

In his fell wrath, upon a sulphur flame,
 Yourselves shall find Lorenzo bathing him
 In boiling lead and blood of innocents.

1 [PORT]. Ha, ha, ha!

HIER. Ha, ha, ha! Why, ha, ha, ha! Farewell, good ha, ha, ha! Exit.

2 [PORT]. Doubtless this man is passing lunatic,

Or imperfection of his age doth make him dote.
 Come, let's away to seek my Lord the Duke.[81

Exeunt.

[SCENE V] <sup>25</sup>

Enter HIERONIMO, with a poniard in one hand and a rope in the other.

HIER. Now, sir, perhaps I come and see
 the King;

The King sees me, and fain would hear my suit.

Why, is not this a strange and seld-seen thing,
 That standers-by with toys should strike me mute?

Go to; I see their shifts, and say no more.

Hieronimo, 't is time for thee to trudge.

Down by the dale that flows with purple gore
 Standeth a fiery tower; there sits a judge

Upon a seat of steel and molten brass,

And 'twixt his teeth he holds a firebrand, 10

That leads unto the lake where hell doth stand.

Away, Hieronimo! to him be gone.

He'll do thee justice for Horatio's death.

Turn down this path; thou shalt be with him
 straight;

Or this, and then thou need'st not take thy breath.

This way or that way? — Soft and fair, not
 so!

For if I hang or kill myself, let's know

Who will revenge Horatio's murder then?

No, no! fie, no! pardon me, I'll none of that.

He flings away the dagger and hatter.

This way I'll take, and this way comes the
 King: 20

He takes them up again.

And here I'll have a fling at him; that's flat.

And, Balthazar, I'll be with thee to bring,<sup>26</sup>

And thee, Lorenzo! Here's the King — nay, stay;

And here, ay here — there goes the hare away.<sup>27</sup>

<sup>25</sup> Unlocated, but presumably a hall in the royal

Enter KING, Ambassador, CASTILE, and LORENZO.

KING. Now show, ambassador, what our viceroys saith.

Hath he receiv'd the articles we sent?

HIER. Justice, oh, justice to Hieronimo.

LOR. Back! seest thou not the King is busy?

HIER. Oh, is he so?

KING. Who is he that interrupts our business?

HIER. Not I. — [aside] Hieronimo, beware!
go by, go by! <sup>28</sup> 30

AMB. Renowned King, he hath received and read

Thy kingly proffers, and thy promis'd league;
And, as a man extremely overjoy'd

To hear his son so princely entertain'd,

Whose death he had so solemnly bewail'd,

This for thy further satisfaction

And kingly love he kindly lets thee know:

First, for the marriage of his princely son

With Bel-imperia, thy beloved niece,

The news are more delightful to his soul <sup>40</sup>

Than myrrh or incense to the offended Heavens.

In person, therefore, will he come himself,

To see the marriage rites solemnized,

And, in the presence of the court of Spain,

To knit a sure [inexplicable] <sup>29</sup> band

Of kingly love and everlasting league

Betwixt the crowns of Spain and Portingal.

There will he give his crown to Balthazar,

And make a queen of Bel-imperia.

KING. Brother, how like you this our viceroy's love? <sup>50</sup>

CAST. No doubt, my Lord, it is an argument
Of honorable care to keep his friend,

And wondrous zeal to Balthazar his son;

Nor am I least indebted to his Grace,

That bends his liking to my daughter thus.

AMB. Now last, dread Lord, here hath his Highness sent

(Although he send not that his son return)

His ransom due to Don Horatio.

HIER. Horatio! who calls Horatio?

KING. And well rememb'ed; thank his Majesty. <sup>60</sup>

Here, see it given to Horatio.

HIER. Justice, oh, justice, justice, gentle
King!

KING. Who is that? Hieronimo?

HIER. Justice, oh, justice! oh, my son, my
son,

My son, whom naught can ransom or redeem!

LOR. Hieronimo, you are not well-advis'd.

HIER. Away, Lorenzo, hinder me no more;
For thou hast made me bankrupt of my bliss.

Give me my son! you shall not ransom him!

Away! I'll rip the bowels of the earth, <sup>70</sup>

He diggeth with his dagger.

And ferry over to th' Elysian plains,

And bring my son to show his deadly wounds.

Stand from about me!

I'll make a pickaxe of my poniard,

And here surrender up my marshalship;

For I'll go marshal up the fiends in hell,

To be avenged on you all for this.

KING. What means this outrage? <sup>80</sup>

Will none of you restrain his fury?

HIER. Nay, soft and fair! you shall not need to strive. <sup>80</sup>

Needs must he go that the devils drive.

Exit.

KING. What accident hath happ'd Hiero-
nimo?

I have not seen him to demean him so.

LOR. My gracious Lord, he is with extreme pride,

Conceiv'd of young Horatio, his son,

And covetous of having to himself

The ransom of the young Prince Balthazar,

Distract, and in a manner lunatic.

KING. Believe me, Nephew, we are sorry
for't;

This is the love that fathers bear their sons. — <sup>90</sup>

But, gentle Brother, go give to him this gold,

The Prince's ransom; let him have his due.

For what he hath, Horatio shall not want;

Haply Hieronimo hath need thereof.

LOR. But if he be thus helplessly distract,

'T is requisite his office be resign'd,

And given to one of more discretion.

KING. We shall increase his melancholy so.

'T is best that we see further in it first,

Till when, ourself will exempt <sup>31</sup> the place. <sup>100</sup>

And, Brother, now bring in the ambassador,

That he may be a witness of the match

'Twixt Balthazar and Bel-imperia,

And that we may prefix a certain time,

Wherein the marriage shall be solemnized,

That we may have thy lord, the Viceroy, here.

<sup>30</sup> Outburst.

of being filled (by someone else). (But there may be a corruption here.)

<sup>29</sup> Inextricable. So old eds. except the first, which reads inexorable.

AMB. Therein your Highness highly shall content
His Majesty, that longs to hear from hence.

KING. On, then, and hear you, Lord Ambassador — Exeunt.

[SCENE VI]<sup>32</sup>

<sup>33</sup> [Enter JAKES and PEDRO.

JAK. I wonder, Pedro, why our master thus
At midnight sends us with our torches light,
When man and bird and beast are all at rest,
Save those that watch for rape and bloody murder.

PED. O Jakes, know thou that our master's mind
Is much distraught, since his Horatio died,
And — now his aged years should sleep in rest,
His heart in quie<sup>34</sup> — like a desperate man,
Grows lunatic and childish for his son.
Sometimes, as he doth at his table sit, 10
He speaks as if Horatio stood by him;
Then starting in a rage, falls on the earth,
Cries out, "Horatio, where is my Horatio?"
So that with extreme grief and cutting sorrow
There is not left in him one inch of man.
See, where he comes.

Enter HIERONIMO.

HIER. I pry through every crevice of each wall,
Look on each tree, and search through every brake,
Beat at the bushes, stamp our grandam earth,
Dive in the water, and stare up to Heaven, 20
Yet cannot I behold my son Horatio. —
How now, who's there? sprites, sprites?

PED. We are your servants, that attend you, sir.
HIER. What make you with your torches in the dark?

PED. You bid us light them, and attend you here.
HIER. No, no, you are deceiv'd! — not I; you are deceiv'd!

Was I so mad to bid you light your torches now?
Light me your torches at the mid of noon,
Whenas the sun god rides in all his glory;
Light me your torches then.

PED. Then we burn<sup>35</sup> daylight. 30
HIER. Let it be burnt; Night is a murderous slut,

That would not have her treasons to be seen;
And yonder pale-fac'd Hecate there, the moon,
Doth give consent to that is done in darkness;
And all those stars that gaze upon her face,
Are aglets<sup>36</sup> on her sleeve, pins on her train;
And those that should be powerful and divine
Do sleep in darkness when they most should shine.

PED. Provoke them not, fair sir, with tempting words;

The Heavens are gracious, and your miseries 40
And sorrow makes you speak you know not what.

HIER. Villain, thou liest! and thou doest naught
But tell me I am mad. Thou liest! I am not mad!
I know thee to be Pedro, and he Jakes.
I'll prove it to thee; and were I mad, how could I?
Where was she that same night when my Horatio Was murd'ed? She should have shone; search thou the book.

Had the moon shone, in my boy's face there was a kind of grace,

<sup>33</sup> Fourth passage of additions begins here.

Q 1602 aggets.)

That I know — nay, I do know — had the murderer seen him,
His weapon would have fall'n and cut the earth, 50
Had he been framed of naught but blood and death.
Alack, when mischief doth it knows not what,
What shall we say to mischief?

Enter ISABELLA.

ISAB. Dear Hieronimo, come in a'doors;
O, seek not means so to increase thy sorrow.

HIER. Indeed, Isabella, we do nothing here;
I do not cry — ask Pedro, and ask Jakes;
Not I, indeed; we are very merry, very merry.

ISAB. How? be merry here, be merry here? 60
Is not this the place, and this the very tree,
Where my Horatio [d]ied, where he was murdered?

HIER. Was — do not say what; let her weep it
out.

This was the tree; I set it of a kernel;
And when our hot Spain could not let it grow,
But that the infant and the human sap
Began to wither, duly twice a morning
Would I be sprinkling it with fountain water.
At last it grew and grew, and bore and bore, 70
Till at the length
It grew a gallows and did bear our son;

It bore thy fruit and mine — O wicked, wicked plant!

One knocks within at the door.

See who knocks there.

PED. It is a painter, sir.

HIER. Bid him come in, and paint some comfort;
For surely there's none lives but painted comfort.
Let him come in! — One knows not what may chance:

God's will that I should set this tree! — But even so
Masters ungrateful servants rear from naught,
And then they hate them that did bring them up.

Enter the Painter.

PAINT. God bless you, sir.

HIER. Wherefore? Why, thou scornful villain? 79

How, where, or by what means should I be bless'd?

ISAB. What wouldst thou have, good fellow?

PAINT. Justice, madam.

HIER. O ambitious beggar,
Wouldst thou have that that lives not in the world?
Why, all the undelved mines cannot buy
An ounce of justice, 't is a jewel so inestimable.
I tell thee, God hath engrossed all justice in his
hands,

And there is none but what comes from him.

PAINT. O, then I see
That God must right me for my murd'ed son.

HIER. How, was thy son murdered?

PAINT. Ay, sir; no man did hold a son so dear.

HIER. What, not as thine? That's a lie, 91
As massy as the earth. I had a son Whose least unvalued hair did weigh
A thousand of thy sons; and he was murdered.

PAINT. Alas, sir, I had no more but he.

HIER. Nor I, nor I; but this same one of mine
Was worth a legion. But all is one.

Pedro, Jakes, go in a'doors; Isabella, go;
And this good fellow here and I
Will range this hideous orchard<sup>36</sup> up and down, [100
Like to two lions reaved<sup>37</sup> of their young.
Go in a'doors, I say.

Exeunt. The Painter and he sits down.

Come, let's talk wisely now.

Was thy son murdered?

PAINT.

Ay, sir.

HIER.

So was mine.

How dost take it? Art thou not sometimes mad?

Is there no tricks<sup>38</sup> that comes before thine eyes?

PAINT. O Lord, yes, sir.

HIER. Art a painter? Canst paint me a tear, or a wound, a groan, or a sigh? Canst paint me such a tree <sup>39</sup> as this?

PAINT. Sir, I am sure you have heard of [110 my painting; my name's Bazarro.

HIER. Bazarro! Afore God, an excellent fellow. Look you, sir, do you see? I'd have you paint me my gallery, in your oil-colors matted,<sup>40</sup> and draw me five years younger than I am — do ye see, sir, let five years go, let them go — like the marshal of Spain; my wife Isabella standing by me, with a speaking look to my son Horatio, which should intend to this or some such like purpose: "God bless thee, my sweet son"; and my hand leaning upon [120 his head, thus, sir, do you see? May it be done?

PAINT. Very well, sir.

HIER. Nay, I pray mark me, sir. Then, sir, would I have you paint me this tree, this very tree. Canst paint a doleful cry?

PAINT. Seemingly, sir.

HIER. Nay, it should cry; but all is one. Well, sir, paint me a youth run thorough and thorough with villains' swords, hanging upon this tree. Canst thou draw a murderer? 130

PAINT. I'll warrant you, sir; I have the pattern of the most notorious villains that ever lived in all Spain.

HIER. O, let them be worse, worse; stretch thine art, and let their beards be of Judas his own color; <sup>41</sup> and let their eyebrows jutty over — in any case observe that. Then, sir, after some violent noise, bring me forth in my shirt, and my gown under mine arm, with my torch in my hand, and my sword reared up, thus — and with these words: 140

"What noise is this? Who calls Hieronimo?"

May it be done?

PAINT. Yea, sir.

HIER. Well, sir; then bring me forth, bring me thorough alley and alley, still with a distracted countenance going along, and let my hair heave up my nightcap. Let the clouds scowl, make the moon dark, the stars extinct, the winds blowing, the bells tolling, the owl shrieking, the toads croaking, the minutes j[a]rring,<sup>42</sup> and the clock striking twelve. [150 And then at last, sir, starting, behold a man hanging, and tottering and tottering, as you know the wind will wave a man, and I with a trice to cut him down. And looking upon him by the advantage of my torch, find it to be my son Horatio. There you may [show] <sup>43</sup> a passion, there you may show a passion! Draw me like old Priam of Troy, crying, "The house is afire, the house is afire, as the torch over my head!" Make me curse, make me rave, make me cry, make me mad, make me well again, make me curse [160 hell, invoke Heaven, and in the end leave me in a trance — and so forth.

PAINT. And is this the end?

HIER. O no, there is no end; the end is death and madness. As I am never better than when I am mad; then methinks I am a brave fellow; then I do wonders; but reason abuseth <sup>44</sup> me, and there's the torment, there's the hell. [At the last, sir, bring me to one of the murderers; were he as strong as Hector, thus would I tear and drag him up and 170 down.

He beats the Painter in, then comes out again, with a book in his hand.]

Enter HIERONIMO, with a book in his hand.

Vindicta mihi!

Ay, Heaven will be revenged of every ill; 1

Nor will they suffer murder unrepaid.

Then stay, Hieronimo, attend their will;

For mortal men may not appoint their time.

Per scelus semper tutum est sceleribus iter: <sup>45</sup>

Strike, and strike home, where wrong is off' red thee;

For evils unto ills conductors be,

And death's the worst of resolution. 180

For he that thinks with patience to contend

To quiet life, his life shall easily end. <sup>47</sup> —

Fata si miseros juvant, habes salutem;

Fata si vitam negant, habes sepulchrum: <sup>48</sup>

If destiny thy miseries do ease,

Then hast thou health, and happy shalt thou be.

If destiny deny thee life, Hieronimo,

Yet shalt thou be assured of a tomb;

If neither, yet let this thy comfort be:

Heaven covereth him that hath no burial. 190

And to conclude, I will revenge his death.

But how? Not as the vulgar wits of men,

With open, but inevitable ills, <sup>49</sup>

As by a secret, yet a certain mean,

Which under kindship <sup>50</sup> will be cloaked best.

Wise men will take their opportunity,

Closely and safely fitting things to time.

But in extremes advantage hath no time;

And therefore all times fit not for revenge.

Thus therefore will I rest me in unrest, 200

Dissembling quiet in unquietness,

Not seeming that I know their villainies,

That my simplicity <sup>51</sup> may make them think

That ignorantly I will let all slip;

For ignorance, I wot, and well they know,

Remedium malorum iners est. <sup>52</sup>

Nor aught avails it me to menace them,

Who, as a wintry storm upon a plain,

Will bear me down with their nobility.

No, no, Hieronimo, thou must enjoin 210

Thine eyes to observation, and thy tongue

To milder speeches than thy spirit affords,

Thy heart to patience, and thy hands to rest,

<sup>46</sup> I.e., the worst that can happen as a consequence of a bold course is only death. (Or, since "resolution" sometimes = "dissolution", "death", perhaps: the worst thing that can happen is only death.)

<sup>47</sup> I.e., the man who thinks he can win a quiet life by the exercise of patient endurance may lose his life [as] easily [as a bold man may].

Thy cap to courtesy, and thy knee to bow, Till to revenge thou know when, where, and
how. A noise within.
How now, what noise? What coil<sup>53</sup> is that you keep?

Enter a Servant.

SERV. Here are a sort<sup>54</sup> of poor petitioners
That are importunate, an it shall please you,
sir,

That you should plead their cases to the King.

HIER. That I should plead their several actions? 220

Why, let them enter, and let me see them.

Enter three Citizens and an Old Man.

1 [CIT].<sup>55</sup> So; I tell you this: for learning and for law,

There is not any advocate in Spain
That can prevail, or will take half the pain
That he will, in pursuit of equity.

HIER. Come near, you men, that thus importune me. —

[aside] Now must I bear a face of gravity;
For thus I us'd, before my marshalship,
To plead in causes as corregidor. —<sup>56</sup>
Come on, sirs, what's the matter?

2 CIT. Sir, an action. 230

HIER. Of battery?

1 CIT. Mine of debt.

HIER. Give place.

2 CIT. No, sir, mine is an action of the case.<sup>57</sup>

3 CIT. Mine an ejectione firme[e]<sup>58</sup> by a lease.

HIER. Content you, sirs; are you determined

That I should plead your several actions?

1 CIT. Ay, sir, and here's my declaration.

2 CIT. And here is my band.<sup>59</sup>

3 CIT. And here is my lease.

They give him papers.

HIER. But wherefore stands yon silly<sup>60</sup> man so mute,

With mournful eyes and hands to Heaven up-rear'd? 239

Come hither, father, let me know thy cause.

SENEX. O worthy sir, my cause, but slightly known,

May move the hearts of warlike Myrmidons,
And melt the Corsic rocks<sup>61</sup> with ruthful tears.

HIER. Say, father, tell me, what's thy suit?

SENEX. No, sir; could my woes
Give way unto my most distressful words,
Then should I not in paper, as you see,
With ink bewray what blood began in me.

HIER. What's here? "The humble supplication

Of Don Bazulto for his murd'ed son." 249

SENEX. Ay, sir.

HIER. No, sir; it was my murd'ed son!
O my son, my son, O my son Horatio!
But mine, or thine, Bazulto, be content.
Here, take my handkercher and wipe thine
eyes,

Whiles wretched I in thy mishaps may see
The lively portrait of my dying self.

He draweth out a bloody napkin.

'O no, not this; Horatio, this was thine;
And when I dy'd it in thy dearest blood,
This was a token 'twixt thy soul and me
(That of thy death revenged I should be.

But here, take this, and this — what, my purse? — 260

Ay, this, and that, and all of them are thine;
For all as one are our extremities,

1 CIT. O, see the kindness of Hieronimo!

2 CIT. This gentleness shows him a gentle-
man.

HIER. See, see; oh, see thy shame, Hiero-
nimo!

See here a loving father to his son!

Behold the sorrows and the sad laments,

That he delivereth for his son's decease!

If love's effects so strives in lesser things,

If love enforce such moods in meaner wits, [270

If love express such power in poor estates,

Hieronimo, [as when]<sup>62</sup> a raging sea,

Toss'd with the wind and tide, [o'erturneth]<sup>63</sup>
then

The upper billows, course of waves to keep,

Whilst lesser waters labor in the deep,

<sup>55</sup> Om. throughout these speech-tags, in old eds.
<sup>56</sup> Properly, "magistrate"; but evidently taken by Kyd as "advocate."

<sup>57</sup> "An universal remedy . . . so called because the plaintiff's whole . . . cause of complaint is set forth at length in the original writ." (Blackstone, cited by N. E. D.)

Then shamest thou not, Hieronimo, to neglect
 The sweet revenge of thy Horatio?
 Though on this earth justice will not be found,
 I'll down to hell, and in this passion
 Knock at the dismal gates of Pluto's court, [280
 Getting by force, as once Alcides did,
 A troop of Furies and tormenting hags
 To torture Don Lorenzo and the rest.
 Yet, lest the triple-headed porter should Deny my passage to the slimy strond,
 The Thracian poet thou shalt counterfeit.
 Come on, old father, be my Orpheus,
 And if thou canst <sup>64</sup> no notes upon the harp,
 Then sound the burden of thy sore heart's
 grief,

Till we do gain that Proserpine may grant 290
 Revenge on them that murd'ed my son.
 Then will I rent and tear them, thus, and thus,
 Shivering their limbs in pieces with my teeth.]

Tear the papers.

1 Crt. O sir, my declaration!

Exit HIERONIMO, and they after.

2. Crt. Save my bond!

Re-enter HIERONIMO.

2 Crt. Save my bond!

3 Crt. Alas, my lease! it cost me ten pound,
 And you, my Lord, have torn the same.

HIER. That cannot be; I gave it never a wound.

Show me one drop of blood fall from the same!
 How is it possible I should slay it, then? 300
 Tush, no; run after, catch me if you can.

Exeunt all but the Old Man. BAZ-ULTO remains till HIERONIMO enters again, who, staring him in the face, speaks.

HIER. And art thou come, Horatio, from the depth,

To ask for justice in this upper earth,
 To tell thy father thou art unreveng'd, ]
 To wring more tears from Isabella's eyes,
 Whose lights are dimm'd with overlong la-
 ments?

Go back, my son; complain to Aeacus,
 For here's no justice; gentle boy, begone,
 For justice is exiled from the earth;
 Hieronimo will bear thee company. 310
 Thy mother cries on righteous Rhadamanth
 For just revenge against the murderers.

SENEX. Alas, my Lord, whence springs this troubled speech?

HIER. But let me look on my Horatio.

<sup>64</sup> Knowest; i.e., canst play.

Sweet boy, how art thou chang'd in death's black shade!

Had Proserpine no pity on thy youth,
 But suffered thy fair crimson-colored spring
 With withered winter to be blasted thus?

Horatio, thou art older than thy father.

 forms! 320

BAZ. Ah, my good Lord, I am not your young son.

HIER. What, not my son? Thou then a Fury art,

Sent from the empty kingdom of black night
 To summon me to make appearance
 Before grim Minos and just Rhadamanth,
 To plague Hieronimo that is remiss,
 And seeks not vengeance for Horatio's death.

BAZ. I am a grieved man, and not a ghost,
 That came for justice for my murdered son.

HIER. Ay, now I know thee, now thou namest thy son. 330

Thou art the lively image of my grief;

Within thy face my sorrows I may see.

Thy eyes are gumm'd with tears, thy cheeks
 are wan,

Thy forehead troubled, and thy mutt'ring lips
 Murmur sad words abruptly broken off

By force of windy sighs thy spirit breathes;

And all this sorrow riseth for thy son,

And selfsame sorrow feel I for my son.

Come in, old man, thou shalt to Isabel.

Lean on my arm; I thee, thou me, shalt stay;

And thou, and I, and she will sing a song, [341

Three parts in one, but all of discords fram'd.—

Talk not of cords, but let us now be gone;

For with a cord Horatio was slain. Exeunt.

[SCENE VII] <sup>67</sup>

*Enter [on one side] KING OF SPAIN, the DUKE, LORENZO, BALTHAZAR, BEL-IMPERIA, [and Attendants; and, on the other,] VICEROY,
 DON PEDRO, [and Attendants].*

KING. Go, Brother, it is the Duke of Cas-tile's cause;

Salute the Viceroy in our name.

CAST.

I go.

VIC. Go forth, Don Pedro, for thy nephew's sake,

And greet the Duke of Castile.

 palace.

PED. It shall be so.

KING. And now to meet these Portuguese ;
For as we now are, so sometimes were these,
Kings and commanders of the western Indies.
Welcome, brave Viceroy, to the court of Spain,
And welcome all his honorable train !
'T is not unknown to us for why you come, 10
Or have so kingly cross'd the seas.
Sufficeth it, in this we note the troth
And more than common love you lend to us.
So is it that mine honorable niece
(For it beseems us now that it be known)
Already is betroth'd to Balthazar ;
And by appointment and our condescent <sup>68</sup>
To-morrow are they to be married.
To this intent we entertain thyself,
Thy followers, their pleasure, and our peace.
Speak, men of Portingal, shall it be so ? [21
If ay, say so ; if not, say flatly no.

VIC. Renowned King, I come not, as thou think'st,
With doubtful followers, unresolved men,
But such as have upon thine articles
Confirmed thy motion, and contented me.
Know, Sovereign, I come to solemnize
The marriage <sup>69</sup> of thy beloved niece,
Fair Bel-imperia, with my Balthazar,
With thee, my son ; whom sith I live to see, 30
Here take my crown ; I give it her and thee ;
And let me live a solitary life,
In ceaseless prayers,
To think how strangely Heaven hath thee preserved.

KING. See, Brother, see, how nature strives
in him !
Come, worthy Viceroy, and accompany
Thy friend with thine extremities ; <sup>70</sup>
A place more private fits this princely mood.

VIC. Or here, or where your Highness thinks it good.

Exeunt all but CASTILE and LORENZO.

CAST. Nay, stay, Lorenzo ; let me talk
with you. 40

Seest thou this entertainment of these kings ?

LOR. I do, my Lord, and joy to see the same.

CAST. And knowest thou why this meeting is ?

LOR. For her, my Lord, whom Balthazar
doth love,

And to confirm their promised marriage.

CAST. She is thy sister ?

<sup>70</sup> Unrestrained manifestations of emotion. L. 33 is presumably pieced out by them.

LOR. Who, Bel-imperia ? Ay,
My gracious Lord, and this is the day
That I have long'd so happily to see.

CAST. Thou wouldst be loth that any fault
of thine
Should intercept her in her happiness ? 50

LOR. Heavens will not let Lorenzo err so
much.

CAST. Why then, Lorenzo, listen to my
words :

It is suspected, and reported too,
That thou, Lorenzo, wrong'st Hieronimo,
And in his suits towards his Majesty Still keep'st him back, and seeks to cross his suit.

LOR. That I, my Lord ?

CAST. I tell thee, Son, myself have heard it said,

When, to my sorrow, I have been ashamed
To answer for thee, though thou art my son. 60
Lorenzo, knowest thou not the common love
And kindness that Hieronimo hath won
By his deserts within the court of Spain ?
Or seest thou not the King my brother's care
In his behalf, and to procure his health ?
Lorenzo, shouldst thou thwart his passions,
And he exclaim against thee to the King,
What honor were 't in this assembly,
Or what a scandal were 't among the kings
To hear Hieronimo exclaim on thee ? 70
Tell me — and look thou tell me truly too — Whence grows the ground of this report in court ?

LOR. My Lord, it lies not in Lorenzo's
power

To stop the vulgar, liberal of their tongues.
A small advantage makes a water-breach,
And no man lives that long contenteth all.

CAST. Myself have seen thee busy to keep back

Him and his supplications from the King.

LOR. Yourself, my Lord, hath seen his passions,

That ill beseem'd the presence of a king ; 80
And, for I pitied him in his distress,
I held him thence with kind and courteous
words

As free from malice to Hieronimo

As to my soul, my Lord.

CAST. Hieronimo, my son, mistakes thee
then.

LOR. My gracious father, believe me, so he doth.

But what's a silly man, distract in mind
To think upon the murder of his son ?

Alas, how easy is it for him to err !
 But for his satisfaction and the world's, 90
 'T were good, my Lord, that Hieronimo and I
 Were reconcil'd, if he misconster me.

CAST. Lorenzo, thou hast said ; it shall be
 so. —
 Go one of you, and call Hieronimo.<sup>71</sup>

Re-enter BALTHAZAR and BEL-IMPERIA.

BAL. Come, Bel-imperia, Balthazar's content,
 My sorrow's ease and sovereign of my bliss,
 Sith Heaven hath ordain'd thee to be mine ;
 Disperse those clouds and melancholy looks,
 And clear them up with those thy sun-bright
 eyes,
 Wherein my hope and Heaven's fair beauty lies. 100

BEL. My looks, my Lord, are fitting for my
 love,
 Which, new-begun, can show [no] <sup>72</sup> brighter
 yet.

BAL. New-kindled flames should burn as morning sun.

BEL. But not too fast, lest heat and all be
 done.

I see my Lord my father.

BAL. Truce, my love ;
 I will go salute him.

CAST. Welcome, Balthazar,
 Welcome, brave Prince, the pledge of Castile's peace ;
 And welcome, Bel-imperia. — How now, girl ?
 Why comest thou sadly to salute us thus ?
 Content thyself, for I am satisfied. 110
 It is not now as when Andrea liv'd ;
 We have forgotten and forgiven that,
 And thou art graced with a happier love. —
 But, Balthazar, here comes Hieronimo ;
 I'll have a word with him.

Enter HIERONIMO and a Servant.

HIER. And where's the Duke ?

SERV. Yonder.

HIER. Even so. —

[aside] What new device have they devised, trow ? <sup>73</sup>

Pocas palabras ! <sup>74</sup> mild as the lamb !

Is't I will be reveng'd ? No, I am not the
 man.

CAST. Welcome, Hieronimo. 120

BAL. Welcome, Hieronimo.

HIER. My Lords, I thank you for Horatio.

CAST. Hieronimo, the reason that I sent
 To speak with you, is this.

HIER. What, so short ?
 Then I'll be gone ; I thank you for't.

CAST. Nay, stay, Hieronimo ! — Go, call him, Son.

LOR. Hieronimo, my father craves a word
 with you.

HIER. With me, sir ? — Why, my Lord, I thought you had done.

LOR. No. — [aside] Would he had !

CAST. Hieronimo, I hear
 You find yourself aggrieved at my son, 131
 Because you have not access unto the King ;
 And say 't is he that intercepts your suits.

HIER. Why, is not this a miserable thing,
 my Lord ?

CAST. Hieronimo, I hope you have no cause,
 And would be loth that one of your deserts
 Should once have reason to suspect my son,
 Considering how I think of you myself.

HIER. Your son Lorenzo ! Whom, my noble
 Lord ?

The hope of Spain, mine honorable friend ? 140
 Grant me the combat of them, if they dare !

Draws out his sword.

I'll meet him face to face, to tell me so !
 These be the scandalous reports of such
 As love not me, and hate my Lord too much.
 Should I suspect Lorenzo would prevent
 Or cross my suit, that lov'd my son so well ?
 My Lord, I am ashamed it should be said.

LOR. Hieronimo, I never gave you cause.

HIER. My good Lord, I know you did not.

CAST. There then pause ;
 And for the satisfaction of the world, 150
 Hieronimo, frequent my homely house,
 The Duke of Castile, Cyprian's ancient seat ;
 And when thou wilt, use me, my son, and it ;
 But here, before Prince Balthazar and me,
 Embrace each other, and be perfect friends.

HIER. Ay, marry, my Lord, and shall.

Friends, quoth he ? See, I'll be friends with you all !

Especially with you, my lovely Lord ;
 For divers causes it is fit for us
 That we be friends : the world is suspicious,
 And men may think what we imagine not. 161

BAL. Why, this is friendly done, Hieronimo.

LOR. And that, I hope, old grudges are forgot.

HIER. What else ? It were a shame it should not be so.

CAST. Come on, Hieronimo, at my request ;
Let us entreat your company to-day.

Exeunt [all but HIERONIMO].

HIER. Your Lordship's to command. —
Pah ! keep your way :
[Chi mi fa più carezze che non suole,

[CHORUS]<sup>76</sup>

GHOST. Awake, Ericht[ho] ! Cerberus, awake !

Solicit Pluto, gentle Proserpine !
To combat, Ach[er]on and Er[eb]us !
For ne'er, by Styx and Phlegethon in hell,<sup>77</sup>
[O'er]<sup>78</sup> ferried Charon to the fiery lakes
Such fearful sights as poor Andrea see[s].<sup>79</sup>
Revenge, awake !

REVENGE. Awake ? For why ?

GHOST. Awake, Revenge ! for thou art ill-advis'd

T[o] sleep away what thou art warn'd to watch.

REVENGE. Content thyself, and do not trouble me. 10

GHOST. Awake, Revenge ! if love — as love hath had —

Have yet the power or prevalence in hell !
Hieronimo with Lorenzo is join'd in league,
And intercepts our passage to revenge.
Awake, Revenge, or we are woebegone !

REVENGE. Thus worldlings ground what they have dream'd upon.<sup>80</sup>

Content thyself, Andrea ; though I sleep,
Yet is my mood soliciting their souls.
Sufficeeth thee that poor Hieronimo
Cannot forget his son Horatio. 20
Nor dies Revenge, although he sleep awhile ;
For in unquiet, quietness is feign'd,
And slumb'ring is a common worldly wile.
Behold, Andrea, for an instance, how
Revenge hath slept, and then imagine thou,
What 't is to be subject to destiny.

Enter a Dumb Show.

GHOST. Awake, Revenge ; reveal this mystery.

REVENGE. The two first the nuptial torches bore

As brightly burning as the midday's sun ;
But after them doth Hymen hie as fast, 30

<sup>75</sup> So Schick, correcting the corrupt text of the old eds. "Who me caresses more than was his way
Has me betrayed — or wishes to betray."

Clothed in sable and a saffron robe,
And blows them out, and quencheth them with
blood,

As discontent that things continue so.

GHOST. Sufficeth me ; thy meaning's understood ;

And thanks to thee and those infernal powers
That will not tolerate a lover's woe.

Rest thee, for I will sit to see the rest.

REVENGE. Then argue not, for thou hast thy request.<sup>81</sup>

ACT [V — SCENE I]<sup>1</sup>

Enter BEL-IMPERIA and HIERONIMO.

BEL. Is this the love thou bear'st Horatio ?
Is this the kindness that thou counterfeits ?

Are these the fruits of thine incessant tears ?

Hieronimo, are these thy passions,

Thy protestations and thy deep laments,

That thou wert wont to weary men withal ?

O unkind father ! O deceitful world !

With what excuses canst thou show thyself ?

From this dishonor and the hate of men,

Thus to neglect the loss and life of him 10

Whom both my letters and thine own belief

Assures thee to be causeless slaughtered ?

Hieronimo, for shame, Hieronimo,

Be not a history to aftertimes

Of such ingratitude unto thy son !

Unhappy mothers of such children then !

But monstrous fathers to forget so soon

The death of those whom they with care and cost

Have tend'ered so, thus careless should be lost !

Myself, a stranger in respect of thee, 20

So loved his life, as still I wish their deaths.

Nor shall his death be unreveng'd by me,

Although I bear it out for fashion's sake.

For here I swear, in sight of Heaven and earth,
Shouldst thou neglect the love thou shouldst retain,

And give it over and devise no more,

Myself should send their hateful souls to hell

That wrought his downfall with extremest
death.

HIER. But may it be that Bel-imperia 29
Vows such revenge as she hath deign'd to say ?

<sup>1</sup> Unlocated ; perhaps a room in the palace of Don Cyprian. Old eds. Actus Quartus.

<sup>2</sup> Old eds. perpetuate the compositor's blunder by inserting between ll. 8 and 9 With what dishonour and the hate of men.

Why, then I see that Heaven applies our drift,<sup>3</sup>

And all the saints do sit soliciting
For vengeance on those cursed murderers.
Madam, 't is true, and now I find it so,
I found a letter, written in your name,
And in that letter, how Horatio died.
Pardon, O pardon, Bel-imperia,
My fear and care in not believing it ;
Nor think I thoughtless think upon a mean
To let his death be unreveng'd at full. 40
And here I vow — so <sup>4</sup> you but give consent,
And will conceal my resolution —
I will ere long determine of their deaths
That causeless thus have murdered my son.

BEL. Hieronimo, I will consent, conceal,
And aught that may effect for thine avail
Join with thee to revenge Horatio's death.

HIER. On, then ; whatsoever I devise,
Let me entreat you, grace my practices ;
Forwhy <sup>5</sup> the plot's already in mine head. 50
Here they are.

Enter BALTHAZAR and LORENZO.

BAL. How now, Hieronimo ?
What, courting Bel-imperia ?

HIER. Ay, my Lord ;
Such courting as, I promise you,
She hath my heart ; <sup>6</sup> but you, my Lord, have hers.

LOR. But now, Hieronimo, or never, we
Are to entreat your help.

HIER. My help ?
Why, my good Lords, assure yourselves of me ;
For you have giv'n me cause — ay, by my faith have you !

BAL. It pleas'd you, at the entertainment of the ambassador,
To grace the King so much as with a show. 60
Now, were your study so well furnished,
As, for the passing of the first night's sport,
To entertain my father with the like,
Or any such like pleasing motion,<sup>7</sup>
Assure yourself, it would content them well.

HIER. Is this all ?

BAL. Ay, this is all.

HIER. Why then, I'll fit you ;
say no more.

When I was young, I gave my mind
And pl'i'd myself to fruitless poetry ;

<sup>3</sup> Allies itself to our plan.

Which though it profit the professor naught,
Yet is it passing pleasing to the world. 70

LOR. And how for that ?

HIER. Marry, my good Lord, thus : —
And yet methinks, you are too quick with us —
When in Toledo there I studied,
It was my chance to write a tragedy —
See here, my Lords — He shows them a book.
Which, long forgot, I found this other day.
Now would your Lordships favor me so much
As but to grace me with your acting it —
I mean each one of you to play a part — 79
Assure you it will prove most passing strange,
And wondrous plausible <sup>8</sup> to that assembly.

BAL. What ! would you have us play a tragedy ?

HIER. Why, Nero thought it no disparage-
ment,
And kings and emperors have ta'en delight
To make experience of their wits in plays.

LOR. Nay, be not angry, good Hieronimo ;
The Prince but ask'd a question.

BAL. In faith, Hieronimo,
An you be in earnest, I'll make one.

LOR. And I another.

HIER. Now, my good Lord, could you entreat
Your sister, Bel-imperia, to make one ? 90
For what's a play without a woman in it ?

BEL. Little entreaty shall serve me, Hier-onimo ;

For I must needs be employed in your play.

HIER. Why, this is well. I tell you, Lordings,

It was determined to have been acted
By gentlemen and scholars too,
Such as could tell what to speak.

BAL. And now
It shall be play'd by princes and courtiers,
Such as can tell how to speak —
If, as it is our country manner, 100
You will but let us know the argument.

HIER. That shall I roundly. The chronicles of Spain

Record this written of a knight of Rhodes :
He was betrothed, and wedded at the length,
To one Perseda, an Italian dame,
Whose beauty ravished all that her beheld,
Especially the soul of Soliman,<sup>9</sup>
Who at the marriage was the chiefest guest.

<sup>8</sup> Pleasing.

<sup>9</sup> The anonymous Tragedy of Soliman and Perseda (entered in the Stationers' Register in 1592) has been ascribed by some to Kyd. It is based on Henry Wotton's Courtly Controversy of Cupid's Cautels (1578), a translation of Jacques Yver's Printemps d'Iver (1572).

By sundry means sought Soliman to win 109
 Perseda's love, and could not gain the same.
 Then 'gan he break his passions to a friend,
 One of his bashaws,<sup>10</sup> whom he held full dear.
 Her had this bashaw long solicited,
 And saw she was not otherwise to be won
 But by her husband's death, this knight of

Rhodes,

Whom presently by treachery he slew.
 She, stirr'd with an exceeding hate therefore,
 As cause of this slew Soliman,
 And, to escape the bashaw's tyranny,
 Did stab herself; and this the tragedy. 120

LOR. Oh, excellent!

BEL. But say, Hieronimo,
 What then became of him that was the
 bashaw?

HIER. Marry, thus: moved with remorse of his misdeeds,

Ran to a mountain top, and hung himself.

BAL. But which of us is to perform that part?

HIER. Oh, that will I, my Lords; make no doubt of it:

I'll play the murderer, I warrant you;

For I already have conceited that.

BAL. And what shall I? 129

HIER. Great Soliman, the Turkish emperor.

LOR. And I?

HIER. Erast[o], the knight of Rhodes.

BEL. And I?

HIER. Perseda, chaste and resolute.

And here, my Lords, are several abstracts
 drawn,

For each of you to note your parts,
 And act it, as occasion's off'ed you.

You must provide a Turkish cap,
 A black mustachio, and a falchion;

Gives a paper to BALTHAZAR.

You, with a cross, like to a knight of Rhodes;

Gives another to LORENZO.

And, madam, you must attire yourself

He giveth BEL-IMPERIA another.

Like Phoebe, Flora, or the Huntress,<sup>11</sup> 140

Which to your discretion shall seem best.

And as for me, my Lords, I'll look to one,<sup>12</sup>

And, with the ransom that the Viceroy sent,

So furnish and perform this tragedy

As all the world shall say Hieronimo

Was liberal in gracing of it so.

BAL. Hieronimo, methinks a comedy were better.

HIER. A comedy?

Fie! comedies are fit for common wits,
 But to present a kingly troop withal, 150

Give me a stately-written tragedy;

Tragoedia cothurnata, fitting kings,
 Containing matter, and not common things.

My Lords, all this must be performed,

As fitting for the first night's revelling.

The Italian tragedians were so sharp of wit,
 That in one hour's meditation.

They would perform anything in action.

LOR. And well it may; for I have seen the like

In Paris 'mongst the French tragedians. 160

HIER. In Paris? mass, and well remem-b'rd!

There's one thing more that rests for us to do.

BAL. What's that, Hieronimo? Forget not anything.

HIER. Each one of us

Must act his part in unknown languages,

That it may breed the more variety:

As you, my Lord, in Latin, I in Greek,

You in Italian; and, for because I know

That Bel-imperia hath practised the French,
 In courtly French shall all her phrases be. 170

BEL. You mean to try my cunning then,
 Hieronimo?

BAL. But this will be a mere confusion
 And hardly shall we all be understood.

HIER. It must be so; for the conclusion
 Shall prove the invention<sup>13</sup> and all was good.

And I myself in an oration,
 And with a strange and wondrous show besides,<sup>14</sup>

That I will have there behind a curtain,
 Assure yourself, shall make the matter known;
 And all shall be concluded in one scene, 180
 For there's no pleasure ta'en in tediousness.

BAL. How like you this?

LOR. [aside to BALTHAZAR] Why, thus,
 my Lord,

We must resolve to soothe his humors up.

BAL. On then, Hieronimo; farewell till soon.

HIER. You'll ply this gear?

LOR. I warrant you.

Exeunt all but HIERONIMO.

HIER. Why so!

Now shall I see the fall of Babylon,
 Wrought by the Heavens in this confusion.

And if the world like not this tragedy,
 Hard is the hap of old Hieronimo. Exit.

<sup>13</sup> So Greg and Schick; Boas intention.

<sup>14</sup> Transposed with preceding line in first three editions.

[SCENE II] <sup>15</sup>

Enter ISABELLA with a weapon.

ISAB. Tell me no more! — Oh, monstrous homicides!

Since neither piety or pity moves
The King to justice or compassion,
I will revenge myself upon this place,
Where thus they murdered my beloved son.

She cuts down the arbor.

Down with these branches and these loath-some boughs

Of this unfortunate and fatal pine!
Down with them, Isabella; rent them up,
And burn the roots from whence the rest is sprung!

I will not leave a root, a stalk, a tree, 10
A bough, a branch, a blossom, nor a leaf,
No, not an herb within this garden plot,
Accursed complot <sup>16</sup> of my misery!
Fruitless for ever may this garden be,
Barren the earth, and blissless whosoever
Imagines not to keep it unmanur'd! <sup>17</sup>
An eastern wind, commix'd with noisome
airs,

Shall blast the plants and the young saplings;
The earth with serpents shall be pestered,
And passengers, for fear to be infect, 20
Shall stand aloof, and, looking at it, tell:
"There, murd'ed, died the son of Isabel."
Ay, here he di'd, and here I him embrace!
See, where his ghost solicits with his wounds Revenge on her that should revenge his death.

Hieronimo, make haste to see thy son;
For sorrow and despair hath cited me
To hear Horatio plead with Rhadamanth.
Make haste, Hieronimo, to hold excus'd
Thy negligence in pursuit <sup>18</sup> of their deaths [30 Whose hateful wrath bereav'd him of his breath.

Ah, nay, thou doest delay their deaths,
Forgives the murderers of thy noble son,
And none but I bestir me — to no end!
And as I curse this tree from further fruit,
So shall my womb be cursed for his sake;
And with this weapon will I wound the
breast,

The hapless breast, that gave Horatio suck.

She stabs herself.

<sup>16</sup> Co-plotter, accomplice. Properly, "conspiracy."

<sup>17</sup> Uncultivated.

<sup>18</sup> Accented on first syllable.

[SCENE III] <sup>19</sup>

*Enter HIERONIMO; he knocks up the curtain.<sup>20</sup>
Enter the DUKE OF CASTILE.*

CAST. How now, Hieronimo, where's your fellows,

That you take all this pain?

HIER. O sir, it is for the author's
Credit, to look that all things may go well.

But, good my Lord, let me entreat your Grace
To give the King the copy of the play:
This is the argument of what we show.

CAST. I will, Hieronimo.

HIER. One thing more, my good Lord.

CAST. What's that?

HIER. Let me entreat your Grace
That, when the train are pass'd into the gallery,

You would vouchsafe to throw me down the
key. 10

CAST. I will, Hieronimo. Exit CASTILE.

HIER. What, are you ready, Balthazar?
Bring a chair and a cushion for the King.

Enter BALTHAZAR, with a chair.

Well done, Balthazar;
Hang up the title: our scene is Rhodes. What,
is your beard on?

BAL. Half on; the other is in my hand.

HIER. Dispatch for shame;
Are you so long? — Exit BALTHAZAR.

Bethink thyself, Hieronimo,
Recall thy wits, recount thy former wrongs
Thou hast received by murder of thy son,
And lastly, not least, how Isabel,
Once his mother and thy dearest wife,
All woebegone for him, hath slain herself. 20
Behoves thee then, Hieronimo, to be reveng'd.
The plot is laid of dire revenge!
On, then, Hieronimo, pursue revenge;
For nothing wants but acting of revenge.

Enter SPANISH KING, VICEROY, DUKE OF CASTILE, [DON PEDRO], and their train [to the gallery].<sup>21</sup> Exit Hieronimo.

KING. Now, Viceroy, shall we see the tragedy

<sup>19</sup> A hall in Don Cyprian's palace. Presumably Isabella's suicide has taken place on the inner stage, the curtains of which are then closed.

<sup>20</sup> See V, i, 177, 178; and V, iii, 111.

<sup>21</sup> Add. Manly. The gallery (see ll. 9, 10) was doubtless the balcony over the inner stage. Castile locks the doors to it and throws the key down to Hieronimo. In the old eds. the latter's exit is given before the entrance of the royal party.

Of Soliman, the Turkish emperor,
Perform'd of pleasure by your son the Prince,
My nephew Don Lorenzo, and my niece.

VIC. Who? Bel-imperia?

KING. Ay, and Hieronimo, our marshal,
At whose request they deign to do't themselves. 30

These be our pastimes in the court of Spain.
Here, Brother, you shall be the bookkeeper:
This is the argument of that they show.

He giveth him a book.

(Gentlemen, this play of Hieronimo, in sundry languages, was thought good to be set down in English, more largely for the easier understanding to every public reader.)

Enter BALTHAZAR, BEL-IMPERIA, and HIERONIMO.

BAL. Bashaw, that Rhodes is ours, yield
Heavens the honor,
And holy Mahomet, our sacred prophet!
And be thou grac'd with every excellence
That Soliman can give, or thou desire.
But thy desert in conquering Rhodes is less
Than in reserving this fair Christian nymph,
Perseda, blissful lamp of excellence, 40
Whose eyes compel, like pow'rful adamant,
The warlike heart of Soliman to wait.

KING. See, Viceroy, that is Balthazar, your
son,
That represents the emperor Soliman:
How well he acts his amorous passion!

VIC. Ay, Bel-imperia hath taught him that.

CAST. That's because his mind runs all on Bel-imperia.

HIER. Whatever joy earth yields betide your Majesty.

BAL. Earth yields no joy without Perseda's
love. 49

HIER. Let then Perseda on your Grace attend.

BAL. She shall not wait on me, but I on her:
Drawn by the influence of her lights,<sup>22</sup> I yield.
But let my friend, the Rhodian knight, come forth.

*Erasto, dearer than my life to me,
That he may see Perseda, my beloved.*

Enter ERASTO.

KING. Here comes Lorenzo: look upon the plot,
And tell me, Brother, what part plays he?

<sup>22</sup> Eyes.

BEL. Ah, my Erasto, welcome to Perseda.

LOR. Thrice happy is Erasto that thou livest;
Rhodes' loss is nothing to Erasto's joy;
Sith his Perseda lives, his life survives. 50

BAL. Ah, bashaw, here is love betwixt Erasto
And fair Perseda, sovereign of my soul.

HIER. Remove Erasto, mighty Soliman,
And then Perseda will be quickly won.

BAL. Erasto is my friend; and while he lives,
Perseda never will remove her love.

HIER. Let not Erasto live to grieve great Soliman.

BAL. Dear is Erasto in our princely eye.

HIER. But if he be your rival, let him die. [70

BAL. Why, let him die — so love commandeth
me;

Yet grieve I that Erasto should so die.

HIER. Erasto, Soliman saluteth thee,
And lets thee wit by me his Highness' will,
Which is, thou shouldst be thus employ'd.

Stab him.

BEL. Ay me,

Erasto! See, Soliman; Erasto's slain!

BAL. Yet liveth Soliman to comfort thee. }

Fair queen of beauty, let not favor die,

But with a gracious eye behold his grief,

That with Perseda's beauty is increas'd, 80

If by Perseda [his]<sup>23</sup> grief be not releas'd.

BEL. Tyrant, desist soliciting vain suits;

Relentless are mine ears to thy laments,

As thy butcher is pitiless and base,

Which seiz'd on my Erasto, harmless knight.

Yet by thy power thou thinkest to command,

And to thy power Perseda doth obey;

But, were she able, thus she would revenge

Thy treacheries on thee, ignoble Prince:

Stab him.

And on herself she would be thus reveng'd. 90

Stab herself.

KING. Well said!<sup>24</sup> — Old Marshal, this was bravely done!

HIER. But Bel-imperia plays Perseda well!

VIC. Were this in earnest, Bel-imperia,
You would be better to my son than so.

KING. But now what follows for Hiero-
nimo?

HIER. Marry, this follows for Hieronimo; —
Here break we off our sundry languages,
And thus conclude I in our vulgar tongue.
Haply you think — but bootless are your
thoughts —

That this is fabulously counterfeit, 100
And that we do as all tragedians do:

<sup>24</sup> Good, well done.

To die to-day, for fashioning our scene —
 The death of Ajax or some Roman peer —
 And in a minute, starting up again,
 Devolve to please to-morrow's audience.
 No, Princes ; know I am Hieronimo,
 The hopeless father of a hapless son,
 Whose tongue is tun'd to tell his latest tale,
 Not to excuse gross errors in the play.
 I see your looks urge instance of these words ;
 Behold the reason urging me to this ! 111

Shows his dead son.

See here my show ; look on this spectacle !
 Here lay my hope, and here my hope hath
 end !
 Here lay my heart, and here my heart was slain !

Here lay my treasure, here my treasure lost !
 Here lay my bliss, and here my bliss bereft !
 But hope, heart, treasure, joy, and bliss,
 All fled, fail'd, died, yea, all decay'd, with
 this.

From forth these wounds came breath that gave me life ;

They murd'ed me that made these fatal
 marks. 120

The cause was love, whence grew this mortal
 hate ;

The hate, Lorenzo and young Balthazar ;
 The love, my son to Bel-imperia.
 But night, the coverer of accursed crimes,
 With pitchy silence hush'd these traitors'
 harms,

And lent them leave, for they had sorted <sup>25</sup>
 leisure

To take advantage in my garden plot
 Upon my son, my dear Horatio.
 There merciless they butcher'd up my boy,
 In black, dark night, to pale, dim, cruel death.
 He shrieks ; I heard — and yet, methinks, I hear — 131

His dismal outcry echo in the air.
 With soonest speed I hasted to the noise,
 Where hanging on a tree I found my son,
 Through-girt <sup>26</sup> with wounds, and slaughter'd as you see.

And grieved I, think you, at this spectacle ?
 Speak, Portuguese, whose loss resembles mine :
 If thou canst weep upon thy Balthazar,
 'T is like I wail'd for my Horatio. —
 And you, my Lord, whose reconciled son 140
 March'd in a net, and thought himself un-
 seen,

And rated me for brainsick lunacy,
 With " God amend that mad Hieronimo ! " —

<sup>26</sup> Pierced, smitten through.

How can you brook our play's catastrophe ? —
 And here behold this bloody handkercher,
 Which at Horatio's death I weeping dipp'd
 Within the river of his bleeding wounds :
 It, as propitious, sec, I have reserved,
 And never hath it left my bloody heart,
 Soliciting remembrance of my vow 150
 With these, oh, these accursed murderers !
 Which now perform'd, my heart is satisfied.
 And to this end the bashaw I became,
 That might revenge me on Lorenzo's life,
 Who therefore was appointed to the part,
 And was to represent the knight of Rhodes,
 That I might kill him more conveniently.
 So, Viceroy, was this Balthazar, thy son,
 That Soliman which Bel-imperia,
 In person of Perseda, murdered, 160
 Solely appointed to that tragic part
 That she might slay him that offended her.
 Poor Bel-imperia miss'd her part in this ;
 For though the story saith she should have died,

Yet I of kindness, and of care to her,
 Did otherwise determine of her end ;
 But love of him whom they did hate too much
 Did urge her resolution <sup>27</sup> to be such.
 And, Princes, now behold Hieronimo,
 Author and actor in this tragedy, 170
 Bearing his latest fortune in his fist ;
 And will as resolute conclude his part
 As any of the actors gone before.
 And, gentles, thus I end my play ;
 Urge no more words — I have no more to say.

He runs to hang himself.

KING. O hearken, Viceroy ! — Hold, Hiero-
 nimo !

Brother, my nephew and thy son are slain !

VIC. We are betray'd ; my Balthazar is slain !

Break open the doors ; run, save Hieronimo.

[They break in and hold HIERONIMO.] <sup>28</sup> Hieronimo, do but inform the King of these events ; 180

Upon mine honor, thou shalt have no harm.

HIER. Viceroy, I will not trust thee with my life,

Which I this day have offered to my son. —
 Accursed wretch,

Why stayest thou him that was resolv'd to die ?

KING. Speak, traitor ! damned, bloody murderer, speak !

For now I have thee, I will make thee speak.
 Why hast thou done this undeserving deed ?

<sup>28</sup> Add. Q 1602.

VIC. Why hast thou murdered my Balthazar?

CAST. Why hast thou butchered both my children thus? 190

HIER. O, good words! <sup>20</sup>

As dear to me was my Horatio

As yours, or yours, or yours, my Lord, to you.

My guiltless son was by Lorenzo slain,

And by Lorenzo and that Balthazar

Am I at last revenged thoroughly,

Upon whose souls may Heavens be yet avenged

With greater far than these afflictions.

CAST. But who were thy confederates in this? 199

VIC. That was thy daughter, Bel-imperia; For by her hand my Balthazar was slain: I saw her stab him.

KING. Why speakest thou not? HIER. What lesser liberty can kings afford Than harmless silence? Then afford it me. Sufficeth, I may not, nor I will not tell thee.

KING. Fetch forth the tortures! Traitor as thou art, I'll make thee tell.

HIER. Indeed, Thou mayest torment me as his wretched son Hath done in murthering my Horatio; 210 But never shalt thou force me to reveal The thing which I have vow'd inviolate. And therefore, in despite of all thy threats, Pleas'd with their deaths, and eas'd with their revenge,

First take my tongue, and afterwards my heart.

Am I at last revenged thoroughly; 240

Upon whose souls may Heavens be yet revenged With greater far than these afflictions.

Methinks, since I grew inward <sup>23</sup> with revenge, I cannot look with scorn enough on death.

KING. What, dost thou mock us, slave? — Bring tortures forth!

HIER. Do, do, do; and meantime I'll torture you.

You had a son, as I take it; and your son Should ha' been married to your daughter.

Ha, was 't not so? — You had a son, too; He was my Liege's nephew. He was proud 250

And politic; had he lived, he might 'a' come To wear the crown of Spain. I think 't was so —

'T was I that killed him; look you, this same hand, 'T was it that stabb'd his heart — do you see? this hand —

For one Horatio, if you ever knew him: a youth, One that they hanged up in his father's garden; One that did force your valiant son to yield, While your more valiant son did take him prisoner.

VIC. Be deaf, my senses; I can hear no more.

KING. Fall, Heaven, and cover us with thy sad ruins. 260

CAST. Roll all the world within thy pitchy cloud.

HIER. Now do I applaud what I have acted.

Now to express the rupture of my part —

First take my tongue, and afterward my heart.

[He bites out his tongue.]

KING. O monstrous resolution of a wretch! See, Viceroy, he hath bitten forth his tongue, Rather than to reveal what we requir'd.

CAST. Yet can he write.

KING. And if in this he satisfy us not, 270

We will devise th' extremest kind of death That ever was invented for a wretch.

Then he makes signs for a knife to mend his pen.

CAST. Oh, he would have a knife to mend his pen.

VIC. Here, and advise thee that thou write the troth.

KING. Look to my brother! save Hieronimo! <sup>25</sup>

He with a knife stabs the DUKE and himself.

What age hath ever heard such monstrous deeds?

My brother, and the whole succeeding hope That Spain expected after my decease!

Go, bear his body hence, that we may mourn The loss of our beloved brother's death, 280

That he may be entomb'd, whate'er befall. I am the next, the nearest, last of all.

GHOST. Ay, now my hopes have end in their effects,

When blood and sorrow finish my desires :
Horatio murdered in his father's bower,
Vild Serberine by Pedringano slain,
False Pedringano hang'd by quaint device,
Fair Isabella by herself misdane,
Prince Balthazar by Bel-imperia stabb'd,
The Duke of Castile and his wicked son
Both done to death by old Hieronimo,
My Bel-imperia fall'n as Dido fell, 10
And good Hieronimo slain by himself :
Ay, these were spectacles to please my soul.
Now will I beg at lovely Proserpine
That, by the virtue of her princely doom,
I may consort my friends in pleasing sort,
And on my foes work just and sharp revenge.
I'll lead my friend Horatio through those fields

Where never-dying wars are still inur'd ;<sup>39</sup>

I'll lead my Bel-imperia to those joys
That vestal virgins and fair queens possess ;
I'll lead Hieronimo where Orpheus plays,
Adding sweet pleasure to eternal days. —
But say, Revenge, for thou must help, or none,
Against the rest how shall my hate be shown ?

REV. This hand shall hale them down to deepest hell,

Where none but Furies, bugs,<sup>40</sup> and tortures dwell.

GHOST. Then, sweet Revenge, do this at my request :

Let me be judge, and doom them to unrest. 30
Let loose poor Tityus from the vulture's gripe,
And let Don Cyprian supply his room ;
Place Don Lorenzo on Ixion's wheel,
And let the lover's endless pains surcease
(Juno forgets old wrath, and grants him ease) ;
Hang Balthazar about Chimaera's neck,
And let him there bewail his bloody love,
Repining at our joys that are above ;
Let Serberine go roll the fatal stone,
And take from Sisyphus his endless moan ; 40
False Pedringano, for his treachery,
Let him be dragg'd through boiling Acheron,
And there live, dying still in endless flames,
Blaspheming gods and all their holy names.

REV. Then haste we down to meet thy friends and foes :

To place thy friends in ease, the rest in woes ;
For here though death hath end their misery
I'll there begin their endless tragedy.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

IN 1616 Jonson personally saw through the press the First Folio of his collected works (Second Folio, 1631-1640; Third Folio, 1692). From it we learn that Every Man in His Humor was first performed in 1598, and that Shakespeare (perhaps as Lorenzo Senior, the Elder Knowell of the Italian version) was one of the actors. The play was an immediate success. It was also destined to a long career on the London stage: Kiteley was one of Garrick's famous rôles; in 1845 Charles Dickens, a gifted amateur actor, played Bobadill with great gusto.

Jonson wrote on a neoclassical theory: comedy in his opinion ought to be realistic, and it ought to "sport with human follies, not with crimes." While the prologue as we have it may have been written after the original production, in offering "one such to-day as other plays should be", he challenged the prevailing romantic comedy with his "humors." Unlike Shakespeare, who ordinarily starts with a plot, Jonson begins with ideas or "manners", creates characters to exemplify them, and uses plot chiefly as a means of displaying them. To Shakespeare comedy was usually a vehicle for putting a romantic tale on the stage; to Jonson it was an opportunity for wielding the lash of the satirist. Hence the latter's addiction to his "humors", since caricature is an obvious means of ridicule. Zealous to avoid romanticizing and prettifying, Jonson exaggerates the various weaknesses of most of his persons, denying them common sense and complexity, till in many cases his depiction of the dominating trait, the "humor", of each subject of his portraiture crowds everything else off the canvas.

Plautus was his principal source. From the Roman comedy he took the deceived father and the sporting son, the clever slave, the boastful captain, and the gull — all stock characters; as the manipulation of events by the servant in behalf of his young master, the marriage sub rosa, and the disguisings and mistaken identity were all stock situations. Despite the Latin origin of his patterns, and his original Italian coloring, Jonson weaves a racy tapestry of contemporary London life. This is a play bound to disappoint the reader for whom narrative is the prime requisite of fiction. This is for the man who delights in the sights and sounds and smells of a great city, the sort of person who finds the top of a bus a vantage point.

In his turn Jonson became the inspiration of the best English comic writers for two centuries. The historical importance, therefore, of Every Man in His Humor can hardly be overstated, even though its intrinsic merit is considerably below that of the three masterpieces which follow it in the present edition. For several years Shakespeare was powerfully influenced by these humors, Middleton and Fletcher followed Jonson's lead, and the comic dramatists of the Restoration were profoundly indebted to him.

The standard editions of Jonson's Works are those of William Gifford (re-edited by Francis Cunningham, 1875), and of C. H. Herford and Percy Simpson (1925-). The most useful separate editions of Every Man in His Humor are by Percy Simpson (1919) and H. H. Carter (1921; date of editor's preface, 1914). The play originally appeared, in quarto, in 1601, with Italian characters and scene. Jonson afterwards, perhaps about 1612, made a careful revision, transferring both to London. This version appears in the Folios. There is a good deal of stylistic overhauling, especially in the verse passages, as well as excision of oaths (in accordance with the act against profanity in plays — 3 Jac. I, ch. 21), a slight rearrangement of acts and scenes, a more concise handling of the closing scenes, a general tightening up of theatrical effectiveness, and a few additional strokes of characterization. The present text is based on the First Folio, with some corrections and additions, especially in stage directions, from the Quarto and the later Folios.

PROLOGUE

THOUGH need make many poets, and some such
As art and nature have not better'd much,
Yet ours for want hath not so lov'd the stage
As he dare serve th'ill customs of the age,
Or purchase your delight at such a rate
As, for it, he himself must justly hate:
To make a child, now swaddled, to proceed
Man, and then shoot up, in one beard and
weed,
Past threescore years<sup>3</sup>; or, with three rusty
swords,
And help of some few foot-and-half-foot
words, 10
Fight over York and Lancaster's long jars,<sup>4</sup>
And in the tiring-house<sup>5</sup> bring wounds to scars.
He rather prays you will be pleas'd to see
One such to-day, as other plays should be;

<sup>2</sup> I.e., loafer. The centre aisle of the cathedral was a lounging-place, as well as the scene of business appointments.

<sup>3</sup> In the present play Jonson observes the unity of time. "The clock ticks audibly in every act." (Simpson.) Steevens mentions Endymion as an offender. This prologue is heavily indebted to Sidney's Defence of Poesie.

Where neither chorus wafts you o'er the seas,<sup>6</sup> Nor creaking throne comes down the boys to please,<sup>7</sup>

Nor nimble squib is seen to make afeard
The gentlewomen, nor roll'd bullet<sup>8</sup> heard
To say it thunders, nor tempestuous drum
Rumbles to tell you when the storm doth come; <sup>9</sup> 20

But deeds and language such as men do use,
And persons such as comedy would choose
When she would show an image of the times,
And sport with human follies, not with crimes;
Except we make 'em such, by loving still
Our popular errors, when we know th'are ill.
I mean such errors as you'll all confess,
By laughing at them, they deserve no less:
Which when you heartily do, there's hope left,
then,

You, that have so grac'd monsters, may like
men. 30

ACT I — SCENE I<sup>10</sup>

[Enter] KNOWELL [and BRAINWORM].<sup>11</sup>

KNOW. A goodly day toward! and a fresh morning! —

Brainworm, call up your young master: bid him rise, sir.

Tell him I have some business to employ him.

BRAI. I will, sir, presently.<sup>12</sup>

KNOW. But hear you, sirrah, If he be at<sup>13</sup> his book, disturb him not.

BRAI. Well, sir. [Exit.]<sup>14</sup>

KNOW. How happy yet should I esteem myself,

Could I, by any practice,<sup>15</sup> wean the boy From one vain course of study he affects.

He is a scholar, if a man may trust

The liberal voice of fame; in her report 10

Of good account in both our universities,

Either of which hath favor'd him with graces:

But their indulgence must not spring in me

A fond<sup>16</sup> opinion that he cannot err.

Myself was once a student, and indeed

Fed with the selfsame humor he is now,

Dreaming on naught but idle poetry,

That fruitless and unprofitable art,

Good unto none, but least to the professors;

Which then I thought the mistress of all knowledge; 20

But since, time and the truth have wak'd my judgment,

And reason taught me better to distinguish

The vain from th' useful learnings.

[Enter MASTER STEPHEN.]

Cousin Stephen!

What news with you, that you are here so early?

STEP. Nothing, but e'en come to see how you do, Uncle.

KNOW. That's kindly done; you are welcome, Coz.

STEP. Ay, I know that, sir; I would not ha' come else. How [doth]<sup>17</sup> my cousin Edward, Uncle? 31

KNOW. O, well, Coz; go in and see; I doubt he be scarce stirring yet.

STEP. Uncle, afore I go in, can you tell me an he have e'er a book of the sciences of hawking and hunting? I would fain borrow it.

KNOW. Why, I hope you will not a-hawking now, will you?

STEP. No, wusse;<sup>18</sup> but I'll practise against next year, Uncle. I have bought me a [40 hawk, and a hood, and bells, and all; I lack nothing but a book to keep it by.

KNOW. Oh, most ridiculous!

STEP. Nay, look you now, you are angry, Uncle. — Why, you know an man have not skill in the hawking and hunting languages nowadays, I'll not give a rush for him.

They are more studied than the Greek, or the Latin. He is for no gallant's company without

'em; and by gadslid<sup>19</sup> I scorn it, I, so I do, [50 to be a consort for every humdrum: hang 'em, scroyles!<sup>20</sup> there's nothing in 'em i' the world. What do you talk on it? Because I dwell at Hogsden,<sup>21</sup> I shall keep company with none but the archers of Finsbury, or the citizens that come a-ducking<sup>22</sup> to Islington ponds? A fine jest, i' faith! 'Slid, a gentleman mun<sup>23</sup> show himself like a gentleman. Uncle, I pray you be not angry; I know what I have to do, I

trow; I am no novice. 60

KNOW. You are a prodigal, absurd coxcomb, go to!

Nay, never look at me — 't is I that speak; Take 't as you will, sir — I'll not flatter you.

Ha' you not yet found means enow to waste That which your friends have left you, but you must

Go cast away your money on a kite, And know not how to keep it, when you ha'

done?

O, it's comely! This will make you a gentleman!

Well, Cousin, well! I see you are e'en past hope

Of all reclaim. — Ay, so, now you are told on it, 70

You look another way.

STEP. What would you ha' me do?

<sup>17</sup> F<sub>1</sub> doe, which Simpson retains. Q doeth; F<sub>1</sub> z, z, does.

<sup>14</sup> So Q. Om. F. Similar cases are not cited, except occasionally, in these notes. It should be added that the names of the characters are not the same in Q.

KNOW. What would I have you do? I'll tell you, kinsman :
 Learn to be wise, and practise how to thrive ;
 That would I have you do ; and not to spend
 Your coin on every bauble that you fancy,
 Or every foolish brain that humors you.
 I would not have you to invade each place,
 Nor thrust yourself on all societies,
 Till men's affections, or your own desert,
 Should worthily invite you to your rank. 80
 He that is so disrespectful in his courses
 Oft sells his reputation at cheap market.
 Nor would I you should melt away yourself
 In flashing bravery,<sup>24</sup> lest, while you affect
 To make a blaze of gentry to the world,
 A little puff of scorn extinguish it ;
 And you be left like an unsavory snuff,
 Whose property is only to offend.
 I'd ha' you sober, and contain yourself,
 Not that your sail be bigger than your boat ;
 But moderate your expenses now, at first, 91
 As you may keep the same proportion still ;
 Nor stand so much on your gentility,
 Which is an airy and mere borrow'd thing,
 From dead men's dust and bones ; and none of
 yours,
 Except you make, or hold it. Who comes
 here?

SCENE II <sup>25</sup>

[To] KNOWELL [and] STEPHEN [enter a] Servant.

SERV. Save you, gentlemen !

STEP. Nay, we do not stand much on our gentility, friend ; yet you are welcome, and I assure you mine uncle here is a man of a thousand a year, Middlesex land. He has but one son in all the world, I am his next heir, at the common law, Master Stephen, as simple as I stand here, if my cousin die, as there's hope he will. I have a pretty living o' mine own too, beside, hard by here. 10

SERV. In good time,<sup>26</sup> sir.

STEP. In good time, sir ! Why, and in very good time, sir ! You do not flout, friend, do
 you?

SERV. Not I, sir.

STEP. Not you, sir ! You were not best, sir ; an you should, here be them can perceive it, and that quickly too ; go to. And they can give it again soundly too, an need be.

<sup>24</sup> Waste your substance on flashy finery.

<sup>26</sup> "A formula of polite acquiescence . . . but it could be ironical or incredulous." (Simpson.) Cf.
à la bonne heure.

SERV. Why, sir, let this satisfy you ; good faith, I had no such intent. 21

STEP. Sir, an I thought you had, I would talk with you, and that presently.

SERV. Good Master Stephen, so you may,
 sir, at your pleasure.

STEP. And so I would, sir, good my saucy companion !<sup>27</sup> An you were out o' mine uncle's ground, I can tell you ; though I do not stand upon my gentility neither, in 't.

KNOW. Cousin ! Cousin ! Will this ne'er be left? 31

STEP. Whoreson, base fellow ! a mechanical serving man ! By this cudgel, an 't were not for shame, I would ——

KNOW. What would you do, you peremp-tory <sup>28</sup> gull?

If you cannot be quiet, get you hence.

You see the honest man demears himself

Modestly to'ards you, giving no reply

To your unseason'd, quarrelling, rude fashion ;

And still you huff it,<sup>29</sup> with a kind of carriage
 As void of wit as of humanity. 41

Go, get you in ; 'fore Heaven, I am asham'd
 Thou hast a kinsman's interest in me.

[Exit MASTER STEPHEN.]

SERV. I pray you, sir, is this Master Knowell's house?

KNOW. Yes, marry is it, sir.

SERV. I should inquire for a gentleman here, one Master Edward Knowell ; do you know any such, sir, I pray you?

KNOW. I should forget myself else, sir. 50

SERV. Are you the gentleman? Cry you mercy, sir. I was requir'd by a gentleman i'
 the city, as I rode out at this end o' the town,
 to deliver you this letter, sir.

KNOW. To me, sir ! What do you mean?
 Pray you remember your court'sy.<sup>30</sup> — [reading] " To his most selected friend, Master Edward Knowell." What might the gentleman's name be, sir, that sent it? Nay, pray you be cover'd. 60

SERV. One Master Wellbred, sir.

KNOW. Master Wellbred ! A young gentleman, is he not?

SERV. The same, sir ; Master Kitley married his sister — the rich merchant i' the Old Jewry.

KNOW. You say very true. — Brainworm !

[Enter BRAINWORM.]

BRAI. Sir.

<sup>30</sup> Put on your hat.

KNOW. Make this honest friend drink here.
Pray you, go in. 70

[Exeunt BRAINWORM and Servant.]

This letter is directed to my son ;
Yet I am Edward Knowell too, and may,
With the safe conscience of good manners, use
The fellow's error to my satisfaction.
Well, I will break it ope (old men are curious),
Be it but for the style's sake and the phrase,
To see if both do answer my son's praises,
Who is almost grown the idolater
Of this young Wellbred. — What have we here? What's this?

(The letter.) "Why, Ned, I beseech [80 thee, hast thou forsworn all thy friends i' the Old Jewry? or dost thou think us all Jews that inhabit there yet? If thou dost, come over and but see our frippery ;<sup>31</sup> change an old shirt for a whole smock with us. Do not conceceive that antipathy between us and Hogsden as was between Jews and hogs' flesh. Leave thy vigilant father alone, to number over his green apricots, evening and morning, o' the northwest wall. An I had been his son, I [90 had sav'd him the labor long since, if taking in all the young wenches that pass by at the back door, and coddling every kernel of the fruit for 'em, would ha' serv'd. But prithee, come over to me quickly this morning. I have such a present for thee! — our Turkey Company never sent the like to the Grand Signior. One is a rhymers, sir, o' your own batch, your own leaven ; but doth think himself poet-major o'
the town, willing to be shown, and worthy [100 to be seen. The other — I will not venture his description with you, till you come, because
I would ha' you make hither with an appetite.
If the worst of 'em be not worth your journey, draw your bill of charges, as unconscionable as any Guildhall verdict will give it you, and you shall be allow'd your viaticum.

From the Bordello,<sup>33</sup> it might come as well —

I judge him a profane and dissolute wretch ;
Worse by possession of such great good gifts,
Being the master of so loose a spirit.

Why, what unhallow'd ruffian would have writ

In such a scurrilous manner to a friend?

Why should he think I tell my apricots? [120
Or play th' Hesperian dragon with my fruit,
To watch it? Well, my son, I had thought
Y' had had more judgment t' have made elec-

No argument or subject from their jest.

But I perceive affection makes a fool

Of any man too much the father. — Brain-

[Re-enter BRAINWORM.]

BRAI. Sir.

KNOW. Is the fellow gone that brought this letter?

BRAI. Yes, sir, a pretty while since.

KNOW. And where 's your young master? 130

BRAI. In his chamber, sir.

KNOW. He spake not with the fellow, did he?

BRAI. No, sir, he saw him not.

KNOW. Take you this letter, and deliver it
my son ;

But with no notice that I have open'd it, on your life.

BRAI. O Lord, sir ! that were a jest indeed.
[Exit.]

KNOW. I am resolv'd I will not stop his journey,

Nor practise any violent mean to stay
The unbridled course of youth in him ; for that

Restrain'd grows more impatient ; and in

SCENE [III] <sup>38</sup>

[Enter] EDWARD KNOWELL [with a letter, followed by] BRAINWORM.

E. KNOW. Did he open it, sayest thou?

BRAI. Yes, o' my word, sir, and read the contents.

E. KNOW. That scarce contents me. What countenance, prithee, made he i' the reading of it? Was he angry or pleas'd?

BRAI. Nay, sir, I saw him not read it, nor open it, I assure your Worship.

E. KNOW. No? How know'st thou then that he did either? 10

BRAI. Marry, sir, because he charg'd me, on my life, to tell nobody that he open'd it; which, unless he had done, he would never fear to have it reveal'd.

E. KNOW. That's true. Well, I thank thee, Brainworm. [Reads the letter.]

[Enter STEPHEN.]

STEP. O, Brainworm, didst thou not see a fellow here in a what-sha'-call-him doublet? He brought mine uncle a letter e'en now. 19

BRAI. Yes, Master Stephen; what of him?

STEP. O, I ha' such a mind to beat him — where is he, canst thou tell?

BRAI. Faith, he is not of that mind: he is gone, Master Stephen.

STEP. Gone! which way? When went he? How long since?

BRAI. He is rid hence; he took horse at the street door.

STEP. And I stay'd i' the fields! Whoreson Scanderbag <sup>39</sup> rogue! O that I had but a [30 horse to fetch him back again!

BRAI. Why, you may ha' my master's gelding, to save your longing, sir.

STEP. But I ha' no boots, that's the spite on't.

BRAI. Why, a fine wisp of hay, roll'd hard, Master Stephen.

STEP. No, faith, it's no boot to follow him now; let him e'en go and hang. Pray thee, help to truss <sup>40</sup> me a little. He does so vex [40 me —

BRAI. You'll be worse vex'd when you are truss'd, Master Stephen. Best keep unbrac'd, and walk yourself till you be cold; your choler may founder you else.

STEP. By my faith, and so I will, now thou tell'st me on 't. How dost thou like my leg, Brainworm?

BRAI. A very good leg, Master Stephen! but the woollen stocking does not commend [50 it so well.

STEP. Foh! the stockings be good enough, now summer is coming on, for the dust. I'll have a pair of silk again' <sup>41</sup> winter, that I go to dwell i' the town. I think my leg would show in a silk hose.

BRAI. Believe me, Master Stephen, rarely well.

STEP. In sadness, <sup>42</sup> I think it would; I have a reasonable good leg. 60

BRAI. You have an excellent good leg, Master Stephen; but I cannot stay to praise it longer now, and I am very sorry for it.

STEP. Another time will serve, Brainworm. Gramercy for this. [Exit BRAINWORM.]

E. KNOW. (laughs, having read the letter.)
Ha, ha, ha!

STEP. 'Slid, I hope he laughs not at me; and he do —

E. KNOW. Here was a letter indeed, to be intercepted by a man's father, and do him [70 good with him! He cannot but think most virtuously, both of me and the sender, sure, that make the careful costermonger of him in our "Familiar Epistles." Well, if he read this with patience I'll be gelt, and troll ballads for Master John Trundle <sup>43</sup> yonder, the rest of my mortality. It is true, and likely, my father may have as much patience as another man, for he takes much physic; and oft taking physic makes a man very patient. But would [80 your packet, Master Wellbred, had arriv'd at him in such a minute of his patience. Then we had known the end of it, which now is doubtful, and threatens — [seeing STEPHEN] What! my wise cousin! Nay, then I'll furnish our feast with one gull more to'ard the mess.<sup>44</sup> He writes to me of a brace, and here's one, that's three. Oh, for a fourth! Fortune, if ever thou 'lt use thine eyes, I entreat thee —

STEP. Oh, now I see who he laugh'd at: [90 he laugh'd at somebody in that letter. By this good light, an he had laugh'd at me —

E. KNOW. How now, Cousin Stephen, melancholy?

STEP. Yes, a little: I thought you had laugh'd at me, Cousin.

E. KNOW. Why, what an I had, Coz? What would you ha' done?

STEP. By this light, I would ha' told mine uncle. 100

E. KNOW. Nay, if you would ha' told your uncle, I did laugh at you, Coz.

STEP. Did you, indeed?

E. KNOW. Yes, indeed.

STEP. Why, then —

E. KNOW. What then?

STEP. I am satisfied; it is sufficient.

E. KNOW. Why, be so, gentle Coz. And, I pray you, let me entreat a courtesy of you. I am sent for this morning by a friend i' [110 the Old Jewry, to come to him; it's but crossing over the fields to Moorgate. Will you bear me company? I protest it is not to draw you into bond or any plot against the state, Coz.

STEP. Sir, that's all one, an 't were; you shall command me twice so far as Moorgate, to do you good in such a matter. Do you think I would leave you? I protest —

E. KNOW. No, no, you shall not protest, Coz. 121

STEP. By my fackins,<sup>45</sup> but I will, by your leave: — I'll protest more to my friend than I'll speak of at this time.

E. KNOW. You speak very well, Coz.

STEP. Nay, not so neither, you shall pardon me; but I speak to serve my turn.

E. KNOW. Your turn, Coz! Do you know what you say? A gentleman of your sort,<sup>46</sup> parts, carriage, and estimation, to talk o' [130 your turn<sup>47</sup> i' this company, and to me alone, like a tankard-bearer at a conduit! Fie! A wight that, hitherto, his every step hath left the stamp of a great foot behind him, as every word the savor of a strong spirit! and he! this man! so grac'd, gilded, or, to use a more fit metaphor, so tin-foil'd, by nature, as not ten housewives' pewter, again' a good time,<sup>48</sup> shows more bright to the world than he! and he! (as I said last, so I say again, and [140 still shall say it) this man! to conceal such real ornaments as these, and shadow their glory, as a milliner's wife does her wrought stomacher, with a smoky lawn, or a black cypress!<sup>49</sup> O, Coz! it cannot be answer'd; go not about it. Drake's old ship<sup>50</sup> at De[p]tford may sooner circle the world again. Come, wrong not the quality of your desert, with looking downward, Coz; but hold up your head, so; and let the idea<sup>51</sup> of what you are be [150 portray'd i' your face, that men may read i' your physnomy, "Here, within this place, is to be seen the true, rare, and accomplish'd monster, or miracle of nature," which is all one. What think you of this, Coz?

STEP. Why, I do think of it; and I will be more proud, and melancholy, and gentleman-like, than I have been, I'll insure you.

E. KNOW. Why, that's resolute, Master Stephen! — [aside] Now, if I can but hold [160 him up to his height, as it is happily begun, it will do well for a suburb humor: we may hap have a match with the City, and play him for forty pound. — Come, Coz.

STEP. I'll follow you.

E. KNOW. Follow me! You must go before.

STEP. Nay, an I must, I will. Pray you show me, good Cousin. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV<sup>52</sup>

[Enter] MASTER MATTHEW.

MAT. I think this be the house. What, ho!

[Enter COB.]

COB. Who's there? Oh, Master Matthew! Gi' your Worship good morrow.

MAT. What, Cob! How dost thou, good Cob? Dost thou inhabit here, Cob?

COB. Ay, sir, I and my lineage ha' kept a poor house here, in our days.

MAT. Thy lineage, Monsieur Cob! What lineage, what lineage?

COB. Why, sir, an ancient lineage, and a [10 princely. Mine ance'try came from a king's belly, no worse man; and yet no man either — by your Worship's leave, I did lie in that —

The first red herring that was broil'd in Adam and Eve's kitchen do I fetch my pedigree from, by the harrots' <sup>54</sup> books. His cob <sup>55</sup> was my great-great-mighty-great-grandfather. 20

MAT. Why mighty, why mighty, I pray thee?

COB. O, it was a mighty while ago, sir, and a mighty great cob.

MAT. How know'st thou that?

COB. How know I! Why, I smell his ghost ever and anon.

MAT. Smell a ghost! O unsavory jest! and the ghost of a herring cob!

COB. Ay, sir. With favor of your Wor- [30 ship's nose, Master Matthew, why not the ghost of a herring cob, as well as the ghost of Rasher Bacon?

MAT. Rober Bacon, thou wouldst say!

COB. I say Rasher Bacon. They were both broil'd o' the coals! and a man may smell broil'd meat, I hope! You are a scholar; upsolve me that now.

MAT. O raw ignorance!—Cob, canst thou show me of a gentleman, one Captain [40 Bobadill, where his lodging is?

COB. O, my guest, sir, you mean!

MAT. Thy guest! alas, ha, ha!

COB. Why do you laugh, sir? Do you not mean Captain Bobadill?

MAT. Cob, pray thee advise thyself well; do not wrong the gentleman, and thyself too. I dare be sworn he scorns thy house, he! He lodge in such a base obscure place as thy house! Tut, I know his disposition so [50 well, he would not lie in thy bed if thou'dst gi' it him.

COB. I will not give it him though, sir. Mass, I thought somewhat was in 't, we could not get him to bed all night! Well, sir, though he lie not o' my bed, he lies o' my bench; an't please you to go up, sir, you shall find him with two cushions under his head, and his cloak wrapp'd about him, as though he had neither worn nor lost; and yet, I [60 warrant, he ne'er cast <sup>56</sup> better in his life, than he has done to-night.<sup>57</sup>

MAT. Why, was he drunk?

[Enter TIB with a water-tankard.]

MAT. Lie in a water-bearer's house! A gentleman of his havings! Well, I'll tell him my mind.

COB. What, Tib; show this gentleman up to the Captain. [Exeunt TIB and MATTHEW.] Oh, an my house were the Brazen Head <sup>59</sup> now! Faith, it would e'en speak Mo <sup>60</sup> fools yet. You should ha' some now would take this Master Matthew to be a gentleman, at the least. His father's an honest man, a [80 worshipful fishmonger,<sup>61</sup> and so forth; and now does he creep and wriggle into acquaintance with all the brave gallants about the town, such as my guest is (oh, my guest is a fine man), and they flout him invincibly. He useth every day to a merchant's house where I serve water, one Master Kitley's, i' the Old Jewry; and here's the jest: he is in love with my master's sister, Mistress Bridget, and calls her "Mistress"; and there [90 he will sit you a whole afternoon, sometimes, reading o' these same abominable, vile (a pox on 'em, I cannot abide them), rascally verses, poyetrie, poyetrie, and speaking of interludes; 't will make a man burst to hear him. And the wenches, they do so jeer, and ti-he at him.—Well, should they do so much to me, I'd forswear them all, by the foot of Pharaoh! —There's an oath! How many water-bearers shall you hear swear such an oath? [100 O, I have a guest—he teaches me—he does swear the legiblest of any man christ'ned: "By St. George!" "The foot of Pharaoh!" "The body of me!" "As I am [a] <sup>62</sup> gentleman and a soldier!" Such dainty oaths! And withal he does take this same filthy roguish tobacco, the finest and cleanliest! It would do a man good to see the fume come forth at 's tonnels.<sup>63</sup>—Well, he owes me forty shillings, my wife lent him out of her [110 purse, by sixpence a time, besides his lodging; I would I had it! SCENE V <sup>65</sup>

BOBADILL is discovered lying on his bench.

BOB. Hostess, hostess !

[Enter TIB.]

TIB. What say you, sir ?

BOB. A cup o' thy small beer, sweet hostess.

TIB. Sir, there's a gentleman below would speak with you.

BOB. A gentleman ! 'odso, I am not within.

TIB. My husband told him you were, sir.

BOB. What a plague — what meant he ?

MAT. [within] <sup>66</sup> Captain Bobadill !

BOB. Who's there ! — Take away the basin, good hostess. — Come up, sir. 11

TIB. He would desire you to come up, sir. You come into a cleanly house, here !

[Enter MATTHEW.]

MAT. 'Save you, sir ; 'save you, Captain !

BOB. Gentle Master Matthew ! Is it you, sir ? Please you sit down.

MAT. Thank you, good Captain ; you may see I am somewhat audacious.

BOB. Not so, sir. I was requested to supper last night by a sort <sup>67</sup> of gallants, where [20 you were wish'd for, and drunk to, I assure you.

MAT. Vouchsafe me by whom, good Captain.

BOB. Marry, by young Wellbred, and others. — Why, hostess, a stool here for this gentleman.

MAT. No haste, sir, 't is very well.

BOB. Body of me ! It was so late ere we parted last night, I can scarce open my [30 eyes yet ; I was but new risen, as you came. How passes the day abroad, sir ? you can tell.

MAT. Faith, some half hour to seven. Now, trust me, you have an exceeding fine lodging here, very neat, and private !

BOB. Ay, sir ; sit down, I pray you. Master Matthew, in any case possess no gentlemen of our acquaintance with notice of my lodging.

MAT. Who ? I, sir ? No. 40

BOB. Not that I need to care who know it, for the cabin <sup>68</sup> is convenient ; but in regard I would not be too popular, and generally visited, as some are.

MAT. True, Captain, I conceive you.

BOB. For, do you see, sir, by the heart of valor in me, except it be to some peculiar and choice spirits, to whom I am extraordinarily engag'd, as yourself, or so, I could not extend thus far. 50

MAT. O Lord, sir ! I resolve so.

BOB. I confess I love a cleanly and quiet privacy, above all the tumult and roar of fortune. What new book ha' you there ? What ! "Go by, Hieronymo !" <sup>69</sup>

MAT. Ay : did you ever see it acted ? Is't not well penn'd ?

BOB. Well penn'd ! I would fain see all the poets of these times pen such another play as that was ! They'll prate and swagger, [60 and keep a stir of art and devices, when, as I am a gentleman, read 'em, they are the most shallow, pitiful, barren fellows that live upon the face of the earth again !

MAT. Indeed here are a number of fine speeches in this book. <sup>70</sup> "O eyes, no eyes, but fountains fraught with tears !" There's a conceit ! "Fountains fraught with tears !" "O life, no life, but lively form of death !" — another ! "O world, no world, but mass [70 of public wrongs !" — a third ! "Confus'd and fill'd with murder and misdeeds !" — a fourth ! Oh, the muses ! Is't not excellent ? Is't not simply the best that ever you heard, Captain ? Ha ! how do you like it ?

BOB. 'T is good.

MAT. "To thee, the purest object to my sense,

The most refined essence Heaven covers,
Send I these lines, wherein I do commence
The happy state of turtle-billing lovers. 80
If they prove rough, unpolish'd, harsh, and rude,

Haste made the waste. Thus, mildly, I conclude." <sup>71</sup>

BOB. Nay, proceed, proceed. Where's this ?

BOBADILL is making him ready all this while.

MAT. This, sir ? A toy <sup>72</sup> o' mine own, in my nonage, the infancy of my muses ! But when will you come and see my study ?

Good faith, I can show you some very good things I have done of late. — That boot becomes your leg passing well, Captain, methinks.

BOB. So, so; it's the fashion gentlemen now use.

MAT. Troth, Captain, and now you speak o' the fashion, Master Wellbred's elder brother and I are fall'n out exceedingly. This other day, I happ'ned to enter into some discourse of a hanger,<sup>73</sup> which, I assure you, both for fashion and workmanship, was most peremptory<sup>74</sup> beautiful and gentlemanlike; yet he condemn'd, and cri'd it down for the most pried<sup>75</sup> and ridiculous that he ever saw. 101

BOB. Squire Downright, the half-brother, was't not?

MAT. Ay, sir, he.

BOB. Hang him, rook!<sup>76</sup> He! why he has no more judgment than a malt-horse. By St. George, I wonder you'd lose a thought upon such an animal; the most peremptory absurd clown of Christendom, this day, he is holden. I protest to you, as I am a [110 gentleman and a soldier, I ne'er chang'd words with his like. By his discourse, he should eat nothing but hay. He was born for the manger, pannier, or packsaddle! He has not so much as a good phrase in his belly, but all old iron and rusty proverbs! a good commodity for some smith to make hobnails of.

MAT. Ay, and he thinks to carry it away<sup>77</sup> with his manhood still, where he comes. He brags he will gi' me the bastinado, as I hear. 121

BOB. How! He the bastinado! How came he by that word, trow?<sup>78</sup>

MAT. Nay, indeed, he said cudgel me; I term'd it so, for my more grace.

BOB. That may be; for I was sure it was none of his word. But when, when said he so?

MAT. Faith, yesterday, they say; a young gallant, a friend of mine, told me so.

BOB. By the foot of Pharaoh, an't were [130 my case now, I should send him a cartel presently. The bastinado! A most proper and sufficient dependence,<sup>79</sup> warranted by the great Carranza.<sup>80</sup> Come hither. You shall cartel him. I'll show you a trick or two you shall kill him with at pleasure; the first stoccata,<sup>81</sup> if you will, by this air.

MAT. Indeed, you have absolute knowledge i' the mystery, I have heard, sir.

BOB. Of whom, of whom, ha' you heard it, I beseech you? 141

MAT. Troth, I have heard it spoken of divers, that you have very rare and un-in-one-breath-utterable skill, sir.

BOB. By Heaven, no, not I; no skill i' the earth — some small rudiments i' the science, as to know my time, distance, or so. I have profess'd it more for noblemen and gentlemen's use, than mine own practice, I assure you. — Hostess, accommodate us with another [150 bedstaff<sup>82</sup> here quickly. [Re-enter TIB.] Lend us another bedstaff. — The woman does not understand the words of action. — Look you, sir: exalt not your point above this state, at any hand, and let your poniard maintain your defence, thus. — Give it the gentleman, and leave us. [Exit TIB.] So, sir. Come on. Oh, twine your body more about, that you may fall to a more sweet, comely, gentlemanlike guard. So! indifferent.<sup>83</sup> [160 Hollow your body more, sir, thus. Now, stand fast o' your left leg, note your distance, keep your due proportion of time — oh, you disorder your point most irregularly!

MAT. How is the bearing of it now, sir?

BOB. Oh, out of measure ill. A well-experienced hand would pass upon you at pleasure.

MAT. How mean you, sir, pass upon me?

BOB. Why, thus, sir — make a thrust at me — come in upon the answer, control [170 your point, and make a full career<sup>84</sup> at the body. The best-practis'd gallants of the time name it the passada;<sup>85</sup> a most desperate thrust, believe it!

MAT. Well, come, sir.

BOB. Why, you do not manage your weapon with any facility or grace to invite me. I have no spirit to play with you. Your dearth of judgment renders you tedious.

MAT. But one venue,<sup>86</sup> sir. 180

BOB. "Venue!" Fic. Most gross denomination as ever I heard. Oh, the "stoccata," while you live, sir; note that. — Come

put on your cloak, and we'll go to some private place where you are acquainted, some tavern, or so — and have a bit. I'll send for one of these fencers, and he shall breathe<sup>87</sup> you, by my direction; and then I will teach you your trick. You shall kill him with it at the first, if you please. Why, I will learn you, by the [190 true judgment of the eye, hand, and foot, to control any enemy's point i' the world. Should your adversary confront you with a pistol, 't were nothing, by this hand, you should, by the same rule, control his bullet, in a line, except it were hail-shot, and spread. What money ha' you about you, Master Matthew?

MAT. Faith, I ha' not past a two shillings or so. 200

BOB. 'T is somewhat with the least<sup>88</sup>; but come, we will have a bunch of radish and salt to taste our wine, and a pipe of tobacco to close the orifice of the stomach; and then we'll call upon young Wellbred. Perhaps we shall meet the Corydon<sup>89</sup> his brother there, and put him to the question. [Exeunt.]

ACT II — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] KITELY, CASH, and DOWNRIGHT.

KIT. Thomas, come hither.
There lies a note within upon my desk;
Here, take my key — it is no matter neither. —
Where is the boy?

CASH. Within, sir, i' the warehouse.

KIT. Let him tell over straight that Spanish gold,
And weigh it, with th' pieces of eight.<sup>2</sup> Do
you

See the delivery of those silver stuffs
To Master Lucar. Tell him, if he will,
He shall ha' the grograns<sup>3</sup> at the rate I told
him,

And I will meet him on the Exchange anon. 10

CASH. Good, sir. [Exit.]

KIT. Do you see that fellow, Brother Downright?

DOW. Ay, what of him?

KIT. He is a jewel, Brother.
I took him of a child up at my door,
And christ'ned him, gave him mine own name,
Thomas;
Since bred him at the Hospital;<sup>4</sup> where proving
A toward imp,<sup>5</sup> I call'd him home, and taught
him
So much, as I have made him my cashier,
And giv'n him, who had none, a surname,
Cash;
And find him in his place so full of faith
That I durst trust my life into his hands. 20
Dow. So would not I in any bastard's,
Brother,
As it is like he is, although I knew Myself his father. But you said y' had somewhat
To tell me, gentle Brother. What is't, what
is't?

KIT. Faith, I am very loth to utter it,
As fearing it may hurt your patience;
But that I know your judgment is of strength
Against the nearness of affection —

DOW. What need this circumstance?<sup>6</sup>
Pray you, be direct. 29

KIT. I will not say how much I do ascribe
Unto your friendship, nor in what regard
I hold your love; but let my past behavior,
And usage of your sister, but confirm
How well I've been affected to your —

DOW. You are too tedious; come to the matter, the matter.

KIT. Then, without further ceremony, thus.
My brother Wellbred, sir, I know not how,
Of late is much declin'd in what he was,
And greatly alter'd in his disposition. 39
When he came first to lodge here in my house,
Ne'er trust me if I were not proud of him;
Methought he bare himself in such a fashion,
So full of man, and sweetness in his carriage,
And, what was chief, it show'd not borrowed
in him,

But all he did became him as his own,
And seem'd as perfect, proper, and possess'd,
As breath with life, or color with the blood.
But now, his course is so irregular,
So loose, affected, and depriv'd of grace,
And he himself withal so far fall'n off 50
From that first place, as scarce no note remains,

To tell men's judgments where he lately stood.

He's grown a stranger to all due respect,
 Forgetful of his friends ; and, not content
 To stale himself <sup>7</sup> in all societies,
 He makes my house here common as a mart,
 A theatre, a public receptacle
 For giddy humor, and diseased riot ;
 And here, as in a tavern or a stew, 59
 He and his wild associates spend their hours,
 In repetition of lascivious jests,
 Swear, leap, drink, dance, and revel night by
 night,

Control my servants ; and, indeed, what not ?

Dow. 'Sdeynes,<sup>8</sup> I know not what I should say to him, i' the whole world ! He values me at a crack'd three-farthings, for aught I see.
 It will never out o' the flesh that's bred i' the bone. I have told him enough, one would think, if that would serve ; but counsel to him is as good as a shoulder of mutton to a sick [70 horse.<sup>9</sup> Well ! he knows what to trust to, 'fore George ! Let him spend, and spend, and domineer, till his heart ache ; an he think to be reliev'd by me, when he is got into one o' your city pounds, the Counters,<sup>10</sup> he has the wrong sow by the ear, i' faith ; and claps his dish <sup>11</sup> at the wrong man's door. I'll lay my hand o' my halfpenny, ere I part with 't to fetch him out, I'll assure him.

KIT. Nay, good Brother, let it not trouble
 you thus. 80

Dow. 'Sdeath, he mads me ; I could eat my very spur-leathers for anger ! But, why are you so tame ? Why do not you speak to him, and tell him how he disquiets your house ?

KIT. O, there are divers reasons to dissuade,
 Brother.<sup>12</sup>

But, would yourself vouchsafe to travail in it (Though but with plain and easy circumstance),<sup>13</sup>

It would both come much better to his sense,
 And savor less of stomach,<sup>14</sup> or of passion.
 You are his elder brother, and that title 90
 Both gives and warrants you authority,
 Which, by your presence seconded, must breed
 A kind of duty in him, and regard ;
 Whereas, if I should intimate the least,
 It would but add contempt to his neglect,
 Heap worse on ill, make up a pile of hatred,
 That in the rearing would come tott'ring down,

<sup>7</sup> Make himself cheap.

 (N.E.D.)

<sup>11</sup> Beggars clapped the covers of their wooden dishes to attract attention.

<sup>13</sup> I.e., tactfully. <sup>14</sup> Resentment.

And in the ruin bury all our love.

Nay, more than this, Brother ; if I should
 speak, 99

He would be ready, from his heat of humor,<sup>15</sup>
 And overflowing of the vapor in him,
 To blow the ears of his familiars
 With the false breath of telling what disgraces
 And low disparagements I had put upon him ;
 Whilst they, sir, to relieve him in the fable,<sup>16</sup>
 Make their loose comments upon every word,
 Gesture, or look, I use ; mock me all over,
 From my flat cap <sup>17</sup> unto my shining <sup>18</sup> shoes ;
 And, out of their impetuous rioting phant'sies, Beget some slander that shall dwell with
 me. 110

And what would that be, think you ? Marry,
 this :

They would give out, because my wife is fair,
 Myself but lately married, and my sister
 Here sojourning a virgin in my house,
 That I were jealous ! — nay, as sure as death,
 That they would say ; and how that I had quarrell'd

My brother purposely, thereby to find
 An apt pretext to banish them my house.

Dow. Mass, perhaps so ; they are like enough to do it.

KIT. Brother, they would, believe it ; so should I, 120

Like one of these penurious quacksalvers,
 But set the bills <sup>19</sup> up to mine own disgrace,
 And try experiments upon myself ;
 Lend scorn and envy opportunity
 To stab my reputation and good name —

SCENE II <sup>20</sup>

[To] KITELY [and] DOWNRIGHT [enter] MAT-THEW [struggling with] BOBADILL.

MAT. I will speak to him —

BOB. Speak to him ! away ! By the foot of Pharaoh, you shall not ! you shall not do him that grace. — The time of day to you, gentleman o' the house. Is Master Wellbred stirring ?

Dow. How then ? What should he do ?

BOB. Gentleman of the house, it is to you.
 Is he within, sir ?

KIT. He came not to his lodging to-night, sir, I assure you. 11

<sup>20</sup> The same.

Dow. Why, do you hear, you?

BOB. The gentleman citizen hath satisfied me; I'll talk to no scavenger.

[Exeunt BOBADILL and MATTHEW.]

Dow. How! scavenger? Stay, sir, stay!

KIT. Nay, Brother Downright.

Dow. 'Heart! stand you away, an you love me.

KIT. You shall not follow him now, I pray you, Brother;

Good faith you shall not; I will overrule you. 20

Dow. Ha! scavenger? Well, go to, I say little; but, by this good day (God forgive me I should swear), if I put it up<sup>21</sup> so, say I am the rankest cow that ever piss'd. 'Sdeins, an I swallow this, I'll ne'er draw my sword in the sight of Fleet Street again while I live; I'll sit in a barn with madgc-howlet, and catch mice first. Scavenger! Heart! and I'll go near to fill that huge tumbrel-slop<sup>22</sup> of yours with somewhat, an I have good luck: your Garagantua breech cannot carry it away so. [31

KIT. Oh, do not fret yourself thus; never think on't.

Dow. These are my brother's consorts, these! These are his cam'rades, his walking mates! He's a gallant, a cavaliero too, right hangman cut!<sup>23</sup> Let me not live, an I could not find in my heart to swinge the whole ging<sup>24</sup> of 'em, one after another, and begin with him first. I am griev'd it should be said he is my brother, and take these courses. Well, as [40 he brews, so he shall drink, 'fore George, again. Yet he shall hear on't, and that tightly too, an I live, i' faith.

KIT. But, Brother, let your reprehension, then,

Run in an easy current, not o'erhigh
Carried with rashness, or devouring choler;
But rather use the soft persuading way,
Whose powers will work more gently, and compose

Th' imperfect thoughts you labor to reclaim;
More winning than enforcing the consent. 50

Dow. Ay, ay, let me alone for that, I warrant you. — Bell rings.

KIT. How now! Oh, the bell rings to breakfast.

Brother, I pray you go in, and bear my wife Company till I come. I'll but give order

For some dispatch of business to my servants. [Exit DOWNRIGHT.]

SCENE III <sup>25</sup>

To KITELY, [enter] COB.

KIT. What, Cob! our maids will have you by the back, i' faith, for coming so late this morning.

COB. Perhaps so, sir; take heed somebody have not them by the belly, for walking so late in the evening. (He passes by with his tankard.)

KIT. Well; yet my troubled spirit's somewhat eas'd,

Though not repos'd in that security
As I could wish. But I must be content,
Howe'er I set a face on't to the world. 10
Would I had lost this finger, at a venture,
So Wellbred had ne'er lodg'd within my house.
Why't cannot be, where there is such resort
Of wanton gallants and young revellers,
That any woman should be honest<sup>26</sup> long.
Is't like that factious beauty will preserve
The public weal of chastity unshaken,
When such strong motives muster and make head<sup>27</sup>

Against her single peace? No, no! Beware
When mutual appetite doth meet to treat, 20
And spirits of one kind and quality
Come once to parley in the pride of blood<sup>28</sup> —
It is no slow conspiracy that follows.
Well, to be plain, if I but thought the time
Had answer'd their affections,<sup>29</sup> all the world
Should not persuade me but I were a cuckold.
Marry, I hope they ha' not got that start;
For opportunity hath balk'd 'em yet,
And shall do still, while I have eyes and ears
To attend the impositions of my heart. 30
My presence shall be as an iron bar
'Twixt the conspiring motions of desire;
Yea, every look or glance mine eye ejects
Shall check occasion, as one doth his slave,
When he forgets the limits of prescription.

[Enter DAME KITELY.]

DAME K. Sister Bridget, pray you fetch down the rose-water,<sup>30</sup> above in the closet. — Sweetheart, will you come in to breakfast?

KIT. [aside] An she have overheard me now!

DAME KIT. I pray thee, good muss,<sup>31</sup> we [40 stay for you.

KIT. [aside] By Heaven, I would not for a thousand angels.<sup>32</sup>

DAME K. What ail you, sweetheart? are you not well? Speak, good muss.

KIT. Troth my head aches extremely on a sudden.<sup>33</sup>

DAME K. Oh, the Lord!

KIT. How now! What?

DAME K. Alas, how it burns! Muss, keep you warm; good truth it is this new disease!<sup>34</sup> There's a number are troubled withal! [50 For love's sake, sweetheart, come in out of the air.]

KIT. How simple, and how subtle, are her answers!

A new disease, and many troubled with it! Why true; she heard me, all the world to nothing.

DAME K. I pray thee, good sweetheart, come in; the air will do you harm, in troth.

KIT. The air! she has me i' the wind!<sup>35</sup> — Sweetheart!

I'll come to you presently; 't will away, I hope. 59

DAME K. Pray Heaven it do. [Exit.]

KIT. A new disease! I know not, new or old,

But it may well be call'd poor mortals' plague; For, like a pestilence, it doth infect The houses<sup>36</sup> of the brain. First it begins Solely to work upon the phantasy, Filling her seat with such pestiferous air As soon corrupts the judgment; and from thence Sends like contagion to the memory, Still each to other giving the infection, Which, as a subtle vapor, spreads itself 70 Confusedly through every sensitive part, Till not a thought or motion in the mind Be free from the black poison of suspect.<sup>37</sup> Ah, but what misery<sup>38</sup> is it to know this! Or, knowing it, to want the mind's erection

<sup>34</sup> This term appears to have been used for various fevers which the medical science of the time was unable to cope with. Prince Henry died of a fever called "the new disease."

<sup>38</sup> F, miserie's, indicating elision or rapid pronunciation. Since in speaking blank verse the latter method of coping with metrical excess is usually preferable, the present edition does not give as elided such expressions as I have, which most modern editors print I've.

In such extremes? Well, I will once more strive, In spite of this black cloud, myself to be, And shake the fever off that thus shakes me. [Exit.]

SCENE IV<sup>39</sup>

[Enter] BRAINWORM [disguised as a soldier].

BRAI. 'Slid, I cannot choose but laugh to see myself translated thus, from a poor creature to a creator; for now must I create an intolerable sort<sup>40</sup> of lies, or my present profession loses the grace. And yet the lie, to a man of my coat, is as ominous a fruit as the fico.<sup>41</sup> O, sir, it holds for good polity ever, to have that outwardly in vilest estimation, that inwardly is most dear to us. So much for my borrowed shape.<sup>42</sup> Well, the troth is, my old master intends to follow my young, dry-foot,<sup>43</sup> over Moorfields to London, this morning. Now, I, knowing of this hunting-match, or rather conspiracy, and to insinuate with my young master (for so must we that are blue waiters,<sup>44</sup> and men of hope and service do, or perhaps we may wear motley at the year's end, and who wears motley,<sup>45</sup> — you know), have got me afore, in this disguise, determining here to lie in ambuscado, and intercept him in the midway. If I can but get [20 his cloak, his purse, his hat, nay, anything to cut him off, that is, to stay his journey, Veni, vidi, vici, I may say with Captain Caesar: I am made for ever, i' faith. Well, now must I practise to get the true garb<sup>46</sup> of one of these lance-knights,<sup>47</sup> my arm here, and my<sup>48</sup> — young Master! and his cousin, Master Stephen, as I am true counterfeit man of war, and no soldier! [He retires.]

[Enter EDWARD KNOWELL and STEPHEN.]

E. KNOW. So, sir! and how then, Coz? [30

STEP. 'Sfoot! I have lost my purse, I think.

E. KNOW. How! lost your purse? Where? When had you it?

STEP. I cannot tell; stay.

BRAI. [aside] 'Slid, I am afeard they will know me; would I could get by them!

E. KNOW. What, ha' you it?

STEP. No; I think I was bewitch'd, I —

<sup>48</sup> Q my: Gods so, young master.

E. KNOW. Nay, do not weep the loss ; hang it, let it go. 41

STEP. Oh, it's here. No, an it had been lost, I had not car'd, but for a jet ring Mistress Mary sent me.

E. KNOW. A jet ring ! Oh, the posy, the posy ?

STEP. Fine, i' faith !

" Though Fancy sleep,
My love is deep."

Meaning that, though I did not fancy her, [50 yet she loved me dearly.

E. KNOW. Most excellent !

STEP. And then I sent her another, and my posy was,

" The deeper the sweeter,
I'll be judg'd by St. Peter."

E. KNOW. How, by St. Peter ? I do not conceive that !

STEP. Marry, St. Peter, to make up the metre. 60

E. KNOW. Well, there the saint was your good patron : he help'd you at your need ; thank him, thank him.

BRAI. [aside] I cannot take leave on 'em so ; I will venture, come what will. — (He is come back.) Gentlemen, please you change a few crowns for a very excellent good blade here ? I am a poor gentleman, a soldier, one that in the better state of my fortunes scorn'd so mean a refuge ; but now it is the humor of neces- [70 sity to have it so. You seem to be gentlemen well affected to martial men, else I should rather die with silence, than live with <sup>49</sup> shame. However, vouchsafe to remember it is my want speaks, not myself. This condition agrees not with my spirit —

E. KNOW. Where hast thou serv'd ?

BRAI. May it please you, sir, in all the late wars of Bohemia, Hungaria, Dalmatia, Poland, <sup>50</sup> — where not, sir ? I have been a [80 poor servitor by sea and land any time this fourteen years, and follow'd the fortunes of the best commanders in Christendom. I was twice shot at the taking of Aleppo, <sup>51</sup> once at the relief of Vienna ; <sup>52</sup> I have been at Marseilles, Naples, and the Adriatic gulf ; <sup>53</sup> a gentleman-slave in the galleys, thrice, where I was most dangerously shot in the head, through both the thighs ; and yet, being thus maim'd, I am void of maintenance, nothing left me but my scars, the noted marks of my resolution. 91

STEP. How will you sell this rapier, friend ?

BRAI. Generous sir, I refer it to your own judgment ; you are a gentleman ; give me what you please.

STEP. True, I am a gentleman, I know that, friend ; but what though ? I pray you say, what would you ask !

BRAI. I assure you, the blade may become the side or thigh of the best prince in Europe.

E. KNOW. Ay, with a velvet scabbard, [101 I think.

STEP. Nay, an't be mine, it shall have a velvet scabbard, Coz, that's flat. I'd not wear it, as 't is, and you would give me an angel.

BRAI. At your Worship's pleasure, sir ; nay, 't is a most pure Toledo.

STEP. I had rather it were a Spaniard ! But tell me, what shall I give you for it ? [110 An it had a silver hilt —

E. KNOW. Come, come, you shall not buy it. Hold, there's a shilling, fellow ; take thy rapier.

STEP. Why, but I will buy it now, because you say so ; and there's another shilling, fellow. I scorn to be outbidden. What, shall I walk with a cudgel, like Higginbottom, <sup>54</sup> and may have a rapier for money ? 119

E. KNOW. You may buy one in the City.

STEP. Tut ! I'll buy this i' the field, so I will ; I have a mind to 't, because 't is a field rapier. — Tell me your lowest price.

E. KNOW. You shall not buy it, I say.

STEP. By this money, but I will, though I give more than 't is worth.

E. KNOW. Come away, you are a fool.

STEP. Friend, I am a fool, that's granted ; but I'll have it, for that word's sake. Follow me for your money. 130

BRAI. At your service, sir. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V <sup>55</sup>

[Enter] KNOWELL.

KNOW. I cannot lose the thought, yet, of this letter
Sent to my son ; nor leave t' admire <sup>56</sup> the change

<sup>54</sup> Evidently a topical allusion, but unidentified as yet.

Of manners, and the breeding of our youth
Within the kingdom, since myself was one.
When I was young, he liv'd not in the stews
Durst have conceiv'd a scorn, and utter'd it,
On a gray head ; age was authority
Against a buffoon, and a man had then
A certain reverence paid unto his years,
That had none due unto his life. So much [10
The sanctity of some prevail'd for others.
But now we all are fall'n ; youth, from their
fear,

And age, from that which bred it, good example.

Nay, would ourselves were not the first, even parents,<sup>57</sup>

That did destroy the hopes in our own children ;

Or they not learn'd our vices in their cradles,
And suck'd in our ill customs with their milk !
Ere all their teeth be born, or they can speak,
We make their palates cunning ! The first
words

We form their tongues with are licentious
jests ! 20

Can it call " whore " ? cry " bastard " ? Oh, then kiss it !

A witty child ! — Can't swear ? The father's darling !

Give it two plums. Nay, rather than't shall learn

No bawdy song, the mother herself will teach
it !

But this is in the infancy, the days
Of the long coat ; when it puts on the breeches,
It will put off all this. Ay, it is like,
When it is gone into the bone already.

No, no ; this dye goes deeper than the coat,
Or shirt, or skin ; it stains unto the liver 30
And heart, in some ; and, rather than it should
not,

Note what we fathers do ! Look how we live !
What mistresses we keep ! at what expense,
In our sons' eyes ! where they may handle our gifts,

Hear our lascivious courtships, see our dallyance,

Taste of the same provoking meats with us,
To ruin of our states ! Nay, when our own Portion is fled, to prey on their remainder
We call them into fellowship of vice !

Bait 'em with the young chambermaid, to seal !<sup>58</sup> 40

<sup>57</sup> This tirade is based on Quintilian's Institutio Oratoria, I, ii, 6-8, combined with Juvenal, xiv, 1-83.

<sup>58</sup> To sign away their rights in property.

And teach 'em all bad ways to buy affliction !
This is one path ! but there are millions more,
In which we spoil our own, with leading them.
Well, I thank Heaven, I never yet was he
That travell'd with my son, before sixteen,
To show him the Venetian courtesans ;
Nor read the grammar of cheating I had made,
To my sharp boy, at twelve, repeating still
The rule, " Get money ; " still, " Get money,
boy ;

No matter by what means ; money will do [50
More, boy, than my Lord's letter." <sup>59</sup> Neither have I

Dress'd snails or mushrooms curiously before
him,

Perfum'd my sauces, and taught him how to make 'em ;

Preceding still, with my gray gluttony,
At all the ordinaries, and only fear'd
His palate should degenerate, not his manners.
These are the trade of fathers, now ! However,
My son, I hope, hath met within my threshold
None of these household precedents, which are strong

And swift to rape youth to their precipice. 60
But let the house at home be ne'er so clean

Swept, or kept sweet from filth, nay dust and cobwebs,

If he will live abroad with his companions,
In dung and leystals,<sup>60</sup> it is worth a fear ;
Nor is the danger of conversing less
Than all that I have mention'd of example.

[Enter BRAINWORM, disguised.]

BRAI. [aside] My master ! nay, faith, have at you ; I am flesh'd <sup>61</sup> now, I have sped <sup>62</sup> so well. — Worshipful sir, I beseech you, respect<sup>63</sup> the estate of a poor soldier ; I am asham'd [70 of this base course of life, — God's my comfort — but extremity provokes me to 't : what remedy ?

KNOW. I have not for you, now.

BRAI. By the faith I bear unto truth, gentleman, it is no ordinary custom in me, but only to preserve manhood. I protest to you, a man I have been ; a man I may be, by your sweet bounty.

KNOW. 'Pray thee, good friend, be satisfied. 80

BRAI. Good sir, by that hand, you may do the part of a kind gentleman, in lending a poor soldier the price of two cans of beer, a matter of small value. The King of Heaven shall pay you, and I shall rest thankful. Sweet Worship —

KNOW. Nay, an you be so importunate —

BRAI. Oh, tender sir, need will have its course ; I was not made to this vile use. Well, the edge of the enemy could not have [90 abated me so much ; it's hard when a man hath serv'd in his prince's cause, and be thus — (He weeps.) Honorable Worship, let me derive a small piece of silver from you ; it shall not be given in the course of time.<sup>64</sup> By this good ground, I was fain to pawn my rapier last night for a poor supper ; I had suck'd the hilts long before, I am a pagan else. Sweet Honor —

KNOW. Believe me, I am taken with some wonder,
To think a fellow of thy outward presence [100
Should, in the frame and fashion of his mind,
Be so degenerate, and sordid-base !
Art thou a man, and sham'st thou not to beg ?
To practise such a servile kind of life ?
Why, were thy education ne'er so mean,
Having thy limbs, a thousand fairer courses
Offer themselves to thy election.
Either the wars might still supply thy wants,
Or service of some virtuous gentleman,
Or honest labor ; nay, what can I name, 110
But would become thee better than to beg ?
But men of thy condition feed on sloth,
As doth the beetle on the dung she breeds in ;
Nor caring how the mettle of your minds
Is eaten with the rust of idleness.
Now, afore me,<sup>65</sup> whate'er he be, that should Relieve a person of thy quality,
While thou insists<sup>66</sup> in this loose desperate
course,

I would esteem the sin not thine, but his.

BRAI. Faith, sir, I would gladly find [120
some other course, if so —

KNOW. Ay, you'd gladly find it, but you will not seek it.

BRAI. Alas, sir, where should a man seek ?
In the wars, there's no ascent by desert in these days ; but — and for service, would it were as soon purchas'd,<sup>67</sup> as wish'd for ! — The air's my comfort. — I know what I would say —

KNOW. What's thy name ?

BRAI. Please you, Fitz-Sword, sir.

<sup>64</sup> I.e., it shall be given with a time-limit, as a loan. (Perhaps with the further implication that it will make the same return as bread cast upon the waters.)

<sup>66</sup> Persistest.

KNOW. Fitz-Sword ? — 130
Say that a man should entertain thee now, Wouldst thou be honest, humble, just, and
true ?

BRAI. Sir, by the place and honor of a soldier —

KNOW. Nay, nay, I like not those affected oaths.

Speak plainly, man, what think'st thou of my words ?

BRAI. Nothing, sir, but wish my fortunes were as happy as my service should be honest.

KNOW. Well, follow me ; I'll prove thee, if thy deeds

Will carry a proportion to thy words. [Exit.]

BRAI. Yes, sir, straight ; I'll but garter [140 my hose. — Oh, that my belly were hoop'd now, for I am ready to burst with laughing !
Never was bottle or bagpipe fuller. 'Slid, was there ever seen a fox in years to betray himself thus ? Now shall I be possess'd of all his counsels ; and, by that conduit, my young master.
Well, he is resolv'd to prove<sup>68</sup> my honesty ;
faith, and I am resolv'd to prove his patience ;
oh, I shall abuse<sup>69</sup> him intolerably. This small piece of service will bring him clean [150 out of love with the soldier for ever. He will never come within the sign of it, the sight of a cassock,<sup>70</sup> or a musket-rest again. He will hate the musters at Mile End<sup>71</sup> for it, to his dying day. It's no matter ; let the world think me a bad counterfeit, if I cannot give him the slip<sup>72</sup> at an instant. Why, this is better than to have stay'd his journey ! Well, I'll follow him. Oh, how I long to be employed !
[Exit.]

ACT III — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] MATTHEW, WELLBRED, [and] BOBADILL.

MAT. Yes, faith, sir, we were at your lodging to seek you too.

WEL. Oh, I came not there to-night.

BOB. Your brother delivered us as much.

WEL. Who, my brother Downright ?

BOB. He. Master Wellbred, I know not in what kind you hold me ; but let me say to you this : as sure as honor, I esteem it so much out

WEL. Sir, I must hear no ill words of my brother.

BOB. I protest to you, as I have a thing to be sav'd about me, I never saw any gentleman-like part ——

WEL. Good Captain, faces about to some other discourse.

BOB. With your leave, sir, an there were no more men living upon the face of the earth, I should not fancy him, by St. George! 20

MAT. Troth, nor I; he is of a rustical cut, I know not how; he doth not carry himself like a gentleman of fashion ——

WEL. Oh, Master Matthew, that's a grace peculiar but to a few, quos æquus amavit Jupiter.<sup>2</sup>

MAT. I understand you, sir.

WEL. No question, you do — [aside] or you do not, sir. ——

YOUNG KNOWELL enters [with STEPHEN].

Ned Knowell! by my soul, welcome. How [30 doest thou, sweet spirit, my genius? 'Slid, I shall love Apollo and the mad Thespian girls<sup>3</sup> the better, while I live, for this, my dear Fury; now I see there's some love in thee! Sirrah, these be the two I writ to thee of: nay, what a drowsy humor is this now? Why doest thou not speak?

E. KNOW. Oh, you are a fine gallant; you sent me a rare letter!

WEL. Why, was't not rare? 40

E. KNOW. Yes, I'll be sworn, I was ne'er guilty of reading the like; match it in all Pliny, or Symmachus' <sup>4</sup> epistles, and I'll have my judgment burn'd in the ear for a rogue: make much of thy vein, for it is inimitable. But I mar'l <sup>5</sup> what camel it was that had the carriage of it; for doubtless he was no ordinary beast that brought it!

WEL. Why?

E. KNOW. "Why?" sayest thou? [50 Why, doest thou think that any reasonable creature, especially in the morning, the sober time of the day, too, could have mista'en my father for me?

WEL. 'Slid, you jest, I hope!

E. KNOW. Indeed, the best use we can turn it to, is to make a jest on't, now; but I'll assure you, my father had the full view o' your flourishing style some hour before I saw it.

WEL. What a dull slave was this! But, [60 sirrah, what said he to it, i' faith?

E. KNOW. Nay, I know not what he said; but I have a shrewd guess what he thought.

WEL. What, what?

E. KNOW. Marry, that thou art some strange, dissolute young fellow, and I a grain or two better, for keeping thee company.

WEL. Tut! that thought is like the moon in her last quarter; 't will change shortly. But, sirrah, I pray thee be acquainted with my [70 two hang-bys here; thou wilt take exceeding pleasure in 'em if thou hear'st 'em once go — my wind instruments. I'll wind 'em up — but what strange piece of silence is this? The sign of the Dumb Man?

E. KNOW. Oh, sir, a kinsman of mine, one that may make your music the fuller, an he please; he has his humor, sir.

WEL. Oh, what is 't, what is 't?

E. KNOW. Nay, I'll neither do your [80 judgment nor his folly that wrong as to prepare your apprehension; I'll leave him to the mercy o' your search; if you can take him, so!

WEL. Well, Captain Bobadill, Master Matthew, pray you know this gentleman here; he is a friend of mine, and one that will deserve your affection. — (to MASTER STEPHEN) I know not your name, sir, but I shall be glad of any occasion to render me more familiar to you.

STEP. My name is Master Stephen, sir; [90 I am this gentleman's own cousin, sir; his father is mine uncle, sir. I am somewhat melancholy; but you shall command me, sir, in whatsoever is incident to a gentleman.

BOB. (to KNOWELL) Sir, I must tell you this, I am no general man; but for Master Wellbred's sake (you may embrace it at what height of favor you please), I do communicate with you, and conceive you to be a gentleman of some parts; I love few words. 100

E. KNOW. And I fewer, sir; I have scarce enough to thank you.

MAT. (to MASTER STEPHEN) But are you, indeed, sir, so given to it?

STEP. Ay, truly, sir, I am mightily given to melancholy.

MAT. Oh, it's your only fine humor, sir: your true melancholy breeds your perfect fine wit, sir. I am melancholy myself, divers times, sir, and then do I no more but take pen [110 and paper presently, and overflow you half a score or a dozen of sonnets at a sitting.

E. KNOW. [aside] <sup>6</sup> Sure he utters them <sup>7</sup> then by the gross.

STEP. Truly, sir, and I love such things out of measure.<sup>8</sup>

E. KNOW. [aside] Ay, faith, better than in measure,<sup>9</sup> I'll undertake.

MAT. Why, I pray you, sir, make use of my study; it's at your service. 120

STEP. I thank you, sir; I shall be bold, I warrant you. Have you a stool there to be melancholy upon?

MAT. That I have, sir, and some papers there of mine own doing, at idle hours, that you'll say there's some sparks of wit in 'em, when you see them.

WEL. [aside] Would the sparks would kindle once, and become a fire amongst 'em! I might see self-love burnt for her heresy. 130

STEP. Cousin, is it well? Am I melancholy enough?

E. KNOW. Oh, ay, excellent.

WEL. Captain Bobadill, why muse you so?

E. KNOW. He is melancholy too.

BOB. Faith, sir, I was thinking of a most honorable piece of service, was perform'd tomorrow, being St. Mark's day, shall be some ten years now!

E. KNOW. In what place, Captain? 140

BOB. Why, at the beleag'ring of Strigonium,<sup>10</sup> where, in less than two hours, seven hundred resolute gentlemen, as any were in Europe, lost their lives upon the breach. I'll tell you, gentlemen, it was the first, but the best leaguer that ever I beheld with these eyes, except the taking in <sup>11</sup> of — what do you call it? <sup>12</sup> last year, by the Genoways; <sup>13</sup> but that, of all other, was the most fatal and dangerous exploit that ever I was rang'd in, [150 since I first bore arms before the face of the enemy, as I am a gentleman and <sup>14</sup> soldier!

STEP. So! I had as lief as an angel I could swear as well as that gentleman!

E. KNOW. Then, you were a servitor at both, it seems; at Strigonium, and what do you call 't?

BOB. O Lord, sir! By St. George, I was the first man that ent'red the breach; and had I not effected it with resolution, I had [160 been slain if I had had a million of lives.

E. KNOW. [aside] 'T was pity you had not ten; a cat's and your own, i' faith. — But, was it possible?

MAT. Pray you mark this discourse, sir.

STEP. So I do.

BOB. I assure you, upon my reputation, 't is true, and yourself shall confess.

E. KNOW. [aside] You must bring me to the rack, first. 170

BOB. Observe me judicially, sweet sir. They had planted me three demi-culverins<sup>15</sup> just in the mouth of the breach; now, sir, as we were to give on,<sup>16</sup> their master-gunner (a man of no mean skill and mark, you must think), confronts me with his linstock,<sup>17</sup> ready to give fire; I, spying his intendment, discharg'd my petriol<sup>18</sup> in his bosom, and with these single arms, my poor rapier, ran violently upon the Moors that guarded the ordnance, and [180 put 'em pellmell to the sword.

WEL. To the sword! To the rapier, Captain!

E. KNOW. Oh, it was a good figure observ'd, sir! — But did you all this, Captain, without hurting your blade?

BOB. Without any impeach o' the earth: you shall perceive, sir. — It is the most fortunate weapon that ever rid on poor gentleman's thigh. Shall I tell you, sir? You talk [190 of Morglay, Excalibur, Durindana,<sup>19</sup> or so? Tut! I lend no credit to that is fabled of 'em. I know the virtue of mine own, and therefore I dare the boldlier maintain it.

STEP. I mar'l whether it be a Toledo or no.

BOB. A most perfect Toledo, I assure you, sir.

STEP. I have a countryman of his here.

MAT. Pray you, let's see, sir; yes, faith, it is. 200

BOB. This a Toledo? Pish!

STEP. Why do you pish, Captain?

BOB. A Fleming, by Heaven! I'll buy them for a guilden apiece, an I would have a thousand of them.

E. KNOW. How say you, Cousin? I told you thus much!

WEL. Where bought you it, Master Stephen?

STEP. Of a scurvy rogue soldier, — a [210 hundred of lice go with him! He swore it was a Toledo.

BOB. A poor provant<sup>20</sup> rapier, no better.

MAT. Mass, I think it be indeed, now I look on 't better!

E. KNOW. Nay, the longer you look on 't, the worse. Put it up, put it up.

STEP. Well, I will put it up; but by — I ha' forgot the Captain's oath; I thought to ha' sworn by it — an e'er I meet him — 220

WEL. O, it is past help now, sir; you must have patience.

STEP. Whoreson, cony-catching<sup>21</sup> rascal! I could eat the very hilts for anger.

E. KNOW. A sign of good digestion! You have an ostrich stomach, Cousin.

STEP. A stomach! Would I had him here, you should see an I had a stomach.<sup>22</sup>

WEL. It's better as 't is. — Come, gentlemen, shall we go? 230

SCENE II<sup>23</sup>

[To them enter] BRAINWORM.

E. KNOW. A miracle, Cousin; look here, look here!

STEP. Oh! God's lid. By your leave, do you know me, sir?

BRAI. Ay, sir, I know you by sight.

STEP. You sold me a rapier, did you not?

BRAI. Yes, marry, did I, sir.

STEP. You said it was a Toledo, ha?

BRAI. True, I did so.

STEP. But it is none? 10

BRAI. No, sir, I confess it; it is none.

STEP. Do you confess it? Gentlemen, bear witness, he has confess'd it. By God's will, an you had not confess'd it —

E. KNOW. Oh, Cousin, forbear, forbear.

STEP. Nay, I have done, Cousin.

WEL. Why, you have done like a gentleman; he has confess'd it: what would you more?

STEP. Yet, by his leave, he is a rascal, [20 under his favor, do you see?

E. KNOW. Ay, by his leave, he is, and under favor — a pretty piece of civility! — [aside to WELLBORN] Sirrah, how doest thou like him?

WEL. [aside] Oh, it's a most precious fool; make much on him. I can compare him to nothing more happily than a drum; for every one may play upon him.

E. KNOW. [aside] No, no, a child's whistle were far the fitter. 30

BRAI. Shall I entreat a word with you?

E. KNOW. With me, sir? You have not another Toledo to sell, ha' you?

BRAI. You are conceited,<sup>24</sup> sir. Your name is Master Knowell, as I take it?

E. KNOW. You are i' the right! You mean not to proceed in the catechism, do you?

BRAI. No, sir; I am none of that coat.<sup>25</sup>

E. KNOW. Of as bare a coat, though! Well, say, sir. 40

BRAI. [taking him aside] Faith, sir, I am but servant to the drum extraordinary;<sup>26</sup> and indeed, this smoky varnish being wash'd off, and three or four patches remov'd, I appear your Worship's in reversion, after the decease of your good father, Brainworm.

E. KNOW. Brainworm! 'Slight, what breath of a conjurer hath blown thee hither in this shape?

BRAI. The breath o' your letter, sir, this [50 morning; the same that blew you to the Windmill, and your father after you.

E. KNOW. My father!

BRAI. Nay, never start; 't is true; he has follow'd you over the fields by the foot, as you would do a hare i' the snow.

E. KNOW. Sirrah Wellbred, what shall we do, sirrah? My father is come over after me.

WEL. [joining them] Thy father! Where is he? 60

BRAI. At Justice Clement's house, here<sup>27</sup> in Coleman Street, where he but stays my return; and then —

WEL. Who's this? Brainworm?

BRAI. The same, sir.

WEL. Why how, i' the name of wit, com'st thou transmuted thus?

BRAI. Faith, a device, a device; nay, for the love of reason, gentlemen, and avoiding the danger, stand not here; withdraw; and [70 I'll tell you all.

WEL. But art thou sure he will stay thy return?

BRAI. Do I live, sir? What a question is that!

WEL. We'll prorogue his expectation, then, a little. Brainworm, thou shalt go with us. —

Come on, gentlemen. — Nay, I pray thee, sweet Ned, droop not. 'Heart, an our wits be so wretchedly dull that one old plodding [so brain can outstrip us all, would we were e'en press'd to make porters of, and serve out the remnant of our days in Thames Street, or at Customhouse Quay, in a civil war against the carmen !

BRAI. Amen, amen, amen, say I. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III <sup>28</sup>

[Enter] KITELY [and] CASH.

KIT. What says he, Thomas? Did you speak with him?

CASH. He will expect you, sir, within this half hour.

KIT. Has he the money ready, can you tell?

CASH. Yes, sir, the money was brought in last night.

KIT. O, that is well; fetch me my cloak, my cloak! — [Exit CASH.]

Stay, let me see; an hour to go and come;
Ay, that will be the least; and then 't will be
An hour before I can dispatch with him,
Or very near; well, I will say two hours.
Two hours! ha! things never dreamt of yet,
May be contriv'd, ay, and effected too, <sup>11</sup>
In two hours' absence — well, I will not go.
Two hours! No, fleeing Opportunity,
I will not give your subtilty that scope.
Who will not judge him worthy to be robb'd,
That sets his doors wide open to a thief,
And shows the felon where his treasure lies?
Again, what earthly spirit but will attempt
To taste the fruit of beauty's golden tree,
When leaden sleep seals up the dragon's eyes?
I will not go. Business, go by, for once. <sup>21</sup>
No, beauty, no; you are of too good caract <sup>29</sup>
To be left so, without a guard, or open!
Your lustre, too, 'll inflame at any distance,
Draw courtship to you, as a jet doth straws;
Put motion in a stone, strike fire from ice,
Nay, make a porter leap you, with his burden.
You must be then kept up, close, and well
watch'd,

For, give you opportunity, no quicksand
Devours or swallows swifter! He that lends
His wife, if she be fair, or time or place <sup>31</sup>
Compels her to be false. I will not go.
The dangers are too many. — And then the dressing

Is a most main attractive! Our great heads

Within the City never were in safety Since our wives wore these little caps. I'll change 'em;

I'll change 'em straight in mine. Mine shall no more

Wear three-pil'd <sup>30</sup> acorns, to make my horns ache.

Nor will I go. I am resolv'd for that.

[Re-enter CASH with a cloak.]

Carry in my cloak again. — Yet stay. — Yet do, too: <sup>40</sup>

I will defer going, on all occasions.

CASH. Sir, Snare, your scrivener, will be there with th' bonds.

KIT. That's true! Fool on me! I had clean forgot it;

I must go. What's a'clock?

CASH. Exchange time, <sup>31</sup> sir.

KIT. 'Heart, then will Wellbred presently be here too,

With one or other of his loose consorts.

I am a knave if I know what to say,
What course to take, or which way to resolve.
My brain, methinks, is like an hourglass,
Wherein my imaginations run like sands, <sup>50</sup> Filling up time; but then are turn'd and turn'd.

So that I know not what to stay upon,
And less, to put in act. — It shall be so.

Nay, I dare build upon his secrecy;
He knows not to deceive me. — Thomas!

CASH. Sir.

KIT. Yet now I have bethought me, too, I will not. —

Thomas, is Cob within?

CASH. I think he be, sir.

KIT. But he'll prate, too; there's no speech of him.

No, there were no man o' the earth to <sup>32</sup>
Thomas,

If I durst trust him; there is all the doubt. <sup>60</sup>
But should he have a chink in him, I were gone.
Lost i' my fame for ever, talk for th' Exchange!

The manner he hath stood with, till this present,

Doth promise no such change! What should
I fear then?

Well, come what will, I'll tempt my fortune
once.

<sup>30</sup> I.e., rich velvet.

<sup>31</sup> Q Past ten. Note that the whole action occupies but a single day.

<sup>29</sup> I.e., carat, value.

Thomas — you may deceive me, but I hope —
Your love to me is more —

CASH. Sir, if a servant's
Duty, with faith, may be call'd love, you are
More than in hope, you are possess'd of it.

KIT. I thank you heartily, Thomas; gi' me your hand; 70
With all my heart, good Thomas. I have,
Thomas,

A secret to impart unto you — but,
When once you have it, I must seal your lips
up —

So far I tell you, Thomas.

CASH. Sir, for that —

KIT. Nay, hear me out. Think I esteem
you, Thomas,
When I will let you in thus to my private.
It is a thing sits nearer to my crest,<sup>33</sup>
Than thou art 'ware of, Thomas; if thou shouldst

Reveal it, but —

CASH. How, I reveal it?

KIT. Nay,
I do not think thou wouldst; but if thou
shouldst, 80

'T were a great weakness.

CASH. A great treachery;
Give it no other name.

KIT. Thou wilt not do 't, then?

CASH. Sir, if I do, mankind disclaim me ever.

KIT. [aside] He will not swear; he has some reservation,
Some conceal'd purpose, and close<sup>34</sup> meaning sure;

Else, being urg'd so much, how should he choose

But lend an oath to all this protestation?
He's no precisian,<sup>35</sup> that I am certain of,
Nor rigid Roman Catholic. He'll play
At fayles, and tick-tack;<sup>36</sup> I have heard him
swear. 90

What should I think of it? Urge him again,
And by some other way? I will do so. —

Well, Thomas, thou hast sworn not to disclose;
Yes, you did swear!

CASH. Not yet, sir; but I will,
Please you —

KIT. No, Thomas, I dare take thy word;
But, if thou wilt swear, do as thou think'st
good;

I am resolv'd<sup>37</sup> without it; at thy pleasure.<sup>38</sup>

CASH. By my soul's safety then, sir, I protest,
My tongue shall ne'er take knowledge of a word

Deliver'd me in nature of your trust. 100

KIT. It is too much; these ceremonies need
not;

I know thy faith to be as firm as rock.

Thomas, come hither, near; we cannot be Too private in this business. So it is. — [aside] Now he has sworn, I dare the safelier venture. —

I have of late, by divers observations —

[aside] But whether his oath can bind him, yea, or no,

Being not taken lawfully!<sup>39</sup> Ha! say you?

I will ask counsel ere I do proceed. —

Thomas, it will be now too long to stay; 110
I'll spy some fitter time soon, or to-morrow.

CASH. Sir, at your pleasure!

KIT. [aside] I will think. — And, Thomas,
I pray you search the books 'gainst my return,
For the receipts 'twixt me and Traps.

CASH. I will, sir.

KIT. And hear you, if your mistress'
brother, Wellbred,
Chance to bring hither any gentlemen
Ere I come back, let one straight bring me
word.

CASH. Very well, sir.

KIT. To the Exchange, do you hear?
Or here in Coleman Street, to Justice Clement's.

Forget it not, nor be not out of the way. 120

CASH. I will not, sir.

KIT. I pray you have a care on 't.
Or, whether he come or no, if any other,
Stranger, or else, fail not to send me word.

CASH. I shall not, sir.

KIT. Be 't your special business
Now to remember it.

CASH. Sir, I warrant you.

KIT. But, Thomas, this is not the secret,
Thomas,
I told you of.

CASH. No, sir; I do suppose it.

KIT. Believe me, it is not.

CASH. Sir, I do believe you.

KIT. By Heaven it is not; that's enough.
But, Thomas,

<sup>33</sup> Head, top (with an allusion to the horns of the cuckold).

<sup>39</sup> Before a magistrate.

I would not you should utter it, do you see,
To any creature living; yet, I care not. 131 Well, I must hence. Thomas, conceive thus
much:

It was a trial:<sup>40</sup> of you, when I meant
So deep a secret to you; I mean not this,
But that I have to tell you; this is nothing,
this.

But, Thomas, keep this from my wife, I charge
you.

Lock'd up in silence, midnight, buried here. —
[aside] No greater hell than to be slave to fear.

[Exit.]

CASH. "Lock'd up in silence, midnight, buried here."

Whence should this flood of passion, trow, take head? ha? 140

Best dream no longer of this running humor,
For fear I sink! The violence of the stream
Already hath transported me so far,
That I can feel no ground at all. But soft — Oh, 't is our water-bearer: somewhat has cross'd him now.

SCENE IV<sup>41</sup>

[To] CASH [enter] COB.

COB. Fasting days! what tell you me of fasting days? 'Slid, would they were all on a lit fire for me! <sup>42</sup> They say the whole world shall be consum'd with fire one day, but would
I had these Ember weeks and villainous Fridays <sup>43</sup> burnt in the mean time, and then —

CASH. Why, how now, Cob, what moves thee to this choler, ha?

COB. Collar, Master Thomas! I scorn your collar, I, sir; I am none o' your cart- [10 horse, though I carry and draw water. An you offer to ride me with your collar or halter either, I may hap show you a jado's trick, sir.

CASH. O, you'll slip your head out of the collar? Why, Goodman Cob, you mistake me.

COB. Nay, I have my rheum, and I can be angry as well as another, sir.

CASH. Thy rheum, Cob? Thy humor, thy humor! Thou mistak'st.<sup>44</sup>

COB. Humor! mack! <sup>45</sup> I think it be [20

<sup>42</sup> On fire for all of me, on fire as far as I'm concerned.

<sup>43</sup> Reflecting the popular grievance against statutes forbidding the eating of meat on these (and other) days. Their object was to foster the fisheries.

<sup>44</sup> Since "humor", not "rheum" was now the fashionable word for whim, mood, disposition.

so indeed. What is that humor? Some rare thing, I warrant.

CASH. Marry, I'll tell thee, Cob: it is a gentlemanlike monster, bred in the special gallantry of our time by affectation, and fed by folly.

COB. How! must it be fed?

CASH. Oh, ay, humor is nothing if it be not fed. Didst thou never hear that? It's a common phrase, "Feed my humor." 30

COB. I'll none on it: humor, avaunt! I know you not; begone! Let who will make hungry meals for your Monstership, it shall not be I. Feed you, quoth he! 'Slid, I ha' much ado to feed myself, especially on these lean rascally days too; an't had been any other day but a fasting day — a plague on them all for me! By this light, one might have done the commonwealth good service, and have drown'd them all i' the flood, two [40 or three hundred thousand years ago. O, I do stomach <sup>46</sup> them hugely! I have a maw <sup>47</sup> now an 't were for Sir Bevis his horse, <sup>48</sup> against
'em.

CASH. I pray thee, good Cob, what makes thee so out of love with fasting days?

COB. Marry, that which will make any man out of love with 'em, I think: their bad conditions, an you will needs know. First, they are of a Flemish breed, I am sure on 't, for [50 they raven up more butter than all the days of the week beside; next, they stink of fish and leek porridge miserably; thirdly, they'll keep a man devoutly hungry all day, and at night send him supperless to bed.

CASH. Indeed, these are faults, Cob.

COB. Nay, an this were all, 't were something; but they are the only known enemies to my generation. A fasting day no sooner comes, but my lineage goes to [w]rack; poor [60 cobs, they smoke for it, they are made martyrs o' the gridiron, they melt in passion; and your maids too know this, and yet would have me turn Hannibal, <sup>49</sup> and eat my own fish <sup>50</sup> and blood. My princely Coz (he pulls out a red herring), fear nothing; I have not the heart to devour you, an I might be made as rich as King Cophetua. Oh, that I had room for my tears. I could weep salt water enough now to preserve the lives of ten thousand of [70

who miss the joke.

my kin! But I may curse none but these filthy almanacs; for an't were not for them, these days of persecution would ne'er be known. I'll be hang'd an some fishmonger's son do not make of 'em, and puts in more fasting days than he should do, because he would utter <sup>51</sup> his father's dried stockfish and stinking conger.

CASH. 'Slight, peace! Thou'lt be beaten like a stockfish <sup>52</sup> else. Here is Master [80 Matthew. Now must I look out for a messenger to my master. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V <sup>53</sup>

[Enter] WELLBRED, EDWARD KNOWELL, BRAINWORM, BOBADILL, MATTHEW, [and] STEPHEN.

WEL. Beshrew me, but it was an absolute good jest, and exceedingly well carried!

E. KNOW. Ay, and our ignorance maintain'd it as well, did it not?

WEL. Yes, faith; but was it possible thou shouldst not know him? — [aside to EDWARD] I forgive Master Stephen, for he is stupidity itself!

E. KNOW. 'Fore God, not I, an I might have been join'd patten <sup>54</sup> with one of the [10 seven wise masters for knowing him. He had so writhen <sup>55</sup> himself into the habit of one of your poor infantry, your decay'd, ruinous, worm-eaten gentlemen of the round; <sup>56</sup> such as have vowed to sit on the skirts of the city, let your provost and his half-dozen of halberdiers do what they can; and have translated begging out of the old hackney pace to a fine easy amble, and made it run as smooth off the tongue as a shove-groat shilling. <sup>57</sup> Into [20 the likeness of one of these reformados <sup>58</sup> had he molded himself so perfectly, observing every trick of their action, as, varying the accent, swearing with an emphasis, indeed, all with so special and exquisite a grace, that, hadst thou seen him, thou wouldst have sworn he might have been sergeant-major, <sup>59</sup> if not lieutenant-colonel to the regiment.

<sup>51</sup> Vend. <sup>52</sup> Dried codfish, beaten before cooking.

WEL. Why, Brainworm, who would have thought thou hadst been such an artificer? [30

E. KNOW. An artificer! an architect! Except a man had studied begging all his lifetime, and been a weaver of language from his infancy for the clothing of it, I never saw his rival!

WEL. Where gott'st thou this coat, I mar'lt?

BRAI. Of a Houndsditch man, sir; one of the Devil's near kinsmen, a broker.

WEL. That cannot be, if the proverb hold; for "A crafty knave needs no broker." 40

BRAI. True, sir; but I did need a broker; ergo —

WEL. Well put off: "no crafty knave," you'll say.

E. KNOW. Tut, he has more of these shifts.

BRAI. And yet, where I have one the broker has ten, <sup>60</sup> sir.

[Re-enter CASH.]

CASH. Francis! Martin! Ne'er a one to be found now? What a spite's this!

WEL. How now, Thomas? Is my [50 brother Kitley within?

CASH. No, sir, my master went forth e'en now; but Master Downright is within. — Cob! what, Cob! Is he gone too?

WEL. Whither went your master, Thomas, canst thou tell?

CASH. I know not; to Justice Clement's, I think, sir. — Cob!

E. KNOW. Justice Clement! what's he?

WEL. Why, doest thou not know him? [60 He is a city magistrate, a justice here, an excellent good lawyer, and a great scholar; but the only mad, merry old fellow in Europe! I show'd him you the other day.

E. KNOW. Oh, is that he? I remember him now. Good faith, and he has a very strange presence methinks; it shows as if he stood out of the rank from other men. I have heard many of his jests i' [the] <sup>61</sup> University. They say he will commit a man for taking the [70 wall of his horse.

WEL. Ay, or wearing his cloak of one shoulder, or serving of God — anything indeed, if it come in the way of his humor.

CASH goes in and out calling.

CASH. Gasper! Martin! Cob! 'Heart, where should they be, trow?

BOB. Master Kitley's man, pray thee vouchsafe us the lighting of this match.

<sup>60</sup> Punning on "shifts" = tricks, and = changes of clothing.

CASH. Fire on your match! No time but now to "vouchsafe"? — Francis! Cob! [80] [Exit.]

BOB. Body o' me! Here's the remainder of seven pound since yesterday was seven-night. 'Tis your right Trinidad! Did you never take any, Master Stephen?

STEP. No, truly, sir! but I'll learn to take it now, since you commend it so.

BOB. Sir, believe me, upon my relation; for what I tell you, the world shall not reprove.<sup>62</sup> I have been in the Indies, where this herb grows; where neither myself, nor [90] a dozen gentlemen more, of my knowledge, have received the taste of any other nutriment in the world for the space of one-and-twenty weeks but the fume of this simple<sup>63</sup> only. Therefore it cannot be but 'tis most divine! Further, take it in the nature, in the true kind; so, it makes an antidote, that, had you taken the most deadly poisonous plant in all Italy, it should expel it and clarify you, with as much ease as I speak. And, for your [100] green wound, your balsamum and your St. John's wort are all mere gulleries and trash to it — especially your Trinidad; your Nicotian<sup>64</sup> is good too. I could say what I know of the virtue of it, for the expulsion of rheums, raw humors, crudities, obstructions, with a thousand of this kind; but I profess myself no quacksalver. Only thus much: by Hercules, I do hold it, and will affirm it before any prince in Europe, to be the most sovereign and [110] precious weed that ever the earth tend'ered to the use of man.

E. KNOW. This speech would ha' done decently in a tobacco trader's mouth.

[Re-enter CASH with COB.]

CASH. At Justice Clement's he is, in the middle of Coleman Street.

COB. Oh, oh!

BOB. Where's the match I gave thee, Master Kitley's man?

CASH. Would his match and he, and [120] pipe and all, were at Sancto Domingo! I had forgot it. [Exit.]

COB. By God's me, I mar'l what pleasure or felicity they have in taking this roguish tobacco! It's good for nothing<sup>65</sup> but to choke a man, and fill him full of smoke and embers. There were four died out of one house last week with taking of it, and two more the bell went for yesternight; one of them, they say, will ne'er scape it; he voided a bushel of [130] soot yesterday, upward and downward. By the stocks, an there were no wiser men than I, I'd have it present whipping, man or woman, that should but deal with a tobacco pipe. Why, it will stifle them all in the end, as many as use it; it's little better than ratsbane or rosaker.<sup>66</sup>

BOBADILL beats him with a cudgel.

ALL. Oh, good Captain, hold, hold!

BOB. You base cullion,<sup>67</sup> you!

Re-enter CASH.

CASH. Sir, here's your match. — Come, [140] thou must needs be talking too; th'art well enough serv'd.

COB. Nay, he will not meddle with his match, I warrant you. Well, it shall be a dear beating, an I live.

BOB. Do you prate? Do you murmur?

E. KNOW. Nay, good Captain, will you regard the humor of a fool? — Away, knave.

WEL. Thomas, get him away.

[Exeunt CASH and COB.]

BOB. A whoreson filthy slave, a dung- [150] worm, an excrement! Body o' Caesar, but that I scorn to let forth so mean a spirit, I'd ha' stabb'd him to the earth.

WEL. Marry, the law forbid, sir!

BOB. By Pharaoh's foot, I would have done it.

STEP. [aside] Oh, he swears admirably! "By Pharaoh's foot!" "Body of Caesar!" I shall never do it, sure. — Upon mine honor, and by St. George! — No, I ha' not the [160] right grace.

MAT. Master Stephen, will you any? By this air, the most divine tobacco that ever I drunk!<sup>68</sup>

STEP. None, I thank you, sir. — [aside] Oh, this gentleman does it rarely too! but nothing like the other. By this air! As I am a gentleman! By —

[Exeunt BOBADILL and MATTHEW.]

<sup>64</sup> Tobacco was so called from Nicot, who introduced it into France. Bobadill may be blundering, or he may be gulling Stephen, or Jonson may be confused, or there may have been a special variety so named.

<sup>65</sup> Similar accusations were made by writers against the weed.

BRAI. Master, glance, glance! Master Wellbred! 170

MASTER STEPHEN is practising, to the post.

STEP. [aside] As I have somewhat to be saved, I protest —

WEL. [aside] You are a fool; it needs no affidavit.

E. KNOW. Cousin, will you any tobacco?

STEP. Ay, sir! Upon my reputation —

E. KNOW. How now, Cousin!

STEP. I protest, as I am a gentleman, but no soldier, indeed —

WEL. No, Master Stephen? As I re- [180 member, your name is ent'red in the Artillery Garden! <sup>69</sup>

STEP. Ay, sir, that's true. Cousin, may I swear as I am a soldier, by that?

E. KNOW. O yes, that you may. It is all you have for your money.

STEP. Then, as I am a gentleman and a soldier, it is divine tobacco!

WEL. But soft, where's Master Matthew? gone? 190

BRAI. No, sir; they went in here.

WEL. Oh, let's follow them. Master Matthew is gone to salute his mistress in verse. We shall ha' the happiness to hear some of his poetry now; he never comes unfurnish'd. — Brainworm!

STEP. Brainworm! Where? Is this Brainworm?

E. KNOW. Ay, Cousin; no words of it, upon your gentility. 200

STEP. Not I, body o' me! By this air! St. George! and the foot of Pharaoh!

WEL. Rare! Your cousin's discourse is simply drawn out with oaths.

E. KNOW. 'T is larded with 'em; a kind of French dressing,<sup>70</sup> if you love it. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI <sup>71</sup>

[Enter] KITELY [and] COB.

KIT. Ha! how many are there, sayest thou?

COB. Marry, sir, your brother, Master Wellbred —

KIT. Tut, beside him: what strangers are there, man?

COB. Strangers? let me see, one, two; mass, I know not well, there are so many.

KIT. How! so many?

COB. Ay, there's some five or six of them at the most.

KIT. [aside] A swarm, a swarm! 10
Spite of the devil! how they sting my head
With forked stings, thus wide and large! <sup>72</sup>

But, Cob,

How long hast thou been coming hither, Cob?

COB. A little while, sir.

KIT. Didst thou come running?

COB. No, sir.

KIT. Nay, then I am familiar with thy haste! —

[aside] Bane to my fortunes! what meant I to marry?

I, that before was rank'd in such content,
My mind at rest too, in so soft a peace,
Being free master of mine own free thoughts,
And now become a slave? What! never a sigh; 20

Be of good cheer, man; for thou art a cuckold:
'T is done, 't is done! Nay, when such flowing store,

Plenty itself, falls in my wife's lap,
The cornucopiae will be mine, I know. — But,
Cob,

What entertainment had they? I am sure
My sister and my wife would bid them welcome, ha?

COB. Like enough, sir; yet I heard not a word of it.

KIT. No, — [aside] their lips were seal'd with kisses, and the voice,
Drown'd in a flood of joy at their arrival, 30
Had lost her motion, state, and faculty. — Cob, which of them was't that first kiss'd my wife?

My sister, I should say. My wife, alas,
I fear not her. Ha! who was it, say'st
thou?

COB. By my troth, sir, will you have the truth of it?

KIT. Oh, ay, good Cob, I pray thee heartily.

COB. Then I am a vagabond, and fitter for Bridewell <sup>73</sup> than your Worship's company, if I saw anybody to be kiss'd, unless they [40 would have kiss'd the post in the middle of the warehouse; for there I left them all at their tobacco, with a pox! <sup>74</sup>

<sup>72</sup> With a gesture representing the horns of the cuckold, also alluded to in l. 24.

KIT. How! were they not gone in then ere thou cam'st!

COB. Oh, no, sir.

KIT. Spite of the devil! What <sup>75</sup> do I stay here then? Cob, follow me. [Exit.]

COB. Nay, soft and fair; I have eggs on the spit; <sup>76</sup> I cannot go yet, sir. Now am I, for some five-and-fifty reasons, hammering, hammering revenge. Oh, for three or four [50 gallons of vinegar, to sharpen my wits. Revenge, vinegar, revenge; vinegar and mustard, revenge! Nay, an he had not lien in my house, 't would never have griev'd me; but being my guest, one that, I'll be sworn, my wife has lent him her smock off her back, while his one <sup>77</sup> shirt has been at washing; pawn'd her neckerchers for clean bands <sup>78</sup> for him; sold almost all my platters, to buy him tobacco; and he to turn mon- [60 ster of ingratitude, and strike his lawful host! Well, I hope to raise up an host of fury for 't: here comes Justice Clement.

SCENE VII <sup>79</sup>

[To] COB, [enter JUSTICE] CLEMENT, KNOWELL, [and] FORMAL.

CLEM. What, 's Master Kitley gone, Roger?
FORM. Ay, sir.

CLEM. 'Heart o' me! what made him leave us so abruptly? — How now, sirrah! what make you here? What would you have, ha?

COB. An't please your Worship, I am a poor neighbor of your Worship's —

CLEM. A poor neighbor of mine! Why, speak, poor neighbor.

COB. I dwell, sir, at the sign of the [10 Water-tankard, hard by the Green Lattice; <sup>80</sup> I have paid scot and lot <sup>81</sup> there any time this eighteen years.

CLEM. To the Green Lattice?

COB. No, sir, to the parish. Marry, I have seldom scap'd scot-free at the Lattice.

CLEM. Oh, well! What business has my poor neighbor with me?

COB. An't like your Worship, I am come to crave the peace <sup>82</sup> of your Worship. 20

CLEM. Of me, knave? Peace of me,

<sup>78</sup> Neckbands, collars.

knave? Did I e'er hurt thee, or threaten thee, or wrong thee, ha?

COB. No, sir; but your Worship's warrant for one that has wrong'd me, sir. His arms are at too much liberty; I would fain have them bound to a treaty of peace, an my credit could compass it with your Worship.

CLEM. Thou goest far enough about for 't, I am sure. 30

KNOW. Why, doest thou go in danger of thy life for him, friend?

COB. No, sir; but I go in danger of my death every hour, by his means; an I die within a twelvemonth and a day, <sup>83</sup> I may swear by the law of the land that he kill'd me.

CLEM. How, how, knave, swear he kill'd thee, and by the law? What pretence, what color, hast thou for that?

COB. Marry, an't please your Worship, [40 both black and blue; color enough, I warrant you. I have it here to show your Worship.

CLEM. What is he that gave you this, sirrah?

COB. A gentleman and a soldier, he says he is, of the city here.

CLEM. A soldier o' the city! What call you him?

COB. Captain Bobadill.

CLEM. Bobadill! and why did he bob <sup>84</sup> [50 and beat you, sirrah? How began the quarrel betwixt you? Ha! Speak truly, knave, I advise you.

COB. Marry, indeed, an[t] please your Worship, only because I spake against their vagrant tobacco, as I came by 'em when they were taking on 't; for nothing else.

CLEM. Ha? you speak against tobacco? Formal, his name.

FORM. What's your name, sirrah? 60

COB. Oliver, sir, Oliver Cob, sir.

CLEM. Tell Oliver Cob he shall go to the jail, Formal.

FORM. Oliver Cob, my master, Justice Clement, says you shall go to the jail.

COB. O, I beseech your Worship, for God's sake, dear Master Justice!

CLEM. Nay, God's precious! an such drunkards and tankards as you are, come to dispute of tobacco once, I have done! [70 Away with him!

COB. O, good Master Justice! — [to KNO-
WELL] Sweet old gentleman!

KNOW. Sweet Oliver, would I could do thee any good! — Justice Clement, let me entreat you, sir.

CLEM. What! a threadbare rascal, a beggar, a slave that never drunk out of better than pisspot metal<sup>85</sup> in his life! and he to deprave and abuse the virtue of an herb [80 so generally receiv'd in the courts of princes, the chambers of nobles, the bowers of sweet ladies, the cabins of soldiers! — Roger, away with him, by God's precious! I say, go to.

COB. Dear Master Justice, let me be beaten again — I have deserv'd it; but not the prison, I beseech you.

KNOW. Alas, poor Oliver!

CLEM. Roger, make him a warrant. — He shall not go; I but fear<sup>86</sup> the knave. 90

FORM. Do not stink, sweet Oliver:<sup>87</sup> you shall not go; my master will give you a warrant.

COB. O, the Lord maintain his Worship, his worthy Worship!

CLEM. Away, dispatch him.

[Exeunt FORMAL and COB.]

— How now, Master Knowell! in dumps, in dumps? Come, this becomes not.

KNOW. Sir, would I could not feel my cares.

CLEM. Your cares are nothing! They [100 are like my cap, soon put on, and as soon put off. What! your son is old enough to govern himself. Let him run his course; it's the only way to make him a staid man. If he were an unthrift, a ruffian, a drunkard, or a licentious liver, then you had reason; you had reason to take care. But, being none of these, mirth's my witness, an I had twice so many cares as you have, I'd drown them all in a cup of sack.<sup>88</sup> Come, come, let's try [110 it; I muse<sup>89</sup> your parcel<sup>90</sup> of a soldier returns not all this while. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] DOWNRIGHT [and] DAME KITELY.

DOW. Well, Sister, I tell you true; and you'll find it so in the end.

DAME K. Alas, Brother, what would you have me to do? I cannot help it; you see my brother brings 'em in here; they are his friends.

DOW. His friends? his fiends! 'Slud!<sup>1</sup> they do nothing but haunt him up and down like a sort of unlucky sprites, and tempt him to all manner of villainy that can be thought of. Well, by this light, a little thing would [10 make me play the devil with some of 'em; an't were not more for your husband's sake than anything else, I'd make the house too hot for the best on 'em; they should say, and swear, hell were broken loose, ere they went hence. But, by God's will, 't is nobody's fault but yours; for an you had done as you might have done, they should have been parboil'd,<sup>2</sup> and bak'd too, every mother's son, ere they should ha' come in, e'er a one of 'em. 20

DAME K. God's my life! did you ever hear the like? What a strange man is this! Could I keep out all them, think you? I should put myself against half a dozen men, should I? Good faith, you'd mad the patient'st body in the world, to hear you talk so, without any sense or reason!

SCENE II<sup>4</sup>

[To them enter] MISTRESS BRIDGET, MASTER MATTHEW, and BOBADILL; [followed at a distance by] WELLBRED, EDWARD KNOWELL, STEPHEN, and BRAINWORM.

BRID. Servant,<sup>5</sup> in troth you are too prodigal

Of your wit's treasure, thus to pour it forth
Upon so mean a subject as my worth!

MAT. You say well, mistress, and I mean as well.

DOW. [aside] Hoy-day, here is stuff!

WEL. [aside] Oh, now stand close; pray Heaven, she can get him to read. He should do it of his own natural impudency.

[They listen, unobserved.]

BRID. Servant, what is this same, I pray you? 10

MAT. Marry, an elegy, an elegy, an odd toy —

DOW. [aside] To mock an ape withal!<sup>6</sup> Oh, I could sew up his mouth, now.

DAME K. Sister, I pray you let's hear it.

DOW. [aside] Are you rhyme-given too?

<sup>6</sup> To dupe a fool with.

MAT. Mistress, I'll read it, if you please.

BRID. Pray you do, servant.

DOW. [aside] Oh, here's no foppery! Death! I can endure the stocks better. 20
[Exit.]

E. KNOW. What ails thy brother? Can he not hold his water at reading of a ballad?

WEL. Oh, no; a rhyme to him is worse than cheese, or a bagpipe. But, mark, you lose the protestation.

MAT. Faith, I did it in a humor; I know not how it is; but please you come near, sir. This gentleman has judgment, he knows how to censure of a — ' pray you, sir, you can judge? 30

STEP. Not I, sir; upon my reputation, and by the foot of Pharaoh!

WEL. O, chide your cousin for swearing.

E. KNOW. Not I, so long as he does not forswear himself.

BOB. Master Matthew, you abuse the expectation of your dear mistress, and her fair sister. Fie! while you live, avoid this proximity.

MAT. I shall, sir; well, incipere dulce.<sup>8</sup> 40

E. KNOW. [aside] How! insipere dulce? "A sweet thing to be a fool," indeed.

WEL. [aside] What, do you take in[c]ipere in that sense?

E. KNOW. [aside] You do not, you? This was your villainy, to gull him with a mot.

WEL. [aside] O, the benchers'<sup>9</sup> phrase: pauca verba, pauca verba.

MAT. [reading] "Rare creature, let me speak without offence; 49
Would God my rude words had the influence
To rule thy thoughts, as thy fair looks do mine,
Then shouldst thou be his prisoner, who is thine."

E. KNOW. [aside] This is in "Hero and Leander!"

WEL. [aside] Oh, ay! peace, we shall have more of this.

MAT. "Be not unkind and fair: misshapen stuff
Is of behavior boisterous and rough."

WEL. How like you that, sir? 59

MASTER STEPHEN answers with shaking his head.

E. KNOW. [aside] 'Slight, he shakes his head like a bottle, to feel an there be any brain in it!

<sup>9</sup> Benchers were tavern loafers.

MAT. But observe the catastrophe, now: "And I in duty will exceed all other,
As you in beauty do excel Love's mother."

E. KNOW. [aside] Well, I'll have him free of the wit-brokers<sup>10</sup> for he utters nothing but stol'n remnants.

WEL. [aside] Oh, forgive it him.

E. KNOW. [aside] A filching rogue! hang him! — and from the dead! It's worse [70 than sacrilege.

[WELLBRED, EDWARD KNOWELL, and STEPHEN come forward.]

WEL. Sister, what ha' you here? verses? Pray you, let's see. Who made these verses? They are excellent good.

MAT. O, Master Wellbred, 't is your disposition to say so, sir. They were good i' the morning; I made 'em extempore this morning.

WEL. How! extempore?

MAT. Ay, would I might be hang'd else; ask Captain Bobadill; he saw me write them, [80 at the — pox on it! — the Star, yonder.

BRAI. Can he find in his heart to curse the stars so?

E. KNOW. Faith, his are even with him; they ha' curs'd him enough already.

STEP. [aside to EDWARD KNOWELL] Cousin, how do you like this gentleman's verses?

E. KNOW. [aside] Oh, admirable! the best that ever I heard, Coz! 89

STEP. Body o' Caesar! they are admirable! the best that I ever heard, as I am a soldier.

[Re-enter DOWNRIGHT.]

DOW. I am vext; I can hold ne'er a bone of me still! Heart, I think they mean to build and breed here!

WEL. Sister, you have a simple servant here, that crowns your beauty with such encomiums and devices; you may see what it is to be the mistress of a wit that can make your perfections so transparent that every blear eye may look through them, and see him [100 drown'd over head and ears in the deep well of desire. — Sister Kately, I marvel you get you not a servant that can rhyme, and do tricks too.

DOW. O monster! impudence itself! tricks? 11

DAME K. Tricks, Brother? what tricks?

BRID. Nay, speak, I pray you, what tricks?

<sup>10</sup> As one was said to be free of, say, the Fishmongers; i.e., a member of that City Company.

<sup>11</sup> From punning on "merry tricks" and Lat. meretrix, "the word acquired an equivocal meaning." (Simpson.)

DAME K. Ay, never spare anybody here ; but say what tricks? 110

BRID. Passion of my heart ! do tricks?

WEL. 'Slight, here's a trick vied and revied !<sup>12</sup> Why, you monkeys, you, what a caterwauling do you keep ! Has he not given you rhymes and verses and tricks?

Dow. O, the fiend !

WEL. Nay, you — lamp of virginity, that take it in snuff<sup>13</sup> so ! come, and cherish this tame poetical fury in your servant ; you 'll [119 be begg'd else shortly for a concealment :<sup>14</sup> go to, reward his muse. You cannot give him less than a shilling in conscience, for the book he had it out of cost him a teston<sup>15</sup> at least. — How now, gallants ! Master Matthew ! Captain ! what, all sons of silence ? No spirit ?

Dow. Come, you might practise your ruffian tricks somewhere else, and not here, I wuss ;<sup>16</sup> this is no tavern nor drinking-school, to vent your exploits in. 129

WEL. How now ! whose cow has calv'd ?

Dow. Marry, that has mine, sir. Nay, boy, never look askance at me for the matter ; I 'll tell you of it, ay, sir, you and your companions ; mend yourselves when I ha' done !

WEL. My companions !

Dow. Yes, sir, you<sup>17</sup> companions, so I say ; I am not afraid of you, nor them neither ; your hang-bys here. You must have your poets and your potlings,<sup>18</sup> your soldados and foolados to follow you up and down the city ; [140 and here they must come to domineer and swagger. — Sirrah, you ballad singer, and Slops<sup>19</sup> your fellow there, get you out, get you home ; or by this steel, I 'll cut off your ears, and that presently.

WEL. 'Slight, stay ; let's see what he dare do ; cut off his ears ! cut a whetstone. You are an ass, do you see ? Touch any man here, and by this hand I 'll run my rapier to the hilts in you. 150

Dow. Yea, that would I fain see, boy.

They all draw, and [CASH and others] of the house make out to part them.

DAME K. O Jesu ! murder ! Thomas ! Gasper !

BRID. Help, help ! Thomas !

E. KNOW. Gentlemen, forbear, I pray you.

BOB. Well, sirrah, you Holofernes ; by my hand, I will pink your flesh full of holes with my rapier for this ; I will, by this good Heaven ! Nay, let him come, let him come, gentlemen ; by the body of St. George, I 'll not kill him. 161

They offer to fight again, and are parted.

CASH. Hold, hold, good gentlemen.

Dow. You whoreson, bragging coystril !<sup>20</sup>

SCENE III<sup>21</sup>

To them [enter] KITELY.

KIT. Why, how now ! what's the matter, what's the stir here ?

Whence springs the quarrel ? Thomas ! where is he ?

Put up your weapons, and put off this rage. — [aside] My wife and sister, they are cause of this. —

What, Thomas ! where is this knave ?

CASH. Here, sir.

WEL. Come, let's go ; this is one of my brother's ancient humors, this.

STEP. I am glad nobody was hurt by his ancient humor. 10

[Exeunt WELLBRED, STEPHEN, MATTHEW, EDWARD KNOWELL, BOBADILL, and BRAINWORM.]

KIT. Why, how now, Brother, who enforc'd this brawl ?

Dow. A sort of lewd rakehells, that care neither for God nor the Devil ! And they must come here to read ballads, and roguery, and trash ! I 'll mar the knot of 'em ere I sleep, perhaps ; especially Bob there, he that's all manner of shapes ; and Songs and Sonnets, his fellow !

BRID. Brother, indeed you are too violent, Too sudden in your humor ; and you know [20 My brother Wellbred's temper will not bear Any reproof, chiefly in such a presence, Where every slight disgrace he should receive Might wound him in opinion and respect.

Dow. Respect ! what talk you of respect 'mong such as ha' nor spark of manhood nor

good manners? 'Sdeins, I am asham'd to hear you! respect! [Exit.]

BRID. Yes, there was one, a civil gentleman, And very worthily demean'd himself! 30

KIT. O, that was some love of yours, Sister.

BRID. A love of mine! I would it were no worse, Brother!

You'd pay my portion sooner than you think for.

DAME K. Indeed he seem'd to be a gentleman of an exceeding fair disposition, and of very excellent good parts!

[Exeunt DAME KITELY and BRIDGET.]

KIT. Her love, by Heaven! my wife's minion!

"Fair disposition! excellent good parts!"

Death! these phrases are intolerable!

Good parts! how should she know his parts? 40

His parts! Well, well, well, well, well, well!

It is too plain, too clear. — Thomas, come hither.

What, are they gone?

CASH. Ay, sir, they went in.

My mistress and your sister —

KIT. Are any of the gallants within?

CASH. No, sir; they are all gone.

KIT. Art thou sure of it?

CASH. I can assure you, sir.

KIT. What gentleman was that they prais'd so, Thomas?

CASH. One, they call him Master Knowell, a handsome young gentleman, sir. 51

KIT. Ay, I thought so; my mind gave me as much.

I'll die, but they have hid him i' the house

Somewhere; I'll go and search; go with me, Thomas.

Be true to me, and thou shalt find me a master.<sup>22</sup> [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV<sup>23</sup>

[Enter] COB.

COB. What, Tib! Tib, I say.

TIB. [within] How now, what cuckold is that knocks so hard?

[Enter TIB.]

O, husband, is 't you? What's the news?

COB. Nay, you have stunn'd me, i' faith; you ha' giv'n me a knock o' the forehead will stick by me! Cuckold! 'Slid, cuckold!

TIB. Away, you fool! did I know it was

<sup>22</sup> Q finde me bountiful.

you that knock'd? Come, come, you may call me as bad when you list. 10

COB. May I? Tib, you are a whore.

TIB. You lie in your throat, husband.

COB. How, the lie? and in my throat too? Do you long to be stabb'd, ha?

TIB. Why, you are no soldier,<sup>24</sup> I hope.

COB. O, must you be stabb'd by a soldier? Mass, that's true! When was Bobadill here, your captain? that rogue, that foist,<sup>25</sup> that fencing Burgullian? <sup>26</sup> I'll tickle him, i' faith.

TIB. Why, what's the matter, trow? 20

COB. O, he has basted me rarely, sumptuously! but I have it here in black and white [showing the warrant], for his black and blue shall pay him. O, the Justice, the honestest old brave Trojan in London! I do honor the very flea of his dog. A plague on him, though; he put me once in a villainous filthy fear; marry, it vanish'd away like the smoke of tobacco; but I was smok'd <sup>27</sup> soundly first. I thank the Devil, and his good angel, my [30] guest. Well, wife, or Tib, which you will, get you in, and lock the door; I charge you let nobody in to you, wife; nobody in to you; those are my words: not Captain Bob himself, nor the fiend in his likeness. You are a woman; you have flesh and blood enough in you to be tempted; therefore keep the door shut upon all comers.

TIB. I warrant you, there shall nobody enter here without my consent. 40

COB. Nor with your consent, sweet Tib; and so I leave you.

TIB. It's more than you know, whether you leave me so.

COB. How?

TIB. Why, "sweet."

COB. Tut, sweet or sour, thou art a flower. Keep close thy door; I ask no more. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V<sup>28</sup>

[Enter] EDWARD KNOWELL, WELLBRED, STEPHEN, [and] BRAINWORM.

E. KNOW. Well, Brainworm, perform this business happily, and thou makest a purchase of my love for ever.

WEL. I' faith, now let thy spirits use their best faculties; but, at any hand, remember

the message to my brother ; for there's no other means to start him.

BRAI. I warrant you, sir ; fear nothing ; I have a nimble soul has wak'd all forces of my phant'sie by this time, and put 'em in true [10 motion. What you have possess'd<sup>29</sup> me withal, I'll discharge it amply, sir ; make it no question. [Exit.]

WEL. Forth, and prosper, Brainworm. — Faith, Ned, how dost thou approve of my abilities in this device ?

E. KNOW. Troth, well, howsoever ; but it will come excellent if it take.

WEL. Take, man ! why it cannot choose but take, if the circumstances miscarry not. [20 But, tell me ingenuously, dost thou affect my sister Bridget as thou pretend'st ?

E. KNOW. Friend, am I worth belief ?

WEL. Come, do not protest. In faith, she is a maid of good ornament, and much modesty ; and, except I conceiv'd very worthily of her, thou shouldst not have her.

E. KNOW. Nay, that, I am afraid, will be a question yet, whether I shall have her, or no.

WEL. 'Slid, thou shalt have her ; by [30 this light thou shalt.

E. KNOW. Nay, do not swear.

WEL. By this hand thou shalt have her ; I'll go fetch her, presently. 'Point but where to meet, and as I am an honest man I'll bring her.

E. KNOW. Hold, hold ; be temperate.

WEL. Why, by — what shall I swear by ? Thou shalt have her, as I am —

E. KNOW. 'Pray thee, be at peace ; I [40 am satisfied, and do believe thou wilt omit no offered occasion to make my desires complete.

WEL. Thou shalt see, and know, I will not.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI<sup>30</sup>

[Enter] FORMAL [and] KNOWELL.

FORM. Was your man a soldier, sir ?

KNOW. Ay, a knave ; I took him begging o' the way, this morning, As I came over Moorfields !

[Enter BRAINWORM.]

O, here he is ! — y'have made fair speed, believe me !

Where, i' the name of sloth, could you be thus —

BRAI. Marry, peace be my comfort, where I thought I should have had little comfort of your Worship's service.

KNOW. How so ?

BRAI. O, sir, your coming to the city, [10 your entertainment of me, and your sending me to watch — indeed all the circumstances either of your charge, or my employment, are as open to your son as to yourself !

KNOW. How should that be ? unless that villain, Brainworm,

Have told him of the letter, and discover'd

All that I strictly charg'd him to conceal ?

'T is so.

BRAI. I am partly o' the faith, 't is so, indeed.

KNOW. But, how should he know thee to be my man ? 20

BRAI. Nay, sir, I cannot tell ; unless it be by the black art ! Is not your son a scholar, sir ?

KNOW. Yes, but I hope his soul is not allied Unto such hellish practice ; if it were, I had just cause to weep my part in him, And curse the time of his creation.

But, where didst thou find them, Fitz-Sword ?

BRAI. You should rather ask where they found me, sir ; for I'll be sworn, I was going along in the street, thinking nothing, when, [31 of a sudden, a voice calls, " Master Knowell's man ! " another cries, " Soldier ! " and thus half a dozen of 'em, till they had call'd me within a house, where I no sooner came, but th[e]y seem'd men,<sup>31</sup> and out flew all their rapiers at my bosom, with some three or four score oaths to accompany 'em, and all to tell me I was but a dead man, if I did not confess where you were, and how I was employed, [40 and about what ; which when they could not get out of me (as, I protest, they must ha' dissected, and made an anatomy<sup>32</sup> o' me first, and so I told 'em), they lock'd me up into a room i' the top of a high house, whence by great miracle, having a light heart, I slid down by a bottom<sup>33</sup> of packthread into the street, and so scap'd. But, sir, thus much I can assure you, for I heard it while I was lock'd up, there were a great many rich merchants [50 and brave citizens' wives with 'em at a feast ; and your son, Master Edward, withdrew with one of 'em, and has 'pointed to meet her anon at one Cob's house, a water-bearer that dwells by the Wall. Now, there your Worship shall be sure to take him, for there he preys, and fail he will not.

KNOW. Nor will I fail to break his match, I doubt not.

Go thou along with Justice Clement's man, And stay there for me. At one Cob's house, say'st thou? 60

BRAI. Ay, sir, there you shall have him. — [Exit KNOWELL.] Yes! invisible! Much wench, or much son! 'Slight, when he has stay'd there three or four hours, travailing with the expectation of wonders, and at length be deliver'd of air! Oh, the sport that I should then take to look on him, if I durst! But now, I mean to appear no more afore him in this shape. I have another trick to act yet. O that I were so happy as to light on a [70 nupson<sup>34</sup> now of this justice's novice! — Sir, I make you stay somewhat long.

FORM. Not a whit, sir. Pray you what do you mean, sir?

BRAI. I was putting up some papers.

FORM. You ha' been lately in the wars, sir, it seems.

BRAI. Marry have I, sir, to my loss, and expense of all, almost.

FORM. Troth, sir, I would be glad to [80 bestow a bottle of wine o' you, if it please you to accept it —

BRAI. Oh, sir —

FORM. But to hear the manner of your services, and your devices in the wars; they say they be very strange, and not like those a man reads in the Roman histories, or sees at Mile End.<sup>35</sup>

BRAI. No, I assure you, sir; why at any time when it please you, I shall be ready [90 to discourse to you all I know — [aside] and more, too, somewhat.

FORM. No better time than now, sir; we'll go to the Windmill; there we shall have a cup of neat grist,<sup>36</sup> we call it. I pray you, sir, let me request you to the Windmill.

BRAI. I'll follow you, sir; — [aside] and make grist o' you, if I have good luck.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII <sup>37</sup>

[Enter] MATTHEW, EDWARD KNOWELL, BOBADILL, [and] STEPHEN.

MAT. Sir, did your eyes ever taste the like clown of him where we were to-day, Master Wellbred's half-brother? I think the whole earth cannot show his parallel, by this daylight.

E. KNOW. We were now speaking of him; Captain Bobadill tells me he is fall'n foul o' you, too.

MAT. O, ay, sir, he threat'ned me with the bastinado.

BOB. Ay, but I think I taught you prevention this morning, for that. You shall kill him beyond question, if you be so generously minded.

MAT. Indeed, it is a most excellent trick.

He practices at a post.

BOB. O, you do not give spirit enough to your motion; you are too tardy, too heavy! O, it must be done like lightning — hay! <sup>38</sup>

MAT. Rare, Captain!

BOB. Tut! 't is nothing, an't be not done in a — punto! <sup>39</sup> 20

E. KNOW. Captain, did you ever prove yourself upon any of our masters of defence here?

MAT. O good sir! yes, I hope he has.

BOB. I will tell you, sir. Upon my first coming to the city, after my long travel <sup>40</sup> for knowledge in that mystery only, there came three or four of 'em to me, at a gentleman's house where it was my chance to be resident at that time, to entreat my presence at [30 their schools, and withal so much importun'd me that, I protest to you as I am a gentleman, I was asham'd of their rude demeanor, out of all measure. Well, I told 'em that to come to a public school, they should pardon me; it was opposite, in diameter, to my humor; but if so <sup>41</sup> they would give their attendance at my lodging, I protested to do them what right or favor I could, as I was a gentleman, and so forth. 40

E. KNOW. So, sir, then you tried their skill?

BOB. Alas, soon tried! You shall hear, sir. Within two or three days after, they came; and, by honesty, fair sir, believe me, I grac'd them exceedingly, show'd them some two or three tricks of prevention have purchas'd 'em, since, a credit to admiration! They cannot deny this; and yet now they hate me; and why? because I am excellent, and for no other vile reason on the earth. 50

E. KNOW. This is strange and barbarous, as ever I heard!

BOB. Nay, for a more instance of their preposterous natures, but note, sir. They have assaulted me some three, four, five, six of them together, as I have walk'd alone in divers skirts i' the town, as Turnbull, Whitechapel, Shore-ditch,<sup>42</sup> which were then my quarters; and since, upon the Exchange, at my lodging, and at my ordinary:<sup>43</sup> where I have driven [60] them afore me the whole length of a street, in the open view of all our gallants, pitying to hurt them, believe me. Yet all this lenity will not o'ercome their spleen; they will be doing with the pismire,<sup>44</sup> raising a hill a man may spurn abroad with his foot at pleasure. By myself, I could have slain them all, but I delight not in murder. I am loth to bear any other than this bastinado for 'em; yet I hold it good polity not to go disarm'd; for, [70] though I be skilful, I may be oppress'd with multitudes.

E. KNOW. Ay, believe me, may you, sir; and in my conceit, our whole nation should sustain the loss by it, if it were so.

BOB. Alas, no. What's a peculiar<sup>45</sup> man to a nation? Not seen.

E. KNOW. O, but your skill, sir!

BOB. Indeed, that might be some loss; but who respects it? I will tell you, sir, by the [80] way of private, and under seal; I am a gentleman, and live here obscure, and to myself; but were I known to her Majesty and the Lords—observe me—I would undertake, upon this poor head and life, for the public benefit of the state, not only to spare the entire lives of her subjects in general; but to save the one-half, nay, three parts of her yearly charge in holding war, and against what enemy soever. And how would I do it, think you? 90

E. KNOW. Nay, I know not, nor can I conceive.

BOB. Why thus, sir. I would select nineteen more, to myself, throughout the land; gentlemen they should be of good spirit, strong, and able constitution; I would choose them by an instinct, a character that I have. And I would teach these nineteen the special rules, as your punto, your reverso, your stoccata, your imbrocata, your passada, your [100] montanto;<sup>46</sup> till they could all play very near, or altogether, as well as myself. This done, say the enemy were forty thousand strong, we twenty would come into the field the tenth of March, or thereabouts; and we would challenge twenty of the enemy; they could not in their honor refuse us. Well, we would kill them; challenge twenty more, kill them; twenty more, kill them; twenty more, kill them too; and thus would we kill [110] every man his twenty a day, that's twenty score; twenty score, that's two hundred;<sup>47</sup> two hundred a day, five days a thousand: forty thousand; forty times five, five times forty, two hundred days kills them all up by computation. And this will I venture my poor gentlemanlike carcass to perform, provided there be no treason practis'd upon us, by fair and discreet manhood; that is, civilly by the sword. 120

E. KNOW. Why, are you so sure of your hand, Captain, at all times?

BOB. Tut! never miss thrust, upon my reputation with you.

E. KNOW. I would not stand in Down-right's state then, an you meet him, for the wealth of any one street in London.

BOB. Why, sir, you mistake me! If he were here now, by this welkin, I would not draw my weapon on him! Let this [130] gentleman do his mind; but I will bastinado him, by the bright sun, wherever I meet him.

MAT. Faith, and I'll have a fling at him, at my distance.

E. KNOW. God's so, look where he is, yonder he goes.

DOWNRIGHT walks over the stage.<sup>48</sup>

DOW. What peevish luck have I, I cannot meet with these bragging rascals!

BOB. It is not he, is it?

E. KNOW. Yes, faith, it is he! 140

MAT. I'll be hang'd, then, if that were he.

E. KNOW. Sir, keep your hanging good for some greater matter, for I assure you that was he.

STEP. Upon my reputation, it was he.

BOB. Had I thought it had been he, he must not have gone so; but I can hardly be induc'd to believe it was he yet.

E. KNOW. That I think, sir.

[Re-enter DOWNRIGHT.]

But see, he is come again.

Dow. Oh, Pharaoh's foot, have I found you? Come, draw, to your tools; draw, gipsy,<sup>49</sup> or I'll thresh you.

BOB. Gentleman of valor, I do believe in thee; hear me —

Dow. Draw your weapon then.

BOB. Tall<sup>50</sup> man, I never thought on it till now, body of me: I had a warrant of the peace served on me, even now as I came along, by a water-bearer; this gentleman saw it, [160 Master Matthew.

Dow. 'S death! you will not draw then?

He beats him and disarms him. MATTHEW runs away.

BOB. Hold, hold! under thy favor, forbear!

Dow. Prate again, as you like this, you whoreson foist you! You'll "control the point," you! Your consort is gone? Had he stay'd he had shar'd with you, sir. [Exit.]

BOB. Well, gentlemen, bear witness, I was bound to the peace, by this good day.

E. KNOW. No, faith, it's an ill day, [170 Captain; never reckon it other. But, say you were bound to the peace, the law allows you to defend yourself; that'll prove but a poor excuse.

BOB. I cannot tell, sir. I desire good construction in fair sort. I never sustain'd the like disgrace, by Heaven! Sure I was struck with<sup>51</sup> a planet thence, for I had no power to touch my weapon.

E. KNOW. Ay, like enough; I have [180 heard of many that have been beaten under a planet. Go, get you to a surgeon. 'Slid! an these be your tricks, your passadas, and your mountantos, I'll none of them. [Exit BOBADILL.] Oh, manners! that this age should bring forth such creatures! that nature should be at leisure to make them! Come, Coz.

STEP. Mass, I'll ha' this cloak.

E. KNOW. God's will, 't is Downright's. [190

STEP. Nay, it's mine now; another might have ta'en [t]<sup>52</sup> up as well as I. I'll wear it, so I will.

E. KNOW. How an he see it? He'll challenge it, assure yourself.

STEP. Ay, but he shall not ha' it; I'll say I bought it.

E. KNOW. Take heed you buy it not too dear, Coz.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII<sup>53</sup>

[Enter] KITELY, WELLBRED, DAME KITELY, [and] BRIDGET.

KIT. Now, trust me, Brother, you were much to blame

T' incense his anger and disturb the peace
Of my poor house, where there are sentinels
That every minute watch to give alarms
Of civil war, without adjection<sup>54</sup>
Of your assistance or occasion.

WEL. No harm done, Brother, I warrant you: since there is no harm done. Anger costs a man nothing; and a tall man is never his own man till he be angry. To keep his [10 valor in obscurity, is to keep himself as it were in a cloakbag. What's a musician, unless he play? What's a tall man unless he fight? For, indeed, all this my wise brother stands upon absolutely; and that made me fall in with him so resolutely.

DAME K. Ay, but what harm might have come of it, Brother!

WEL. Might, Sister? So might the good warm clothes your husband wears be [20 poison'd, for anything he knows, or the wholesome wine he drunk even now at the table.

KIT. [aside] Now, God forbid! O me! now I remember

My wife drunk to me last, and chang'd the cup,

And bade me wear this cursed suit to-day.
See, if Heaven suffer murder undiscover'd! —
I feel me ill; give me some mithridate,<sup>55</sup>
Some mithridate and oil, good Sister, fetch me;
O, I am sick at heart! I burn, I burn.

If you will save my life, go fetch it me. 30

WEL. O strange humor! my very breath has poison'd him.

BRID. Good Brother, be content; what do you mean?

The strength of these extreme conceits<sup>56</sup> will kill you.

DAME K. Beshrew your heart-blood,
Brother Wellbred, now,
For putting such a toy into his head!

WEL. Is a fit simile a toy? Will he be poison'd with a simile? Brother Kately, what a strange and idle imagination is this! For shame, be wiser. O' my soul, there's no such matter. 40

KIT. Am I not sick? How am I, then, not poison'd?

Am I not poison'd? How am I, then, so sick?

DAME K. If you be sick, your own thoughts make you sick.

WEL. His jealousy is the poison he has taken.

[BRAINWORM] comes, disguis'd like Justice Clement's man.

BRAI. Master Kitely, my master, Justice Clement, salutes you, and desires to speak with you with all possible speed.

KIT. No time but now, when I think I am sick? very sick! Well, I will wait upon his Worship. — Thomas! Cob! I must seek [50 them out, and set 'em sentinels till I return. — Thomas! Cob! Thomas! [Exit.]

WEL. [aside] This is perfectly rare, Brainworm! But how gott'st thou this apparel of the Justice's man?

BRAI. [aside] Marry, sir, my proper fine penman would needs bestow the grist o' me, at the Windmill, to hear some martial discourse; where I so marshall'd him that I made him drunk with admiration! and, [60 because too much heat was the cause of his distemper, I stripp'd him stark naked as he lay along asleep, and borrowed his suit to deliver this counterfeit message in, leaving a rusty armor, and an old brown bill to watch him till my return; which shall be when I ha' pawn'd his apparel and spent the better part o' the money, perhaps.

WEL. [aside] Well, thou art a successful merry knave Brainworm; his absence will [70 be a good subject for more mirth. I pray thee return to thy young master, and will him to meet me and my sister Bridget at the Tower<sup>57</sup> instantly; for here, tell him, the house is so stor'd with jealousy there is no room for love to stand upright in. We must get our fortunes committed to some larger prison, say; and than the Tower I know no better air, nor where the liberty of the house may do us more present service. Away! 80

[Exit BRAINWORM.]

[Re-enter KITELY, talking aside to CASH.]

KIT. Come hither, Thomas. Now my secret's ripe,
And thou shalt have it: lay to both thine ears.
Hark what I say to thee. I must go forth,
Thomas;

Be careful of thy promise, keep good watch,
Note every gallant, and observe him well,
That enters in my absence to thy mistress.
If she would show him rooms, the jest is stale;
Follow 'em, Thomas, or else hang on him,
And let him not go after; mark their looks;
Note if she offer but to see his band, 90
Or any other amorous toy about him —
But praise his leg, or foot; or if she say
The day is hot, and bid him feel her hand,
How hot it is; oh, that's a monstrous thing!
Note me all this, good Thomas; mark their sighs,

And if they do but whisper, break 'em off.

I'll bear thee out in it. Wilt thou do this?

Wilt thou be true, my Thomas?

CASH. As truth's self, sir.

KIT. Why, I believe thee. — Where is Cob, now? Cob! [Exit.]

DAME K. He's ever calling for Cob! [100 I wonder how he employs Cob so!

WEL. Indeed, Sister, to ask how he employs Cob, is a necessary question for you that are his wife, and a thing not very easy for you to be satisfied in; but this I'll assure you, Cob's wife is an excellent bawd, Sister, and oftentimes your husband haunts her house; marry, to what end I cannot altogether accuse him; imagine you what you think convenient. But I have known fair hides have [110 foul hearts ere now, Sister.

DAME K. Never said you truer than that, Brother; so much I can tell you for your learning. Thomas, fetch your cloak and go [Exit CASH.]

with me. I'll after him presently. I would to fortune I could take him there, i'faith. I'd return him his own, I warrant him. [Exit.]

WEL. So, let 'em go; this may make sport anon. Now, my fair sister-in-law, that you knew but how happy a thing it were to be [120 fair and beautiful!

BRID. That touches not me, Brother.

WEI. That's true; that's even the fault of it; for indeed, beauty stands a woman in no stead, unless it procure her touching. But, Sister, whether it touch you or no, it touches your beauties; and I am sure they will abide the touch; an they do not, a plague of all ceruse<sup>58</sup> say I! And it touches me, too, in part, though not in the — <sup>59</sup> Well, there's [130 a dear and respected friend of mine, Sister, stands very strongly and worthily affected toward you, and hath vow'd to inflame whole bonfires of zeal at his heart, in honor of your perfections. I have already engag'd my promise to bring you where you shall hear him confirm much more. Ned Knowell is the man, Sister. There's no exception against the party. You are ripe for a husband; and a minute's loss to such an occasion is a [140 great trespass in a wise beauty. What say you, Sister? On my soul he loves you. Will you give him the meeting?

BRID. Faith, I had very little confidence in mine own constancy, Brother, if I durst not meet a man; but this motion of yours savors of an old knight adventurer's servant a little too much, methinks.

WEL. What's that, Sister?

BRID. Marry, of the squire.<sup>60</sup> 150

WEL. No matter if it did; I would be such an one for my friend. But see, who is return'd to hinder us?

[Re-enter KITELY.]

KIT. What villainy is this? Call'd out on a false message!

This was some plot! I was not sent for. — Bridget,

Where is your sister?

BRID. I think she be gone forth, sir.

KIT. How! is my wife gone forth? Whither, for God's sake?

BRID. She's gone abroad with Thomas.

KIT. Abroad with Thomas! oh, that villain dors<sup>61</sup> me.

He hath discover'd all unto my wife! 160
Beast that I was, to trust him. Whither, I pray you Went she?

BRID. I know not, sir.

WEL. I'll tell you, Brother, Whither I suspect she's gone.

KIT. Whither, good Brother?

WEL. To Cob's house, I believe; but keep my counsel.

KIT. I will, I will. To Cob's house! Doth she haunt Cob's?

She's gone a' purpose now to cuckold me
With that lewd rascal, who, to win her favor,

Hath told her all. [Exit.]

WEL. Come, he's once more gone; Sister, let's lose no time; th' affair is worth it. [Exeunt.]

<sup>60</sup> Pander.

SCENE IX <sup>62</sup>

[Enter] MATTHEW [and] BOBADILL.

MAT. I wonder, Captain, what they will say of my going away, ha?

BOB. Why, what should they say, but as of a discreet gentleman, quick, wary, respectful of nature's fair lineaments? and that's all.

MAT. Why so! but what can they say of your beating?

BOB. A rude part, a touch with soft wood, a kind of gross battery us'd, laid on strongly, borne most patiently; and that's all. 10

MAT. Ay, but would any man have offered it in Venice, as you say?

BOB. Tut, I assure you, no. You shall have there your nobilis, your gentilezza, come in bravely upon your reverse, stand you close, stand you firm, stand you fair, save your retricato<sup>63</sup> with his left leg, come to the assalto with the right, thrust with brave steel, defy your base wood! But wherefore do I awake this remembrance? I was fascinated, by [20 Jupiter, fascinated; but I will be unwitch'd and reveng'd by law.

MAT. Do you hear? Is't not best to get a warrant, and have him arrested and brought before Justice Clement?

BOB. It were not amiss. Would we had it.

[Enter BRAINWORM, disguised as FORMAL.]

MAT. Why, here comes his man; let's speak to him.

BOB. Agreed; do you speak.

MAT. Save you, sir. 30

BRAI. With all my heart, sir!

MAT. Sir, there is one Downright hath abus'd this gentleman and myself, and we determine to make our amends by law. Now, if you would do us the favor to procure a warrant to bring him afore your master, you shall be well considered, I assure you, sir.

BRAI. Sir, you know my service is my living; such favors as these gotten of my master is his only preferment,<sup>64</sup> and therefore you [40 must consider me as I may make benefit of my place.

MAT. How is that, sir?

BRAI. Faith, sir, the thing is extraordinary, and the gentleman may be of great account; yet, be he what he will, if you will lay me down a brace of angels in my hand you shall have it; otherwise not.

MAT. How shall we do, Captain? He asks a brace of angels. You have no [50 money?

BOB. Not a cross,<sup>66</sup> by fortune.

MAT. Nor I, as I am a gentleman; but two-pence left of my two shillings in the morning for wine and radish; let's find him some pawn.

BOB. Pawn! we have none to the value of his demand.

MAT. O, yes. I'll pawn this jewel in my ear, and you may pawn your silk stockings, [60 and pull up your boots; they will ne'er be miss'd. It must be done now.

BOB. Well, an there be no remedy, I'll step aside and pull 'em off.

MAT. Do you hear, sir? We have no store of money at this time, but you shall have good pawns; look you, sir, this jewel, and that gentleman's silk stockings; because we would have it dispatch'd ere we went to our chambers. 70

BRAI. I am content, sir; I will get you the warrant presently. What's his name, say you? Downright?

MAT. Ay, ay, George Downright.

BRAI. What manner of man is he?

MAT. A tall, big man, sir; he goes in a cloak most commonly of silk russet, laid about with russet lace.

BRAI. 'T is very good, sir.

MAT. Here, sir, here's my jewel! 80

BOB. And here are stockings!

BRAI. Well, gentlemen, I'll procure you this warrant presently; but who will you have to serve it?

MAT. That's true, Captain; that must be consider'd.

BOB. Body o' me, I know not; 't is service of danger!

BRAI. Why, you were best get one o' the varlets o' the city, a serjeant. I'll ap- [90 point you one, if you please.

MAT. Will you, sir? Why, we can wish no better.

BOB. We'll leave it to you, sir.

[Exeunt BOBADILL and MATTHEW.]

BRAI. This is rare! Now will I go and pawn this cloak of the justice's man's at the broker's for a varlet's suit, and be the varlet myself; and get either more pawns, or more money of Downright, for the arrest. [Exit.]

<sup>66</sup> Certain small coins bore it.

SCENE X <sup>66</sup>

[Enter] KNOWELL.

KNOW. Oh, here it is; I am glad I have found it now.

Ho! who is within here?

TIB. [within] I am within, sir. What's your pleasure?

KNOW. To know who is within besides yourself.

TIB. Why, sir, you are no constable, I hope?

KNOW. O, fear you the constable? Then I doubt not

You have some guests within deserve that fear.

I'll fetch him straight.

[Enter TIB.]

TIB. O' God's name, sir!

KNOW. Go to. Come tell me, is not young Knowell here?

TIB. Young Knowell! I know none such, sir, o' mine honesty! 10

KNOW. Your honesty! Dame, it flies too lightly from you.

There is no way but fetch the constable.

TIB. The constable! The man is mad, I think. [Exit.]

[Enter DAME KITELY and CASH.]

CASH. Ho, who keeps house here?

KNOW. [aside] O, this is the female copes-mate <sup>67</sup> of my son!

Now shall I meet him straight.

DAME K. Knock, Thomas, hard.

CASH. Ho, goodwife!

[Re-enter TIB.]

TIB. Why, what's the matter with you?

DAME K. Why, woman, grieves it you to ope your door?

Belike you get something to keep it shut.

TIB. What mean these questions, pray ye?

DAME K. So strange you make it! Is not my husband here? 21

KNOW. [aside] Her husband!

DAME K. My tried husband, Master Kately.

TIB. I hope he needs not to be tried here.

DAME K. No, dame, he does it not for need, but pleasure.

<sup>67</sup> Companion; i.e., paramour.

TIB. Neither for need nor pleasure is he here.

KNOW. [aside] This is but a device to balk me withal.

[Enter KITELY, muffled in his cloak.]

Soft, who is this? 'Tis not my son, disguis'd?

DAME K. (spies her husband come, and runs to him.) O, sir, have I forestall'd your honest market?

Found your close<sup>68</sup> walks? You stand amaz'd now, do you?

I' faith, I am glad I have smok'd<sup>69</sup> you yet at last. 30

What is your jewel, trow? In, come, let's see her;

Fetch forth your huswife,<sup>70</sup> dame; if she be fairer,

In any honest judgment, than myself, I'll be content with it; but she is change, She feeds you fat, she soothes your appetite, And you are well! Your wife, an honest woman,

Is meat twice sod<sup>71</sup> to you, sir! O, you treachour! 72

KNOW. [aside] She cannot counterfeit thus palpably.

KIT. Out on thy more than strumpet's impudence!

Steal'st thou thus to thy haunts? and have I taken 40

Thy bawd and thee, and thy companion, (pointing to old KNOWELL)

This hoary-headed lecher, this old goat, Close at your villainy, and wouldst thou 'scuse it

With this stale harlot's jest, accusing me? O, old incontinent (to him), dost thou not shame,

When all thy powers in chastity is spent, To have a mind so hot, and to entice, And feed th' enticements of a lustful woman?

DAME K. Out, I defy thee, I, dissembling wretch!

KIT. Defy me, strumpet! Ask thy pander<sup>73</sup> here, 50

Can he deny it, or that wicked elder?

KNOW. Why, hear you, sir.

KIT. Tut, tut, tut; never speak.

Thy guilty conscience will discover thee.

KNOW. What lunacy is this, that haunts this man?

KIT. Well, goodwife B-A-'D,<sup>74</sup> Cob's wife, and you,

That make your husband such a hoddody-doddy; 75

And you, young apple-squire,<sup>76</sup> and old cuckold-maker;

I'll ha' you every one before a justice:

Nay, you shall answer it; I charge you go.

KNOW. Marry, with all my heart, sir; I go willingly; 60

Though I do taste this as a trick put on me, To punish my impertinent search, and justly; And half forgive my son for the device.

KIT. Come, will you go?

DAME K. Go! to thy shame, believe it.

[Enter COB.]

COB. Why, what's the matter here? What's here to do?

KIT. O, Cob, art thou come? I have been abus'd,

And i' thy house. Never was man so wrong'd!

COB. 'Slid, in my house? my master Kitely? Who wrongs you in my house?

KIT. Marry, young lust in old, and old in young here; 70

Thy wife's their bawd; here have I taken 'em.

COB. How! bawd! is my house come to that? Am I preferr'd thither? Did I not charge you to keep your doors shut, Is'bel? and do you let 'em lie open for all comers?

He falls upon his wife and beats her.

KNOW. Friend, know some cause, before thou beat'st thy wife.

This's madness in thee.

COB. Why, is there no cause?

KIT. Yes, I'll show cause before the Justice, Cob;

Come, let her go with me.

COB. Nay, she shall go.

TIB. Nay, I will go. I'll see an you [80 may be allow'd to make a bundle o' hemp<sup>77</sup> o' your right and lawful wife thus, at every cuckoldy knave's pleasure. Why do you not go?

KIT. A bitter quean.<sup>78</sup> Come, we will ha' you tam'd. [Exeunt.]

<sup>78</sup> Hussy.

SCENE XI <sup>79</sup>

[Enter] BRAINWORM, [disguised as a City serjeant.]

BRAI. Well, of all my disguises yet, now am I most like myself, being in this serjeant's gown. A man of my present profession never counterfeits, till he lays hold upon a debtor and says he 'rests him; for then he brings him to all manner of unrest. A kind of little kings we are, bearing the diminutive of a mace, made like a young artichoke, that always carries pepper and salt in itself.<sup>80</sup> Well, I know not what danger I undergo by this exploit; [10 pray Heaven I come well off!

[Enter MATTHEW and BOBADILL.]

MAT. See, I think, yonder is the varlet, by his gown.

BOB. Let's go in quest of him.

MAT. 'Save you, friend! Are not you here by appointment of Justice Clement's man?

BRAI. Yes, an't please you, sir; he told me two gentlemen had will'd him to procure a warrant from his master, which I have about me, to be serv'd on one Downright.

MAT. It is honestly done of you both; [20 and see where the party comes you must arrest; serve it upon him quickly, afore he be aware —

BOB. Bear back, Master Matthew.

[Enter STEPHEN in Downright's cloak.]

BRAI. Master Downright, I arrest you i' the Queen's name, and must carry you afore a justice by virtue of this warrant.

STEP. Me, friend! I am no Downright, I; I am Master Stephen. You do not well to arrest me, I tell you, truly; I am in nobody's bonds nor books, I would you should [31 know it. A plague on you heartily, for making me thus afraid afore my time.

BRAI. Why, now are you deceived, gentlemen?

BOB. He wears such a cloak, and that deceived us. But see, here 'a comes indeed! This is he, officer.

[Enter DOWNRIGHT.]

Dow. Why how now, Signior Gull! Are you turn'd filcher of late? Come, deliver [40 my cloak.

STEP. Your cloak, sir! I bought it even now, in open market.

BRAI. Master Downright, I have a warrant I must serve upon you, procur'd by these two gentlemen.

Dow. These gentlemen? These rascals!

BRAI. Keep the peace, I charge you in her Majesty's name.

Dow. I obey thee. What must I do, [50 officer?

BRAI. Go before Master Justice Clement, to answer what they can object against you, sir. I will use you kindly, sir.

MAT. Come, let's before, and make <sup>81</sup> the justice, Captain —

BOB. The varlet's a tall man, afore Heaven!

[Exeunt BOBADILL and MATTHEW.]

Dow. Gull, you'll gi' me my cloak?

STEP. Sir, I bought it, and I'll keep it. 60

Dow. You will?

STEP. Ay, that I will.

Dow. Officer, there's thy fee, arrest him.

BRAI. Master Stephen, I must arrest you.

STEP. Arrest me! I scorn it. There, take your cloak, I'll none on 't.

Dow. Nay, that shall not serve your turn now, sir. Officer, I'll go with thee to the justice's; bring him along.

STEP. Why, is not here your cloak? What would you have? 71

Dow. I'll ha' you answer it, sir.

BRAI. Sir, I'll take your word, and this gentleman's too, for his appearance.

Dow. I'll ha' no words taken. Bring him along.

BRAI. Sir, I may choose to do that; I may take bail.

Dow. 'Tis true, you may take bail, and choose, at another time; but you shall not [80 now, varlet. Bring him along, or I'll swinge <sup>82</sup> you.

BRAI. Sir, I pity the gentleman's case. Here's your money again.

Dow. 'Sdeins, tell not me of my money; bring him away, I say.

BRAI. I warrant you he will go with you of himself, sir.

Dow. Yet more ado?

BRAI. [aside] I have made a fair mash on 't.

STEP. Must I go? 91

BRAI. I know no remedy, Master Stephen.

Dow. Come along afore me here; I do not love your hanging look behind.

STEP. Why, sir, I hope you cannot hang me for it. Can he, fellow?

BRAI. I think not, sir; it is but a whipping matter, sure!

STEP. Why, then, let him do his worst; 99 I am resolute. [Exeunt.]

ACT V—SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] CLEMENT, KNOWELL, KITELY, DAME KITELY, TIB, CASH, COB, [and] Servants.

CLEM. Nay, but stay, stay; give me leave. — My chair, sirrah. — You, Master Knowell, say you went thither to meet your son.

KNOW. Ay, sir.

CLEM. But who directed you thither?

KNOW. That did mine own man, sir.

CLEM. Where is he?

KNOW. Nay, I know not now; I left him with your clerk, and appointed him to stay here for me. 10

CLEM. My clerk! About what time was this?

KNOW. Marry, between one and two, as I take it.

CLEM. And what time came my man with the false message to you, Master Kately?

KIT. After two, sir.

CLEM. Very good; but, Mistress Kately, how [chance]<sup>2</sup> that you were at Cob's, ha?

DAME K. An[t] please you, sir, I'll tell [20 you. My brother Wellbred told me that Cob's house was a suspected place —

CLEM. So it appears, methinks; but on.

DAME K. And that my husband us'd thither daily.

CLEM. No matter, so he us'd himself well, mistress.

DAME K. True, sir; but you know what grows by such haunts oftentimes.

CLEM. I see rank fruits of a jealous [30 brain, Mistress Kately. But did you find your husband there, in that case, as you suspected?

KIT. I found her there, sir.

CLEM. Did you so? That alters the case. Who gave you knowledge of your wife's being there?

KIT. Marry, that did my brother Wellbred.

CLEM. How? Wellbred first tell her; then tell you after? Where is Wellbred?

KIT. Gone with my sister, sir, I know [40 not whither.

CLEM. Why this is a mere trick, a device; you are gull'd in this most grossly all! Alas, poor wench, wert thou beaten for this?

TIB. Yes, most pitifully, an't please you.

COB. And worthily, I hope, if it shall prove so.

CLEM. Ay, that's like, and a piece of a sentence. —

[Enter a Servant.]

How now, sir! what's the matter? 50

SERV. Sir, there's a gentleman i' the court without, desires to speak with your Worship.

CLEM. A gentleman? what's he?

SERV. A soldier, sir, he says.

CLEM. A soldier! Take down my armor; my sword, quickly. A soldier speak with me! Why, when, knaves! Come on, come on: (He arms himself.) hold my cap there, so; give me my gorget,<sup>3</sup> my sword. — Stand by, I will end your matters anon. — Let [60 the soldier enter. [Exit Servant.]

SCENE II<sup>4</sup>

[To them enter] BOBADILL [and] MATTHEW.

Now, sir, what ha' you to say to me?

[MAT.] By your Worship's favor —

CLEM. Nay, keep out, sir; I know not your pretence. — You send me word, sir, you are a soldier; why, sir, you shall be answer'd here; here be them have been amongst soldiers. Sir, your pleasure.

BOB. Faith, sir, so it is, this gentleman and myself have been most uncivilly wrong'd and beaten by one Downright, a coarse fellow [10 about the town here; and for mine own part, I protest, being a man in no sort given to this filthy humor of quarrelling, he hath assaulted me in the way of my peace, despoil'd me of mine honor, disarm'd me of my weapons, and rudely laid me along,<sup>5</sup> in the open streets, when I not so much as once offer'd to resist him.

CLEM. O, God's precious! is this the soldier? Here, take my armor off quickly; [20 't will make him swoon, I fear; he is not fit to look on't, that will put up a blow.

MAT. An't please your Worship, he was bound to the peace.

<sup>1</sup> Armor for the throat.

CLEM. Why, an he were, sir, his hands were not bound, were they?

[Re-enter Servant.]

SERV. There's one of the varlets of the City, sir, has brought two gentlemen here; one, upon your Worship's warrant.

CLEM. My warrant! 30

SERV. Yes, sir. The officer says, procur'd by these two.

CLEM. Bid him come in. [Exit Servant.]
Set by this picture.<sup>6</sup>

SCENE III<sup>7</sup>

[To them enter] DOWNRIGHT, STEPHEN, [and] BRAINWORM.

What, Master Downright! Are you brought in at Master Freshwater's<sup>8</sup> suit here?<sup>9</sup>

Dow. I' faith, sir; and here's another brought at my suit.

CLEM. What are you, sir?

STEP. A gentleman, sir; O, Uncle!

CLEM. Uncle! Who? Master Knowell?

KNOW. Ay, sir! This is a wise kinsman of mine.

STEP. God's my witness, Uncle, I am [10
wrong'd here monstrously; he charges me with stealing of his cloak, and would I might never stir, if I did not find it in the street by chance.

Dow. O, did you find it now? You said you bought it erewhile.

STEP. And you said I stole it. Nay, now my uncle is here, I'll do well enough with you.

CLEM. Well, let this breathe awhile. You that have cause to complain there, stand [20 forth. — [They all step forward.] Had you my warrant for this gentleman's apprehension?

BOB. Ay, an't please your Worship.

CLEM. Nay, do not speak in passion<sup>10</sup> so. Where had you it?

BOB. Of your clerk, sir!

CLEM. That's well! an my clerk can make warrants, and my hand not at 'em! Where is the warrant? Officer, have you it?

BRAI. No, sir. Your Worship's man, [30
Master Formal, bid me do it for these gentlemen, and he would be my discharge.

<sup>6</sup> I.e., mere picture, without substance.

<sup>8</sup> A freshwater soldier was one who had never seen overseas service.

CLEM. Why, Master Downright, are you such a novice, to be serv'd and never see the warrant?

Dow. Sir, he did not serve it on me.

CLEM. No? how then?

Dow. Marry, sir, he came to me, and said he must serve it, and he would use me kindly, and so — 40

CLEM. O, God's pity, was it so, sir? "He must serve it!" — Give me my long-sword there, and help me off — so; come on, sir varlet, I must cut off your legs, sirrah. [BRAINWORM kneels.] Nay, stand up; I'll use you kindly; I must cut off your legs, I say.

He flourishes over him with his long-sword.

BRAI. O, good sir, I beseech you; nay, good Master Justice!

CLEM. I must do it; there is no remedy. I must cut off your legs, sirrah; I must cut [50 off your ears, you rascal; I must do it: I must cut off your nose; I must cut off your head.

BRAI. O, good your Worship.

CLEM. Well, rise; how doest thou do now? Doest thou feel thyself well? Hast thou no harm?

BRAI. No, I thank your good Worship, sir.

CLEM. Why, so! I said I must cut off thy legs, and I must cut off thy arms, and I must cut off thy head; but I did not do it. So, [60 you said you must serve this gentleman with my warrant, but you did not serve him. You knave, you slave, you rogue, do you say you must, sirrah? Away with him to the jail; I'll teach you a trick for your "must," sir.

BRAI. Good sir, I beseech you, be good to me.

CLEM. Tell him he shall to the jail; away with him, I say.

BRAI. Nay, sir, if you will commit me, [70
it shall be for committing more than this. I will not lose by my travail any grain of my fame, certain.

[Throws off his serjeant's gown.]

CLEM. How is this?

KNOW. My man, Brainworm!

STEP. O, yes, Uncle; Brainworm has been with my cousin Edward and I all this day.

CLEM. I told you all there was some device!

BRAI. Nay, excellent Justice, since I have laid myself thus open to you, now stand [80 strong for me, both with your sword and your balance.

CLEM. Body o' me, a merry knave! Give me a bowl of sack. If he belong to you, Master Knowell, I bespeak your patience.

BRAI. That is it I have most need of. Sir, if you'll pardon me only, I'll glory in all the rest of my exploits.

KNOW. Sir, you know I love not to have my favors come hard from me. — You [90 have your pardon, though I suspect you shrewdly for being of counsel with my son against me.

BRAI. Yes, faith, I have, sir, though you retain'd me doubly this morning for yourself: first, as Brainworm; after, as Fitz-Sword. I was your reform'd soldier, sir. 'T was I sent you to Cob's upon the errand without end.

KNOW. Is it possible? or that thou [100 shouldst disguise thy language so as I should not know thee?

BRAI. O, sir, this has been the day of my metamorphosis! It is not that shape alone that I have run through to-day. I brought this gentleman, Master Kitley, a message too, in the form of Master Justice's man here, to draw him out o' the way, as well as your Worship, while Master Wellbred might make a conveyance of Mistress Bridget to my young master. 111

KIT. How! my sister stol'n away?

KNOW. My son is not married, I hope!

BRAI. Faith, sir, they are both as sure <sup>11</sup> as love, a priest, and three thousand pound, which is her portion, can make 'em; and by this time are ready to bespeak their wedding supper at the Windmill, except some friend here prevent <sup>12</sup> 'em, and invite 'em home.

CLEM. Marry, that will I; I thank thee [120 for putting me in mind on't. — Sirrah, go you and fetch them hither upon my warrant. [Exit Servant.] — Neither's friends have cause to be sorry, if I know the young couple aright. Here, I drink to thee for thy good news. But I pray thee, what hast thou done with my man, Formal?

BRAI. Faith, sir, after some ceremony past, as making him drunk, first with story, and then with wine, (but all in kindness,) [130 and stripping him to his shirt, I left him in that cool vein, departed, sold your Worship's warrant to these two, pawn'd his livery for that varlet's gown, to serve it in, and thus have brought myself by my activity to your Worship's consideration.

CLEM. And I will consider thee, in another cup of sack. Here's to thee, which having drunk off, this my sentence: Pledge me.

Thou hast done, or assisted to nothing, in [140 my judgment, but deserves to be pardon'd for the wit o' the offence. If thy master, or any man here, be angry with thee, I shall suspect his ingine,<sup>13</sup> while I know him, for't. How now! what noise is that?

[Enter Servant.]

SERV. Sir, it is Roger is come home.

CLEM. Bring him in, bring him in.

SCENE IV <sup>14</sup>

To them [enter] FORMAL [in a suit of armor.]

What! drunk? In arms against me? Your reason, your reason for this.<sup>15</sup>

FORM. I beseech your Worship to pardon me; I happen'd into ill company by chance, that cast me into a sleep, and stripp'd me of all my clothes.

CLEM. Well, tell him I am Justice Clement, and do pardon him. But what is this to your armor? What may that signify?

FORM. An't please you, sir, it hung up i' [10 the room where I was stripp'd; and I borrow'd it of one of the drawers <sup>16</sup> to come home in, because I was loth to do penance through the street i' my shirt.

CLEM. Well, stand by a while.

SCENE V <sup>17</sup>

To them [enter] EDWARD KNOWELL, WELLBRED, [and] BRIDGET.

Who be these? Oh, the young company; welcome, welcome. Gi' you joy. Nay, Mistress Bridget, blush not; you are not so fresh a bride but the news of it is come hither afore you. Master Bridegroom, I ha' made your peace; give me your hand. So will I for all the rest ere you forsake my roof.<sup>18</sup>

E. KNOW. We are the more bound to your humanity, sir.

CLEM. Only these two have so little of [10 man in 'em, they are no part of my care.

WEL. Yes, sir, let me pray you for this gentleman; he belongs to my sister the bride.

CLEM. In what place, sir?

WEL. Of her delight, sir, below the stairs, and in public: her poet, sir.

CLEM. A poet! I will challenge him myself presently at extempore:

<sup>16</sup> Tapsters, waiters.

<sup>18</sup> If print this speech at the end of Sc. iv.

Mount up thy Phlegon,<sup>19</sup> Muse, and testify

How Saturn, sitting in an ebon cloud, 20
Disrob'd his podex, white as ivory,

And through the welkin thund' red all aloud.

WEL. He is not for extempore, sir. He is all for the pocket muse ; please you command a sight of it.

CLEM. Yes, yes ; search him for a taste of his vein. [They search MATTHEW'S pockets.]

WEL. You must not deny the Queen's justice, sir, under a writ o' rebellion.

CLEM. What ! all this verse ? Body o' [30 me, he carries a whole realm,<sup>20</sup> a commonwealth of paper, in's hose ! Let's see some of his subjects !

[Reads.] "Unto the boundless ocean of thy face, Runs this poor river, charg'd with streams of eyes." <sup>21</sup>

How ! this is stol'n !

E. KNOW. A parody ! a parody ! with a kind of miraculous gift, to make it absurder than it was.

CLEM. Is all the rest of this batch ? [40
Bring me a torch ; lay it together, and give fire. Cleanse the air. [Sets the papers on fire.] Here was enough to have infected the whole city, if it had not been taken in time !
See, see, how our poet's glory shines ! brighter and brighter ! Still it increases ! Oh, now it's at the highest ; and now it declines as fast.
You may see, sic transit gloria mundi.

KNOW. There's an emblem<sup>22</sup> for you, son, and your studies ! 50

CLEM. Nay, no speech or act of mine be drawn against such as profess it worthily.
They are not born every year, as an alderman.

Samuel Daniel's Delta.

<sup>22</sup> "A picture and short posie expressing some particular conceit." (Cotgrave, cited by Simpson.)

<sup>23</sup> In Q this part of the scene is protracted by more of Matthew's efforts, and derisive comment on them, and by the following defence ; Lorenzo Junior = Edward Knowell.

GRV. Call you this poetry ?

LO. JV. Poetry ! Nay, then call blasphemy religion,

Call devils angels, and sin piety ;

Let all things be preposterously transchang'd.

LO. SR. Why, how now, son ? What, are you startled now ?

Hath the brize prick'd you, ha ? Go to ! You see How abjectly your poetry is rank'd
In general opinion.

LO. JV. Opinion ! O God, let gross opinion
Sink and be damn'd as deep as Barathrum.
If it may stand with your most wish'd content,
I can refell opinion and approve
The state of poesie, such as it is,
Blessed, eternal, and most true divine.

There goes more to the making of a good poet than a sheriff, Master Kitley. You look upon me ! Though I live i' the city here, amongst you, I will do more reverence to him,
when I meet him, than I will to the mayor,
out of his year. But these paper-peddlers !
these ink-dabblers ! They cannot expect [60 reprehension or reproach. They have it with the fact.

E. KNOW. Sir, you have sav'd me the labor of a defence.<sup>23</sup>

CLEM. It shall be discourse for supper between your father and me, if he dare undertake me. But to dispatch away these : you sign o' the soldier, and picture o' the poet, (but both so false, I will not ha' you hang'd out at my door till midnight,) while we are at [70 supper you two shall penitently fast it out in my court without ; and, if you will, you may pray there that we may be so merry within as to forgive or forget you when we come out.
Here's a third, because we tender your safety, shall watch you ; he is provided<sup>24</sup> for the purpose. — Look to your charge, sir.

STEP. And what shall I do ?

CLEM. Oh ! I had lost a sheep an he had not bleated ! — Why, sir, you shall give [80
Master Downright his cloak ; and I will entreat him to take it. A trencher and a napkin you shall have i' the butt'ry, and keep Cob and his wife company here ; whom I will entreat first to be reconcil'd ; and you to endeavor with your wit to keep 'em so.

STEP. I'll do my best.

COB. Why, now I see thou art honest, Tib,

Indeed, if you will look on Poesie
As she appears in many, poor and lame,
Patch'd up in remnants and old, worn rags,
Half starv'd for want of her peculiar food,
Sacred invention, — then I must confirm
Both your conceit and censure of her merit.
But view her in her glorious ornaments,
Attired in the majesty of art,
Set high in spirit with the precious taste
Of sweet philosophy, and, which is most,
Crown'd with the rich traditions of a soul
That hates to have her dignity profen'd
With any relish of an earthly thought,
Oh, then how proud a presence doth she bear.
Then is she like herself, fit to be seen
Of none but grave and consecrated eyes.
Nor is it any blemish to her fame
That such lean, ignorant, and blasted wits,
Such brainless gulls, should utter their stol'n wares
With such applauses in our vulgar ears ;
Or that their slubber'd lines have current pass
From the fat judgments of the multitude ;
But that this barren and infected age
Should set no difference 'twixt these empty spirits,
And a true poet, than which reverend name
Nothing can more adorn humanity !

<sup>24</sup> Equipped (with his armor).

I receive thee as my dear and mortal wife
again. 90

TIB. And I you, as my loving and obedient husband.

CLEM. Good compliment! It will be their bridal night too. They are married anew.
Come, I conjure the rest to put off all discontent.
You, Master Downright, your anger;
you, Master Knowell, your cares; Master
Kitely and his wife, their jealousy.
For, I must tell you both, while that is fed, Horns i' the mind are worse than o' the
head.<sup>25</sup> 100

KIT. Sir, thus they go from me; kiss me, sweetheart. —

"See what a drove of horns fly in the air, Wing'd with my cleansed and my credulous
breath!

<sup>25</sup> The Q version of this couplet is part of the following passage quoted by Kitely.

Watch 'em, suspicious eyes, watch where they fall.

See, see! on heads that think th' have none
at all!

Oh, what a plenteous world of this will come!
When air rains horns, all may be sure of [some].<sup>26</sup>

— I ha' learn'd so much verse out of a jealous man's part in a play. 110

CLEM. 'T is well, 't is well! This night we'll dedicate to friendship, love, and laughter. Master Bridegroom, take your bride and lead; every one, a fellow. Here is my mistress — Brainworm! to whom all my addresses of courtship shall have their reference; whose adventures this day, when our grandchildren shall hear to be made a fable,
I doubt not but it shall find both spectators and applause.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

THE earliest of Jonson's masterpieces stands among the very greatest of English plays. According to the Folio, it was originally acted in 1605; early in 1606, New Style, seems probable, since the year began on March 25, and the whale of II, i, 46, appeared, as Fleay notes, subsequently to January 19, 1605/6. Volpone was performed at the Globe by the King's Men, Shakespeare's company, and also at both the universities. It remained active in the London repertory throughout the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and in a debased and perverted adaptation had much success in Germany, France, and the United States about a decade after the World War.

The plot is original, though it is based on the ancient practice of legacy-hunting (captatio), which is repeatedly satirized by Lucian, Horace, and Juvenal, forms the subject of an episode in the Satyricon of Petronius Arbiter, and is mentioned by Erasmus in his Moriae Encomium. The subplot involving Sir Politic and his Lady is wholly Jonson's invention. Professor Rea has argued that the Knight was intended as a caricature of Sir Henry Wotton, the English ambassador to Venice, who was full of "observations" and "projects." But though the scene is transferred to contemporary Venice, since Italy was the natural home of villainy on the Elizabethan stage, and though the direct inspiration of some apparently classical details is to be found, as Professor Rea has shown, in the works of Renaissance humanists, the fabric of the text itself is woven from the poet's reading in classical literature. The idea of Mosca and of the bird and animal characters comes from Erasmus and Horace (Satires, II, v). (See introduction to Rea's edition for references and summaries.) In the notes of Lambinus's edition of Horace there is a suggestion for the story of Celia. Lady Would-be is founded on the twenty-sixth declamation of Libanius, in which Morosus accuses his garrulous wife.

That such are the poet's materials does not, however, warrant the conclusion that Volpone is essentially a work of the scissors. Broadly based on the author's wide reading, the edifice owes its structural vigor and its beauty to his union of commanding literary powers with first-rate dramatic genius. In Volpone Jonson abandons his earlier profession of sporting with human follies and dedicates himself to a savage attack on the baseness of human nature. He plies a terrible scourge; but the hideous darkness of the play is relieved by the pure and radiant character of Celia, and by the almost Marlovian brilliance, the inexhaustible enthusiasm, the sheer virtuosity, of Volpone himself. The fantastic humors of the Would-bes, though, like the tedious entertainment of Nano and his associates, they are architecturally inharmonious with the masterly treatment of the major subject,<sup>1</sup> nevertheless help keep the play a comedy. But it is the terrific energy of the main plot and its characters, and the far from neoclassical color and exuberance of Jonson's style, that keep it in the main current of the English Renaissance.

The play was first published, in quarto, in 1608 (title page, 1607). The present text is based on the Folio of 1616, the most authoritative of the old editions of Jonson. Volpone was separately edited in 1919 by J. D. Rea.

<sup>1</sup>See Rea's edition, p. xxvii, for an ingenious defence. If Jonson's purpose was simply the castigation of folly in a variety of forms, the professional fools quite properly introduce the subject, and the Would-bes serve admirably to illustrate other aspects of it than the greed and credulity of the suitors. But whatever the author's original intention, he found himself composing a passionate drama. The Nano and Would-be scenes clash with the mood induced by it, and they are too long to be taken merely as comic relief from the grim humor of the main plot.

PROLOGUE

Now, luck yet <sup>9</sup> send us, and a little wit
Will serve to make our play hit ;
According to the palates of the season,
Here is rhyme, not empty of reason.
This we were bid to credit from our poet,
Whose true scope, if you would know it,

In all his poems still hath been this measure,
To mix profit with your pleasure ;
And not as some, whose throats their envy
failing,
Cry hoarsely, " All he writes is railing," [10

<sup>8</sup> Imitated, both in its acrostic form and in its rough style, from the lines prefixed by some later writer to the various comedies of Plautus.

<sup>9</sup> Q God.

And when his plays come forth, think they can flout them,

With saying he was a year about them.

To this there needs no lie, but this his creature,

Which was two months since no feature ;

And, though he dares give them five lives to mend it,

'T is known, five weeks fully penn'd it,
From his own hand, without a coadjutor,
Novice, journeyman, or tutor.

Yet thus much I can give you as a token

Of his play's worth : no eggs are broken, [20
Nor quaking custards with fierce teeth affrighted,<sup>10</sup>

Wherewith your rout are so delighted ;

Nor hales he in a gull, old ends reciting,

To stop gaps in his loose writing ;

With such a deal of monstrous and forc'd action,

As might make Bet'lem a faction : <sup>11</sup>

Nor made he his play for jests stol'n from each
table,

But makes jests to fit his fable ;

And so presents quick comedy refined,

As best critics have designed ; <sup>30</sup>

The laws of time, place, persons he observeth,
From no needful rule he swerveth.

All gall and copperas <sup>12</sup> from his ink he draineth ;

Only, a little salt remaineth ;

Wherewith he'll rub your cheeks, till, red with laughter,

They shall look fresh a week after.

ACT I — SCENE I <sup>13</sup>

[Enter] VOLPONE [and] MOSCA.

VOLP. Good morning to the day ; and next,
my gold.

Open the shrine, that I may see my saint. —

Hail the world's soul, <sup>14</sup> and mine. More glad than is

The teeming earth to see the long'd-for sun
Peep through the horns of the celestial Ram,

<sup>10</sup> Alluding to "a burlesque representation of a city feast . . . of which an immense custard always made a conspicuous part." (Gifford.)

Am I, to view thy splendor darkening his ;
That, lying here, amongst my other hoards,
Show'st like a flame by night, or like the day
Struck out of chaos, when all darkness fled
Unto the center. <sup>15</sup> O thou son of Sol, <sup>16</sup> <sup>10</sup>

But brighter than thy father, let me kiss,

With adoration, thee, and every relic

Of sacred treasure in this blessed room.

Well did wise poets, by thy glorious name,

Title that age which they would have the best ;

Thou being the best of things, and far transcending

All style of joy, in children, parents, friends,
Or any other waking dream on earth.

Thy looks when they to Venus did ascribe,

They should have giv'n her twenty thousand
Cupids ; <sup>20</sup>

Such are thy beauties and our loves ! Dear
saint,

Riches, the dumb god, <sup>17</sup> that giv'st all men
tongues,

That canst do nought, and yet mak'st men do all things ;

The price of souls ; even hell, with thee to boot,

Is made worth Heaven. Thou art virtue, fame,

Honor, and all things else ! Who can get thee,
He shall be noble, valiant, honest, wise — <sup>18</sup>

Mos. And what he will, sir. Riches are in fortune

A greater good than wisdom is in nature.

VOLP. True, my beloved Mosca. Yet I glory <sup>30</sup>

More in the cunning purchase <sup>19</sup> of my wealth
Than in the glad possession, since I gain

No common way ; I use no trade, no venture ;
I wound no earth with ploughshares, fat no

beasts

To feed the shambles ; have no mills for iron,
Oil, corn, or men, to grind 'em into powder ;

I blow no subtle glass, expose no ships

To threat'nings of the furrow-faced sea ;

I turn no monies in the public bank,

No usure private —

Mos. No, sir, nor devour <sup>40</sup>
Soft prodigals. You shall ha' some will swallow

A melting heir as glibly as your Dutch

Will pills of butter, and ne'er purge for 't ;

<sup>15</sup> Of the earth.

and Erasmus.

<sup>19</sup> Acquisition.

Tear forth the fathers of poor families
 Out of their beds, and coffin them alive
 In some kind clasping prison, where their bones
 May be forthcoming, when the flesh is rotten.
 But your sweet nature doth abhor these courses ;
 You loathe the widow's or the orphan's tears
 Should wash your pavements, or their piteous cries 50
 Ring in your roofs, and beat the air for vengeance.

VOLP. Right, Mosca ; I do loathe it. —

Mos. And, besides, sir,
 You are not like the thresher that doth stand <sup>20</sup>
 With a huge flail, watching a heap of corn,<sup>21</sup>
 And, hungry, dares not taste the smallest grain,
 But feeds on mallows, and such bitter herbs ;
 Nor like the merchant, who hath fill'd his vaults
 With Romagnà,<sup>22</sup> rich and Candian <sup>23</sup> wines,
 Yet drinks the lees of Lombard's vinegar.
 You will not lie in straw, whilst moths and worms 60
 Feed on your sumptuous hangings and soft beds.
 You know the use of riches, and dare give now
 From that bright heap, to me, your poor observer,<sup>24</sup>
 Or to your dwarf, or your hermaphrodite,
 Your eunuch, or what other household trifle
 Your pleasure allows maintenance. —

VOLP. Hold thee, Mosca ;
 Take of my hand ; thou strik'st on truth in all,
 And they are envious term thee parasite.
 Call forth my dwarf, my eunuch, and my fool,
 And let 'em make me sport. [Exit MOSCA.]

What should I do, [70
 But cocker up my genius, and live free
 To all delights my fortune calls me to ?
 I have no wife, no parent, child, ally,
 To give my substance to ; but whom I make Must be my heir ; and this makes men observe <sup>25</sup> me.

This draws new clients daily to my house,
 Women and men of every sex and age,
 That bring me presents, send me plate, coin,
 jewels,

With hope that when I die (which they expect

<sup>25</sup> Be obsequious to me.

Each greedy minute) it shall then return <sup>80</sup>
 Tenfold upon them ; whilst some, covetous
 Above the rest, seek to engross me, whole,
 And counter work the one unto the other,
 Contend in gifts, as they would seem in love ;
 All which I suffer, playing with their hopes,
 And am content to coin 'em into profit,
 And look upon their kindness, and take more,
 And look on that ; still bearing them in hand,<sup>26</sup>
 Letting the cherry knock against their lips,
 And draw it by their mouths, and back again. — 90
 How now !

SCENE II <sup>27</sup>

[To him re-enter] MOSCA, [with] NANO, AN-DROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.

NAN. Now, room for fresh gamesters, who do will you to know
 They do bring you neither play nor university show,
 And therefore do entreat you that whatsoever they rehearse
 May not fare a whit the worse for the false pace of the verse.
 If you wonder at this, you will wonder more ere we
 pass ;
 For know, here <sup>28</sup> is enclos'd the soul of Pythagoras,
 That juggler divine,<sup>29</sup> as hereafter shall follow,
 Which soul, fast and loose, sir, came first from Apollo,
 And was breath'd into Aethalides,<sup>30</sup> Mercurius his
 son,
 Where it had the gift to remember all that ever was
 done. 10
 From thence it fled forth, and made quick transmi-gration
 To goldy-lock'd Euphorbus, who was kill'd, in good fashion,
 At the siege of old Troy, by the cuckold of Sparta.<sup>31</sup>
 Hermotimus <sup>32</sup> was next (I find it in my charta) ;
 To whom it did pass, where no sooner it was missing,
 But with one Pyrrhus of Delos <sup>33</sup> it learn'd to go a-fishing ;
 And thence did it enter the sophist <sup>34</sup> of Greece.
 From Pythagore, she went into a beautiful piece, Hight Aspasia, the meretrix ; and the next toss of
 her
 Was again of a whore — she became a philosopher,
 Crates <sup>35</sup> the cynic, as itself <sup>36</sup> doth relate it. 21
 Since, kings, knights, and beggars, knaves, lords, and fools gat it,
 Besides ox and ass, camel, mule, goat, and brock,<sup>37</sup>

In all which it hath spoke, as in the cobbler's cock.
But I come not here to discourse of that matter,
Or his one, two, or three, or his great oath, "By QUATER!"<sup>37</sup>

His musics, his trigon,<sup>38</sup> his golden thigh,<sup>39</sup>
Or his telling how elements shift; but I Would ask, how of late thou hast suffered translation,

And shifted thy coat in these days of reforma-
tion. 30

AND. Like one of the reformed,<sup>40</sup> a fool, as you see,

Counting all old doctrine heresy.

NAN. But not on thine own forbid meats hast thou ventur'd?

AND. On fish, when first a Carthusian I enter'd.<sup>41</sup>

NAN. Why, then thy dogmatical silence<sup>42</sup> hath left thee?

AND. Of that an obstreperous lawyer bereft me.

NAN. O wonderful change! When sir lawyer
forsook thee,

For Pythagore's sake, what body then took thee?

AND. A good dull mule.

NAN. And how! by that means
Thou wert brought to allow of the eating of beans?
AND. Yes.

NAN. But from the mule into whom didst
thou pass? 41

AND. Into a very strange beast, by some writers
call'd an ass;

By others a precise,<sup>43</sup> pure, illuminate brother
Of those devour flesh — and sometimes one another;
And will drop you forth a libel, or a sanctifi'd lie,
Betwixt every spoonful of a nativity-pie.<sup>44</sup>

NAN. Now quit thee, fore Heaven, of that profane nation;

And gently report thy next transmigration.

AND. To the same that I am.

NAN. A creature of delight,
And, what is more than a fool, an hermaphro-dite! 50

Now, pray thee, sweet soul, in all thy variation,
Which body wouldst thou choose to take up thy station?

AND. Troth, this I am in; even here would I tarry.

NAN. 'Cause here the delight of each sex thou canst vary?

AND. Alas, those pleasures be stale and forsaken;
No, 't is your fool wherewith I am so taken,
The only one creature that I can call blessed;
For all other forms I have prov'd most distressed.

NAN. Spoke true, as thou wert in Pythagoras
still.

This learned opinion we celebrate will, 60
Fellow eunuch, as behoves us, with all our wit and
art,

To dignify that whereof ourselves are so great and special a part.

VOLP. Now, very, very pretty. Mosca,
this

Was thy invention?

<sup>37</sup> The quaternio or "tetraktys of the dekad", which graphically represented the number ten as the triangle of four.

Mos.
Not else.

If it please my patron,

VOLP.

It doth, good Mosca.

Mos.

Then it was, sir.

Song

Fools they are the only nation
Worth men's envy or admiration;
Free from care or sorrow taking,
Selves and others merry making:
All they speak or do is sterling. 70
Your fool he is your great man's dearling,
And your ladies' sport and pleasure;
Tongue and bauble<sup>45</sup> are his treasure.
E'en his face begetteth laughter,
And he speaks truth free from slaughter;<sup>46</sup>
He's the grace of every feast,
And sometimes the chiefest guest;
Hath his trencher and his stool,
When wit waits upon the fool.
O, who would not be 80
He, he, he?

One knocks without.

VOLP. Who's that? Away! Look, Mosca.

Mos. Fool, begone!

[Exeunt NANO, CASTRONE, and AN-DROGYNO.]

'T is Signior Voltore, the advocate;

I know him by his knock.

VOLP. Fetch me my gown,
My furs, and nightcaps; say my couch is changing,

And let him entertain himself awhile
Without, i' th' gallery. [Exit MOSCA.] Now, now my clients

Begin their visitation! Vulture, kite,<sup>47</sup>
Raven, and gorcrow,<sup>48</sup> all my birds of prey,
That think me turning carcase, now they
come: 90

I am not for 'em yet.

[Re-enter MOSCA, with the gown, etc.]

How now! the news?

Mos. A piece of plate, sir.

VOLP. Of what bigness?

Mos. Huge,

Massy, and antique, with your name inscrib'd,
And arms engraven.

VOLP. Good! and not a fox Stretch'd on the earth, with fine delusive
sleights,

Mocking a gaping crow? ha, Mosca?

Mos. Sharp, sir.

VOLP. Give me my furs. — Why dost thou laugh so, man?

<sup>47</sup> Not one of the three suitors; possibly Lady
Would-be, though she is later termed a she-wolf.

<sup>48</sup> Carrion crow.

Mos. I cannot choose, sir, when I apprehend

What thoughts he has without <sup>49</sup> now, as he walks : 99

That this might be the last gift he should give,
That this would fetch you ; if you died to-day,
And gave him all, what he should be to-morrow ;

What large return would come of all his ventures ;

How he should worshipp'd be, and reverenc'd ;
Ride with his furs and footcloths, waited on
By herds of fools and clients ; have clear way
Made for his mule, as letter'd as himself ;
Be call'd the great and learned advocate !

And then concludes there's nought impossible.

VOLP. Yes, to be learned, Mosca.

Mos. O, no ! rich
Implies it. Hood an ass with reverend purple, 111

So you can hide his two ambitious ears,<sup>50</sup>
And he shall pass for a cathedral doctor.<sup>51</sup>

VOLP. My caps, my caps, good Mosca.
Fetch him in.

Mos. Stay, sir ; your ointment for your eyes.

VOLP. That's true ;
' Dispatch, dispatch ; I long to have possession
Of my new present.

Mos. That, and thousands more,
I hope to see you lord of.

VOLP. Thanks, kind Mosca.

Mos. And that, when I am lost in blended dust, 119

And hundreds such as I am, in succession —

VOLP. Nay, that were too much, Mosca.

Mos. You shall live
Still to delude these harpies.

VOLP. Loving Mosca !
'T is well ; my pillow now, and let him enter.

[Exit MOSCA.]

Now, my feign'd cough, my phthisic,<sup>52</sup> and my gout,

My apoplexy, palsy, and catarrhs,
Help, with your forced functions this my posture,

Wherein, this three year, I have milk'd their hopes.

He comes ; I hear him — Uh, uh, uh, uh ! —
Oh !

<sup>52</sup> Phthisis, consumption.

SCENE III <sup>53</sup>

[To] VOLPONE ; [re-enter MOSCA,] [with] VOLTORE.

Mos. You still are what you were, sir.
Only you,

Of all the rest, are he commands his love,
And you do wisely to preserve it thus,
With early visitation and kind notes
Of your good meaning to him, which, I know,
Cannot but come most grateful. Patron ! sir !
Here's Signior Voltore is come —

VOLP. What say you ?

Mos. Sir, Signior Voltore is come this morning

To visit you.

VOLP. I thank him.

Mos. And hath brought
A piece of antique plate, bought of St. Mark,<sup>54</sup>
With which he here presents you.

VOLP. He is welcome. [11
Pray him to come more often.

Mos. Yes.

VOLT. What says he ?

Mos. He thanks you, and desires you see him often.

VOLP. Mosca.

Mos. My patron !

VOLP. Bring him near. Where is he ?
I long to feel his hand.

Mos. The plate is here, sir.

VOLT. How fare you, sir ?

VOLP. I thank you, Signior Voltore.
Where is the plate ? mine eyes are bad.

VOLT. I'm sorry

To see you still thus weak.

Mos. [aside] That he is not weaker.

VOLP. You are too munificent.

VOLT. No, sir ; would to Heaven
I could as well give health to you, as that plate. 20

VOLP. You give, sir, what you can. I thank you. Your love

Hath taste in this, and shall not be unanswer'd.
I pray you see me often.

VOLT. Yes, I shall, sir.

VOLP. Be not far from me.

Mos. Do you observe that, sir ?

VOLP. Harken unto me still ; it will concern you.

Mos. You are a happy man, sir ; know your good.

VOLP. I cannot now last long —

<sup>54</sup> I.e., at a goldsmith's shop near the church.

Mos. [aside] You are his heir, sir.

VOLT. [aside] Am I?

VOLP. I feel me going — uh, uh, uh, uh! —
I'm sailing to my port — uh, uh, uh, uh! —
And I am glad I am so near my haven. 30

Mos. Alas, kind gentleman; well, we must all go —

VOLT. But, Mosca —

Mos. Age will conquer.

VOLT. 'Pray thee, hear me.

Am I inscrib'd his heir, for certain?

Mos. Are you!

I do beseech you, sir, you will vouchsafe
To write me i' your family.<sup>55</sup> All my hopes Depend upon your Worship. I am lost
Except the rising sun do shine on me.

VOLT. It shall both shine, and warm thee,
Mosca.

Mos. Sir,

I am a man that hath not done your love
All the worst offices: here I wear your keys,
See all your coffers and your caskets lock'd, [41
Keep the poor inventory of your jewels,
Your plate, and monies; am your steward, sir,
Husband your goods here.

VOLT. But am I sole heir?

Mos. Without a partner, sir: confirm'd
this morning:

The wax is warm yet, and the ink scarce dry
Upon the parchment.

VOLT. Happy, happy me!
By what good chance, sweet Mosca?

Mos. Your desert, sir;
I know no second cause.

VOLT. Thy modesty
Is loth to know it; well, we shall requite it. [50

Mos. He ever lik'd your course, sir; that first took him.

I oft have heard him say how he admir'd<sup>56</sup>
Men of your large profession, that could speak
To every cause, and things mere contraries,
Till they were hoarse again, yet all be law;
That, with most quick agility, could turn,
And return; make knots, and undo them;<sup>57</sup>
Give forked counsel; take provoking gold
On either hand, and put it up<sup>58</sup>; these men,
He knew, would thrive with their humility. [60
And, for his part, he thought he should be blest

To have his heir of such a suffering spirit,

<sup>55</sup> Enroll me as one of your servants.

<sup>56</sup> Based on chapter 93 of Cornelius Agrippa of Nettesheim's De Incertitudine et Vanitate Scien-tiarum atque Artium. (Rea.)

<sup>57</sup> A nine-syllable line.

<sup>58</sup> Pocket it.

So wise, so grave, of so perplex'd a tongue,
And loud withal, that would not wag, nor scarce

Lie still, without a fee; when every word
Your Worship but lets fall, is a cecchine! <sup>59</sup>

Another knocks.

Who's that? One knocks; I would not have you seen, sir.

And yet — pretend you came and went in haste;

I'll fashion an excuse. And, gentle sir,
When you do come to swim in golden lard, 70
Up to the arms in honey, that<sup>60</sup> your chin
Is borne up stiff with fatness of the flood,<sup>61</sup>
Think on your vassal; but remember me:
I ha' not been your worst of clients.

VOLT. Mosca —

Mos. When will you have your inventory brought, sir?

Or see a copy of the will? — Anon. —

I'll bring 'em to you, sir. Away, begone,
Put business i' your face. [Exit VOLTORE.]

VOLP. Excellent,<sup>62</sup> Mosca!

Come hither, let me kiss thee.

Mos. Keep you still, sir.

Here is Corbaccio.

VOLP. Set the plate away: 80
The vulture's gone, and the old raven's come.

SCENE IV <sup>63</sup>

MOSCA [and] VOLPONE [remain.]

Mos. Betake you to your silence, and your sleep. —

[To the plate] Stand there and multiply. —
[aside] Now shall we see

A wretch who is indeed more impotent
Than this<sup>64</sup> can feign to be; yet hopes to hop
Over his grave. —

[He admits CORBACCIO.]

Signior Corbaccio!

You're very welcome, sir.

CORB. How does your patron?

Mos. Troth, as he did, sir; no amends.

CORB. What? mends he?

Mos. No, sir: he is rather worse.

CORB. That's well. Where is he?

Mos. Upon his couch, sir, newly fall'n asleep.

<sup>59</sup> Sequin, an obsolete gold coin of Italy and Turkey, worth about $2.25. (Webster.) Trisyllabic.

clause in Erasmus's Moriae Encomium: "as if they swam up to the chins in a sea of honey." (Rea.)

<sup>62</sup> Q omits comma. <sup>63</sup> The same. <sup>64</sup> Volpone.

CORB. Does he sleep well?

Mos. No wink, sir, all this night, 10
Nor yesterday; but slumbers.<sup>65</sup>

CORB. Good! he should take Some counsel of physicians. I have brought
him

An opiate here, from mine own doctor —

Mos. He will not hear of drugs.

CORB. Why? I myself
Stood by while 't was made, saw all th' ingredients;

And know it cannot but most gently work.

My life for his, 't is but to make him sleep.

VOLP. [aside] Ay, his last sleep, if he would take it.

Mos. Sir,
He has no faith in physic.

CORB. Say you? say you?

Mos. He has no faith in physic; <sup>66</sup> he does
think 20

Most of your doctors are the greater danger,
And worse disease, t' escape. I often have Heard him protest that your physician
Should never be his heir.

CORB. Not I his heir?

Mos. Not your physician, sir.

CORB. O, no, no, no;
I do not mean it.

Mos. No, sir, nor their fees
He cannot brook: he says they flay a man
Before they kill him.

CORB. Right, I do conceive you.

Mos. And then they do it by experiment;
For which the law not only doth absolve 'em,
But gives them great reward; and he is loth
To hire his death so.

CORB. It is true, they kill 32
With as much licence as a judge.

Mos. Nay, more;
For he but kills, sir, where the law condemns,
And these can kill him too.

CORB. Ay, or me,
Or any man. How does his apoplexy?
Is that strong on him still?

Mos. Most violent.
His speech is broken, and his eyes are set,
His face drawn longer than 't was wont —

CORB. How? how?
Stronger than he was wont?

Mos. No, sir; his face [40
Drawn longer than 't was wont.

CORB. O, good.

Mos. His mouth

Is ever gaping, and his eyelids hang.

CORB. Good.

Mos. A freezing numbness stiffens all his joints,

And makes the color of his flesh like lead.

CORB. 'T is good.

Mos. His pulse beats slow, and dull.

CORB. Good symptoms still.

Mos. And from his brain —

CORB. Ha? How? Not from his brain?

Mos. Yes, sir, and from his brain —

CORB. I conceive you; good.

Mos. Flows a cold sweat, with a continual rheum,

Forth the resolved <sup>67</sup> corners of his eyes. 49

CORB. Is 't possible? Yet I am better, ha!
How does he with the swimming of his head?

Mos. O, sir, 't is past the scotomy; <sup>68</sup> he

Hath lost his feeling, and hath left to snort: <sup>69</sup>
You hardly can perceive him, that he breathes.

CORB. Excellent, excellent; sure I shall outlast him;

This makes me young again, a score of years.

Mos. I was a-coming for you, sir.

CORB. Has he made his will?
What has he giv'n me?

Mos. No, sir.

CORB. Nothing? ha?

Mos. He has not made his will, sir.

CORB. Oh, oh, oh.
What then did Voltore, the lawyer, here? 60

Mos. He smelt a carcass, sir, when he but heard

My master was about his testament;
As I did urge him to it for your good —

CORB. He came unto him, did he? I thought so.

Mos. Yes, and presented him this piece of plate.

CORB. To be his heir?

Mos. I do not know, sir.

CORB. True;
I know it too.

Mos. [aside] By your own scale, sir.

CORB. Well,
I shall prevent <sup>70</sup> him yet. See, Mosca, look,
Here I have brought a bag of bright cecchines,
Will quite weigh down his plate.

Mos. Yea, marry, sir. 70

<sup>65</sup> Doses.

<sup>66</sup> These comments on physicians are also taken

This is true physic, this your sacred medicine ;
No talk of opiates to this great elixir !

CORB. 'T is aurum palpabile, if not potabile.<sup>71</sup>

Mos. It shall be minister'd to him in his bowl !

CORB. Ay, do, do, do.

Mos. Most blessed cordial !
This will recover him.

CORB. Yes, do, do, do.

Mos. I think it were not best, sir.

CORB. What ?

Mos. To recover him.

CORB. O, no, no, no ; by no means.

Mos. Why, sir, this
Will work some strange effect, if he but feel it.

CORB. 'T is true ; therefore forbear. I'll take my venture ; 80

Give me 't again.

Mos. At no hand ;<sup>72</sup> pardon me :
You shall not do yourself that wrong, sir. I
Will so advise you, you shall have it all.

CORB. How ?

Mos. All, sir ; 't is your right, your own ; no man

Can claim a part : 't is yours without a rival,
Decreed by destiny.

CORB. How, how, good Mosca ?

Mos. I'll tell you, sir. This fit he shall recover —

CORB. I do conceive you.

Mos. And, on first advantage
Of his gain'd sense, will I re-importune him

Unto the making of his testament : 90
And show him this. [Points to the money.]

CORB. Good, good.

Mos. 'T is better yet,
If you will hear, sir.

CORB. Yes, with all my heart.

Mos. Now would I counsel you, make home with speed ;

There, frame a will ; whereto you shall inscribe

My master your sole heir.

CORB. And disinherit

My son ?

Mos. O, sir, the better ; for that color<sup>73</sup>
Shall make it much more taking.

CORB. O, but<sup>74</sup> color ?

Mos. This will, sir, you shall send it unto
me.

Now, when I come to enforce, as I will do,

Your cares, your watchings, and your many prayers, 100

Your more than many gifts, your this day's present,

And last, produce your will ; where (without thought

Or least regard unto your proper<sup>75</sup> issue,

A son so brave, and highly meriting)

The stream of your diverted love hath throw'n
you

Upon my master, and made him your heir ;

He cannot be so stupid or stone-dead,

But, out of conscience and mere gratitude —

CORB. He must pronounce me his ?

Mos. 'T is true.

CORB. This plot
Did I think on before.

Mos. I do believe it. 110

CORB. Do you not believe it ?

Mos. Yes, sir.

CORB. Mine own project.

Mos. Which, when he hath done, sir —

CORB. Publish'd me his heir ?

Mos. And you so certain to survive him —

CORB. Ay.

Mos. Being so lusty a man —

CORB. 'T is true.

Mos. Yes, sir —

CORB. I thought on that too. See, how he should be

The very organ to express my thoughts !

Mos. You have not only done yourself a good —

CORB. But multiplied it on my son !

Mos. 'T is right, sir.

CORB. Still, my invention.

Mos. 'Las, sir ! Heaven knows,
It hath been all my study, all my care, 120

(I e'en grow gray withal) how to work things —

CORB. I do conceive, sweet Mosca.

Mos. You are he
For whom I labor here.

CORB. Ay, do, do, do.

I'll straight about it.

Mos. [aside] Rook go with you,<sup>76</sup> raven.

CORB. I know thee honest.

Mos. You do lie, sir —

CORB. And —

Mos. Your knowledge is no better than your ears, sir.

CORB. I do not doubt to be a father to thee.

Mos. Nor I to gull my brother of his blessing.

<sup>71</sup> Gold in solution was a sovereign remedy.

<sup>76</sup> May you be rooked (= cheated), you raven.

CORB. I may ha' my youth restor'd to me, why not?

Mos. Your Worship is a precious ass —

CORB. What say'st thou?

Mos. I do desire your Worship to make haste, sir. 131

CORB. 'T is done, 't is done; I go. [Exit.]

VOLP. [leaping from his couch] <sup>77</sup> Oh, I shall burst!

Let out my sides, let out my sides —

Mos. Contain

Your flux of laughter, sir; you know this hope
Is such a bait, it covers any hook.

VOLP. O, but thy working, and thy placing
it!

I cannot hold; good rascal, let me kiss thee:
I never knew thee in so rare a humor.

Mos. Alas, sir, I but do as I am taught;
Follow your grave instructions, give 'em
words, 140

Pour oil into their ears, and send them hence.

VOLP. 'T is true, 't is true. What a rare punishment

Is avarice to itself!

Mos. Ay, with our help, sir.

VOLP. So many cares, so many maladies <sup>78</sup>
So many fears attending on old age.

Yea, death so often call'd on, as no wish
Can be more frequent with 'em, their limbs faint,

Their senses dull, their seeing, hearing, going, <sup>79</sup>
All dead before them; yea, their very teeth,
Their instruments of eating, failing them: [150
Yet this is reckon'd life! Nay, here was one,
Is now gone home, that wishes to live longer!
Feels not his gout, nor palsy; feigns himself
Younger by scores of years, flatters his age
With confident belying it, hopes he may
With charms like Aeson <sup>80</sup> have his youth re-
stor'd;

And with these thoughts so battens, as if fate
Would be as easily cheated on as he;

And all turns air! Who's that there, now? a third? Another knocks.

Mos. Close; to your couch again; I hear his voice. 160

It is Corvino, our spruce merchant.

VOLP. [lying down] Dead.

Mos. Another bout, sir, with your eyes.
[anointing them] — Who's there?

SCENE V <sup>81</sup>

[To them enter] CORVINO.

Signior Corvino! come most wish'd for! Oh,
How happy were you, if you knew it, now!

CORV. Why? what? wherein?

Mos. The tardy hour is come, sir.

CORV. He is not dead?

Mos. Not dead, sir, but as good;
He knows no man.

CORV. How shall I do then?

Mos. Why, sir?

CORV. I have brought him here a pearl.

Mos. Perhaps he has
So much remembrance left as to know you,
sir:

He still calls on you; nothing but your name
Is in his mouth. Is your pearl orient, <sup>82</sup> sir?

CORV. Venice was never owner of the like. [10

VOLP. Signior Corvino!

Mos. Hark!

VOLP. Signior Corvino.

Mos. He calls you; step and give it him. —

H' is here, sir.

And he has brought you a rich pearl.

CORV. How do you, sir? —
Tell him it doubles the twelfth <sup>83</sup> carat.

Mos. Sir,
He cannot understand: his hearing's gone;
And yet it comforts him to see you —

CORV. Say
I have a diamond for him, too.

Mos. Best show 't, sir;
Put it into his hand; 't is only there
He apprehends; he has his feeling yet.
See, how he grasps it!

CORV. 'Las, good gentleman! [20
How pitiful the sight is!

Mos. Tut, forget, sir.
The weeping of an heir should still be laughter <sup>84</sup>

Under a visor. <sup>85</sup>

CORV. Why, am I his heir?

Mos. Sir, I am sworn, I may not show the will

Till he be dead. But here has been Corbaccio,
Here has been Voltore, here were others too —
I cannot number 'em, they were so many —
All gaping here for legacies; but I,
Taking the vantage of his naming you,

<sup>85</sup> Mask.

"Signior Corvino, Signior Corvino," took [30
Paper, and pen, and ink, and there I ask'd him
Whom he would have his heir! "Corvino."

Who Should be executor? "Corvino." And
To any question he was silent to,
I still interpreted the nods he made,
Through weakness, for consent; and sent home th' others,
Nothing bequeath'd them, but to cry and curse.

CORV. Oh, my dear Mosca. (They embrace.) Does he not perceive us?

Mos. No more than a blind harper. He knows no man,
No face of friend, nor name of any servant, 40
Who 't was that fed him last, or gave him
drink;
Not those he hath begotten, or brought up,
Can he remember.

CORV. Has he children?

Mos. Bastards,
Some dozen, or more, that he begot on beggars,
Gypsies, and Jews, and black-moors, when he was drunk.

Knew you not that, sir? 'T is the common fable.

The dwarf, the fool, the eunuch, are all his;
H' is the true father of his family,<sup>86</sup>
In all save me. But he has giv'n 'em nothing.

CORV. That's well, that's well. Art sure he does not hear us? 50

Mos. Sure, sir! Why, look you, credit your own sense.

[Shouts in VOLPONE's ear.]

The pox approach, and add to your diseases,
If it would send you hence the sooner, sir;
For your incontinence it hath deserv'd it Thoroughly and thoroughly, and the plague to boot! —

You may come near, sir. — Would you would once close

Those filthy eyes of yours, that flow with slime

Like two frog-pits; and those same hanging
cheeks,

Cover'd with hide instead of skin — Nay, help,
sir<sup>87</sup> —

That look like frozen dishclouts set on end. 60

CORV. Or like an old smok'd wall, on which the rain

Ran down in streaks.

Mos. Excellent, sir! speak out.
You may be louder yet; a culverin<sup>88</sup>
Discharged in his ear would hardly bore it.

CORV. His nose is like a common sewer, still running.

Mos. 'T is good! And what his mouth?

CORV. A very draught,

Mos. O, stop it up —

CORV. By no means.

Mos. Pray you, let me;
Faith, I could stifle him rarely with a pillow
As well as any woman that should keep<sup>89</sup> him.

CORV. Do as you will; but I'll be gone.

Mos. Be so; [70
It is your presence makes him last so long.

CORV. I pray you use no violence.

Mos. No, sir? why?
Why should you be thus scrupulous, 'pray
you, sir?

CORV. Nay, at your discretion.

Mos. Well, good sir, begone.

CORV. I will not trouble him now to take<sup>90</sup> my pearl?

Mos. Pooh, nor your diamond. What a needless care

Is this afflicts you? Is not all here yours?
Am not I here, whom you have made, your creature,

That owe my being to you?

CORV. Grateful Mosca! [79
Thou art my friend, my fellow, my companion,
My partner, and shalt share in all my fortunes.

Mos. Excepting one.

CORV. What's that?

Mos. Your gallant wife, sir.
[Exit CORVINO.]

Now is he gone; we had no other means
To shoot him hence but this.

VOLP. My divine Mosca!
Thou hast to-day outgone thyself. Who's there?

Another knocks.

I will be troubled with no more. Prepare
Me music, dances, banquets, all delights;
The Turk is not more sensual in his pleasures
Than will Volpone. [Exit MOSCA.] Let me see; a pearl!

A diamond! plate! cecchines! Good morn-ing's purchase.<sup>91</sup> 90

Why, this is better than rob churches, yet;

<sup>86</sup> A Latinism = household of servants. The line

Or fat,<sup>92</sup> by eating, once a month, a man —

[Re-enter MOSCA.]

Who is 't?

Mos. The beauteous Lady Would-be, sir, Wife to the English knight, Sir Politic Would-be —

This is the style, sir, is directed me —
Hath sent to know how you have slept to-night,

And if you would be visited.

VOLP.

Not now.

Some three hours hence —

Mos. I told the squire<sup>93</sup> so much.

VOLP. When I am high with mirth and wine; then, then. 99

'Fore Heaven, I wonder at the desperate valor
Of the bold English, that they dare let loose
Their wives to all encounters!

Mos. Sir, this knight
Had not his name for nothing: he is politic,
And knows, howe'er his wife affect strange
airs,

She hath not yet the face to be dishonest.<sup>94</sup>
But had she Signior Corvino's wife's face —

VOLP. Hath she so rare a face?

Mos. O, sir, the wonder,
The blazing star of Italy! a wench
Of the first year!<sup>95</sup> a beauty ripe as harvest!
Whose skin is whiter than a swan, all over!
Than silver, snow, or lilies! a soft lip, 111

Would tempt you to eternity of kissing!
And flesh that melteth in the touch to blood!<sup>96</sup>
Bright as your gold! and lovely as your gold!

VOLP. Why had not I known this before?

Mos. Alas, sir,
Myself but yesterday discover'd it.

VOLP. How might I see her?

Mos. Oh, not possible;
She's kept as warily as is your gold;
Never does come abroad, never takes air 119
But at a windore.<sup>97</sup> All her looks are sweet,
As the first grapes or cherries, and are watch'd
As near as they are.

VOLP. I must see her —

Mos. Sir,
There is a guard of ten spies thick upon her,
All his whole household; each of which is set
Upon his fellow, and have all their charge,
When he goes out, when he comes in, examin'd.

VOLP. I will go see her, though but at her windore.

Mos. In some disguise then.

VOLP. That is true; I must Maintain mine own shape still the same; we'll think. [Exeunt.]

ACT II — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter SIR] POLITIC WOULD-BE, [and] PEREGRINE.

POL. Sir, to a wise man, all the world's his soil:

It is not Italy, nor France, nor Europe,
That must bound me, if my fates call me forth.
Yet I protest, it is no salt desire
Of seeing countries, shifting a religion,
Nor any disaffection to the state
Where I was bred, and unto which I owe
My dearest plots, hath brought me out; much less

That idle, antic, stale, grey-headed project
Of knowing men's minds and manners, with Ulysses! 10

But a peculiar humor of my wife's
Laid for this height of Venice,<sup>2</sup> to observe,
To quote,<sup>3</sup> to learn the language, and so forth —

I hope you travel, sir, with license?<sup>4</sup>

PER.

Yes.

POL. I dare the safelier converse. — How long, sir,
Since you left England?

PER.

Seven weeks.

POL.

So lately!

You ha' not been with my Lord Ambassador?

PER.

Not yet, sir.

POL. Pray you, what news, sir, vents our climate?

I heard last night a most strange thing reported
By some of my Lord's followers, and I long [20
To hear how 't will be seconded!

PER.

What was 't, sir?

POL. Marry, sir, of a raven that should build

In a ship royal of the king's.

PER. [aside]

This fellow,

Does he gull me, trow? or is gull'd? — Your name, sir?

POL. My name is Politic Would-be.

PER. [aside] O, that speaks him. —
A knight, sir?

POL. A poor knight, sir.

PER. Your lady
Lies<sup>5</sup> here in Venice, for intelligence
Of tires and fashions and behavior,
Among the courtesans?<sup>6</sup> The fine Lady
Would-be?

POL. Yes, sir; the spider and the bee<sup>7</sup> ofttimes 30
Suck from one flower.

PER. Good Sir Politic!
I cry you mercy; I have heard much of you:
'T is true, sir, of your raven.

POL. On your knowledge?

PER. Yes, and your lion's whelping in the Tower.

POL. Another whelp!<sup>8</sup>

PER. Another, sir.

POL. Now Heaven!
What prodigies be these? The fires<sup>9</sup> at Berwick!

And the new star! These things concurring,
strange!

And full of omen! Saw you those meteors?

PER. I did, sir.

POL. Fearful! Pray you, sir, confirm
me,
Were there three porpoises seen, above the Bridge,<sup>10</sup> 40
As they give out?

PER. Six, and a sturgeon, sir.

POL. I am astonish'd!

PER. Nay, sir, be not so;
I'll tell you a greater prodigy than these —

POL. What should these things portend?

PER. The very day,
Let me be sure, that I put forth from London,

There was a whale discover'd in the river,
As high as Woolwich, that had waited there,
Few know how many months, for the subver-
sion

Of the Stode<sup>11</sup> fleet.

POL. Is't possible? Believe it,
'T was either sent from Spain, or the Archduke's! 50

<sup>8</sup> According to Stowe's Survey of London, cubs were born to a lioness in the Tower several times during 1604 and 1605.

<sup>9</sup> A meteor. This and the new star were observed in 1604.

Spinola's<sup>12</sup> whale, upon my life, my credit!
Will they not leave these projects? Worthy
sir,
Some other news.

PER. Faith, Stone, the fool, is dead,
And they do lack a tavern fool extremely.

POL. Is Mas' Stone dead?

PER. He's dead, sir; why, I hope
You thought him not immortal? — [aside] Oh,
this knight,

Were he well known, would be a precious thing
To fit our English stage. He that should write
But such a fellow, should be thought to feign
Extremely, if not maliciously.

POL. Stone dead! 60

PER. Dead. — Lord! how deeply, sir, you apprehend it!

He was no kinsman to you?

POL. That<sup>13</sup> I know of.

Well! that same fellow was an unknown<sup>14</sup>
fool.

PER. And yet you knew him, it seems?

POL. I did so. Sir,
I knew him one of the most dangerous head
Living within the state, and so I held him.

PER. Indeed, sir?

POL. While he liv'd, in action
He has receiv'd weekly intelligence,
Upon my knowledge, out of the Low Countries,

For all parts of the world, in cabbages; 70
And those dispens'd again to ambassadors,
In oranges, muskmelons, apricots, Lemons, pome-citrons, and such like; sometimes

In Colchester oysters, and your Selsey cockles.

PER. You make me wonder!

POL. Sir, upon my knowledge.
Nay, I have observ'd him, at your public ordinary,

Take his advertisement<sup>15</sup> from a traveller
(A conceal'd statesman) in a trencher of meat;
And instantly, before the meal was done,
Convey an answer in a toothpick.

PER. Strange! 80
How could this be, sir?

POL. Why, the meat was cut
So like his character, and so laid as he Must easily read the cipher.

PER. I have heard
He could not read, sir.

POL. So 't was given out,
In polity, by those that did employ him ;
But he could read, and had your languages,
And to 't, as sound a noddle —

PER. I have heard, sir,
That your baboons were spies, and that they were
A kind of subtle nation near to China.

POL. Ay, ay, your Mam[a]luchi.<sup>16</sup> Faith, they had 90
Their hand in a French plot or two ; but they Were so extremely given to women, as <sup>17</sup>
They made discovery of all : yet I
Had my advices here, on Wednesday last,
From one of their own coat, they were return'd,
Made their relations, as the fashion is,
And now stand fair for fresh employment.

PER. [aside] Heart !
This Sir Pol will be ignorant of nothing. —
It seems, sir, you know all.

POL. Not all, sir. But
I have some general notions. I do love 100
To note and to observe. Though I live out,
Free from the active torrent, yet I'd mark
The currents and the passages of things
For mine own private use ; and know the ebb
And flows of state.

PER. Believe it, sir, I hold
Myself in no small tie <sup>18</sup> unto my fortunes,
For casting me thus luckily upon you,
Whose knowledge, if your bounty equal it,
May do me great assistance, in instruction
For my behavior, and my bearing, which [110
Is yet so rude and raw —

POL. Why? came you forth
Empty of rules for travel?

PER. Faith, I had
Some common ones, from out that vulgar grammar,
Which he that cri'd Italian to me, taught me.

POL. Why, this it is that spoils all our brave bloods,
Trusting our hopeful gentry unto pedants,
Fellows of outside, and mere bark. You seem
To be a gentleman of ingenuous race. —
I not profess it, but my fate hath been
To be where I have been consulted with, [120
In this high kind,<sup>19</sup> touching some great men's sons,

Persons of blood and honor. —

PER. Who be these, sir?

<sup>19</sup> In matters of this important sort.

SCENE II <sup>20</sup>

[To them enter] MOSCA [and] NANO [disguised, with Workmen who erect a stage.]

Mos. Under that windore, there 't must be.
The same.

POL. Fellows to mount a bank ! Did your instructor

In the dear tongues never discourse to you
Of the Italian mountebanks?

PER. Yes, sir.

POL. Why,
Here shall you see one.

PER. They are quacksalvers,
Fellows that live by venting oils and drugs !

POL. Was that the character he gave you of them?

PER. As I remember.

POL. Pity his ignorance.
They are the only knowing men of Europe !
Great general scholars, excellent physicians, 10
Most admir'd statesmen, profess'd favorites
And cabinet counsellors to the greatest princes !

The only languag'd men of all the world !

PER. And, I have heard, they are most lewd <sup>21</sup> impostors ;
Made all of terms and shreds ; no less beliers
Of great men's favors, than their own vile med'cines ;
Which they will utter <sup>22</sup> upon monstrous oaths ;
Selling that drug for twopence, ere they part,
Which they have valu'd at twelve crowns before.

POL. Sir, calumnies are answer'd best with silence. 20
Yourself shall judge. — Who is it mounts, my friends?

Mos. Scoto of Mantua, <sup>23</sup> sir.

POL. Is 't he? Nay, then
I'll proudly promise, sir, you shall behold Another man than has been phant'sied <sup>24</sup> to
you.

I wonder yet, that he should mount his bank
Here in this nook, that has been wont t' appear
In face of the Piazza ! Here he comes.

[Enter VOLPONE, disguised as a mountebank doctor, and followed by a crowd of people.]

VOLP. [to NANO] Mount, zany.

GRE. Follow, follow, follow, follow, follow.

<sup>22</sup> Vend.

land about this time. (Gifford.)

<sup>24</sup> Falsely pictured.

POL. See how the people follow him ! h' is a man 30
May write ten thousand crowns in bank here.

Note,
Mark but his gesture — I do use to observe
The state he keeps in getting up !

PER. 'T is worth it, sir.

VOLP. Most noble gentlemen, and my worthy patrons, it may seem strange that I, your Scoto Mantuano, who was ever wont to fix my bank in the face of the public Piazza, near the shelter of the portico to the Procuratia,<sup>25</sup> should now, after eight months' absence from this illustrious city of Venice, [40 humbly retire myself into an obscure nook of the Piazza.

POL. Did not I now object the same ?

PER. Peace, sir.

VOLP. Let me tell you : I am not, as your Lombard proverb saith, cold on my feet ; or content to part with my commodities at a cheaper rate than I accustomed — look not for it. Nor that the calumnious reports of that impudent detractor, and shame to our profession (Alessandro Buttone,<sup>26</sup> I mean), who [50 gave out, in public, I was condemn'd a' sfor-zato<sup>27</sup> to the galleys, for poisoning the Cardinal Bembo's — <sup>28</sup> cook, hath at all attached, much less dejected me. No, no, worthy gentlemen ; to tell you true, I cannot endure to see the rabble of these ground ciarlatani<sup>29</sup> that spread their cloaks on the pavement, as if they meant to do feats of activity, and then come in lamely, with their mouldy tales out of Boccacio, like stale Tabarin,<sup>30</sup> the fabulist ; [60 some of them discoursing their travels, and of their tedious captivity in the Turk's galleys, when, indeed, were the truth known, they were the Christian's galleys, where very temperately they ate bread, and drunk water, as a wholesome penance, enjoin'd them by their confessors, for base pilferies.

POL. Note but his bearing, and contempt of these.

VOLP. These turdy-facy-nasty-paty-lousy-fartical rogues, with one poor groat's-worth [70 of unprepar'd antimony, finely wrapp'd up in

<sup>28</sup> The dash has not been explained. Possibly it is intended to delude the audience into expecting something spicy, for Bembo's life was notoriously sumptuous and voluptuous.

<sup>30</sup> A traditional name, though there was a Tabarin who was buffoon of a French charlatan's troupe at Paris early in the seventeenth century.

several scartoccios,<sup>31</sup> are able, very well, to kill their twenty a week, and play ; yet these meagre, starv'd spirits, who have half stopp'd the organs of their minds with earthy oppila-tions,<sup>32</sup> want not their favorers among your shrivell'd salad-eating artisans, who are overjoy'd that they may have their half-pe'rth of physic ; though it purge 'em into another world, 't makes no matter. 80

POL. Excellent ! ha' you heard better language, sir ?

VOLP. Well, let 'em go. And, gentlemen, honorable gentlemen, know that for this time our bank, being thus remov'd from the clamours of the canaglia,<sup>33</sup> shall be the scene of pleasure and delight ; for I have nothing to sell, little or nothing to sell.

POL. I told you, sir, his end.

PER. You did so, sir.

VOLP. I protest I and my six servants are not able to make of this precious liquor so [90 fast as it is fetch'd away from my lodging by gentlemen of your city, strangers of the Terra-firma,<sup>34</sup> worshipful merchants, ay, and senators, too : who, ever since my arrival, have detained me to their uses, by their splendidous liberali-ties. And worthily. For what avails your rich man to have his magazines stuff'd with moscadelli, or of the purest grape, when his physicians prescribe him, on pain of death, to drink nothing but water cocted<sup>35</sup> with [100 aniseeds ? O health ! health ! the blessing of the rich ! the riches of the poor ! who can buy thee at too dear a rate, since there is no enjoying this world without thee ? Be not then so sparing of your purses, honorable gentlemen, as to abridge the natural course of life —

PER. You see his end.

POL.

Ay, is't not good ?

VOLP. For, when a humid flux, or catarrh, by the mutability of air, falls from your head into an arm or shoulder, or any other part, [110 take you a ducat, or your cecchine of gold, and apply to the place affected ; see what good effect it can work. No, no ; 't is this blessed unguento,<sup>36</sup> this rare extraction, that hath only power to disperse all malignant humors that proceed either of hot, cold, moist, or windy causes —

PER. I would he had put in dry too.

POL.

'Pray you, observe.

VOLP. To fortify the most indigest and crude stomach, ay, were it of one that, through [120 extreme weakness, vomited blood, applying only a warm napkin to the place, after the unction and fricace ;<sup>37</sup> — for the vertigine<sup>38</sup> in the head, putting but a drop into your nostrils, likewise behind the ears, a most sovereign and approv'd remedy ; the mal caduco,<sup>39</sup> cramps, convulsions, paralyses, epilepsies, tremor cordia, retir'd<sup>40</sup> nerves, ill vapors of the spleen, stoppings of the liver, the stone, the strangury, hernia ventosa, iliaca passio ;<sup>41</sup> stops a [130 dysenteria immediately ; easeth the torsion of the small guts ; and cures melancholia hypochondriaca, being taken and applied according to my printed receipt. (Pointing to his bill and his glass) For this is the physician, this the medicine ; this counsels, this cures ; this gives direction, this works the effect ; and, in sum, both together may be term'd an abstract of the theoretic and practic in the Aesculapian art. 'T will cost you eight crowns. — And, [140 Zan Fritada,<sup>42</sup> pray thee sing a verse, extempore, in honor of it.

POL. How do you like him, sir ?

PER. Most strangely, I !

POL. Is not his language rare ?

PER. But<sup>43</sup> alchemy,

I never heard the like, or Broughton's<sup>44</sup> books.

SONG

Had old Hippocrates, or Galen,
That to their books put med'cines all in,
But known this secret, they had never
(Of which they will be guilty ever) 150
Been murderers of so much paper,
Or wasted many a hurtless taper ;
No Indian drug had e'er been famed,
Tobacco, sassafras, not named ;
Ne yet of guacum<sup>45</sup> one small stick, sir,
Nor Raymund Lully's<sup>46</sup> great elixir.
Ne had been known the Danish Gonswart,<sup>47</sup>
Or Paracelsus, with his long-sword.<sup>48</sup>

PER. All this, yet, will not do ; eight crowns is high.

VOLP. No more. — Gentlemen, if I had but time to discourse to you the miraculous [160 effects of this my oil, surnamed oglio del Scoto, with the countless catalogue of those I have cured of th' aforesaid, and many more diseases ; the patents and privileges of all the princes and commonwealths of Christendom ; or but the depositions of those that appear'd on my part, before the signiory of the Sanità<sup>49</sup> and most learned College of Physicians ; where I was authorized, upon notice taken of the admirable virtues of my medicaments, and mine [170 own excellency in matter of rare and unknown secrets, not only to disperse them publicly in this famous city, but in all the territories that happily joy under the government of the most pious and magnificent states of Italy. But may some other gallant fellow say, " Oh, there be divers that make profession to have as good, and as experimented receipts as yours." Indeed, very many have assay'd,<sup>50</sup> like apes, in imitation of that which is really and [180 essentially in me, to make of this oil ; bestow'd great cost in furnaces, stills, alembics, continual fires, and preparation of the ingredients (as indeed there goes to it six hundred several simples, besides some quantity of human fat, for the conglutination, which we buy of the anatomists) ; but when these practitioners come to the last decoction — blow, blow, puff, puff, and all flies in fumo.<sup>51</sup> Ha, ha, ha ! Poor wretches ! I rather pity their folly [190 and indiscretion, than their loss of time and money ; for those may be recovered by industry ; but to be a fool born, is a disease incurable. For myself, I always from my youth have endeavor'd to get the rarest secrets, and book them, either in exchange or for money ; I spared nor cost nor labor where anything was worthy to be learned. And, gentlemen, honorable gentlemen, I will undertake, by virtue of chemical art, out of the honorable [200 hat that covers your head, to extract the four elements ; that is to say, the fire, air, water, and earth, and return you your felt without burn or stain. For, whilst others have been at the balloo<sup>52</sup> I have been at my book ; and am now past the craggy paths of study, and come to the flow'ry plains of honor and reputation.

POL. I do assure you, sir, that is his aim.

<sup>52</sup> Probably a game of ball, called "balloon."

VOLP. But, to our price.

PER. And that withal,<sup>53</sup> Sir Pol. [210

VOLP. You all know, honorable gentlemen, I never valu'd this ampulla, or vial, at less than eight crowns; but for this time, I am content to be depriv'd of it for six; six crowns is the price, and less in courtesy I know you cannot offer me; take it or leave it, howsoever, both it and I am at your service. I ask you not as the value of the thing, for then I should demand of you a thousand crowns; so the Cardinals Montalto, Fernese, the great Duke [220 of Tuscany, my gossip,<sup>54</sup> with divers other princes, have given me; but I despise money. Only to show my affection to you, honorable gentlemen, and your illustrious state here, I have neglected the messages of these princes, mine own offices,<sup>55</sup> fram'd my journey hither, only to present you with the fruits of my travels. — Tune your voices once more to the touch of your instruments, and give the [229 honorable assembly some delightful recreation.

PER. What monstrous and most painful circumstance

Is here, to get some three or four gazets,<sup>56</sup> Some threepence i' the whole! for that 't will come to.

SONG

You that would last long, list to my song;
Make no more coil, but buy of this oil.
Would you be ever fair, and young?
Stout of teeth, and strong of tongue?
Tart of palate? quick of ear?
Sharp of sight? of nostril clear? 240
Moist of hand? and light of foot?
Or (I will come nearer to 't)
Would you live free from all diseases?
Do the act your mistress pleases,
Yet fright all aches<sup>57</sup> from your bones?
Here's a med'cine for the nones.<sup>58</sup>

VOLP. Well, I am in a humor, at this time, to make a present of the small quantity my coffer contains; to the rich in courtesy, and to the poor for God's sake. [250 Wherefore now mark: I ask'd you six crowns; and six crowns, at other times, you have paid me; you shall not give me six crowns, nor five, nor four, nor three, nor two, nor one; nor half a ducat; no, nor a m[o]ccinigo.<sup>59</sup> Six—pence it will cost you, or six hundred pound—expect no lower price, for, by the banner of my front, I will not bate a bagatine,<sup>60</sup>—that I will have, only, a pledge of your loves, to carry something from amongst you, to show I am [260 not contemn'd by you. Therefore, now, toss your handkerchiefs, cheerfully, cheerfully; and be advertised, that the first heroic spirit that deigns to grace me with a handkerchief, I will give it a little remembrance of something beside, shall please it better than if I had presented it with a double pistolet.<sup>61</sup>

PER. Will you be that heroic spark, Sir Pol?

CELIA, at the window, throws down her handkerchief.

O, see! the windore has prevented<sup>62</sup> you.

VOLP. Lady, I kiss your bounty; and, [270 for this timely grace you have done your poor Scoto of Mantua, I will return you, over and above my oil, a secret of that high and inestimable nature, shall make you for ever enamor'd on that minute wherein your eye first descended on so mean, yet not altogether to be despis'd, an object. Here is a powder conceal'd in this paper, of which, if I should speak to the worth, nine thousand volumes were but as one page, that page as a [280 line, that line as a word; so short is this pilgrimage of man, which some call life, to the expressing of it. Would I reflect on the price? Why, the whole world is but as an empire, that empire as a province, that province as a bank, that bank as a private purse, to the purchase of it. I will only tell you: it is the powder that made Venus a goddess, given her by Apollo, that kept her perpetually young, clear'd her wrinkles, firm'd her gums, fill'd [290 her skin, color'd her hair; from her deriv'd to Helen, and at the sack of Troy unfortunately lost; till now, in this our age, it was as happily recover'd, by a studious antiquary, out of some ruins of Asia, who sent a moiety of it to the court of France (but much sophisticated), wherewith the ladies there now color their hair. The rest, at this present, remains with me, extracted to a quintessence; so that, wherever it but touches, in youth it per- [300 petually preserves, in age restores the complexion; seats your teeth, did they dance like virginal jacks,<sup>63</sup> firm as a wall; makes them white as ivory, that were black as —

<sup>63</sup> A Venetian coin worth about eighteen cents.

SCENE III <sup>64</sup>

[To them enter] CORVINO.

COR. Spite o' the devil, and my shame!
Come down here;
Come down! — No house but mine to make your scene?
Signior Flaminio,<sup>65</sup> will you down, sir? down?
What, is my wife your Franciscina,<sup>66</sup> sir?
No windores on the whole piazza, here,
To make your properties, but mine? but mine?

He beats away the mountebank, etc.

Heart! ere to-morrow I shall be new christen'd,
And called the Pantalone di Bi[sognosi];<sup>67</sup>
About the town.

PER. What should this mean, Sir Pol?

POL. Some trick of state, believe it; I will home. 10

PER. It may be some design on you.

POL. I know not.

I'll stand upon my guard.

PER. It is your best, sir.

POL. This three weeks, all my advices, all my letters,

They have been intercepted.

PER. Indeed, sir?

Best have a care.

POL. Nay, so I will.

PER. [aside] This knight,
I may not lose him, for my mirth, till night.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV <sup>68</sup>

[Enter] VOLPONE, [and] MOSCA.

VOLP. O, I am wounded.

MOS. Where, sir?

VOLP. Not without;
Those blows were nothing; I could bear them
ever.

But angry Cupid, bolting<sup>69</sup> from her eyes,
Hath shot himself into me like a flame;
Where now he flings about his burning heat,
As in a furnace some<sup>70</sup> ambitious fire Whose vent is stopp'd. The fight is all within
me.

I cannot live, except thou help me, Mosca;
My liver melts, and I, without the hope

of a troupe of Italian actors. (Holt.)

<sup>67</sup> The old gull of the commedia dell'arte. Lit.,
Fool of the Needy.

<sup>69</sup> Shooting.

<sup>70</sup> So Ff, Q; some copies of F1 an.

Of some soft air from her refreshing breath, 10
Am but a heap of cinders.

MOS. 'Las, good sir,

Would you had never seen her.

VOLP. Nay, would thou
Hadst never told me of her.

MOS. Sir, 't is true;

I do confess I was unfortunate,
And you unhappy; but I am bound in conscience,

No less than duty, to effect my best
To your release of torment, and I will, sir.

VOLP. Dear Mosca, shall I hope?

MOS. Sir, more than dear,
I will not bid you to despair of aught
Within a human compass.

VOLP. O, there spoke [20
My better angel. Mosca, take my keys,
Gold, plate, and jewels, all 's at thy devotion;
Employ them how thou wilt: nay, coin me
too:

So thou in this but crown my longings, Mosca!

MOS. Use but your patience.

VOLP. So I have.

MOS. I doubt not
To bring success to your desires.

VOLP. Nay, then,
I not repent me of my late disguise.

MOS. If you can horn<sup>71</sup> him, sir, you need not.

VOLP. True.

Besides, I never meant him for my heir.

Is not the color o' my beard and eyebrows [30
To make me known?

MOS. No jot.

VOLP. I did it well.

MOS. So well, would I could follow you in mine,

With half the happiness; and yet I would Escape your epilogue.<sup>72</sup>

VOLP. But were they gull'd
With a belief that I was Scoto?

MOS. Sir,

Scoto himself could hardly have distinguish'd!
I have not time to flatter you now; we'll part:
And as I prosper, so applaud my art. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V <sup>73</sup>

[Enter] CORVINO, [with his sword in his hand,
dragging in] CELIA.

CORV. Death of mine honor, with the city's fool!

A juggling, tooth-drawing, prating mountebank!

And at a public windore! where, whilst he,
With his strain'd action, and his dole of faces,<sup>74</sup>
To his drug-lecture draws your itching ears,
A crew of old, unmarried, noted lechers,
Stood leering up like satyrs; and you smile
Most graciously! and fan your favors forth,
To give your hot spectators satisfaction!
What, was your mountbank their call? their whistle? 10

Or were you enamor'd on his copper rings,
His saffron jewel, with the toad-stone<sup>75</sup> in 't,
Or his embroid'ed suit, with the cope-stitch,<sup>76</sup>
Made of a hearse cloth, or his old tilt-feather, Or his starch'd blood? Well! you shall have him, yes.

He shall come home, and minister unto you
The fricace<sup>77</sup> for the mother.<sup>78</sup> Or, let me see,
I think you'd rather mount!<sup>79</sup> Would you not mount?

Why, if you'll mount, you may; yes, truly,
you may.

And so you may be seen, down to th' foot. [20
Get you a cittern, Lady Vanity,
And be a dealer with the virtuous man;
Make one. I'll but protest myself a cuckold,
And save your dowry. I am a Dutchman, I!
For if you thought me an Italian,
You would be damn'd ere you did this, you
whore.

Thou'dst tremble to imagine that the murder
Of father, mother, brother, all thy race,
Should follow, as the subject of my justice!

CEL. Good sir, have patience!

CORV. What couldst thou propose [30
Less to thyself, than in this heat of wrath,
And stung with my dishonor, I should strike
This steel into thee, with as many stabs
As thou wert gaz'd upon with goatish eyes?

CEL. Alas, sir, be appeas'd! I could not think

My being at the windore should more now
Move your impatience than at other times.

CORV. No? not to seek and entertain a parley

With a known knave? before a multitude?
You were an actor with your handkerchief! [40

Which he most sweetly kiss'd in the receipt,
And might, no doubt, return it with a letter
And 'point the place where you might meet;
your sister's,

Your mother's, or your aunt's might serve the turn.

CEL. Why, dear sir, when do I make these excuses,

Or ever stir abroad, but to the church?

And that so seldom —

CORV. Well, it shall be less;
And thy restraint before was liberty,
To what I now decree; and therefore mark
me.

First, I will have this bawdy light<sup>80</sup> damm'd
up; 50

And till't be done, some two or three yards
off

I'll chalk a line; o'er which if thou but chance
To set thy desp'rate foot, more hell, more horror,

More wild remorseless rage shall seize on thee
Than on a conjuror that had heedless left
His circle's safety ere his devil was laid.

Then here's a lock<sup>81</sup> which I will hang upon
thee,

And, now I think on't, I will keep thee backwards;

Thy lodging shall be backwards, thy walks
backwards,

Thy prospect — all be backwards, and no pleasure, 60

That thou shalt know but backwards. Nay, since you force

My honest nature, know it is your own
Being too open, makes me use you thus.

Since you will not contain your subtle nostrils
In a sweet room, but they must snuff the air
Of rank and sweaty passengers<sup>82</sup> — (knock within) one knocks.

Away, and be not seen, pain of thy life;

Nor look toward the windore; if thou dost —

Nay, stay, hear this — let me not prosper,
whore,

But I will make thee an anatomy,<sup>83</sup> 70

Dissect thee mine own self, and read a lecture
Upon thee to the city, and in public.

Away! — [Exit CELIA.]

[Enter Servitore.]

Who's there?

SER.

'T is Signior Mosca, sir.

<sup>74</sup> Grimaces.

SCENE VI <sup>84</sup>CORVINO [and Servitore remain.]CORV. Let him come in. [Exit Servitore.]

— His master's dead! There's yet
Some good to help the bad. — [Enter
Mosca.] My Mosca, welcome;

I guess your news.

Mos. I fear you cannot, sir.

CORV. Is't not his death?

Mos. Rather the contrary.

CORV. Not his recovery?

Mos. Yes, sir.

CORV. I am curs'd;
I am bewitch'd; my crosses meet to vex me.
How? how? how? how?

Mos. Why, sir, with Scoto's oil!
Corbaccio and Voltore brought of it,
Whilst I was busy in an inner room —

CORV. Death! that damn'd mountebank!
but for the law, <sup>10</sup>

Now, I could kill the rascal. 'T cannot be
His oil should have that virtue. Ha' not I Known him a common rogue, come fiddling in
To th' osteria,<sup>85</sup> with a tumbling whore,<sup>86</sup>
And, when he has done all his forc'd tricks, been glad

Of a poor spoonful of dead wine, with flies in 't?
It cannot be. All his ingredients
Are a sheep's gall, a roasted bitch's marrow,
Some few sod<sup>87</sup> earwigs, pounded caterpillars,
A little capon's grease, and fasting spittle: [20
I know 'em to a dram.

Mos. I know not, sir;
But some on 't, there, they pour'd into his ears,
Some in his nostrils, and recover'd him;
Applying but the fricace.

CORV. Pox o' that fricace.

Mos. And, since, to seem the more officious
And flatt'ring of his health, there, they have
had,

At extreme fees, the college of physicians Consulting on him, how they might restore
him;

Where one would have a cataplasm<sup>88</sup> of spices,
Another a flay'd ape clapp'd to his breast, <sup>30</sup>
A third would ha' it a dog, a fourth an oil,
With wildcats' skins. At last, they all resolv'd
That, to preserve him, was no other means
But some young woman must be straight sought out,
Lusty, and full of juice, to sleep by him;

And to this service most unhappily,
And most unwillingly, am I now employ'd,
Which here I thought to pre-acquaint you with,

For your advice, since it concerns you most;
Because I would not do that thing might cross
Your ends, on whom I have my whole dependence, sir. <sup>41</sup>

Yet, if I do not they may delate<sup>89</sup>
My slackness to my patron, work me out
Of his opinion; and there all your hopes,
Ventures, or whatsoever, are all frustrate.
I do but tell you, sir. Besides, they are all
Now striving who shall first present him.
Therefore —

I could entreat you, briefly, conclude somewhat:

Prevent 'em if you can.

CORV. Death to my hopes!
This is my villainous fortune! Best to hire [50
Some common courtesan!

Mos. Ay, I thought on that, sir;
But they are all so subtle, full of art —
And age again doting and flexible,
So as — I cannot tell — we may, perchance,
Light on a quean may cheat us all.

CORV. 'T is true.

Mos. No, no; it must be one that has no tricks, sir,
Some simple thing, a creature made unto<sup>90</sup> it;
Some wench you may command. Ha' you no kinswoman?

Gods so — Think, think, think, think, think,
think, think, sir. <sup>59</sup>

One o' the doctors offer'd there his daughter.

CORV. How!

Mos. Yes, Signior Lupo, the physician.

CORV. His daughter!

Mos. And a virgin, sir. Why, alas,
He knows the state of 's body, what it is:
That naught can warm his blood, sir, but a fever,

Nor any incantation raise his spirit;
A long forgetfulness hath seiz'd that part.
Besides, sir, who shall know it? Some one or two —

CORV. I pray thee give me leave. — [stepping aside] If any man
But I had had this luck — The thing in't
self,

I know, is nothing. — Wherefore should not I
As well command my blood and my affec-

<sup>84</sup> The same. <sup>85</sup> Hostelry, tavern. Q Osteria.<sup>86</sup> I.e., a female acrobat.<sup>87</sup> Sodden, boiled. <sup>88</sup> Poultice.<sup>89</sup> Denounce. <sup>90</sup> Prepared for, put up to.<sup>91</sup> My fleshly nature and my feelings.

As this dull doctor? In the point of honor,
The cases are all one of wife and daughter.

Mos. [aside] I hear him coming.<sup>92</sup>

CORV. [aside] She shall do 't; 't is done.
'Slight!<sup>93</sup> if this doctor, who is not engag'd,
Unless 't be for his counsel, which is nothing,
Offer his daughter, what should I, that am
So deeply in? I will prevent him. Wretch!
Covetous wretch! — Mosca, I have deter-
min'd.

Mos. How, sir?

CORV. We'll make all sure. The party you wot of 80
Shall be mine own wife, Mosca.

Mos. Sir, the thing,
But that I would not seem to counsel you,
I should have motion'd<sup>94</sup> to you, at the first;
And make your count,<sup>95</sup> you have cut all their throats.

Why! 't is directly taking a possession!
And in his next fit, we may let him go.
'T is but to pull the pillow from his head,
And he is thr[o]ttled; it had been done before
But for your scrupulous doubts.

CORV. Ay, a plague on 't;
My conscience fools my wit! Well, I'll be brief, 90
And so be thou, lest they should be before us.
Go home; prepare him; tell him with what zeal

And willingness I do it. Swear it was
On the first hearing, as thou mayst do, truly,
Mine own free motion.

Mos. Sir, I warrant you,
I'll so possess him with it, that the rest
Of his starv'd clients shall be banish'd all;
And only you receiv'd. But come not, sir,
Until I send, for I have something else
To ripen for your good — you must not know 't. 100

CORV. But do not you forget to send, now.

Mos. Fear not. [Exit.]

SCENE VII<sup>96</sup>

CORVINO [remains.]

CORV. Where are you, Wife? My Celia!
Wife!

[Enter CELIA.]

— What, blubbering?
Come, dry those tears. I think thou thought'st me in earnest;

<sup>95</sup> Count on it. <sup>96</sup> The same.

Ha? By this light I talk'd so but to try thee.
Methinks, the lightness of the occasion Should ha' confirm'd thee. Come, I am not jealous.

CEL. No?

CORV. Faith I am not, I, nor never was;
It is a poor, unprofitable humor.
Do not I know, if women have a will,
They'll do 'gainst all the watches o' the
world,
And that the fiercest spies are tam'd with
gold? 10

Tut, I am confident in thee, thou shalt see 't;
And see I'll give thee cause, too, to believe it.
Come, kiss me. — Go, and make thee ready
straight,
In all thy best attire, thy choicest jewels,
Put 'em all on, and, with 'em, thy best looks:
We are invited to a solemn feast,
At old Volpone's, where it shall appear
How far I am free from jealousy or fear.
[Exeunt.]

ACT III — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] MOSCA.

Mos. I fear I shall begin to grow in love
With my dear self and my most prosp'rous parts;
They do so spring and burgeon. I can feel
A whimsy i' my blood — I know not how — Success hath made me wanton. I could skip
Out of my skin now, like a subtle snake,
I am so limber. Oh! your parasite
Is a most precious thing, dropp'd from above,
Not bred 'mongst clods and clotpolls, here on earth.

I muse the mystery<sup>2</sup> was not made a science,
It is so liberally profess'd! Almost 11
All the wise world is little else, in nature,
But parasites or sub-parasites. And yet
I mean not those that have your bare town-art,
To know who's fit to feed 'em; have no house,
No family, no care, and therefore mold Tales for men's ears, to bait that sense<sup>3</sup>; or get
Kitchen-invention, and some stale receipts
To please the belly, and the groin; nor those,
With their court dog-tricks, that can fawn and fleer, 20

<sup>2</sup> Profession.

Make their revenue <sup>4</sup> out of legs and faces,<sup>5</sup>
 Echo my Lord, and lick away a mote :
 But your fine, elegant rascal, that can rise
 And stoop, almost together, like an arrow ;
 Shoot through the air as nimbly as a star ;
 Turn short as doth a swallow ; and be here,
 And there, and here, and yonder, all at once ;
 Present to any humor, all occasion ;
 And change a visor swifter than a thought ! 29
 This is the creature had the art born with him ;
 Toils not to learn it, but doth practise it Out of most excellent nature ;<sup>6</sup> and such sparks
 Are the true parasites, others but their zanies.

SCENE II <sup>7</sup>

[To] MOSCA [enter] BONARIO.

Mos. Who's this? Bonario, old Corbacio's son?
The person I was bound to seek. Fair sir,
You are happ'ly met.

BON. That cannot be by thee.

Mos. Why, sir?

BON. Nay, 'pray thee know thy way,
and leave me.

I would be loth to interchange discourse
With such a mate <sup>8</sup> as thou art.

Mos. Courteous sir,
Scorn not my poverty.

BON. Not I, by Heaven ;
But thou shalt give me leave to hate thy base-
ness.

Mos. Baseness !

BON. Ay ; answer me, is not thy sloth
Sufficient argument? thy flattery? 10
Thy means of feeding?

Mos. Heaven be good to me.
These imputations are too common, sir,
And eas'ly stuck on virtue, when she's poor.
You are unequal <sup>9</sup> to me, and howe'er
Your sentence may be righteous, yet you are
not.

That, ere you know me, thus proceed in censure.

St. Mark bear witness 'gainst you, 't is inhuman. [Weeps.]

BON. [aside] What! does he weep? the sign is soft and good!

I do repent me that I was so harsh.

Mos. 'Tis true, that, sway'd by strong necessity, 20

I am enforc'd to eat my careful bread
With too much obsequy ; <sup>10</sup> 't is true, beside,
That I am fain to spin mine own poor raiment
Out of my mere observance, <sup>11</sup> being not born
To a free fortune ; but that I have done
Base offices, in rending friends asunder,
Dividing families, betraying counsels,
Whispering false lies, or mining men with praises,

Train'd <sup>12</sup> their credulity with perjuries,
Corrupted chastity, or am in love 30
With mine own tender ease, but would not rather

Prove the most rugged and laborious course,
That might redeem my present estimation,
Let me here perish, in all hope of goodness.

BON. [aside] This cannot be a personated passion! —

I was to blame, so to mistake thy nature ;
'Pray thee forgive me ; and speak out thy bus'ness.

Mos. Sir, it concerns you ; and though I may seem

At first to make a main offence in manners,
And in my gratitude unto my master, 40
Yet for the pure love which I bear all right,
And hatred of the wrong, I must reveal it.
This very hour your father is in purpose
To disinheret you —

BON.                   How !

Mos.                      And thrust you forth,
As a mere stranger to his blood ; 't is true, sir.
The work no way engageth me, but as
I claim an interest in the general state
Of goodness and true virtue, which I hear T' abound in you ; and for which mere respect.<sup>13</sup>

Without a second aim, sir, I have done it. 50

BON. This tale hath lost thee much of the late trust

Thou hadst with me ; it is impossible.
I know not how to lend it any thought
My father should be so unnatural.

Mos. It is a confidence that well becomes Your piety; <sup>14</sup> and form'd, no doubt, it is From your own simple innocence; which makes

Your wrong<sup>15</sup> more monstrous and abhorr'd.
But, sir,

I now will tell you more. This very minute,
It is, or will be doing ; and if you 60

<sup>4</sup> Accented on second syllable.

• Bows and smirks.

11 Service, attendance.

12 Led on, decoyed.

<sup>13</sup> On which consideration alone.

15 The injury to you.

Shall be but pleas'd to go with me, I'll bring you,
I dare not say where you shall see, but where
Your ear shall be a witness of the deed;
Hear yourself written bastard, and profess'd
The common issue of the earth.

BON. I'm maz'd!

MOS. Sir, if I do it not, draw your just sword,

And score your vengeance on my front and face;

Mark me your villain. You have too much wrong,

And I do suffer for you, sir. My heart 69
Weeps blood in anguish —

BON. Lead. I follow thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III <sup>16</sup>

[Enter] VOLPONE, NANO, ANDROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.

VOLP. Mosca stays long, methinks. — Bring forth your sports,
And help to make the wretched time more sweet.

NAN. Dwarf, fool, and eunuch, well met here we be.

A question it were now, whether of us three,
Being all the known delicacies <sup>17</sup> of a rich man,
In pleasing him, claim the precedency can?

CAS. I claim for myself.

AND. And so doth the fool.

NAN. 'Tis foolish indeed; let me set you both to school.

First for your dwarf, he's little and witty,
And everything, as it is little, is pretty; 10
Else why do men say to a creature of my shape,
So soon as they see him, "It's a pretty little ape"?
And why a pretty ape, but for pleasing imitation
Of greater men's action, in a ridiculous fashion?
Beside, this feat <sup>18</sup> body of mine doth not crave Half the meat, drink, and cloth, one of your bulks will have.

Admit your fool's face be the mother of laughter,
Yet, for his brain, it must always come after;
And though that do feed him, it's a pitiful case, 20
His body is beholding to such a bad face.

One knocks.

VOLP. Who's there? My couch; away!
Look, Nano, see. —

[Exeunt ANDROGYNO and CASTRONE.]

Give me my caps first — go, inquire. [Exit
NANO.] Now, Cupid
Send it be Mosca, and with fair return.

[Re-enter NANO.]

NAN. It is the beauteous Madam —

VOLP. Would-be — is it?

NAN. The same.

VOLP. Now torment on me! Squire her in;
For she will enter, or dwell here for ever.

Nay, quickly. [Exit NANO; VOLPONE retires to his couch.] — That my fit were past!

I fear

A second hell too, that my loathing this
Will quite expel my appetite to the other.
Would she were taking now her tedious leave.
Lord, how it threatens me what I am to suffer! [31

SCENE IV <sup>19</sup>

[To him enter] NANO [and] LADY [POLITIC
WOULD-BE].

LADY. I thank you, good sir. Pray you signify

Unto your patron I am here. — This band Shows not my neck enough. — I trouble you,
sir;

Let me request you bid one of my women
Come hither to me. [Exit NANO] — In good faith, I am dress'd

Most favorably to-day; it is no matter;
'T is well enough.

[Re-enter NANO with a Waiting Woman.]

Look, see, these petulant things!
How they have done this!

VOLP. [aside] I do feel the fever
Ent'ring in at mine ears; oh, for a charm
To fright it hence.

LADY. Come nearer. Is this curl [10
In his <sup>20</sup> right place? or this? Why is this higher

Than all the rest? You ha' not wash'd your eyes yet?

Or do they not stand even i' your head?
Where's your fellow? call her. [Exit Woman.]

NAN [aside] Now, St. Mark
Deliver us! anon she'll beat her women,
Because her nose is red.

[Re-enter Woman with another.]

LADY. I pray you view
This tire, <sup>21</sup> forsooth. Are all things apt, or no?

WOM. One hair a little here sticks out, forsooth.

LADY. Does't so, forsooth! and where was your dear <sup>22</sup> sight,
When it did so, forsooth? What now! bird-

<sup>23</sup> I.e., just glancing and then looking away; not giving proper attention. (Kittredge.)

And you, too? 'Pray you, both approach and mend it.

Now, by that light I muse yo' are not asham'd !
I, that have preach'd these things so oft unto you,

Read you the principles, argu'd all the grounds,
Disputed every fitness, every grace,
Call'd you to counsel of so frequent dressings—

NAN. [aside] More carefully than of your fame or honor.

LADY. Made you acquainted what an ample dowry

The knowledge of these things would be unto you,

Able alone to get you noble husbands 30
At your return; and you thus to neglect it !

Besides, you seeing what a curious<sup>24</sup> nation
Th' Italians are, what will they say of me?
"The English lady cannot dress herself."

Here's a fine imputation to our country !
Well, go your ways, and stay i' the next room.
This fucus<sup>25</sup> was too coarse too; it's no matter.—

Good sir, you'll give 'em entertainment?

[Exeunt NANO and Waiting Women.]

VOLP. [aside] The storm comes toward me.

LADY [going to the couch] How does my Volp[one]?

VOLP. Troubled with noise; I cannot sleep.
I dreamt 40

That a strange Fury ent'red now my house,
And, with the dreadful tempest of her breath,
Did cleave my roof asunder.

LADY. Believe me, and I
Had the most fearful dream, could I remember 't—VOLP. [aside] Out on my fate ! I ha' giv'n her the occasion

How to torment me: she will tell me hers.

LADY. Methought the golden mediocrity,
Polite, and delicate—

VOLP. O, if you do love me,
No more; I sweat, and suffer, at the mention
Of any dream. Feel how I tremble yet. 50

LADY. Alas, good soul ! the passion of the heart.<sup>26</sup>

Seed-pearl were good now, boil'd with syrup of apples,

Tincture of gold, and coral, citron-pills,
Your elecampane root, myrobalans<sup>27</sup>—

VOLP. Ay me, I have ta'en a grasshopper by the wing !<sup>28</sup>

LADY. Burnt silk and amber. You have muscadell

Good i' the house—

VOLP. You will not drink, and part?<sup>29</sup>

LADY. No, fear not that. I doubt we shall not get

Some English saffron—half a dram would serve; 50

Your sixteen cloves, a little musk, dried mints,
Bugloss, and barley meal—

VOLP. [aside] She's in again;

Before I feign'd diseases—now I have one.

LADY. And these appli'd with a right scarlet cloth—

VOLP. [aside] Another flood of words! a very torrent!

LADY. Shall I, sir, make you a poultice?

VOLP. No, no, no.

I am very well; you need prescribe no more.

LADY. I have a little studied physic; but now

I'm all for music, save, i' the forenoons,
An hour or two for painting. I would have

A lady, indeed, t' have all letters and arts, [70
Be able to discourse, to write, to paint;

But principal, as Plato holds, your music
(And so does wise Pythagoras, I take it)

Is your true rapture, when there is concent<sup>30</sup>
In face, in voice, and clothes, and is, indeed,

Our sex's chiefest ornament.

VOLP. The poet

As old in time as Plato, and as knowing,
Says that your highest female grace is silence.

LADY. Which o' your poets? Petrarch, or Tasso, or Dante?

Guarini? Ariosto? Aretine? 80
Cieco<sup>31</sup> di Hadria? I have read them all.

VOLP. [aside] Is everything a cause to my destruction?

LADY. I think I ha' two or three of 'em about me.

VOLP. [aside] The sun, the sea, will sooner both stand still

Than her eternal tongue! Nothing can scape it.

LADY. Here's Pastor Fido<sup>32</sup>—

VOLP. [aside] Profess obstinate silence;
That's now my safest.

LADY. All our English writers,
I mean such as are happy in th' Italian,
Will deign to steal out of this author, mainly;

Almost as much as from Montagnié<sup>33</sup>: 90
 He has so modern and facile a vein,
 Fitting the time, and catching the court-ear.
 Your Petrarch is more passionate, yet he,
 In days of sonnetting, trusted 'em with much.<sup>34</sup>
 Dante is hard, and few can understand him.
 But for a desperate wit, there's Aretine!
 Only, his pictures are a little obscene —
 You mark me not!

VOLP. Alas, my mind's perturb'd.

LADY. Why, in such cases, we must cure ourselves,

Make use of our philosophy —

VOLP. Oh, [a]y me! 100

LADY. And as we find our passions do rebel,
 Encounter 'em with reason, or divert 'em,
 By giving scope unto some other humor
 Of lesse[r] danger: as, in politic bodies,
 There's nothing more doth overwhelm the judgment,
 And clouds the understanding, than too much
 Settling and fixing, and, as 't were, subsiding
 Upon one object. For the incorporating
 Of these same outward things into that part
 Which we call mental, leaves some certain faeces 110

That stop the organs, and, as Plato says,
 Assassinate our knowledge.

VOLP. [aside] Now, the spirit
 Of patience help me.

LADY. Come, in faith, I must Visit you more, a'days, and make you well —
 Laugh and be lusty.

VOLP. [aside] My good angel save me!

LADY. There was but one sole man in all
 the world

With whom I e'er could sympathise; and he Would lie you, often, three, four hours together

To hear me speak; and be sometime so rapt,
 As he would answer me quite from the purpose, 120

Like you, and you are like him, just. I'll discourse,

An't be but only, sir, to bring you asleep,
 How we did spend our time and loves together,
 For some days years.

VOLP. Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh, oh!

LADY. For we were coaetanei,<sup>35</sup> and brought up —

VOLP. [aside] Some power, some fate, some fortune rescue me!

<sup>33</sup> So Q. Ff omit accent.

SCENE V<sup>36</sup>

[To them enter] MOSCA.

Mos. God save you, madam.

LADY. Good sir.

VOLP. Mosca! welcome —

[aside] Welcome to my redemption.

Mos. [aside] Why, sir?

VOLP. [aside] Oh,

Rid me of this my torture, quickly, there;

My madam with the everlasting voice.

The bells, in time of pestilence, ne'er made

Like noise, or were in that perpetual motion —

The cockpit comes not near it. All my
 house,

But now, [steam'd] <sup>37</sup> like a bath with her thick breath,

A lawyer could not have been heard; nor scarce

Another woman, such a hail of words 10

She has let fall. For hell's sake, rid her hence.

Mos. Has she presented? <sup>38</sup>

VOLP. Oh, I do not care;

I'll take her absence upon any price,

With any loss.

Mos. Madam —

LADY. I ha' brought your patron

A toy, a cap here, of mine own work —

Mos. 'T is well.

I had forgot to tell you I saw your knight

Where you'd little think it —

LADY. Where?

Mos. Marry,

Where yet, if you make haste, you may apprehend him,

Rowing upon the water in a gondola,

With the most cunning courtesan of Venice. [20

LADY. Is't true?

Mos. Pursue 'em, and believe your eyes;
 Leave me to make your gift.

[Exit LADY.]

— I knew 't would take;

For, lightly, they that use themselves most licence,

Are still most jealous.

VOLP. Mosca, hearty thanks

For thy quick fiction, and delivery of me.

Now to my hopes, what say'st thou?

[Re-enter LADY.]

LADY. But do you hear, sir? —

VOLP. [aside] Again! I fear a paroxysm.

<sup>36</sup> The same.

<sup>37</sup> So Q, F<sub>1</sub>; F<sub>1</sub> steam'd.

<sup>38</sup> Made a present.

LADY. Which way
Row'd they together?

Mos. Toward the Rialto.

LADY. I pray you lend me your dwarf.

Mos. I pray you take him. [Exit LADY.]
Your hopes, sir, are like happy blossoms, fair,
And promise timely fruit, if you will stay 31
But the maturing. Keep you at your couch;
Corbaccio will arrive straight, with the will;
When he is gone, I'll tell you more. [Exit.]

VOLP. My blood,
My spirits are return'd; I am alive;
And, like your wanton gamester at primero,<sup>39</sup>
Whose thought had whisper'd to him, not go<sup>40</sup>
less,
Methinks I lie, and draw — for an encounter.<sup>41</sup>

SCENE VI <sup>42</sup>

[Enter] MOSCA [and] BONARIO.

Mos. Sir, here conceal'd [opening a door] <sup>43</sup>
you may hear all. But, pray you,
Have patience, sir; [One knocks.] the same's your father knocks.

I am compell'd to leave you. [Exit.]

BON. Do so. — Yet
Cannot my thought imagine this a truth.

[Goes in.]

SCENE VII <sup>44</sup>

[Enter] MOSCA, CORVINO, [and] CELIA.

Mos. Death on me! You are come too soon. What meant you?

Did not I say I would send?

CORV. Yes, but I fear'd
You might forget it, and then they prevent us.

Mos. Prevent! — [aside.] Did e'er man haste so for his horns?

A courtier would not ply it so for a place. —
Well, now there is no helping it, stay here;
I'll presently return. [Exit.]

CORV. Where are you, Celia?
You know not wherefore I have brought you
hither?

CEL. Not well, except you told <sup>45</sup> me.

CORV. Now I will.
Hark hither. [They retire to one side.] <sup>46</sup>

<sup>41</sup> These are terms of primero, on which Volpone puns with reference to his immediate situation. As he ends his speech he closes the curtains of the inner stage.

<sup>45</sup> Unless you tell.

<sup>46</sup> So Neilson; Gifford begins a new scene.

[Re-enter MOSCA.]

Mos. (to BONARIO) Sir, your father hath sent word 10

It will be half an hour ere he come;
And therefore, if you please to walk the while
Into that gallery — at the upper end,
There are some books to entertain the time;
And I'll take care no man shall come unto you,
sir,

BON. Yes, I will stay there. — [aside] I do doubt this fellow. [Exit.]

Mos. [looking after him] There; he is far enough; he can hear nothing.
And for his father, I can keep him off.<sup>47</sup>

CORV. [advancing with Celia] Nay, now, there is no starting back, and therefore,

Resolve upon it: I have so decreed. 20
It must be done. Nor would I move 't<sup>48</sup> afore, Because I would avoid all shifts and tricks,
That might deny me.

CEL. Sir, let me beseech you,
Affect not these strange trials; if you doubt
My chastity, why, lock me up for ever;
Make me the heir of darkness. Let me live Where I may please your fears, if not your trust.

CORV. Believe it, I have no such humor, I.
All that I speak I mean; yet I am not mad;
Not horn-mad,<sup>49</sup> see you? Go to, show yourself 30

Obedient, and a wife.

CEL. O Heaven!

CORV. I say it,
Do so.

CEL. Was this the train?

CORV. I have told you reasons;
What the physicians have set down; how
much

It may concern me; what my engagements are;

My means, and the necessity of those means
For my recovery. Wherefore, if you be Loyal, and mine, be won: respect my venture.

CEL. Before your honor?

CORV. Honor! tut, a breath.
There's no such thing in nature; a mere term
Invented to awe fools. What is my gold 40
The worse for touching, clothes for being look'd on?

<sup>49</sup> Stark mad (like an enraged horned beast), with the usual pun on the horns of the cuckold.

Why, this's no more. An old decrepit wretch,
That has no sense, no sinew; takes his meat
With others' fingers; only knows to gape
When you do scald his gums; a voice, a shadow;

And what can this man hurt you?

CEL. [aside] Lord! what spirit
Is this hath ent'red him?

CORV. And for your fame,
That's such a jig<sup>50</sup>; as if I would go tell it,
Cry it on the Piazza! Who shall know it
But he that cannot speak it, and this fellow, [50
Whose lips are i' my pocket? Save yourself —
If you'll proclaim't, you may, — I know no
other
Should come to know it.

CEL. Are Heaven and saints then nothing?

Will they be blind or stupid?

CORV. How?

CEL. Good sir,
Be jealous still, emulate them; and think
What hate they burn with toward every sin.

CORV. I grant you; if I thought it were a sin

I would not urge you. Should I offer this
To some young Frenchman, or hot Tuscan
blood

That had read Aretine, conn'd all his prints, [60
Knew every quirk within lust's labyrinth,
And were profess'd critic in lechery;
And I would look upon him, and applaud
him;

This were a sin: but here, 't is contrary,
A pious work, mere charity, for physic,
And honest polity, to assure mine own.

CEL. O Heaven! canst thou suffer such a change?

VOLP. [aside] Thou art mine honor, Mosca,
and my pride,

My joy, my tickling, my delight! Go bring
'em.

Mos. Please you draw near, sir.

CORV. Come on, what —
You will not be rebellious? By that light —

Mos. Sir, Signior Corvino, here, is come to see you. 72

VOLP. Oh.

Mos. And hearing of the consultation
had,

So lately, for your health, is come to offer,
Or rather, sir, to prostitute —

CORV. Thanks, sweet Mosca.

Mos. Freely, unask'd, or unentreated —

<sup>50</sup> Joke.

CORV. Well.

Mos. As the true fervent instance of his
love,

His own most fair and proper<sup>51</sup> wife, the beauty

Only of price<sup>52</sup> in Venice —

CORV. 'T is well urg'd.

Mos. To be your comfortress, and to preserve you. 80

VOLP. Alas, I am past, already! 'Pray you, thank him

For his good care and promptness; but for
that,

'T is a vain labor e'en to fight 'gainst Heaven;
Applying fire to a stone — uh, uh, uh, uh! —

Making a dead leaf grow again. I take His wishes gently, though; and you may tell
him

What I have done for him; marry, my state is hopeless!

Will him to pray for me; and t' use his fortune

With reverence when he comes to 't.

Mos. Do you hear, sir?

Go to him with your wife.

CORV. Heart of my father! 90

Wilt thou persist thus? Come, I pray thee,
come.

Thou seest 't is nothing, Celia. By this hand,
I shall grow violent. Come, do't, I say.

CEL. Sir, kill me, rather. I will take down
poison,

Eat burning coals, do anything —

CORV. Be damn'd!

Heart, I will drag thee hence home by the hair;
Cry thee a strumpet through the streets; rip
up

Thy mouth unto thine ears; and slit thy nose,
Like a raw rochet<sup>53</sup> — Do not tempt me,
come;

Yield; I am loth — Death! I will buy some slave 100

Whom I will kill, and bind thee to him alive,
And at my windore hang you forth, devising
Some monstrous crime, which I, in capital letters,

Will eat into thy flesh with aqua fortis,
And burning cor'sives,<sup>54</sup> on this stubborn
breast.

Now, by the blood thou hast incens'd, I'll do
it!

<sup>51</sup> Very own.

<sup>52</sup> The most precious beauty.

<sup>53</sup> The red gurnard, which has a disproportionately large head.

<sup>54</sup> Corrosives.

CEL. Sir, what you please, you may ; I am your martyr.

CORV. Be not thus obstinate ; I ha' not deserv'd it.

Think who it is entreats you. 'Pray thee, sweet ;

Good faith, thou shalt have jewels, gowns, attires, 110

What thou wilt think, and ask. Do but go kiss him.

Or touch him but. For my sake. At my suit.

This once. No? not? I shall remember this. Will you disgrace me thus? Do you thirst my undoing?

Mos. Nay, gentle lady, be advis'd.

CORV. No, no. She has watch'd her time. God's precious, this is scurvy,

'T is very scurvy ; and you are ——

Mos. Nay, good sir.

CORV. An errant <sup>55</sup> locust — by Heaven, a locust ! — Whore, Crocodile, that hast thy tears prepar'd, Expecting how thou 'lt bid 'em flow.

Mos. Nay, 'pray you, sir ! [120 She will consider.

CEL. Would my life would serve To satisfy ——

CORV. 'Sdeath ! if she would but speak to him,

And save my reputation, 't were somewhat ; But spitefully to affect my utter ruin !

Mos. [aside to CORVINO] Ay, now you have put your fortune in her hands.

Why, i' faith, it is her modesty, I must quit <sup>56</sup> her.

If you were absent, she would be more coming ; I know it, and dare undertake for her.

What woman can before her husband? 'Pray you,

Let us depart and leave her here.

CORV. Sweet Celia, 130

Thou mayst redeem all yet ; I'll say no more. If not, esteem yourself as lost. — Nay, stay there.

[Exit with MOSCA.]

CEL. O God, and his good angels ! whither, whither,

Is shame fled human breasts? that with such ease,

Men dare put off your honors, and their own? Is that which ever was a cause of life <sup>57</sup>

Now plac'd beneath the basest circumstance, And modesty an exile made, for money?

VOLP. Ay, in Corvino, and such earth-fed minds, He leaps off from his couch.

That never tasted the true heav'n of love. [140

Assure thee, Celia, he that would sell thee,

Only for hope of gain, and that uncertain,

He would have sold his part of Paradise

For ready money, had he met a copeman.<sup>58</sup>

Why art thou maz'd to see me thus reviv'd?

Rather applaud thy beauty's miracle ;

'T is thy great work, that hath, not now alone,

But sundry times, rais'd me, in several shapes,

And, but this morning, like a mountebank,

To see thee at thy windore ; ay, before 150

I would have left my practice <sup>59</sup> for thy love,

In varying figures I would have contended

With the blue Proteus, or the horned flood.<sup>60</sup>

Now art thou welcome.

CEL.

Sir !

VOLP.

Nay, fly me not,

Nor let thy false imagination

That I was bedrid, make thee think I am so —

Thou shalt not find it. I am now as fresh,

As hot, as high, and in as jovial plight

As when, in that so celebrated scene,

At recitation of our comedy, 160

For entertainment of the great Valois,<sup>61</sup>

I acted young Antinous, and attracted

The eyes and ears of all the ladies present,

'T admire each graceful gesture, note, and footing.

SONG <sup>62</sup>

Come, my Celia, let us prove,
While we can, the sports of love.

Time will not be ours for ever,

He, at length, our good will sever.

Spend not then his gifts in vain.

Suns that set may rise again ;

But if once we lose this light, 170

'T is with us perpetual night.

Why should we defer our joys?

Fame and rumor are but toys.

Cannot we delude the eyes

Of a few poor household spies?

Or his easier ears beguile,

Thus removed by our wile?

'T is no sin love's fruits to steal,

But the sweet thefts to reveal ; 180

To be taken, to be seen,

These have crimes accounted been.

CEL. Some serene <sup>63</sup> blast me, or dire lightning strike

This my offending face.

VOLP. Why droops my Celia?
Thou hast, in place of a base husband, found
A worthy lover: use thy fortune well,
With secrecy and pleasure. See, behold,
What thou art queen of; not in expectation,
As I feed others, but possess'd and crown'd.
See, here, a rope of pearl; and each more orient 190

Than that the brave Egyptian queen carous'd:
Dissolve and drink 'em. See, a carbuncle,
May put out both the eyes of our St. Mark;
A diamond would have bought Lollia
Paulina,<sup>64</sup>

When she came in like starlight, hid with jewels

That were the spoils of provinces; take these,
And wear and lose 'em; yet remains an earring

To purchase them again, and this whole state.
A gem but <sup>65</sup> worth a private patrimony
Is nothing; we will eat such at a meal. 200
The heads of parrots, tongues of nightingales,
The brains of peacocks and of estriches,
Shall be our food; and, could we get the phœ-nix,

Though nature lost her kind,<sup>66</sup> she were our dish.

CEL. Good sir, these things might move a mind affected

With such delights; but I, whose innocence
Is all I can think wealthy, or worth th' enjoying,

And which, once lost, I have naught to lose beyond it,

Cannot be taken with these sensual baits.

If you have conscience —

VOLP. 'T is the beggar's virtue;
If thou hast wisdom, hear me, Celia. 211

Thy baths shall be the juice of July flowers,
Spirit of roses and of violets,
The milk of unicorns, and panthers' breath <sup>67</sup>
Gather'd in bags and mix'd with Cretan wines.
Our drink shall be prepared gold and amber,
Which we will take until my roof whirl round
With the vertigo; and my dwarf shall dance,
My eunuch sing, my fool make up the antic,
Whilst we, in changed shapes,<sup>68</sup> act Ovid's tales: 220

Thou like Europa now, and I like Jove;

<sup>64</sup> Wife of the Emperor Caligula. Pliny the Elder tells about the jewels.

<sup>67</sup> From the time of Aristotle credited with sweetness.

<sup>68</sup> Costumes.

Then I like Mars, and thou like Erycine; <sup>69</sup>
So of the rest, till we have quite run through
And wearied all the fables of the gods.

Then will I have thee in more modern forms,
Attired like some sprightly dame of France,
Brave Tuscan lady, or proud Spanish beauty;
Sometimes unto the Persian sophy's wife,
Or the Grand Signior's mistress; and, for
change,

To one of our most artful courtesans, 230
Or some quick Negro, or cold Russian;
And I will meet thee in as many shapes,
Where we may so transfuse our wand'ring souls
Out at our lips, and score up sums of pleasures,

That the curious shall not know
How to tell them as they flow;
And the envious, when they find
What their number is, be pin'd.

CEL. If you have ears that will be pierc'd — or eyes

That can be open'd — a heart, may be touch'd — 240

Or any part that yet sounds man about you —
If you have touch of holy saints, or Heaven,
Do me the grace to let me 'scape. If not,
Be bountiful and kill me. You do know
I am a creature hither ill betray'd
By one whose shame I would forget it were;
If you will deign me neither of these graces,
Yet feed your wrath, sir, rather than your lust,
(It is a vice comes nearer manliness),
And punish that unhappy crime of nature, [250
Which you miscall my beauty; flay my face,
Or poison it with ointments for seducing Your blood <sup>70</sup> to this rebellion. Rub these
hands

With what may cause an eating leprosy,
E'en to my bones and marrow, anything
That may disfavor me, save in my honor.
And I will kneel to you, pray for you, pay down
A thousand hourly vows, sir, for your health;
Report, and think you virtuous —

VOLP. Think me cold,
Frozen, and impotent, and so report me! [260
That I had Nestor's hernia, thou wouldst
think.

I do degenerate, and abuse my nation,
To play with opportunity thus long;
I should have done the act, and then have parley'd.

Yield, or I'll force thee.

CEL. O! just God!

VOLP. In vain —

<sup>69</sup> Venus, from Mt. Eryx in Sicily, where she was worshipped.

BON. (leaps out from where MOSCA had plac'd him.) Forbear, foul ravisher, libidinous swine;

Free the forc'd lady, or thou di'st, impostor. But that I am loth to snatch thy punishment Out of the hand of justice, thou shouldst yet Be made the timely sacrifice of vengeance, [270 Before this altar and this dross, thy idol. — Lady, let's quit the place; it is the den Of villainy; fear naught: you have a guard; And he ere long shall meet his just reward.

[Exeunt BONARIO and CELIA.]

VOLP. Fall on me, roof, and bury me in ruin;
Become my grave, that wert my shelter. Oh! I am unmask'd, unspirited, undone, Betray'd to beggary, to infamy —

SCENE VIII <sup>71</sup>

[To] VOLPONE [enter] MOSCA.

MOS. Where shall I run, most wretched shame of men,
To beat out my unlucky brains?

VOLP. Here, here.
What! dost thou bleed?

MOS. O, that his well-driv'n sword
Had been so courteous to have cleft me down
Unto the navel, ere I liv'd to see
My life, my hopes, my spirits, my patron, all
Thus desperately engaged, by my error.

VOLP. Woe on thy fortune.

MOS. And my follies, sir.

VOLP. Th' hast made me miserable.

MOS. And myself, sir.

Who would have thought he would have hearken'd so? 10

VOLP. What shall we do?

MOS. I know not; if my heart
Could expiate the mischance, I'd pluck it out.
Will you be pleas'd to hang me, or cut my throat?

And I'll requite you, sir. Let's die like Romans,<sup>72</sup>

Since we have liv'd like Grecians.<sup>73</sup>

They knock without.

VOLP. Hark! who's there?
I hear some footing; officers, the saff,<sup>74</sup>
Come to apprehend us! I do feel the brand
Hissing already at my forehead; now
Mine ears are boring.

MOS. To your couch, sir, you;

Make that place good, however.<sup>75</sup> [VOLPONE lies down as before.] — [aside] Guilty
men 20

Suspect what they deserve still.<sup>76</sup> — Signior Corbaccio!

SCENE IX <sup>77</sup>

[To them enter] CORBACCIO.

CORB. Why, how now, Mosca?

MOS. O, undone, amaz'd, sir.

Your son, I know not by what accident,
Acquainted with your purpose to my patron,
Touching your will and making him your heir,
Ent'red our house with violence, his sword
drawn,

Sought for you, call'd you wretch, unnatural,
Vow'd he would kill you.

CORB. Me?

MOS. Yes, and my patron.

CORB. This act shall disinherit him indeed.
Here is the will.

MOS. 'T is well, sir.

CORB. Right and well:
Be you as careful now for me.

[Enter VOLTORE behind.]

MOS. My life, sir, 10
Is not more tender'd <sup>78</sup>; I am only yours.

CORB. How does he? Will he die shortly, think'st thou?

MOS. I fear

He'll outlast May.

CORB. To-day?

MOS. No, last out May, sir.

CORB. Couldst thou not gi' him a dram?

MOS. Oh, by no means, sir.

CORB. Nay, I'll not bid you.

VOLT. [coming forward] This is a knave,
I see.

MOS. [aside] How! Signior Voltore! did he hear me?

VOLT. Parasite!

MOS. Who's that? — Oh, sir, most timely welcome —

VOLT. Scarce,

To the discovery of your tricks, I fear.

You are his, only? and mine also, are you not?

MOS. Who? I, sir!

VOLT. You, sir. What device is this [20
About a will?

MOS. A plot for you, sir.

VOLT. Come,

<sup>72</sup> I.e., merrily.

<sup>75</sup> In any case.

<sup>77</sup> Always.

Put not your foists<sup>79</sup> upon me ; I shall scent
'em.

Mos. Did you not hear it ?

VOLT. Yes, I hear Corbaccio
Hath made your patron there his heir.

Mos. 'T is true,
By my device, drawn to it by my plot,
With hope ——

VOLT. Your patron should reciprocate ?
And you have promis'd ?

Mos. For your good I did, sir.
Nay, more, I told his son, brought, hid him
here,

Where he might hear his father pass the deed ;
Being persuaded to it by this thought, sir, 30
That the unnaturalness, first, of the act,
And then his father's oft disclaiming in him (Which I did mean t' help on), would sure en-rage him

To do some violence upon his parent,
On which the law should take sufficient hold,
And you be stated in a double hope.
Truth be my comfort, and my conscience,
My only aim was to dig you a fortune
Out of these two rotten sepulchres ——

VOLT. I cry thee mercy, Mosca.

Mos. Worth your patience, 40
And your great merit, sir. And see the change !

VOLT. Why, what success ?

Mos. Most hapless ! You must help, sir.
Whilst we expected th' old raven, in comes Corvino's wife, sent hither by her husband ——

VOLT. What, with a present ?

Mos. No, sir, on visitation
(I'll tell you how anon) ; and, staying long,
The youth he grows impatient, rushes forth,
Seizeth the lady, wounds me, makes her swear
(Or he would murder her — that was his vow)
T' affirm my patron to<sup>80</sup> have done her rape ;
Which how unlike it is, you see ! and hence, [51
With that pretext he's gone, t' accuse his
father,

Defame my patron, defeat you ——

VOLT. Where's her husband ?
Let him be sent for straight.

Mos. Sir, I'll go fetch him.

VOLT. Bring him to the Scrutineo.<sup>81</sup>

Mos. Sir, I will.

VOLT. This must be stopp'd.

Mos. Oh, you do nobly, sir.
Alas, 't was labor'd all, sir, for your good ;
Nor was there want of counsel in the plot.

But Fortune can, at any time, o'erthrow 59
The projects of a hundred learned clerks, sir.

CORB. [listening] What's that ?

VOLT. Wilt please you, sir, to go along ?
[Exit CORBACCIO, followed by VOL-TORE.]

Mos. Patron, go in, and pray for our success.

VOLT. Need makes devotion ; Heaven your labor bless ! [Exeunt.]

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter SIR] POLITIC [WOULD-BE and] PERE-GRINE.

POL. I told you, sir, it was a plot<sup>2</sup> ; you see

What observation is. You mention'd<sup>3</sup> me
For some instructions ; I will tell you, sir,
(Since we are met here in this height of Venice,)
Some few particulars I have set down,
Only for this meridian, fit to be known
Of your crude traveller ; and they are these.
I will not touch, sir, at your phrase, or clothes,
For they are old.

PER. Sir, I have better.

POL. Pardon,
I meant, as they are themes.<sup>4</sup>

PER. Oh, sir, proceed ; 10
I'll slander you no more of wit, good sir.

POL. First, for your garb,<sup>5</sup> it must be grave and serious,

Very reserv'd and lock'd ; not tell a secret
On any terms, not to your father ; scarce
A fable, but with caution ; make sure choice
Both of your company and discourse ; beware
You never [speak] <sup>6</sup> a truth ——

PER. How !

POL. Not to strangers,
For those be they you must converse with
most ;

Others I would not know, sir, but at distance
So as I still might be a saver in 'em —— 20
You shall have tricks else pass'd upon you, hourly.

And then, for your religion, profess none,
But wonder at the diversity of all ;
And, for your part, protest, were there no other

But simply the laws o' th' land, you could content you.

Nic. Machiavel and Monsieur Bodin,<sup>7</sup> both Were of this mind. Then must you learn the use

And handling of your silver fork at meals,
The metal of your glass (these are main matters

With your Italian); and to know the hour [30
When you must eat your melons and your figs.

PER. Is that a point of state too?

POL. Here, it is;

For your Venetian, if he see a man
Preposterous in the least, he has him straight;
He has; he strips him. I'll acquaint you, sir,
I now have liv'd here, 't is some fourteen months.

Within the first week of my landing here,
All took me for a citizen of Venice,
I knew the forms so well —

PER. [aside] And nothing else.

POL. I had read Contarene,<sup>8</sup> took me a house, 40
Dealt with my Jews to furnish it with movables<sup>9</sup> —

Well, if I could but find one man, one man,
To mine own heart, whom I durst trust, I would —

PER. What? what, sir?

POL. Make him rich; make him a fortune:

He should not think again. I would command it.

PER. As how?

POL. With certain projects that I have,
Which I may not discover.

PER. [aside] If I had

But one to wager with, I would lay odds now,
He tells me instantly.

POL. One is, (and that
I care not greatly who knows), to serve the state 50

Of Venice with red herrings for three years,
And at a certain rate, from Rotterdam,
Where I have correspondence. There's a letter,

Sent me from one o' th' states,<sup>10</sup> and to that purpose;

He cannot write his name, but that's his mark.

PER. He is a chandler? <sup>11</sup>

POL. No, a cheesemonger.

There are some other too with whom I treat
About the same negotiation;
And I will undertake it; for 't is thus:
I'll do 't with ease; I have cast <sup>12</sup> it all. Your hoy <sup>13</sup> 60

Carries but three men in her, and a boy;
And she shall make me three returns a year:
So if there come but one of three, I save;
If two, I can defalk.<sup>14</sup> But this is now,
If my main project fail.

PER. Then you have others?

POL. I should be loth to draw the subtle
air

Of such a place without my thousand aims.
I'll not dissemble, sir: where'er I come,
I love to be considerative; and 't is true,
I have at my free hours thought upon 70
Some certain goods unto the state of Venice,
Which I do call my cautions; and, sir, which
I mean, in hope of pension, to propound
To the Great Council, then unto the Forty.
So to the Ten. My means are made already—

PER. By whom?

POL. Sir, one that though his place b' obscure,
Yet he can sway, and they will hear him.
H' is

A commandadore.

PER. What, a common serjeant?

POL. Sir, such as they are, put it in their mouths,

What they should say, sometimes; as well as greater. 80

I think I have my notes to show you —

[Searching his pockets.]

PER. Good sir.

POL. But you shall swear unto me, on your gentry,

Not to anticipate —

PER. I, sir?

POL. Nor reveal
A circumstance — my paper is not with me.

PER. O, but you can remember, sir.

POL. My first is Concerning tinder boxes. You must know,
No family is here without its box.

Now, sir, it being so portable a thing,

Put case <sup>15</sup> that you or I were ill affected

Unto the state, sir; with it in our pockets, [90

Might not I go into the Arsenal,
Or you come out again, and none the wiser?

PER. Except yourself, sir.

POL. Go to, then. I therefore Advertise to the state, how fit it were
That none but such as were known patriots,
Sound lovers of their country, should be suffer'd

T' enjoy them in their houses; and even those Seal'd at some office, and at such a bigness
As might not lurk in pockets.

PER. Admirable!

POL. My next is, how t' inquire, and be resolv'd 100

By present demonstration, whether a ship,
Newly arriv'd from Soria,<sup>16</sup> or from Any suspected part of all the Levant,
Be guilty of the plague; and where<sup>17</sup> they use
To lie out forty, fifty days, sometimes,
About the Lazaretto,<sup>18</sup> for their trial,
I'll save that charge and loss unto the merchant,

And in an hour clear the doubt.

PER. Indeed, sir?

POL. Or — I will lose my labor.

PER. 'My faith, that's much.

POL. Nay, sir, conceive me. 'T will cost me in onions, 110

Some thirty lives —

PER. Which is one pound sterling.

POL. Beside my waterworks. For this I do, sir;

First, I bring in your ship 'twixt two brick walls —

But those the state shall venture. On the one
I strain me a fair tarpaulin, and in that
I stick my onions, cut in halves; the other
Is full of loopholes, out at which I thrust
The noses of my bellows; and those bellows
I keep, with waterworks, in perpetual motion,
(Which is the easi'st matter of a hundred). 120
Now, sir, your onion, which doth naturally
Attract th' infection, and your bellows blowing
The air upon him, will show, instantly,
By his chang'd color, if there be contagion;
Or else remain as fair as at the first.
Now 't is known, 't is nothing.

PER. You are right, sir.

POL. I would I had my note.

PER. 'Faith, so would I;

But you ha' done well for once, sir.

POL. Were I false,
Or would be made so, I could show you reasons

How I could sell this state now to the Turk, Spite of their galleys, or their —

[Examining his papers.]

PER. Pray you, Sir Pol.<sup>19</sup> 131

POL. I have 'em not about me.

PER. That I fear'd.

They are there, sir?

POL. No, this is my diary,

Wherein I note my actions of the day.

PER. Pray you let's see, sir. — What is here? "Notandum,

A rat had gnawn my spur-leathers; notwithstanding,

I put on new, and did go forth; but first
I threw three beans over the threshold. Item,
I went and bought two toothpicks, whereof one

I burst immediately, in a discourse 140
With a Dutch merchant, 'bout ragion' del stato.<sup>20</sup>

From him I went and paid a moccinigo
For piecing my silk stockings; by the way
I cheapen'd<sup>21</sup> sprats; and at St. Mark's I urin'd." —

'Faith these are politic notes!

POL. Sir, I do slip

No action of my life, thus but I quote<sup>22</sup> it.

PER. Believe me, it is wise!

POL. Nay, sir, read forth.

SCENE II<sup>23</sup>

[Enter, at a distance.] LADY [POLITIC WOULD-BE], NANO, [and the two Waiting] Women.

LADY. Where should this loose knight be, trow? Sure h' is hous'd.

NAN. Why, then he's fast.

LADY. Ay, he plays both<sup>24</sup> with me.
I pray you stay. This heat will do more harm
To my complexion than his heart is worth.
(I do not care to hinder, but to take him.)

How it comes off! [Rubs her cheeks.]

WOM. My master's yonder.

LADY. Where?

WOM. With a young gentleman.

LADY P. That same's the party!
In man's apparel. — Pray you, sir, jog my knight.

I will be tender to his reputation,

However he demerit.

POL. My lady!

<sup>22</sup> Make a note on.

<sup>24</sup> Fast and loose.

<sup>17</sup> Whereas.

PER. Where? [10
POL. 'Tis she indeed, sir; you shall know her. She is,

Were she not mine, a lady of that merit,
For fashion and behavior, and for beauty,
I durst compare —

PER. It seems you are not jealous,
That dare commend her.

POL. Nay, and for discourse —

PER. Being your wife, she cannot miss that.

POL. Madam,
Here is a gentleman, 'pray you use him fairly;
He seems a youth, but he is —

LADY. None?

POL. Yes, one
Has put his face as soon into the world —

LADY. You mean, as early? But to-day?

POL. How's this! [20

LADY. Why, in this habit, sir; you apprehend me.

Well, Master Would-be, this doth not become
you;

I had thought the odor, sir, of your good name
Had been more precious to you; that you would not

Have done this dire massacre on your honor;
One of your gravity, and rank besides!

But knights, I see, care little for the oath
They make to ladies — chiefly their own ladies.

POL. Now, by my spurs, the symbol of my knighthood —

PER. [aside] Lord, how his brain is humbled for an oath.<sup>25</sup> 30

POL. I reach<sup>26</sup> you not.

LADY. Right, sir: your polity
May bear it through thus. — [to PEREGRINE]
Sir, a word with you.

I would be loth to contest publicly
With any gentlewoman, or to seem
Froward, or violent, as the courtier says;
It comes too near rusticity in a lady,
Which I would shun by all means; and however

I may deserve from Master Would-be, yet
Th' unkind instrument to wrong another, 40
And one she knows not, ay, and to persevere,<sup>27</sup>
In my poor judgment, is not warranted
From being a solecism in<sup>28</sup> our sex,
If not in manners.

PER. How is this!

<sup>25</sup> A derisive allusion to the cheapening of the order by King James's creation of many new knights.

<sup>28</sup> With respect to

POL. Sweet madam,
Come nearer to your aim.

LADY. Marry, and will, sir.
Since you provoke me with your impudence,
And laughter of your light land-siren here,
Your Sporus,<sup>29</sup> your hermaphrodite —

PER. What's here?
Poetic fury and historic storms! 49

POL. The gentleman, believe it, is of worth
And of our nation.

LADY. Ay, your Whitefriars<sup>30</sup> nation?
Come, I blush for you, Master Would-be, I;
And am ashamed you should ha' no more forehead<sup>31</sup>

Than thus to be the patron, or St. George,
To a lewd harlot, a base fricatrice,<sup>32</sup>
A female devil, in a male outside.

POL. Nay,
An you be such a one! I must bid adieu
To your delights. The case appears too liquid.<sup>33</sup>

[Exit.]

LADY. Ay, you may carry't clear, with your state-face! —

But for your carnival concupiscence,<sup>34</sup> 60
Who here is fled for liberty of conscience,
From furious persecution of the marshal,
Her will I dis'ple.<sup>35</sup>

PER. This is fine, i' faith!
And do you use this often? Is this part Of your wit's exercise, 'gainst you have occasion?

Madam —

LADY. Go to, sir.

PER. Do you hear me, lady?
Why, if your knight have set you to beg shirts,
Or to invite me home, you might have done it
A nearer way by far.

LADY. This cannot work you
Out of my snare.

PER. Why, am I in it, then? 70
Indeed your husband told me you were fair,
And so you are; only your nose inclines,
That side that's next the sun, to the queen-apple.<sup>36</sup>

<sup>29</sup> The eunuch Nero married.

<sup>30</sup> Or Alsatia, a district of London where, because of the privilege of sanctuary formerly enjoyed by the Carmelites' church and extended under James I, fraudulent debtors, gamblers, and prostitutes resided with little molestation from the law.

<sup>31</sup> Sense of shame.

wife's charge.

<sup>34</sup> Object of carnival lust. "Carnival" refers to that time as one of indulgence.

nose is as red as an apple.

LADY. This cannot be endur'd by any patience.

SCENE III <sup>37</sup>

[To them enter] MOSCA.

MOS. What's the matter, madam?

LADY. If the Senate Right not my quest in this, I will protest 'em To all the world no aristocracy.

MOS. What is the injury, lady?

LADY. Why, the callet <sup>38</sup> You told me of, here I have ta'en disguis'd.

MOS. Who? this? what means your Ladyship? The creature

I mention'd to you is apprehended now, Before the Senate; you shall see her —

LADY. Where?

MOS. I'll bring you to her. This young gentleman, I saw him land this morning at the port. 10

LADY. Is't possible? How has my judgment wander'd!

Sir, I must, blushing, say to you, I have err'd; And plead your pardon.

PER. What! more changes yet?

LADY. I hope yo' ha' not the malice to remember

A gentlewoman's passion. If you stay In Venice here, please you to use me, sir —

MOS. Will you go, madam?

LADY. 'Pray you, sir, use me; in faith, The more you see <sup>39</sup> me the more I shall conceive

You have forgot our quarrel.

[Exeunt LADY WOULD-BE, MOSCA, NANO, and Waiting Women.]

PER. This is rare!

Sir Politic Would-be? No, Sir Politic Bawd! To bring me thus acquainted with his wife! [21 Well, wise Sir Pol, since you have practis'd thus

Upon my freshmanship, I'll try your salt-head, <sup>40</sup>

What proof it is against a counterplot.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV <sup>41</sup>

[Enter] VOLTORE, CORBACCIO, CORVINO, [and] MOSCA.

VOLT. Well, now you know the carriage of the business, <sup>42</sup>

Your constancy is all that is requir'd Unto the safety of it. [He stands aside.]

MOS. Is the lie Safely convey'd <sup>43</sup> amongst us? Is that sure? Knows every man his burden?

CORV. Yes.

MOS. Then shrink not.

CORV. But knows the advocate the truth?

MOS. Oh, sir,

By no means; I devis'd a formal tale, That salv'd your reputation. But <sup>44</sup> be valiant, sir.

CORV. I fear no one but him, that this his pleading

Should make him stand for a co-heir —

MOS. Co-halter! 10

Hang him; we will but use his tongue, his noise,

As we do croaker's <sup>45</sup> here.

CORV. Ay, what shall he do?

MOS. When we ha' done, you mean?

CORV. Yes.

MOS. Why, we'll think;

Sell him for mummia: <sup>46</sup> he's half dust already. —

(To VOLTORE) Do you not smile, to see this buffalo, <sup>47</sup>

How he doth sport it with his head? — [aside] I should,

If all were well and past. — (To CORBACCIO) Sir, only you

Are he that shall enjoy the crop of all, And these not know for whom they toil.

CORB. Ay, peace.

MOS. (to CORVINO) But you shall eat it. — [aside] Much! — (Then to VOLTORE again) Worshipful sir, 20

Mercury sit upon your thund'ring tongue, Or the French Hercules, <sup>48</sup> and make your language

As conquering as his club, to beat along, As with a tempest, flat, our adversaries; But much more yours, sir.

VOLT. Here they come; ha' done.

MOS. I have another witness, if you need, sir,

I can produce.

VOLT. Who is it?

MOS. Sir, I have her.

<sup>48</sup> The Gallic or Celtic Hercules was a symbol of eloquence. Lucian wrote a treatise on him. (Upton.) — As herald of the gods, Mercury was god of eloquence.

SCENE V <sup>49</sup>

[To them enter] 4 Avocatori, BONARIO, CELIA, Notario, Commandadori, [Saffi, and other Officers of Justice.]

1 Avoc. The like of this the Senate never heard of.

2 Avoc. 'T will come most strange to them when we report it.

4 Avoc. The gentlewoman has been ever held

Of unreprieved name.

3 Avoc. So, the young man.<sup>50</sup>

4 Avoc. The more unnatural part that of his father.

2 Avoc. More of the husband.

1 Avoc. I not know to give His act a name, it is so monstrous!

4 Avoc. But the impostor, he is a thing created

T' exceed example!

[1] Avoc. And all after-times!

2 Avoc. I never heard a true voluptuary [10 Describ'd but him.

3 Avoc. Appear yet those were cited?

Not. All but the old magnifico, Volpone.

1 Avoc. Why is not he here?

Mos. Please your Fatherhoods, Here is his advocate. Himself's so weak, So feeble——

4 Avoc. What are you?

BON. His parasite,

His knave, his pander. I beseech the court He may be forc'd to come, that your grave eyes May bear strong witness of his strange impostures.

VOLT. Upon my faith and credit with your Virtues,

He is not able to endure the air. 20

2 Avoc. Bring him, however.

3 Avoc. We will see him.

4 Avoc. Fetch him.

VOLT. Your Fatherhoods' fit pleasures be obey'd; [Exeunt Officers.]

But sure, the sight will rather move your pities Than indignation. May it please the court, In the mean time, he may be heard in me.

I know this place most void of prejudice, And therefore crave it, since we have no reason To fear our truth should hurt our cause.

3 Avoc. Speak free.

VOLT. Then know, most honor'd fathers, I must now

Discover to your strangely abused <sup>51</sup> ears, [30

The most prodigious and most frontless <sup>52</sup> piece Of solid impudence and treachery That ever vicious nature yet brought forth To shame the state of Venice. This lewd woman,

That wants no artificial looks or tears

To help the visor she has now put on,

Hath long been known a close <sup>53</sup> adulteress

To that lascivious youth there; not suspected,

I say, but known, and taken in the act 39

With him; and by this man, the easy husband,

Pardon'd; whose timeless <sup>54</sup> bounty makes him now

Stand here, the most unhappy, innocent person

That ever man's own goodness made accus'd.

For these, not knowing how to owe <sup>55</sup> a gift

Of that dear grace, but with their shame, being plac'd

So above all powers of their gratitude,

Began to hate the benefit, and, in place

Of thanks, devise t' extirp the memory

Of such an act: wherein I pray your Fatherhoods

To observe the malice, yea, the rage of creatures 50

Discover'd in their evils; and what heart

Such take, ev'n from their crimes. But that anon

Will more appear. This gentleman, the father,

Hearing of this foul fact, <sup>56</sup> with many others,

Which daily struck at his too tender ears,

And griev'd in nothing more than that he could not Preserve himself a parent (his son's ills

Growing to that strange flood), at last decreed To disinherit him.

1 Avoc. These be strange turns!

2 Avoc. The young man's fame was ever fair and honest. 60

VOLT. So much more full of danger is his vice,

That can beguile so, under shade of virtue.

But, as I said, my honor'd sires, his father

Having this settled purpose, by what means

To him betray'd, we know not, and this day

Appointed for the deed; that parricide,

I cannot style him better, by confederacy

Preparing this his paramour to be there,

Ent'red Volpone's house (who was the man, [69

Your Fatherhoods must understand, design'd For the inheritance), there sought his father:—

<sup>56</sup> Deed.

But with what purpose sought he him, my Lords?

I tremble to pronounce it, that a son
Unto a father, and to such a father,
Should have so foul, felonious intent —
It was to murder him; when, being prevented
By his more happy absence, what then did he?
Not check his wicked thoughts; no, now new deeds

(Mischief doth ever <sup>57</sup> end where it begins) —
An act of horror, fathers! He dragg'd forth
The aged gentleman that had there lien bed-rid 81

Three years and more, out off his innocent
couch,
Naked upon the floor; there left him;
wounded

His servant in the face; and with this strumpet,
The stale <sup>58</sup> to his forg'd practice, <sup>59</sup> who was glad

To be so active, — I shall here desire
Your Fatherhoods to note but my collections, <sup>60</sup>
As most remarkable, — thought at once to stop

His father's ends, discredit his free choice
In the old gentleman, redeem themselves, 90
By laying infamy upon this man,
To whom, with blushing, they should owe their lives.

1 Avoc. What proofs have you of this?

Bon. Most honor'd fathers,
I humbly crave there be no credit given
To this man's mercenary tongue.

2 Avoc. Forbear.

Bon. His soul moves in his fee.

3 Avoc. O, sir.

Bon. This fellow,
For six sols <sup>61</sup> more would plead against his Maker.

1 Avoc. You do forget yourself.

VOLT. Nay, nay, grave fathers,
Let him have scope! Can any man imagine
That he will spare his accuser, that would not
Have spar'd his parent?

1 Avoc. Well, produce your proofs. [101

CEL. I would I could forget I were a creature.

VOLT. Signior Corbaccio.

<sup>57</sup> Emend. Whalley never; but the line may mean, "Mischief begins in evil thoughts and ends in evil

<sup>58</sup> Stalking-horse, prostitute used by thieves as a

<sup>60</sup> Deductions.

<sup>61</sup> Trivial coins of different value in various places.

4 Avoc.

What is he?

VOLT.

The father.

2 Avoc. Has he had an oath?

Not.

Yes.

CORB.

What must I do now?

Not. Your testimony's crav'd.

CORB.

Speak to the knave?

I'll ha' my mouth first stopp'd with earth; my heart

Abhors his knowledge: I disclaim in <sup>62</sup> him.

1 Avoc. But for what cause?

CORB.

The mere portent of nature.

He is an utter stranger to my loins. 109

Bon. Have they made you to <sup>63</sup> this!

CORB.

I will not hear thee,

Monster of men, swine, goat, wolf, parricide;
Speak not, thou viper.

Bon.

Sir, I will sit down,

And rather wish my innocence should suffer
Than I resist the authority of a father.

VOLT. Signior Corvino.

2 Avoc.

This is strange!

1 Avoc.

Who's this?

Not. The husband.

4 Avoc.

Is he sworn?

Not.

He is.

3 Avoc.

Speak then.

CORV. This woman, please your Fatherhoods, is a whore,

Of most hot exercise, more than a partridge,
Upon record —

1 Avoc. No more.

CORV.

Neighs like a jennet.

Not. Preserve the honor of the court.

CORV.

I shall, [120

And modesty of your most reverend ears.

And yet I hope that I may say these eyes

Have seen her glu'd unto that piece of cedar,
That fine well-timber'd gallant; and that
here

The letters may be read, thorough the horn, <sup>64</sup>
That make the story perfect.

Mos. [aside to CORVINO] Excellent, sir!

CORV. [aside to MOSCA] There is no shame <sup>65</sup>
in this now, is there?

Mos. [aside to CORVINO] None.

CORV. Or if I said, I hop'd that she were onward

To her damnation, if there be a hell

<sup>64</sup> As easily as the alphabet on the "hornbook"
(so called because the card was covered with transparent horn). At "here" Corvino doubtless makes the sign of the horn; i.e., Celia's guilt is attested by his being branded cuckold.

<sup>65</sup> Q harmes.

Greater than whore and woman, a good Catholic <sup>66</sup> 130

May make the doubt.

3 Avoc. His grief hath made him frantic.

1 Avoc. Remove him hence.

2 Avoc. Look to the woman.
She swoons.

CORV. Rare!

Prettily feign'd! again!

4 Avoc. Stand from about her.

1 Avoc. Give her the air.

3 Avoc. [to MOSCA] What can you say?

Mos. My wound,

May 't please your Wisdoms, speaks for me,
receiv'd

In aid of my good patron, when he miss'd
His sought-for father, when that well-taught dame

Had her cue giv'n her to cry out, "A rape!"

BON. O most laid <sup>67</sup> impudence! Fathers—

3 Avoc. Sir, be silent; [139

You had your hearing free, so must they theirs.

2 Avoc. I do begin to doubt th' imposture
here.

4 Avoc. This woman has too many moods.

VOLT. Grave fathers,

She is a creature of a most profess'd

And prostituted lewdness.

CORV. Most impetuous!

Unsatisfied, grave fathers!

VOLT. May her feignings

Not take your wisdoms. But this day <sup>68</sup> she baited

A stranger, a grave knight, with her loose eyes
And more lascivious kisses. This man saw 'em
Together on the water, in a gondola.

Mos. Here is the lady herself, that saw 'em
too, 150

Without; who then had in the open streets
Pursu'd them, but for saving her knight's honor.

1 Avoc. Produce that lady.

2 Avoc. Let her come. [Exit MOSCA.]

4 Avoc. These things,

They strike with wonder!

3 Avoc. I am turn'd a stone!

SCENE VI <sup>69</sup>

[To them re-enter] MOSCA [with] LADY
[WOULD-BE.]

Mos. Be resolute, madam.

LADY. Ay, this same is she.—

<sup>68</sup> Only to-day.

<sup>67</sup> Well-laid, carefully planned.
<sup>69</sup> The same.

Out, thou chameleon harlot! now thine eyes
Vie tears with the hyena. Dar'st thou look Upon my wronged face?—I cry your pardons.

I fear I have forgettingly transgress'd
Against the dignity of the court—

2 Avoc. No, madam.

LADY. And been exorbitant—

[2] Avoc. You have not, lady.

4 Avoc. These proofs are strong.

LADY. Surely, I had no purpose

To scandalize your honors, or my sex's.

3 Avoc. We do believe it.

LADY. Surely you may believe it. 10

2 Avoc. Madam, we do.

LADY. Indeed you may; my breeding
Is not so coarse—

4 Avoc. We know it.

LADY. To offend

With pertinacy—

3 Avoc. Lady—

LADY. Such a presence;

No, surely.

1 Avoc. We will think it.

LADY. You may think it.

1 Avoc. Let her o'ercome.—What witnesses have you,

To make good your report?

BON. Our consciences.

CEL. And Heaven, that never fails the innocent.

1 Avoc. These are no testimonies.

BON. Not in your courts,

Where multitude and clamor overcomes.

1 Avoc. Nay, then you do wax insolent.

VOLPONE is brought in, as impotent.

VOLT. Here, here, [20

The testimony comes that will convince,
And put to utter dumbness their bold tongues.
See here, grave fathers, here's the ravisher,
The rider on men's wives, the great impostor,
The grand voluptuary! Do you not think These limbs should affect venery? or these
eyes

Covet a concubine? Pray you mark these
hands.

Are they not fit to stroke a lady's breasts?

Perhaps he doth dissemble!

BON. So he does.

VOLT. Would you ha' him tortur'd?

BON. I would have him prov'd. [30

VOLT. Best try him then with goads, or burning irons;

Put him to the strappado; I have heard

The rack hath cur'd the gout; faith, give it him,

And help him of a malady; be courteous.
I'll undertake, before these honor'd fathers,
He shall have yet as many left diseases,
As she has known adulterers, or thou strumpets.

O, my most equal<sup>70</sup> hearers, if these deeds,
Acts of this bold and most exorbitant strain,
May pass with sufferance, what one citizen [40
But owes the forfeit of his life, yea, fame,
To him that dares traduce him? Which of you

Are safe, my honor'd fathers? I would ask,
With leave of your grave Fatherhoods, if their plot

Have any face or color like to truth?
Or if, unto the dullest nostril here,
It smell not rank, and most abhorred slander?
I crave your care of this good gentleman,
Whose life is much endanger'd by their fable;
And as for them, I will conclude with this: 50
That vicious persons, when they are hot, and flesh'd

In impious acts, their constancy<sup>71</sup> abounds:
Damn'd deeds are done with greatest confidence.

1 Avoc. Take 'em to custody, and sever them.

2 Avoc. 'T is pity two such prodigies should live.

1 Avoc. Let the old gentleman be return'd with care.

[Exeunt Officers with VOLPONE.]

I am sorry our credulity wrong'd him.

4 Avoc. These are two creatures!

3 Avoc. I have an earthquake in me!

2 Avoc. Their shame, even in their cradles, fled their faces.

4 Avoc. You have done a worthy service to the state, sir, 60

In their discovery.

1 Avoc. You shall hear, ere night,
What punishment the court decrees upon 'em.

[Exeunt Avocatori, Notario, and Officers with BONARIO and CELIA.]

VOLT. We thank your Fatherhoods.—How like you it?

Mos. Rare.

I'd ha' your tongue, sir, tipp'd with gold for this;

I'd ha' you be the heir to the whole city;
The earth I'd have want men ere you want living:

<sup>70</sup> Just.

They are bound to erect your statue in St. Mark's.—

Signior Corvino, I would have you go
And show yourself that you have conquer'd.

CORV. Yes.

Mos. It was much better that you should profess 70

Yourself a cuckold thus, than that the other
Should have been prov'd.

CORV. Nay, I consider'd that;
Now it is her fault.

Mos. Then, it had been yours.

CORV. True.—[aside to MOSCA] I do doubt this advocate still.

Mos. [aside] I' faith,
You need not; I dare ease you of that care.

CORV. [aside] I trust thee, Mosca.

Mos. [aside] As your own soul, sir.
[Exit CORVINO.]

CORB. Mosca!

Mos. Now for your business, sir.

CORB. How? ha' you business?

Mos. Yes, yours, sir.

CORB. O, none else?

Mos. None else, not I.

CORB. Be careful then.

Mos. Rest you with both your eyes, sir.<sup>72</sup>

CORB. Dispatch it.

Mos. Instantly.

CORB. And look that all, 80
Whatever, be put in, jewels, plate, monies,
Household stuff, bedding, curtains.

Mos. Curtain-rings, sir;
Only, the advocate's fee must be deducted.

CORB. I'll pay him now; you'll be too prodigal.

Mos. Sir, I must tender it.

CORB. Two cecchines is well.

Mos. No, six, sir.

CORB. 'T is too much.

Mos. He talk'd a great while;
You must consider that, sir.

CORB. Well, there's three—

Mos. I'll give it him.

CORB. Do so, and there's for thee. [Exit.]

Mos. [aside] Bountiful bones! What horrid strange offence

Did he commit 'gainst nature, in his youth, [90
Worthy this age?—[aside to VOLTRE] You see, sir, how I work

Unto your ends; take you no notice.

VOLT. No,

I'll leave you.

<sup>72</sup> I.e., leave everything to me.

Mos. [aside] All is yours, the devil
and all,
Good advocate. — Madam, I'll bring you
home.

LADY. No, I'll go see your patron.
Mos. That you shall not ;
I'll tell you why. My purpose is to urge
My patron to reform his will, and for The zeal you have shown to-day, whereas before

You were but third or fourth, you shall be
now 99

Put in the first ; which would appear as begg'd
If you were present. Therefore —

LADY. You shall sway me. [Exeunt.]

ACT V — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] VOLPONE.

VOLP. Well, I am here, and all this brunt is past.

I ne'er was in dislike with my disguise
Till this fled moment : here 't was good, in private ;

But in your public, — cave,<sup>2</sup> whilst I breathe.
'Fore God, my left leg 'gan to have the cramp.
And I apprehended straight some power had struck me

With a dead palsy. Well, I must be merry,
And shake it off. A many of these fears
Would put me into some villainous disease,
Should they come thick upon me. I'll prevent
'em. 10

Give me a bowl of lusty wine, to fright
This humor from my heart. — (He drinks.)

Hum, hum, hum ! —

'T is almost gone already ; I shall conquer.
Any device now of rare ingenious knavery,
That would possess me with a violent laughter,
Would make me up again ! — (Drinks again.)

So, so, so, so ! —

This heat is life ; 't is blood by this time. —
Mosca !

SCENE II<sup>3</sup>

[To] VOLPONE [enter] MOSCA.

Mos. How now, sir? Does the day look clear again?
Are we recover'd, and wrought out of error,

Into our way, to see our path before us?
Is our trade free once more?

VOLP. Exquisite Mosca !

Mos. Was it not carri'd learnedly?

VOLP. And stoutly :

Good wits are greatest in extremities.

Mos. It were folly beyond thought to trust
Any grand act unto a cowardly spirit.

You are not taken with it enough, methinks.

VOLP. Oh, more than if I had enjoy'd the
wench ; 10

The pleasure of all womankind's not like it.

Mos. Why, now you speak, sir. We must here be fix'd ;

Here we must rest ; this is our masterpiece ;
We cannot think to go beyond this.

VOLP. True,

Thou hast play'd thy prize, my precious
Mosca.

Mos. Nay, sir,

To gull the court —

VOLP. And quite divert the torrent
Upon the innocent.

Mos. Yes, and to make
So rare a music out of discords —

VOLP. Right.

That yet to me's the strangest ! how th' hast borne it !

That these, being so divided 'mongst themselves, 20

Should not scent somewhat, or in me or thee,
Or doubt their own side.

Mos. True, they will not see 't.
Too much light blinds 'em, I think. Each of
'em

Is so possess'd and stuff'd with his own hopes
That anything unto the contrary,
Never so true, or never so apparent,
Never so palpable, they will resist it —

VOLP. Like a temptation of the Devil.

Mos. Right, sir.

Merchants may talk of trade, and your great signiors

Of land that yields well ; but if Italy 30
Have any glebe more fruitful than these fellows,

I am deceiv'd. Did not your advocate rare?

VOLP. Oh — " My most honor'd fathers,
my grave fathers,

Under correction of your Fatherhoods,
What face of truth is here? If these strange
deeds

May pass, most honor'd fathers " — I had much ado

To forbear laughing.

Mos. 'T seem'd to me you sweat, sir.

VOLP. In troth, I did a little.

Mos. But confess, sir,
Were you not daunted?

VOLP. In good faith, I was
A little in a mist, but not dejected; 40
Never, but still myself.

Mos. I think it, sir.
Now, so truth help me, I must needs say this,
sir,

And out of conscience for your advocate,
He has taken pains, in faith, sir, and deserv'd,
In my poor judgment, I speak it under favor,
Not to contrary you, sir, very richly —
Well — to be cozen'd.<sup>4</sup>

VOLP. Troth, and I think so too,
By that I heard him in the latter end.

Mos. O, but before, sir: had you heard him
first

Draw it to certain heads, then aggravate,<sup>5</sup> [50
Then use his vehement figures — I look'd still
When he would shift<sup>6</sup> a shirt; and doing this
Out of pure love, no hope of gain —

VOLP. 'T is right.
I cannot answer him, Mosca, as I would,
Not yet; but for thy sake, at thy entreaty,
I will begin, ev'n now — to vex 'em all,
This very instant.

Mos. Good sir.

VOLP. Call the dwarf
And eunuch forth.

Mos. Castrone, Nano!

[Enter CASTRONE and NANO.]

NANO. Here.

VOLP. Shall we have a jig<sup>7</sup> now?

Mos. What you please, sir.

VOLP. Go,
Straight give out about the streets, you two, [60
That I am dead; do it with constancy,
Sadly,<sup>8</sup> do you hear? Impute it to the grief
Of this late slander.

[Exeunt CASTRONE and NANO.]

Mos. What do you mean, sir?

VOLP. Oh,
I shall have instantly my Vulture, Crow,
Raven, come flying hither, on the news,
To peck for carrion, my she-wolf, and all,
Greedy, and full of expectation —

Mos. And then to have it ravish'd from their mouths?

<sup>4</sup> Deceived, cheated.

<sup>5</sup> Add weight, bring charges.

<sup>6</sup> I was constantly expecting that he would have to change.

<sup>8</sup> Seriously.

VOLP. 'T is true. I will ha' thee put on a gown,

And take upon thee, as thou wert mine
heir; 70

Show 'em a will. Open that chest, and reach Forth one of those that has the blanks. I'll straight

Put in thy name.

Mos. It will be rare, sir.

VOLP. Ay,
When they e'en gape, and find themselves deluded —

Mos. Yes.

VOLP. And thou use them scurvily.
Dispatch;

Get on thy gown.

Mos. But what, sir, if they ask
After the body?

VOLP. Say, it was corrupted.

Mos. I'll say it stunk, sir; and was fain't have it

Coffin'd up instantly, and sent away.

VOLP. Anything; what thou wilt. — Hold, here's my will. 80

Get thee a cap, a count-book, pen and ink,
Papers afore thee; sit as thou wert taking
An inventory of parcels. I'll get up
Behind the curtain, on a stool, and hearken;
Sometime peep over, see how they do look,
With what degrees their blood doth leave their faces!

O, 't will afford me a rare meal of laughter.

Mos. Your advocate will turn stark dull upon it.

VOLP. It will take off his oratory's edge.

Mos. But your clarissimo, old roundback,
he 90

Will crump you<sup>9</sup> like a hog-louse, with the touch.

VOLP. And what Corvino?

Mos. O, sir, look for him,
To-morrow morning, with a rope and a dagger,
To visit all the streets; he must run mad.

My Lady too, that came into the court,
To bear false witness for your Worship —

VOLP. Yes,
And kiss'd me 'fore the fathers, when my face
Flow'd all with oils —

Mos. And sweat, sir. Why, your gold
Is such another med'cine, it dries up
All those offensive savors. It transforms [100
The most deformed, and restores 'em lovely,
As 't were the strange poetical girdle.<sup>10</sup> Jove

Could not invent t' himself a shroud more subtle

To pass Acrisius' <sup>11</sup> guards. It is the thing Makes all the world her grace, her youth, her beauty.

VOLP. I think she loves me.

Mos. Who? the lady, sir?
She's jealous of you.

VOLP. Dost thou say so?
[Knocking within.]

Mos. Hark.
There's some already.

VOLP. Look.

Mos. It is the Vulture;
He has the quickest scent.

VOLP. I'll to my place,
Thou to thy posture.

[Goes behind the curtain.<sup>12</sup>]

Mos. I am set.

VOLP. But, Mosca, [110]
Play the artificer now: torture 'em rarely.

SCENE III <sup>13</sup>

[To] MOSCA [enter] VOLTORE.

VOLT. How now, my Mosca?

Mos. [writing] Turkey carpets, nine ——

VOLT. Taking an inventory! that is well.

Mos. Two suits of bedding, tissue ——

VOLT. Where's the will?
Let me read that the while.

[Enter Servants with CORBACCIO in a chair.]

CORB. So, set me down,
And get you home. [Exeunt Servants.]

VOLT. Is he come now, to trouble us?

Mos. Of cloth of gold, two more ——

CORB. Is it done, Mosca?

Mos. Of several velvets, eight ——

VOLT. I like his care.

CORB. Dost thou not hear?

[Enter CORVINO.]

CORV. Ha! is the hour come, Mosca?

VOLP. [aside] Ay, now they muster.

[Peeps from behind a traverse.<sup>14</sup>]

CORV. What does the advocate here?
Or this Corbaccio?

CORB. What do these here?

<sup>12</sup> Of the inner stage.

<sup>14</sup> One of the curtains that closed off the inner stage.

[Enter LADY WOULD-BE.]

LADY. Mosca! [10]

Is his thread spun?

Mos. Eight chests of linen ——

VOLP. [aside] Oh,

My fine Dame Would-be, too!

CORV. Mosca, the will,
That I may show it these, and rid 'em hence.

Mos. Six chests of diaper, four of damask ——
there.

[Gives the will.]

CORB. Is that the will?

Mos. [writing] Down-beds, and bolsters ——

VOLP. [aside] Rare!

Be busy still. Now they begin to flutter;
They never think of me. Look, see, see!
How their swift eyes run over the long deed,
Unto the name, and to the legacies,
What is bequeath'd them there ——

Mos. Ten suits of hangings —— [20]

VOLP. [aside] Ay, in their garters, Mosca.
Now their hopes

Are at the gasp.

VOLT. Mosca the heir!

CORB. What's that?

VOLP. [aside] My advocate is dumb; look to my merchant ——

He has heard of some strange storm; a ship is lost ——

He faints. My Lady will swoon. Old glazen-eyes,

He hath not reach'd his despair yet.

CORB. All these
Are out of hope; I am, sure, the man.

[Takes the will.]

CORV. But, Mosca ——

Mos. Two cabinets ——

CORV. Is this in earnest?

Mos. One

Of ebony ——

CORV. Or do you but delude me?

Mos. The other, mother-of-pearl —— I am very busy. 30

Good faith, it is a fortune thrown upon me ——
Item, one salt <sup>15</sup> of agate —— not my seeking.

LADY. Do you hear, sir?

Mos. A perfum'd box —— 'pray you for-
bear;

You see I am troubled —— made of an onyx ——

LADY. How!

Mos. To-morrow or next day, I shall be at leisure

To talk with you all.

<sup>15</sup> Saltcellar.

CORV. Is this my large hope's issue?

LADY. Sir, I must have a fairer answer.

MOS. Madam!

Marry, and shall: 'pray you, fairly quit my house.

Nay, raise no tempest with your looks; but hark you,

Remember what your Ladyship off'red me [40 To put you in an heir; go to; think on it.

And what you said e'en your best madams did For maintenance, and why not you? Enough. Go home, and use the poor Sir Pol, your knight, well,

For fear I tell some riddles; go, be melancholic. [Exit LADY WOULD-BE.]

VOLP. [aside] Oh, my fine devil!

CORV. Mosca, pray you a word.

MOS. Lord! will not you take your dispatch hence yet?

Methinks, of all, you should have been th' example.

Why should you stay here? with what thought, what promise?

Hear you; do not you know, I know you an ass, 50

And that you would most fain have been a wittol<sup>16</sup>

If fortune would have let you? that you are A declar'd cuckold, on good terms? This pearl, You'll say, was yours? right; this diamond? I'll not deny't, but thank you. Much here else?

It may be so. Why, think that these good works

May help to hide you[r] bad. I'll not betray you;

Although you be but extraordinary, And have it<sup>17</sup> only in title, it sufficeth:

Go home; be melancholic too, or mad. 60

[Exit CORVINO.]

VOLP. [aside] Rare Mosca! how his villainy becomes him!

VOLT. [aside] Certain he doth delude all these for me.

CORB. Mosca the heir?

VOLP. [aside] O, his four eyes have found it!

CORB. I am cozen'd, cheated, by a parasite-slave;

Harlot,<sup>18</sup> t' hast gull'd me.

MOS. Yes, sir. Stop your mouth,

Or I shall draw the only tooth is left.

Are not you he, that filthy covetous wretch, With the three legs, that here, in hope of prey, Have, any time this three year, snuff'd about, With your most grov'ling nose, and would have hir'd 70

Me to the pois'ning of my patron, sir?

Are not you he that have to-day in court

Profess'd the disinheriting of your son?

Perjur'd yourself? Go home, and die, and stink;

If you but croak a syllable, all comes out:

Away, and call your porters!<sup>19</sup> [Exit CORBACCIO.] Go, go, stink.

VOLP. [aside] Excellent varlet!

VOLT. Now, my faithful Mosca, I find thy constancy——

MOS. Sir!

VOLT. Sincere.

MOS. [writing] A table Of porphyry——I mar'l you'll be thus troublesome.

VOLT. Nay, leave off now, they are gone.

MOS. Why, who are you? [80 What! who did send for you? Oh, cry you mercy,

Reverend sir! Good faith, I am griev'd for you,

That any chance of mine should thus defeat Your (I must needs say) most deserving travails;

But I protest, sir, it was cast upon me, And I could almost wish to be without it, But that the will o' th' dead must be observ'd.

Marry, my joy is that you need it not;

You have a gift, sir, (thank your education), Will never let you want, while there are men, 90

And malice, to breed causes.<sup>20</sup> Would I had

But half the like, for all my fortune, sir.

If I have any suits, as I do hope, Things being so easy and direct, I shall not, I will make bold with your obstreperous<sup>21</sup> aid; Conceive me—for your fee, sir. In meantime,

You that have so much law, I know ha' the conscience

Not to be covetous of what is mine.

Good sir, I thank you for my plate; 't will help

To set up a young man. Good faith, you look 100

As you were costive ; best go home and purge,
sir. [Exit VOLTORE.]

VOLP. [coming from behind the curtain] Bid him eat lettuce<sup>22</sup> well. My witty mischief,

Let me embrace thee. O that I could now
Transform thee to a Venus !— Mosca, go,
Straight take my habit of clarissimo,<sup>23</sup>
And walk the streets ; be seen, torment 'em
more :

We must pursue, as well as plot. Who would
Have lost this feast ?

Mos. I doubt it will lose them.

VOLP. O, my recovery shall recover all.
That I could now but think on some disguise 110

To meet 'em in, and ask 'em questions.
How I would vex 'em still at every turn !

Mos. Sir, I can fit you.

VOLP. Canst thou ?

Mos. Yes, I know
One o' the commandadori, sir ; so like you,<sup>24</sup>
Him will I straight make drunk, and bring you his habit.

VOLP. A rare disguise, and answering thy brain !
O, I will be a sharp disease unto 'em.

Mos. Sir, you must look for curses —

VOLP. Till they burst ;
The Fox fares ever best when he is curs'd.<sup>25</sup>
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV<sup>26</sup>

[Enter] PEREGRINE [disguised and] three Mercatori.

PER. Am I enough disguis'd ?

1 MER. I warrant you.

PER. All my ambition is to fright him only.

2 MER. If you could ship him away, 't were excellent.

3 MER. To Zant,<sup>27</sup> or to Aleppo !

PER. Yes, and ha' his Adventures put i' th' Book of Voyages,<sup>28</sup>
And his gull'd story regist' red for truth !
Well, gentlemen, when I am in awhile,
And that you think us warm in our discourse,
Know your approaches.

1 MER. Trust it to our care.
[Exeunt Merchants.]

[Enter Waiting Woman.]

PER. Save you, fair lady ! Is Sir Pol within ? 10

WOM. I do not know, sir.

PER. 'Pray you say unto him
Here is a merchant, upon earnest business,
Desires to speak with him.

WOM. I will see, sir. [Exit.]

PER. 'Pray you.
I see the family is all female here.

[Re-enter Waiting Woman.]

WOM. He says, sir, he has weighty affairs of
state,

That now require him whole ; some other time
You may possess him.

PER. 'Pray you say again,
If those require him whole, these will exact
him.

Whereof I bring him tidings. [Exit Woman.]
What might be

His grave affair of state now ! How to make 20
Bolognian sausages here in Venice, sparing
One o' th' ingredients ?

[Re-enter Waiting Woman.]

WOM. Sir, he says he knows
By your word " tidings,"<sup>29</sup> that you are no statesman,

And therefore wills you stay.

PER. Sweet, 'pray you return him
I have not read so many proclamations,
And studied them for words, as he has
done —

But — here he deigns to come.

[Exit Woman.]

[Enter SIR POLITIC.]

POL. Sir, I must crave
Your courteous pardon. There hath chanc'd to-day

Unkind disaster 'twixt my lady and me ;
And I was penning my apology, 30
To give her satisfaction, as you came now.

PER. Sir, I am griev'd I bring you worse disaster.

The gentleman you met at th' port to-day,
That told you he was newly arriv'd —

POL. Ay, was
A fugitive punk<sup>30</sup> ?

PER. No, sir, a spy set on you ;
And he has made relation to the Senate,

That you profess'd to him to have a plot
To sell the state of Venice to the Turk.

POL. O me!

PER. For which warrants are sign'd by this time,
To apprehend you, and to search your study 40
For papers ——

POL. Alas, sir, I have none, but notes
Drawn out of play-books ——

PER. All the better, sir.

POL. And some essays. What shall I do?

PER. Sir, best

Convey yourself into a sugar-chest;

Or, if you could lie round, a frail <sup>31</sup> were rare; <sup>32</sup>
And I could send you aboard.

POL. Sir, I but talk'd so.
For discourse sake merely.

They knock without.

PER. Hark! they are there.

POL. I am a wretch, a wretch!

PER. What will you do, sir?
Have you ne'er a curran[t]-butt to leap into?
They'll put you to the rack; you must be sudden. 50

POL. Sir, I have an engine <sup>33</sup> ——

3 MER. [within] Sir Politic Would-be!

2 MER. [within] Where is he?

POL. That I've thought upon, before
time.

PER. What is it?

POL. I shall ne'er endure the torture. —
Marry, it is, sir, of a tortoise shell,
Fitted <sup>34</sup> for these extremities; 'pray you, sir, help me.

Here I have a place, sir, to put back my legs,
Please you to lay it on, sir, [Lies down while PEREGRINE places the shell upon him.]
with this cap,

And my black gloves. I'll lie, sir, like a tortoise,

Till they are gone.

PER. And call you this an engine?

POL. Mine own device. —— Good sir, bid my wife's women 60

To burn my papers. [Exit PEREGRINE.]

[The three Merchants] rush in.

1 MER. Where's he hid?

3 MER. We must,

And will, sure, find him.

2 MER. Which is his study?

[Re-enter PEREGRINE.]

1 MER. What
Are you, sir?

PER. I am a merchant, that came here
To look upon this tortoise.

3 MER. How?

1 MER. St. Mark!
What beast is this?

PER. It is a fish.

2 MER. Come out here!

PER. Nay, you may strike him, sir, and tread upon him;

He'll bear a cart.

1 MER. What, to run over him?

PER. Yes, sir.

3 MER. Let's jump upon him.

2 MER. Can he not go?

PER. He creeps, sir.

1 MER. Let's see him creep.

PER. No, good sir, you will hurt him.

2 MER. Heart, I'll see him creep, or prick his guts. 70

3 MER. Come out here.

PER. Pray you, sir! — [aside to SIR POLITIC] Creep a little.

1 MER. Forth.

2 MER. Yet further.

PER. Good sir! — [aside] Creep!

2 MER. We'll see his legs.

*They pull off the shell and discover
him.*

3 MER. Gods so, he has garters!

1 MER. Ay, and gloves!

2 MER. Is this

Your fearful tortoise?

PER. [discovering himself] Now, Sir
Pol, we are even;

For your next project I shall be prepar'd;

I am sorry for the funeral of your notes, sir.

1 MER. 'T were a rare motion <sup>35</sup> to be seen in Fleet Street.

2 MER. Ay, i' the term. <sup>36</sup>

1 MER. Or Smithfield, in the fair. <sup>37</sup>

3 MER. Methinks 't is but a melancholic sight!

PER. Farewell, most politic tortoise.

[Exeunt PEREGRINE and Merchants.]

[Re-enter Waiting Woman.]

POL. Where's my Lady? 80

Knows she of this?

WOM. I know not, sir.

<sup>37</sup> Bartholomew Fair.

POL.

Inquire. —

Oh, I shall be the fable of all feasts,
The freight of the gazetti,<sup>38</sup> ship-boys' tale;
And, which is worst, even talk for ordinaries.<sup>39</sup>

WOM. My Lady's come most melancholic
home,
And says, sir, she will straight to sea, for physic.

POL. And I, to shun this place and clime for ever,
Creeping with house on back, and think it well
To shrink my poor head in my politic shell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V<sup>40</sup>

[Enter] VOLPONE [and] MOSCA, the first in the habit of a commandadore, the other of a clarissimo.

VOLP. Am I then like him?

MOS. O, sir, you are he;
No man can sever<sup>41</sup> you.

VOLP. Good.

MOS. But what am I?

VOLP. 'Fore Heav'n, a brave clarissimo;
thou becom'st it!

Pity thou wert not born one.

MOS. If I hold

My made one,<sup>42</sup> 't will be well.

VOLP. I'll go and see

What news first at the court. [Exit.]

MOS. Do so. — My Fox

Is out on his hole, and ere he shall re-enter,
I'll make him languish in his borrow'd case,<sup>43</sup>
Except he come to composition<sup>44</sup> with me. —
Androgyno, Castrone, Nano!

[Enter ANDROGYNO, CASTRONE, and NANO.]

ALL. Here. 10

MOS. Go, recreate yourselves abroad; go, sport. — [Exeunt all but MOSCA.]

So, now I have the keys, and am possess'd.
Since he will needs be dead afore his time,
I'll bury him, or gain by him. I am his heir,
And so will keep me, till he share, at least.
To cozen him of all, were but a cheat
Well plac'd; no man would construe it a sin:
Let his sport pay for 't. This is call'd the Fox-trap. [Exit.]

<sup>38</sup> I.e., the subject of the newspapers.<sup>39</sup> Taverns.<sup>40</sup> A room in Volpone's house.<sup>41</sup> I.e., distinguish.<sup>42</sup> I.e., if I can keep up my assumed rank. Probably not an aside.<sup>43</sup> Costume, skin.<sup>44</sup> Terms, agreement.SCENE VI<sup>45</sup>

[Enter] CORBACCIO [and] CORVINO.

CORB. They say the court is set.

CORV. We must maintain

Our first tale good, for both our reputations.

CORB. Why, mine's no tale; my son would there have kill'd me.

CORV. That's true; I had forgot; — [aside] mine is, I am sure. —

But for your will, sir.

CORB. Ay, I'll come upon him
For that hereafter, now his patron's dead.

[Enter VOLPONE disguised.]

VOLP. Signior Corvino! and Corbaccio!
sir,

Much joy unto you.

CORV. Of what?

VOLP. The sudden good

Dropp'd down upon you —

CORB. Where?

VOLP. And none knows how —

From old Volpone, sir.

CORB. Out, errant knave! 10

VOLP. Let not your too much wealth, sir, make you furious.

CORB. Away, thou varlet.

VOLP. Why, sir?

CORB. Dost thou mock me?

VOLP. You mock the world, sir; did you not change wills?

CORB. Out, harlot.

VOLP. O! belike you are the man,
Signior Corvino? Faith, you carry it well;

You grow not mad withal; I love your spirit.

You are not overleaven'd<sup>46</sup> with your fortune.

You should ha' some would swell now like a wine-fat,<sup>47</sup>

With such an autumn. — Did he gi' you all,
sir?

CORB. Avoid,<sup>48</sup> you rascal.

VOLP. Troth, your wife has shown [20]
Herself a very woman; but you are well,
You need not care, you have a good estate,
To bear it out, sir, better by this chance —
Except Corbaccio have a share.

CORB. Hence, varlet.

VOLP. You will not be acknown,<sup>49</sup> sir; why,
't is wise.

Thus do all gamesters, at all games, dissemble:

No man will seem <sup>50</sup> to win. [Exeunt CORVINO and CORBACCIO.] Here comes my vulture, Heaving his beak up i' the air, and snuffing.

SCENE VII <sup>51</sup>

[To] VOLPONE [enter] VOLTORE.

VOLT. Outstripp'd thus, by a parasite! a slave!
Would run on errands, and make legs for crumbs!

Well, what I'll do —

VOLP. The court stays for you[r] Worship.

I e'en rejoice, sir, at your Worship's happiness,
And that it fell into so learned hands,
That understand the fingering —

VOLT. What do you mean?

VOLP. I mean to be a suitor to your Worship,

For the small tenement, out of reparations, <sup>52</sup>
That at the end of your long row of houses,
By the Piscaria; it was, in Volpone's time, [10
Your predecessor, ere he grew diseas'd,
A handsome, pretty, custom'd <sup>53</sup> bawdyhouse
As any was in Venice, none disprais'd;
But fell with him: his body and that house
Decay'd together.

VOLT. Come, sir, leave your prating.

VOLP. Why, if your Worship give me but your hand

That I may ha' the refusal, I have done.

'T is a mere toy to you, sir, candle-rents; <sup>54</sup>

As your learn'd Worship knows —

VOLT. What do I know?

VOLP. Marry, no end of your wealth, sir;
God decrease it! <sup>20</sup>

VOLT. Mistaking knave! what, mock'st thou my misfortune? [Exit.]

VOLP. His blessing on your heart, sir; would 't were more! —

Now to my first again, at the next corner.

[Exit.]

SCENE VIII <sup>55</sup>

[Enter] CORBACCIO and CORVINO, (MOSCA passant.)

CORB. See, in our habit! <sup>56</sup> see the impudent varlet!

CORV. That I could shoot mine eyes at him, like gun-stones. <sup>57</sup>

[Enter VOLPONE.]

VOLP. But is this true, sir, of the parasite?

CORB. Again, t' afflict us? monster!

VOLP. In good faith, sir,
I am heartily griev'd, a beard of your grave length

Should be so overreach'd. I never brook'd <sup>58</sup>
That parasite's hair; methought his nose should cozen:

There still was somewhat in his look, did promise

The bane of a clarissimo.

CORB. Knave —

VOLP. Methinks

Yet you, that are so traded i' the world, <sup>10</sup>
A witty merchant, the fine bird, Corvino,
That have such moral emblems on your name, <sup>59</sup>

Should not have sung you[r] shame, and dropp'd your cheese,

To let the Fox laugh at you[r] emptiness.

CORV. Sirrah, you think the privilege of the place,

And your red saucy cap, that seems to me
Nail'd to your jolt-head <sup>60</sup> with those two cecchines, <sup>61</sup>

Can warrant your abuses; come you hither:
You shall perceive, sir, I dare beat you; approach.

VOLP. No haste, sir, I do not know your valor well, <sup>20</sup>

Since you durst publish what you are, sir.

CORV. Tarry,

I'd speak with you.

VOLP. Sir, sir, another time —

CORV. Nay, now.

VOLP. O God, sir! I were a wise man,
Would stand the fury of a distracted cuckold.
Mosca walks by 'em.

CORB. What, come again!

VOLP. Upon 'em, Mosca; save me.

CORB. The air's infected where he breathes

CORV. Let's fly him.

[Exeunt CORVINO and CORBACCIO.]

VOLP. Excellent basilisk! <sup>62</sup> turn upon the Vulture.

SCENE IX <sup>63</sup>

[To them enter] VOLTORE.

VOLT. Well, flesh-fly, it is summer with you now ;

Your winter will come on.

Mos. Good advocate,
'Pray thee not rail, nor threaten out of place thus ;

Thou 'lt make a solecism, as Madam says.

Get you a biggin <sup>64</sup> more ; your brain breaks loose. [Exit.]

VOLT. Well sir.

VOLT. Would you ha' me beat the insolent slave ?

Throw dirt upon his first good clothes ?

VOLT. This same
Is doubtless some familiar ! <sup>65</sup>

VOLT. Sir, the court,
In troth, stays for you. I am mad, a mule
That never read Justinian should get up 10
And ride an advocate. Had you no quirk
To avoid gullage, sir, by such a creature ?
I hope you do but jest ; he has not done't :
This's but confederacy to blind the rest.
You are the heir ?

VOLT. A strange, officious,
Troublesome knave ! Thou dost torment me.

VOLT. I know —
It cannot be, sir, that you should be cozen'd ;
'T is not within the wit of man to do it ;
You are so wise, so prudent ; and 't is fit
That wealth and wisdom still should go together. [Exeunt.] 20

SCENE X <sup>66</sup>

[Enter] 4 Avocatori, Notario, BONARIO, CELIA, CORBACCIO, CORVINO, Commandadori,
[Saffi, etc.]

1 Avoc. Are all the parties here ?

Not. All but the advocate.

2 Avoc. And here he comes.

[Enter VOLTORE and VOLPONE.]

[1] Avoc. Then bring 'em forth to sentence.

VOLT. O, my most honor'd fathers, let your mercy

Once win upon your justice, to forgive —
I am distracted —

<sup>64</sup> The coif of a serjeant-at-law.

VOLP. [aside] <sup>67</sup> What will he do now ?

VOLT. Oh,

I know not which t' address myself to first ;
Whether your Fatherhoods, or these innocents —

CORV. [aside] Will he betray himself ?

VOLT. Whom equally

[I have abus'd, out of most covetous ends —

CORV. The man is mad !

CORB. What's that ?

CORV. He is possess'd.] <sup>68</sup> [10

VOLT. For which, now struck in conscience, here I prostrate

Myself at your offended feet, for pardon.

1, 2 Avoc. Arise.

CEL. O Heav'n, how just thou art !

VOLT. I am caught

I' mine own noose —

CORV. [to CORBACCIO] Be constant, sir ; naught now

Can help but impudence.

1 Avoc. Speak forward.

COM. Silence !

VOLT. It is not passion in me, reverend fathers,

But only conscience, conscience, my good sires,
That makes me now tell truth. That parasite,
That knave, hath been the instrument of all.

1 Avoc. Where is that knave ? Fetch him.

VOLT. I go. [Exit.]

CORV. Grave fathers, 20

This man's distracted ; he confess'd it now :

For, hoping to be old Volpone's heir,

Who now is dead —

3 Avoc. How ?

2 Avoc. Is Volpone dead ?

CORV. Dead since, <sup>69</sup> grave fathers.

BON. O sure vengeance !

1 Avoc. Stay ;

Then he was no deceiver ?

VOLT. Oh, no, none.

This parasite, grave fathers —

CORV. He does speak

Out of mere envy, 'cause the servant's made
The thing he gap'd for. Please your Fatherhoods,

This is the truth, though I'll not justify

The other, but he may be somedea] <sup>70</sup> faulty. 30

<sup>67</sup> The aside is indicated, as often, by parentheses. These sometimes, however, enclose speeches which are not asides.

<sup>68</sup> So Q. These lines have dropped out of F<sub>1</sub>. By my false accusation.

<sup>69</sup> Since the trial. <sup>70</sup> Q somewhere.

VOLT. Ay, to your hopes, as well as mine,
Corvino;
But I'll use modesty.<sup>71</sup> Pleaseth your Wisdoms
To view these certain notes, and but confer <sup>72</sup>
them;
As I hope favor, they shall speak clear truth.
CORV. The Devil has ent'red him!
BON. Or bides in you.
4 AVOC. We have done ill, by a public officer
To send for him, if he be heir.
2 AVOC. For whom?
4 AVOC. Him that they call the parasite.
3 AVOC. 'T is true,
He is a man of great estate, now left.
4 AVOC. Go you, and learn his name, and say the court 40
Entreats his presence here, but to the clearing
Of some few doubts. [Exit Notary.]
2 AVOC. This same's a labyrinth!
1 AVOC. Stand you unto your first report?
CORV. My state,
My life, my fame —
BON. Where is't?

CORV. Are at the stake.
1 AVOC. Is yours so too?
CORB. The advocate's a knave,
And has a forked tongue —
2 AVOC. Speak to the point.
CORB. So is the parasite too.
1 AVOC. This is confusion.
VOLT. I do beseech your Fatherhoods, read but those — [Giving them papers.] CORV. And credit nothing the false spirit hath writ: 49
It cannot be but he's possess'd, grave fathers.
[The scene closes.] <sup>73</sup>

SCENE XI <sup>74</sup>[Enter] VOLFONE.

VOLF. To make a snare for mine own neck,
and run
My head into it, wilfully! with laughter!
When I had newly 'scap'd, was free and clear!
Out of mere wantonness! Oh, the dull devil
Was in this brain of mine when I devis'd it,
And Mosca gave it second; he must now
Help to sear up this vein, or we bleed dead.

<sup>71</sup> Moderation.<sup>72</sup> Compare.<sup>73</sup> So Gifford; all the characters being grouped on the inner stage, the curtains were drawn.<sup>74</sup> A street.[Enter NANO, ANDROGYNO, and CASTRONE.]

How now! Who let you loose? Whither go you now?

What, to buy gingerbread, or to drown kit-
lings?

NAN. Sir, Master Mosca call'd us out of doors, 10

And bid us all go play, and took the keys.

AND. Yes.

VOLF. Did Master Mosca take the keys? Why, so!

I'm farther in. These are my fine conceits!
I must be merry, with a mischief to me!
What a vile wretch was I, that could not bear
My fortune soberly? I must ha' my crochets, And my conundrums! — Well, go you, and seek him;

His meaning may be truer than my fear.

Bid him he straight come to me to the court;
Thither will I, and, if 't be possible, 20
Unscrew my advocate, upon new hopes.

When I provok'd him, then I lost myself.

[Exeunt.]SCENE XII <sup>75</sup>

Avocatori, etc. [are discovered, as before.]

1 AVOC. These things can ne'er be recon-cil'd. He here [Shows the papers.]
Professeth that the gentleman was wrong'd,
And that the gentlewoman was brought thither,

Forc'd by her husband, and there left.

VOLT. Most true.

CEL. How ready is Heav'n to those that pray!

1 AVOC. But that
Volpone would have ravish'd her, he holds Utterly false, knowing his impotence.

CORV. Grave fathers, he is possess'd; again,
I say,

Possess'd; nay, if there be possession,
And obsession, he has both.

3 AVOC. Here comes our officer. 10

[Enter VOLFONE.]

VOLF. The parasite will straight be here, grave fathers.

4 AVOC. You might invent some other name, Sir Varlet.

3 AVOC. Did not the notary meet him?

VOLF. Not that I know.

4 AVOC. His coming will clear all.

2 AVOC. Yet it is misty.

<sup>75</sup> The Scrutineo.

VOLT. May't please your Fatherhoods — VOLP. (whispers the Advocate.) Sir,
the parasite

Will'd me to tell you that his master lives;
That you are still the man; your hopes the
same;

And this was only a jest —

VOLT. How?

VOLP. Sir, to try
If you were firm, and how you stood affected.

VOLT. Art sure he lives?

VOLP. Do I live, sir?

VOLT. O me! [20

I was too violent.

VOLP. Sir, you may redeem it.

They said you were possess'd; fall down, and seem so:

I'll help to make it good. (VOLTORE falls.)
God bless the man! —

[aside to VOLTORE] Stop your wind hard, and swell. — See, see, see!

He vomits crooked pins! <sup>76</sup> His eyes are set,
Like a dead hare's hung in a poulter's shop!
His mouth's running away! Do you see,
signior?

Now it is in his belly.

CORV. Ay, the devil!

VOLP. Now in his throat.

CORV. Ay, I perceive it plain.

VOLP. 'T will out, 't will out! stand clear.

See where it flies! 30

In shape of a blue toad, with a bat's wings!

Do not you see it, sir?

CORB. What? I think I do.

CORV. 'T is too manifest.

VOLP. Look! he comes t' himself!

VOLT. Where am I?

VOLP. Take good heart, the worst is past, sir.

You're dispossess'd.

1 Avoc. What accident is this?

2 Avoc. Sudden and full of wonder!

3 Avoc. If he were

Possess'd, as it appears, all this is nothing.

CORV. He has been often subject to these fits.

1 Avoc. Show him that writing: — do you know it, sir?

VOLP. [aside to VOLTORE] Deny it, sir, forswear it; know it not. 40

VOLT. Yes, I do know it well: it is my hand;
But all that it contains is false.

BON. O practice!

2 Avoc. What maze is this!

<sup>76</sup> As bewitched persons were said to do.

1 Avoc. Is he not guilty then,
Whom you there name the parasite?

VOLT. Grave fathers,
No more than his good patron, old Volpone.

4 Avoc. Why, he is dead.

VOLT. O no, my honor'd fathers.
He lives —

1 Avoc. How! lives?

VOLT. Lives.

2 Avoc. This is subtler yet!

3 Avoc. You said he was dead!

VOLT. Never.

3 Avoc. You said so!

CORV. I heard so.

4 Avoc. Here comes the gentleman; make him way.

[Enter MOSCA.]

3 Avoc. A stool,

4 Avoc. [aside] A proper <sup>77</sup> man! and, were Volpone dead, 50

A fit match for my daughter.

3 Avoc. Give him way.

VOLP. [aside to MOSCA] Mosca, I was a'most lost: the advocate

Had betray'd all; but now it is recover'd;
All's on the hinge again — say I am living.

MOS. What busy knave is this? — Most reverend fathers,

I sooner had attended your grave pleasures,
But that my order for the funeral

Of my dear patron did require me —

VOLP. [aside] Mosca!

MOS. Whom I intend to bury like a gentle-
man.

VOLP. [aside] Ay, quick, <sup>78</sup> and cozen me of all.

2 Avoc. Still stranger! 60
More intricate!

1 Avoc. And come about again!

4 Avoc. [aside] It is a match; my daughter is bestow'd.

MOS. [aside to VOLPONE] Will you gi' me
half?

VOLP. [aside] First I'll be hang'd.

MOS. [aside] I know
Your voice is good; cry not so loud.

1 Avoc. Demand
The advocate. — Sir, did not you affirm
Volpone was alive?

VOLP. Yes, and he is;

This gent'man told me so. — [aside to MOSCA]
Thou shalt have half.

<sup>78</sup> Alive.

Mos. Whose drunkard is this same?
 Speak, some that know him;
 I never saw his face. — [aside to VOLPONE] I cannot now

Afford it you so cheap.

VOLP. [aside] No?

1 Avoc. What say you? [70

VOLT. The officer told me.

VOLP. I did, grave fathers,
 And will maintain he lives, with mine own life,
 And that this creature [pointing to MOSCA] told me. — [aside] I was born

With all good stars my enemies.

Mos. Most grave fathers,
 If such an insolence as this must pass
 Upon me, I am silent; 't was not this
 For which you sent, I hope.

2 Avoc. Take him away.

VOLP. Mosca!

3 Avoc. Let him be whipp'd.

VOLP. [aside to MOSCA] Wilt thou betray me?
 Cozen me?

3 Avoc. And taught to bear himself
 Toward a person of his rank.

4 Avoc. Away. 80

Mos. I humbly thank your Fatherhoods.

VOLP. Soft, soft; — [aside] whipp'd!
 And lose all that I have! If I confess,
 It cannot be much more.

4 Avoc. Sir, are you married?

VOLP. They'll be alli'd anon; I must be
 resolute;

The Fox shall here uncase.

He puts off his disguise.

Mos. [aside] Patron!

VOLP. Nay, now

My ruins shall not come alone; your match
 I'll hinder sure; my substance shall not glue
 you,

Nor screw you into a family.

Mos. [aside] Why, patron!

VOLP. I am Volpone, and this [pointing to
MOSCA] is my knave;

This [to VOLTORE], his own knave; this [to
CORBACCIO], avarice's fool; 90

This [to CORVINO], a chimaera of wittol, fool,
 and knave:

And, reverend fathers, since we all can hope
 Naught but a sentence, let's not now despair it.
 You hear me brief.

CORV. May it please your Fatherhoods —
 Com. Silence.

1 Avoc. The knot is now undone, by miracle!

2 Avoc. Nothing can be more clear.

3 Avoc.

Or can more prove

These innocent.

1 Avoc. Give 'em their liberty.

BON. Heaven could not long let such gross crimes be hid.

2 Avoc. If this be held the highway to get riches,

May I be poor.

3 Avoc. This's not the gain, but torment.

1 Avoc. These possess wealth, as sick men possess fevers, 101

Which trulier may be said to possess them.

2 Avoc. Disrobe that parasite.

CORV. [and] Mos. Most honor'd fathers —

1 Avoc. Can you plead aught to stay the course of justice?

If you can, speak.

CORV. [and] VOLT. We beg favor.

CEL. And mercy.

1 Avoc. You hurt your innocence, suing for the guilty.

Stand forth; and, first, the parasite. You appear

T' have been the chiefest minister, if not plot-
 ter,

In all these lewd impostures, and now, lastly,
 Have with your impudence abus'd the court,
 And habit of a gentleman of Venice, 111
 Being a fellow of no birth or blood;

For which our sentence is, first, thou be whipp'd;

Then live perpetual prisoner in our galleys.

VOLP. I thank you for him.

Mos. Bane to thy wolfish nature!

1 Avoc. Deliver him to the saffi.<sup>79</sup> —
 Thou, Volpone,

By blood and rank a gentleman, canst not fall
 Under like censure; but our judgment on thee
 Is that thy substance all be straight confiscate
 To the hospital of the Incurabili. 120
 And since the most was gotten by imposture,
 By feigning lame, gout, palsy, and such diseases,

Thou art to lie in prison, cramp'd with irons,
 Till thou be'st sick and lame indeed. — Remove him.

VOLP. This is called mortifying of a Fox.

1 Avoc. Thou, Voltore, to take away the scandal

Thou hast giv'n all worthy men of thy profession,

Art banish'd from their fellowship, and our state. —

<sup>79</sup> Bailiffs.

Corbaccio! — Bring him near. — We here possess

Thy son of all thy state,<sup>80</sup> and confine thee [130
To the monastery of San' Spirito ;

Where, since thou knew'st not how to live well
here,

Thou shalt be learn'd to die well.

CORB. Ha! what said he?

COM. You shall know anon, sir.

1 Avoc. Thou, Corvino, shalt
Be straight embark'd from thine own house,
and row'd

Round about Venice, through the Grand Canal,

Wearing a cap, with fair long ass's ears,
Instead of horns ; and so to mount, a paper
Pinn'd on thy breast, to the Berlin[a].<sup>81</sup>

CORV. Yes,
And have mine eyes beat out with stinking
fish, 140

Bruis'd fruit, and rotten eggs — 't is well. I am glad

I shall not see my shame yet.

1 Avoc. And to expiate

<sup>80</sup> Q estate.

<sup>81</sup> Pillory.

Thy wrongs done to thy wife, thou art to send
her

Home to her father, with her dowry trebled :
And these are all your judgments.

ALL. Honor'd fathers —

1 Avoc. Which may not be revok'd. Now you begin,

When crimes are done and past, and to be punish'd,

To think what your crimes are. — Away with
them !

Let all that see these vices thus rewarded,
Take heart, and love to study 'em. Mischiefs feed 150

Like beasts, till they be fat, and then they bleed. [Exeunt.]

VOLPONE

The seasoning of a play is the applause.

Now, though the Fox be punish'd by the laws,
He yet doth hope, there is no suff'ring due,
For any fact which he hath done 'gainst you ;
If there be, censure him ; here he doubtful stands.

If not, fare jovially, and clap your hands.

[Exit.]

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

In this play Jonson gives us the most nearly perfect example of his peculiar comedy, and one of the great plays of the London stage. Rarely has any writer brought so diverse and so brilliant a group of characters within the compass of a single drama. With scarcely an exception, each is etched meticulously; yet the play is never slowed down. In Bartholomew Fair the thread sometimes disappears amidst the profusion of sheer physical detail; in The Alchemist the author, occupied with a single situation but inexhaustibly fertile in displaying every aspect of it, maintains with consummate skill a breathless pace. Once more the atmosphere is wholly comic; yet this is serious comedy; and, if we no longer cringe under the knout of Volpone, Jonson's lighter lash has plenty of sting. It is now applied, not as in The Fox to the fundamental defects of human character, but more specifically to a notorious current abuse, and to the gullibility of those who hope to substitute short cuts and supernaturalism for hard work and common sense. Here Jonson seems more like a playwright of the second great renaissance of the British drama; for this is throughout a socially-minded play.

It was written, and produced by the King's Men, in 1610, a severe plague year, and the time of the action of the play. Between Volpone and the composition of The Alchemist, Jonson had written the fourth in excellence of his major comedies, the brilliant but farcical trifle, Epicoene. Now he turns again to the high yet racy comedy of manners that was his gift to the English theatre, turns to the dramatic materials that lay readiest to his hand, and to the most pretentious quackery known to his age. He played indeed a manly part in driving this particular relic of obscurantism from the light of scientific respectability.

There was, however, a well-established literary tradition against, as well as in glorification of, the alchemists. Yet Jonson's sources are only indirectly Ariosto, Lyly, or the Candelaio of Bruno. While the setting owes something to Plautus, and Face plays the same part as Tranio, the clever slave of the Mostellaria, and while Erasmus's De Alcumista provides some details, Jonson, who was one of the most thoroughgoing Londoners that ever lived, had no need of leaving his native city for the materials of his realism. Simon Forman, the notorious charlatan, was cutting a great figure there when the play was written. Even Face is, after all, not Tranio, nor Mosca, but Jeremy Butler.

Few English comedies have been more successful on the stage. Popular under the Restoration, The Alchemist was revived by Garrick, who first acted Face and later Abel Drugger. It was published, in quarto, in 1612. The present text is based on the Folio of 1616, with some corrections from the Quarto and the later Folios. The play has been separately edited by C. M. Hathaway (1903) and (with Eastward Ho) by F. E. Schelling (1905).

THE ARGUMENT

THE sickness hot,<sup>1</sup> a master quit, for fear,
H is house in town, and left one servant there.
E ase him corrupted, and gave means to know
A cheater and his punk,<sup>2</sup> who, now brought low,
L eaving their narrow practice, were become
C oz'ners <sup>3</sup> at large, and only wanting some

PROLOGUE

FORTUNE, that favors fools,<sup>10</sup> these two short hours

We wish away, both for your sakes and ours,
Judging spectators ; and desire, in place,

To th' author justice, to ourselves but grace.
Our scene is London, 'cause we would make known

No country's mirth is better than our own.
No clime breeds better matter for your whore,
Bawd, squire,<sup>11</sup> impostor, many persons
more

Whose manners, now call'd humors,<sup>12</sup> feed the stage ;

And which have still <sup>13</sup> been subject for the rage

Or spleen of comic writers. Though this pen

<sup>12</sup> By a "humor" Jonson meant not a merely superficial eccentricity, but an ingrained and dominating characteristic of the temperament.

Did never aim to grieve, but better, men,
 Howe'er, the age he lives in both endure
 The vices that she breeds, above their cure.
 But when the wholesome remedies are sweet,
 And in their working gain and profit meet,
 He hopes to find no spirit so much diseas'd,
 But will with such fair correctives<sup>14</sup> be
 pleas'd.
 For here he doth not fear who can apply.<sup>15</sup>
 If there be any that will sit so nigh 20
 Unto the stream, to look what it doth run,
 They shall find things, they'd think, or wish, were done;
 They are so natural follies, but so shown,
 As even the doers may see, and yet not own.

ACT I — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] FACE [in a captain's uniform, and] SUBTLE [with a vial, quarrelling, and followed by] DOL COMMON.

FACE. Believe't, I will.

SUB. Thy worst. I fart at thee.

DOL. Ha' you your wits? Why, gentlemen! for love —

FACE. Sirrah, I'll strip you —

SUB. What to do? Lick figs<sup>2</sup>

Out at my —

FACE. Rogue, rogue! — out of all your sleights.<sup>3</sup>

DOL. Nay, look ye! Sovereign, General, are you madmen?

SUB. Oh, let the wild sheep<sup>4</sup> loose. I'll gum your silks

With good strong water,<sup>5</sup> an you come.

DOL. Will you have
 The neighbors hear you? Will you betray
 all?

Hark! I hear somebody.

FACE. Sirrah —

SUB. I shall mar
 All that the tailor has made, if you approach.

FACE. You most notorious whelp, you insolent slave, 11

Dare you do this?

SUB. Yes, faith; yes, faith.

FACE. Why! who

Am I, my mongrel? Who am I?

SUB. I'll tell you,
 Since you know not yourself.

FACE. Speak lower, rogue.

SUB. Yes. You were once (time's not long past) the good,
 Honest, plain, livery-three-pound-thrum,<sup>6</sup> that kept

Your master's Worship's house here in the Friars,<sup>7</sup>

For the vacations<sup>8</sup> —

FACE. Will you be so loud?

SUB. Since, by my means, translated suburb-captain.<sup>9</sup>

FACE. By your means, Doctor Dog!

SUB. Within man's memory, 20
 All this I speak of.

FACE. Why, I pray you, have I
 Been countenanc'd<sup>10</sup> by you, or you by me?
 Do but collect, sir, where I met you first.

SUB. I do not hear well.

FACE. Not of this, I think it.
 But I shall put you in mind, sir: at Pie Corner,

Taking your meal of steam in, from cooks'
 stalls,

Where, like the father of hunger,<sup>11</sup> you did
 walk

Piteously costive,<sup>12</sup> with your pinch'd-horn-
 nose,

And your complexion of the Roman wash,<sup>13</sup>
 Stuck full of black and melancholic worms, 30
 Like powder-corns<sup>14</sup> shot at th' Artillery Yard.

SUB. I wish you could advance your voice
 a little.

FACE. When you went pinn'd up in the several rags

Yo' had rak'd and pick'd from dunghills, before day;

Your feet in mouldy slippers, for your kibes; <sup>15</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Presumably Dol, since "mutton" meant a loose woman. Apparently Dol is clinging to Face in order to keep him from rushing on Subtle.

<sup>5</sup> Subtle keeps Face off by threatening to ruin his clothes with the chemical, presumably an acid, in his vial. "Gum" is used metaphorically, since silks were treated with gum to perfume them or to stiffen them.

<sup>6</sup> Evidently = mere servant. It appears from Jonson's The Devil Is an Ass that a servant usually received £4 a year besides his keep. "Thrum" is the waste ends of the weaver's warp.

<sup>15</sup> Chilblains.

A felt of rug,<sup>16</sup> and a thin threaden cloak,
That scarce would cover your no-buttocks —

SUB. So, sir!

FACE. When all your alchemy, and your algebra,
Your minerals, vegetals, and animals,
Your conjuring, coz'ning, and your dozen of trades, 40
Could not relieve your corpse with so much linen

Would make you tinder, but to see a fire; <sup>17</sup>
I ga' you count'nance, credit for your coals,
Your stills, your glasses, your materials;
Built you a furnace, drew you customers,
Advanc'd all your black arts, lent you, beside,
A house to practise in —

SUB. Your master's house!

FACE. Where you have studied the more thriving skill
Of bawdry, since.

SUB. Yes, in your master's house.
You and the rats here kept possession. 50
Make it not strange.<sup>18</sup> I know yo' were one could keep

The butt'ry-hatch still lock'd, and save the chippings,
Sell the dole beer to aqua vitae men,<sup>19</sup>
The which, together with your Christmas
vails,<sup>20</sup>

At post-and-pair your letting out of counters,<sup>21</sup>

Made you a pretty stock, some twenty marks,
And gave you credit to converse with cobwebs,

Here, since your mistress' death hath broke up house.

FACE. You might talk softlier, rascal.

SUB. No, you scarab,<sup>22</sup>
I'll thunder you in pieces. I will teach you [60
How to beware to tempt a Fury again
That carries tempest in his hand and voice.

FACE. The place has made you valiant.

SUB. No, your clothes.
Thou vermin, have I ta'en thee, out of dung,
So poor, so wretched, when no living thing

Would keep thee company, but a spider or worse?

Rais'd thee from brooms, and dust, and wat'r-
ing pots,

Sublim'd thee, and exalted thee, and fix'd thee
In the third region, call'd <sup>23</sup> our state of grace?
Wrought thee to spirit, to quintessence,<sup>24</sup> with pains 70

Would twice have won me the philosophers' work? <sup>25</sup>

Put thee in words and fashion? made thee fit
For more than ordinary fellowships?

Giv'n thee thy oaths, thy quarrelling dimensions? <sup>26</sup>

Thy rules to cheat at horse race, cockpit, cards,
Dice, or whatever gallant tincture <sup>27</sup> else?

Made thee a second in mine own great art?

And have I this for thank? Do you rebel?

Do you fly out i' the projection? <sup>28</sup> 79

Would you be gone now?

DOL. Gentlemen, what mean you?
Will you mar all?

SUB. Slave, thou hadst had no name —

DOL. Will you undo yourselves with civil war?

SUB. Never been known, past equi-clibanum <sup>29</sup>

The heat of horse-dung, under ground, in cellars,

Or an alehouse darker than deaf John's,<sup>30</sup> been lost

To all mankind, but laundresses and tapsters,
Had not I been.

DOL. Do you know who hears you,
Sovereign?

FACE. Sirrah —

DOL. Nay, General, I thought you were civil.

FACE. I shall turn desperate, if you grow thus loud.

SUB. And hang thyself, I care not.

FACE. Hang thee, collier,<sup>31</sup> [90
And all thy pots and pans, in picture <sup>32</sup> I will,
Since thou hast mov'd me —

<sup>16</sup> Hat of coarse material.

<sup>17</sup> Could not get you clothes enough to have made tinder even for a fire so tiny as to give no warmth but only be visible.

<sup>19</sup> Liquor dealers; thus the poor were defrauded of their dole of beer and broken bread ("chippings").

<sup>20</sup> Tips.

<sup>21</sup> Chips, to the card players, for which servants were tipped. In this game bets were posted on hands of three cards, the highest hand being a pair royal,
i.e., three of a kind.

<sup>22</sup> Which lives and breeds in dung.

<sup>28</sup> Explode at the moment of success (continuing the alchemical metaphor).

<sup>29</sup> Horse-oven; i.e., a furnace heated as described, used by alchemists. Subtle continues to describe
Face as a subject of his art.

<sup>31</sup> A term of abuse, the collier being black, like the Devil; it is especially applicable to Subtle since coals were one of the prime requisites of his art.

<sup>32</sup> Figuratively speaking.

DOL. [aside] Oh, this'll o'erthrow all.

FACE. Write thee up bawd in Paul's<sup>33</sup>;
have all thy tricks

Of cozening with a hollow coal, dust, scrap-ings,<sup>34</sup>

Searching for things lost, with a sieve and shears,

Erecting figures<sup>35</sup> in your rows of houses,<sup>36</sup>

And taking in of shadows with a glass,<sup>37</sup>

Told in red letters<sup>38</sup>; and a face cut for thee,<sup>39</sup>
Worse than Gamaliel Ratsey's.<sup>40</sup>

DOL. Are you sound? <sup>41</sup>

Ha' you your senses, masters?

FACE. I will have 100

A book, but rarely reckoning thy impostures, Shall prove a true philosopher's stone to printers.

SUB. Away, you trencher-rascal.

FACE. Out, you dog-leech,
The vomit of all prisons —

DOL. Will you be
Your own destructions, gentlemen?

FACE. Still spew'd out

For lying too heavy o' the basket.<sup>42</sup>

SUB. Cheater!

FACE. Bawd!

SUB. Cowherd!

FACE. Conjuror!

SUB. Cutpurse!

FACE. Witch!

DOL. O me!

We are ruin'd! lost! Ha' you no more regard
To your reputations? Where's your judgment? 'Slight,<sup>43</sup> 109

Have yet some care of me, o' your republic —

FACE. Away, this brach.<sup>44</sup> I'll bring thee, rogue, within

The statute of sorcery, tricesimo tertio

Of Harry the Eighth;<sup>45</sup> ay, and perhaps thy

<sup>36</sup> Divisions of the zodiac, used in astrology.

ing it.<sup>46</sup>

DOL. You'll bring your head within a cockscorn, will you? <sup>47</sup>

She catcheth out FACE his sword, and breaks SUBTLE's glass.

And you, sir, with your menstrue! <sup>48</sup> — Gather it up.

'Sdeath, you abominable pair of stinkards,
Leave off your barking, and grow one <sup>49</sup> again,
Or, by the light that shines, I'll cut your throats.

I'll not be made a prey unto the marshal [120
For ne'er a snarling dog-bolt <sup>50</sup> o' you both.

Ha' you together cozen'd all this while,
And all the world, and shall it now be said
Yo' have made most courteous shift to cozen yourselves? —

[to FACE] You will accuse him? You will bring him in

Within the statute? Who shall take your word?

A whoreson, upstart, apocryphal captain,
Whom not a Puritan in Blackfriars <sup>51</sup> will trust
So much as for a feather! — [to SUBTLE] and you, too,

Will give the cause, forsooth? You will insult,
And claim a primacy in the divisions? 131
You must be chief? As if you, only, had
The powder to project <sup>52</sup> with, and the work
Were not begun out of equality!

The venture tripartite! All things in common!
Without priority! 'Sdeath! you perpetual curs,

Fall to your couples again, and cozen kindly,
And heartily, and lovingly, as you should,
And lose not the beginning of a term,<sup>53</sup>
Or, by this hand, I shall grow factious too, 140
And take my part, and quit you.

FACE. 'T is his fault;

He ever murmurs, and objects his pains,
And says the weight of all lies upon him.

SUB. Why, so it does.

DOL. How does it? Do not we Sustain our parts?

SUB. Yes, but they are not equal.

<sup>53</sup> One of the four terms of court, and hence seasons of metropolitan activity.

DOL. Why, if your part exceed to-day, I hope
Ours may to-morrow match it.

SUB. Ay, they may.

DOL. May, murmuring mastiff! Ay, and do. Death on me! <sup>54</sup>

Help me to thr[o]ttle him.

SUB. Dorothy! Mistress Dorothy!
'Ods precious, I'll do anything. What do you mean? <sup>150</sup>

DOL. Because o' your fermentation and cibation? <sup>55</sup>

SUB. Not I, by Heaven —

DOL. Your Sol and Luna <sup>56</sup> — [to FACE] help me.

SUB. Would I were hang'd then. I'll conform myself.

DOL. Will you, sir? Do so, then, and quickly: swear.

SUB. What should I swear?

DOL. To leave your faction, <sup>57</sup> sir, And labor kindly in the common work.

SUB. Let me not breathe if I meant aught beside.

I only us'd those speeches as a spur To him.

DOL. I hope we need no spurs, sir. — Do we?

FACE. 'Slid, prove to-day who shall shark best.

SUB. Agreed. <sup>160</sup>

DOL. Yes, and work close and friendly.

SUB. 'Slight, the knot Shall grow the stronger for this breach, with me.

DOL. Why, so, my good baboons! Shall we go make

A sort <sup>58</sup> of sober, scurvy, precise <sup>59</sup> neighbors, That scarce have smil'd twice sin' the King came in, <sup>60</sup>

A feast of laughter at our follies? rascals, Would run themselves from breath, to see me ride, <sup>61</sup>

Ere we contribute a new crewel <sup>65</sup> garter
To his most worsted Worship.

SUB. Royal Dol!

Spoken like Claridiana, <sup>66</sup> and thyself!

FACE. For which at supper, thou shalt sit in triumph,

And not be styl'd Dol Common, but Dol Proper,

Dol Singular: the longest cut, at night,
Shall draw thee for his Dol Particular.

[Bell rings without.]

SUB. Who's that? One rings. To the window. <sup>67</sup>

DOL. Pray Heav'n, <sup>180</sup>
The master do not trouble us this quarter.

FACE. O, fear not him. While there dies one a week

O' the plague, he's safe from thinking toward London.

Beside, he's busy at his hop-yards now;

I had a letter from him. If he do,
He'll send such word, for airing o' the house,

As you shall have sufficient time to quit it;
Though we break up a fortnight, <sup>68</sup> 't is no matter.

SUB. Who is it, Dol?

DOL. A fine young quodling. <sup>69</sup>

FACE. Oh,

My lawyer's clerk, I lighted on last night, <sup>190</sup>

In Holborn, at the Dagger. <sup>70</sup> He would have (I told you of him) a familiar, <sup>71</sup>

To rifle <sup>72</sup> with at horses, <sup>73</sup> and win cups.

DOL. Oh, let him in.

SUB. Stay. Who shall do 't?

FACE. Get you Your robes on. I will meet him, as going out.

DOL. And what shall I do?

FACE. Not be seen; away! [Exit DOL.] — Seem you very reserv'd.

SUB. Enough. [Exit.]

FACE. [aloud] God b' w' you, sir. I pray you let him know that I was here.

His name is Dapper. I would gladly have stay'd, but —

<sup>73</sup> Lottery tickets.

SCENE II <sup>74</sup>

FACE [remains.]

DAP. [within] Captain, I am here.

FACE. Who's that? — He's come, I think, Doctor.

[He admits DAPPER.]

Good faith, sir, I was going away.

DAP. In truth,
I am very sorry, Captain.FACE. But I thought
Sure I should meet you.DAP. Ay, I am very glad.
I had a scurvy writ or two to make,
And I had lent my watch last night to one
That dines to-day at the sheriff's, and so was robb'd
Of my pass-time.<sup>75</sup>

[Re-enter SUBTLE in his velvet cap and gown.]

Is this the cunning man?

FACE. This is his Worship.

DAP. Is he a doctor?

FACE. Yes.

DAP. And ha' you broke <sup>76</sup> with him, Captain?

FACE. Ay.

DAP. And how? 10

FACE. Faith, he does make the matter, sir, so dainty,<sup>77</sup>

I know not what to say. —

DAP. Not so, good Captain.

FACE. Would I were fairly rid on't, believe me.DAP. Nay, now you grieve me, sir. Why should you wish so?

I dare assure you, I'll not be ungrateful.

FACE. I cannot think you will, sir. But the lawIs such a thing — and then he says, Read's <sup>78</sup> matter

Falling so lately —

DAP. Read! he was an ass,
And dealt, sir, with a fool.FACE. It was a clerk,<sup>79</sup> sir.

DAP. A clerk?

the law 20

Better, I think —

DAP. I should, sir, and the danger :
You know I show'd the statute to you.

FACE. You did so.

DAP. And will I tell then? By this hand of flesh,
Would it might never write good court-hand
more,If I discover. What do you think of me,
That I am a chiaus? <sup>80</sup>

FACE. What's that?

DAP. The Turk was here :
As one would say, do you think I am a
Turk?

FACE. I'll tell the Doctor so.

DAP. Do, good sweet Captain.

FACE. Come, noble Doctor, 'pray thee let's prevail ;
This is the gentleman, and he is no chiaus. 30SUB. Captain, I have return'd you all my answer.I would do much, sir, for your love — but
this

I neither may nor can.

FACE. Tut, do not say so.
You deal now with a noble fellow, Doctor,
One that will thank you richly ; and h' is no chiaus :

Let that, sir, move you.

SUB. Pray you, forbear —

FACE. He has Four angels here.

SUB. You do me wrong, good sir.

FACE. Doctor, wherein? To tempt you with these spirits? <sup>81</sup>SUB. To tempt my art and love, sir, to my peril.'Fore Heav'n, I scarce can think you are my friend, 40

That so would draw me to apparent danger.

FACE. I draw you! A horse draw you,<sup>82</sup> and a halter,You and your flies <sup>83</sup> together —

DAP. Nay, good Captain.

FACE. That know no difference of men.

SUB. Good words, sir.

FACE. Good deeds, sir, Doctor Dogs'-meat.
'Slight, I bring you<sup>80</sup> Turkish messenger. According to Gifford's unsubstantiated account, a chiaus "choused" some oriental merchants in London in 1609.<sup>81</sup> I.e., the coins, the angels.<sup>82</sup> I.e., to the gallows.<sup>83</sup> Familiar spirits.

No cheating Clim o' the Cloughs <sup>84</sup> or Claribels,
That look as big as five-and-fifty, and flush; <sup>85</sup>
And spit out secrets like hot custard —

DAP. Captain!

FACE. Nor any melancholic underscribe,
Shall tell the vicar; but a special gentle, <sup>50</sup>
That is the heir to forty marks a year,
Consorts with the small poets of the time,
Is the sole hope of his old grandmother;
That knows the law, and writes you six fair
hands,

Is a fine clerk, and has his ciph'ring perfect.
Will take his oath o' the Greek Xenophon, <sup>86</sup>
If need be, in his pocket; and can court
His mistress out of Ovid.

DAP. Nay, dear Captain —

FACE. Did you not tell me so?

DAP. Yes; but I'd ha' you
Use Master Doctor with some more respect. <sup>60</sup>

FACE. Hang him, proud stag, with his broad velvet head! <sup>87</sup> —
But for your sake, I'd choke ere I would
change

An article of breath with such a puck-fist — <sup>88</sup>
Come, let's be gone.

SUB. Pray you, le' me speak with you.

DAP. His Worship calls you, Captain.

FACE. I am sorry
I e'er embark'd myself in such a business.

DAP. Nay, good sir. He did call you.

FACE. Will he take, then?

SUB. First, hear me —

FACE. Not a syllable, 'less you take.

SUB. Pray ye, sir —

FACE. Upon no terms but an assumpsit. <sup>89</sup>

SUB. Your humor must be law.

He takes the money.

FACE. Why now, sir, talk. <sup>70</sup>
Now I dare hear you with mine honor. Speak.
So may this gentleman, too.

SUB. Why, sir —

FACE. No whisp'ring.

SUB. 'Fore Heav'n, you do not apprehend the loss
You do yourself in this.

<sup>84</sup> Ravines. Clim was a famous archer in the tales of Robin Hood. Claribel was presumably a character of popular romance. There is a Claribell in Spenser's Faerie Queene (IV, ix), but he hardly fits the context here. Face means that Dapper is no pompous, domineering romantic hero.

FACE. Wherein? for what?

SUB. Marry, to be so importunate for one
That, when he has it, will undo <sup>90</sup> you all:
He'll win up all the money i' the town.

FACE. How!

SUB. Yes, and blow up gamester after gamester,
As they do crackers in a puppet-play.
If I do give him a familiar, <sup>80</sup>
Give you him all you play for; never set <sup>91</sup>
him:

For he will have it.

FACE. Y'are mistaken, Doctor.
Why, he does ask one but for cups and horses,
A ruffling fly; none o' your great familiars.

DAP. Yes, Captain, I would have it for all games.

SUB. I told you so.

FACE. [taking DAPPER aside] 'Slight,
that's a new business!

I understood you, a tame bird, to fly
Twice in a term, or so; on Friday nights,
When you had left the office, for a nag
Of forty or fifty shillings.

DAP. Ay, 't is true, sir; <sup>90</sup>
But I do think, now, I shall leave the law,
And therefore —

FACE. Why, this changes quite the case!
Do you think that I dare move him?

DAP. If you please, sir;
All's one to him, I see.

FACE. What! for that money?
I cannot with my conscience. Nor should you
Make the request, methinks.

DAP. No, sir, I mean
To add consideration.

FACE. Why, then, sir,
I'll try. — [Goes to SUBTLE.] Say that it were for all games, Doctor?

SUB. I say then, not a mouth shall eat for <sup>92</sup>

At any ordinary, but o' the score: <sup>93</sup> <sup>100</sup>
That is a gaming mouth, conceive me.

FACE. Indeed!

SUB. He'll draw you all the treasure of the realm,
If it be set him.

FACE. Speak you this from art?

SUB. Ay, sir, and reason too, the ground o'
art.

H' is o' the only best complexion,
The Queen of Faërie loves.

FACE. What! Is he?
 SUB. Peace.
 He'll overhear you. Sir, should she but see him —
 FACE. What?
 SUB. Do not you tell him.
 FACE. Will he win at cards, too?
 SUB. The spirits of dead Holland, living Isaac,<sup>94</sup>
 You'd swear, were in him; such a vigorous luck 110
 As cannot be resisted. 'Slight, he'll put
 Six o' your gallants to a cloak,<sup>95</sup> indeed.
 FACE. A strange success, that some man shall be born to!
 SUB. He hears you, man —
 DAP. Sir, I'll not be ingrateful.
 FACE. Faith, I have a confidence in his good nature.
 You hear, he says he will not be ingrateful.
 SUB. Why, as you please; my venture follows yours.
 FACE. Troth, do it, Doctor; think him trusty, and make him.
 He may make us both happy<sup>96</sup> in an hour,
 Win some five thousand pound, and send us
 two on 't. 120
 DAP. Believe it, and I will, sir.
 FACE. And you shall, sir.
 You have heard all? FACE takes him aside.
 DAP. No; what was't? Nothing, I, sir.
 FACE. Nothing?
 DAP. A little, sir.
 FACE. Well, a rare star
 Reign'd at your birth.
 DAP. At mine, sir! No.
 FACE. The Doctor
 Swears that you are —
 SUB. Nay, Captain, you'll tell all now.
 FACE. Allied to the Queen of Faërie.
 DAP. Who? that I am?
 Believe it, no such matter —
 FACE. Yes, and that
 Yo' were born with a caul o' your head.
 DAP. Who says so?
 FACE. Come,
 You know it well enough, though you dissemble it.

<sup>94</sup> There were two early sixteenth-century alchemists named Isaac and John Isaac Holland. Since the context calls for an allusion to notorious gamblers, and since the Hollands were both dead, Jonson seems to be doubly inaccurate.

<sup>95</sup> I.e., strip them, reduce each to the point where all his clothes are gambled away save a cloak to cover his nakedness with.

DAP. I' fac,<sup>97</sup> I do not. You are mistaken.
 FACE. How! 130
 Swear by your fac, and in a thing so known
 Unto the Doctor? How shall we, sir, trust you
 I' the other matter? Can we ever think,
 When you have won five or six thousand
 pound,
 You'll send us shares in 't, by this rate?
 DAP. By Jove,<sup>98</sup> sir,
 I'll win ten thousand pound, and send you
 half.
 I' fac's no oath.
 SUB. No, no, he did but jest.
 FACE. Go to. Go, thank the Doctor. He's your friend,
 To take it so.
 DAP. I thank his Worship.
 FACE. So!
 Another angel.
 DAP. Must I?
 FACE. Must you! 'Slight, 140
 What else is thanks? Will you be trivial? —
 Doctor, [DAPPER gives him the money.]
 When must he come for his familiar?
 DAP. Shall I not ha' it with me?
 SUB. Oh, good sir!
 There must a world of ceremonies pass —
 You must be bath'd and fumigated first;
 Besides, the Queen of Faërie does not rise
 Till it be noon.
 FACE. Not if she dan'd to-night.<sup>99</sup>
 SUB. And she must bless it.
 FACE. Did you never see
 Her Royal Grace yet?
 DAP. Whom?
 FACE. Your aunt of Faërie.
 SUB. Not since she kiss'd him in the cradle,
 Captain; 150
 I can resolve you that.
 FACE. Well, see her Grace,
 Whate'er it cost you, for a thing that I know!
 It will be somewhat hard to compass; but,
 However, see her. You are made, believe it,
 If you can see her. Her Grace is a lone woman,
 And very rich; and if she take a fancy,
 She will do strange things. See her, at any hand.
 'Slid, she may hap to leave you all she has!
 It is the Doctor's fear.
 DAP. How will't be done, then?
 FACE. Let me alone;<sup>100</sup> take you no thought. Do you 160
<sup>100</sup> Leave it to me.

But say to me, "Captain, I'll see her Grace."

DAP. "Captain, I'll see her Grace."

FACE. Enough. One knocks without.

SUB. Who's there?

ANON. — [aside to FACE] Conduct him forth by the back way. —

Sir, against one a'clock prepare yourself.

Till when, you must be fasting; only take

Three drops of vinegar in at your nose,

Two at your mouth, and one at either ear;

Then bathe your fingers' ends and wash your eyes,

To sharpen your five senses, and cry hum 169
Thrice, and then buz as often; and then, come.

[Exit.]

FACE. Can you remember this?

DAP. I warrant you.

FACE. Well then, away. It is but your bestowing

Some twenty nobles 'mong her Grace's servants;

And put on a clean shirt.<sup>101</sup> You do not know
What grace her Grace may do you in clean linen.

[Exeunt FACE and DAPPER.]

SCENE III <sup>102</sup>

SUB. [within] Come in! — Good wives, I pray you forbear me <sup>103</sup> now.

Troth, I can do you no good till afternoon. —

[Enter SUBTLE, followed by DRUGGER.]

SUB. What is your name, say you? Abel Drugger?

DRUG. Yes, sir.

SUB. A seller of tobacco?

DRUG. Yes, sir.

SUB. 'Umh.

Free of the Grocers? <sup>104</sup>

DRUG. Ay, an't please you.

SUB. Well —

Your business, Abel?

DRUG. This, an't please your Worship; I am a young beginner, and am building
Of a new shop, an't like your Worship, just
At corner of a street: — Here's the plot <sup>105</sup>
on't. 9

And I would know by art, sir, of your Worship,

<sup>101</sup> Hatred of uncleanness was one of the fundamental traits of fairy character.

Which way I should make my door, by necromancy,

And where my shelves; and which should be for boxes,

And which for pots. I would be glad to thrive sir;

And I was wish'd <sup>106</sup> to your Worship by a gentleman,

One Captain Face, that says you know men's planets,<sup>107</sup>

And their good angels, and their bad.

SUB.

I do,

If I do see 'em <sup>108</sup> —

[Enter FACE.]

FACE. What! my honest Abel? Thou art well met here!

DRUG. Troth, sir, I was speaking, Just as your Worship came here, of your Worship.

I pray you speak for me to Master Doctor. 20

FACE. He shall do anything. Doctor, do you hear?

This is my friend, Abel, an honest fellow; He lets me have good tobacco, and he does not Sophisticate it with sack-lees or oil, Nor washes it in muscadel and grains, Nor buries it in gravel, under ground, Wrapp'd up in greasy leather, or piss'd clouts; But keeps it in fine lily pots, that, open'd, Smell like conserve of roses, or French beans. He has his maple block,<sup>109</sup> his silver tongs, 30 Winchester pipes, and fire of juniper: A neat, spruce, honest fellow, and no goldsmith.<sup>110</sup>

SUB. H' is a fortunate fellow, that I am sure on.

FACE. Already, sir, ha' you found it? Lo thee, Abel!

SUB. And in right way toward riches —

FACE. Sir.

SUB. This summer,

He will be of the clothing of his company,<sup>111</sup> And, next spring, call'd to the scarlet; <sup>112</sup> spend what he can.

FACE. What, and so little beard?

<sup>109</sup> For shredding the tobacco. The tongs were to hold the coal which lighted the pipe; the coal was of juniper, which holds fire for a long time.

SUB. Sir, you must think,
He may have a receipt to make hair come :
But he'll be wise, preserve his youth, and fine <sup>113</sup> for 't ; 40

His fortune looks for him another way.

FACE. 'Slid, Doctor, how canst thou know
this so soon?

I am amus'd <sup>114</sup> at that !

SUB. By a rule, Captain,
In met[o]poscopy,<sup>115</sup> which I do work by ;
A certain star i' the forehead, which you see
not.

Your chestnut or your olive-color'd face
Does never fail ; and your long ear doth promise.

I knew 't, by certain spots, too, in his teeth,
And on the nail of his mercurial finger.

FACE. Which finger's that?

SUB. His little finger. Look. 50
Yo' were born upon a Wednesday?

DRUG. Yes, indeed, sir.

SUB. The thumb, in chiromancy, we give Venus ;

The forefinger, to Jove ; the midst, to Saturn ;
The ring, to Sol ; the least, to Mercury,
Who was the lord, sir, of his horoscope,
His house of life being Libra ; which for-show'd

He should be a merchant, and should trade with balance.

FACE. Why, this is strange ! Is't not, honest Nab?

SUB. There is a ship now coming from Ormuz,

That shall yield him such a commodity 60
Of drugs — This is the west, and this the south? [Pointing to the plat.]

DRUG. Yes, sir.

SUB. And those are your two sides?

DRUG. Ay, sir.

SUB. Make me your door then, south ; your broad side, west :

And on the east side of your shop, aloft,
Write Mathlai, Tarmiel, and Baraborat ;
Upon the north part, Rael, Velet, Thiel.
They are the names of those Mercurial spirits
That do fright flies from boxes.

DRUG. Yes, sir.

SUB. And
Beneath your threshold, bury me a load-stone

To draw in gallants that wear spurs ; the
rest, 70

They'll seem <sup>116</sup> to follow.

FACE. That's a secret, Nab !

SUB. And, on your stall, a puppet, with a vice <sup>117</sup>

And a court-fucus,<sup>118</sup> to call city dames :

You shall deal much with minerals.

DRUG. Sir, I have,
At home, already —

SUB. Ay, I know, you've arsenic,
Vitriol, sal-tartar, argaile,<sup>119</sup> alkali,

Cinoper : <sup>120</sup> I know all. — This fellow, Captain,

Will come, in time, to be a great distiller,
And give a say <sup>121</sup> — I will not say directly,
But very fair — at the philosophers' stone. 80

FACE. Why, how now, Abel ! Is this true?

DRUG. [aside to FACE] Good Captain,
What must I give?

FACE. Nay, I'll not counsel thee.
Thou hear'st what wealth (he says spend what thou canst),

Th' art like to come to.

DRUG. I would gi' him a crown.

FACE. A crown ! 'nd toward such a fortune?
Heart,

Thou shalt rather gi' him thy shop. No gold about thee?

DRUG. Yes, I have a portague,<sup>122</sup> I ha' kept this half-year.

FACE. Out on thee, Nab ! 'Slight, there was such an offer —

'Shalt keep 't no longer, I'll gi' it him for thee ! Doctor,

Nab prays your Worship to drink this, and swears 90

He will appear more grateful, as your skill
Does raise him in the world.

DRUG. I would entreat
Another favor of his Worship.

FACE. What is't, Nab ?

DRUG. But to look over, sir, my almanac,
And cross out my ill days,<sup>123</sup> that I may neither
Bargain, nor trust upon them.

FACE. That he shall, Nab.
Leave it, it shall be done, 'gainst <sup>124</sup> afternoon.

SUB. And a direction for his shelves.

<sup>115</sup> The art of character reading or fortune telling from the face or forehead.

FACE. Now, Nab !
 Art thou well pleas'd, Nab ?
 DRUG. 'Thank, sir, both your Worships.
 FACE. Away. [Exit DRUGGER.]
 Why, now, you smoky persecutor of nature ! 100
 Now do you see that something's to be done
 Beside your beech-coal, and your cor'sive <sup>125</sup>
 waters,
 Your crosslets, <sup>126</sup> crucibles, and cucurbites ? <sup>127</sup>
 You must have stuff brought home to you, to work on !
 And yet you think I am at no expense
 In searching out these veins, then following
 'em,
 Then trying 'em out. 'Fore God, my intelligence <sup>128</sup>
 Costs me more money than my share oft comes to,
 In these rare works.

SUB. You are pleasant, sir. — How now !

SCENE IV <sup>129</sup>

[To] FACE [and] SUBTLE [enter] DOL.

SUB. What says my dainty Dolkin ?

DOL. Yonder fishwife
 Will not away. And there's your giantess,
 The bawd of Lambeth.

SUB. Heart, I cannot speak with 'em.

DOL. Not afore night, I have told 'em in a voice,
 Thorough the trunk <sup>130</sup> like one of your familiars.

But I have spied Sir Epicure Mammon —

SUB. Where ?

DOL. Coming along, at far end of the lane,
 Slow of his feet, but earnest of his tongue
 To one that's with him.

SUB. Face, go you and shift. <sup>131</sup>

Dol, you must presently make ready too — 10
 [Exit FACE.]

DOL. Why, what's the matter ?

SUB. Oh, I did look for him
 With the sun's rising. Marvel he could sleep !
 This is the day I am to perfect for him
 The magisterium, our great work, the stone ;
 And yield it, made, into his hands ; of which
 He has, this month, talk'd as he were possess'd.
 And now he's dealing pieces on 't away.
 Methinks I see him ent'ring ordinaries,

Dispensing for the pox, and plaguy houses,
 Reaching his dose ; walking Moorfields for lepers ; 20
 And off'ring citizens' wives pomander <sup>132</sup> bracelets,
 As his preservative, made of the elixir ;
 Searching the 'spital to make old bawds young,
 And the highways, for beggars to make rich.
 I see no end of his labors. He will make
 Nature asham'd of her long sleep, when art, Who's but a step-dame, shall do more than
 she,
 In her best love to mankind, ever could.
 If his dream last, he'll turn the age to gold.
 [Exeunt.]

ACT II — SCENE I <sup>1</sup>

[Enter Sir EPICURE] MAMMON [and] SURLY.

MAM. Come on, sir. Now you set your foot on shore

In Novo Orbe ; here's the rich Peru ;
 And there within, sir, are the golden mines,
 Great Solomon's Ophir ! He was sailing to 't
 Three years, but we have reach'd it in ten months.

This is the day wherein, to all my friends,
 I will pronounce the happy word, " Be rich ;
 This day you shall be spectatissimi." <sup>2</sup>
 You shall no more deal with the hollow <sup>3</sup> die,
 Or the frail card ; no more be at charge of keeping 10

The livery-punk <sup>4</sup> for the young heir, that must Seal, <sup>5</sup> at all hours, in his shirt ; no more,
 If he deny, ha' him beaten to 't, as he is
 That brings him the commodity ; <sup>6</sup> no more Shall thirst of satin, or the covetous hunger
 Of velvet entrails <sup>7</sup> for a rude-spun cloak,
 To be display'd at Madam Augusta's, <sup>8</sup> make
 The sons of Sword and Hazard <sup>9</sup> fall before
 The golden calf, and on their knees, <sup>10</sup> whole nights,

Commit idolatry with wine and trumpets ;
 Or go a-feasting, after drum and ensign. 21

<sup>8</sup> Evidently the madam of a brothel (or of a tavern, which was often much the same thing).

No more of this. You shall start up young viceroys,
And have your punks and punkettees,<sup>11</sup> my Surly.

And unto thee I speak it first, "Be rich."
Where is my Subtle there? Within, ho!
[FACE.] (within) Sir,
He'll come to you by and by.<sup>12</sup>

MAM. That's his fire-drake,<sup>13</sup>
His Lungs, his Zephyrus, he that puffs his coals,
Till he firk<sup>14</sup> nature up, in her own centre.
You are not faithful,<sup>15</sup> sir. This night I'll change

All that is metal in thy<sup>16</sup> house to gold; 30
And, early in the morning, will I send
To all the plumbers and the pewterers,
And buy their tin and lead up; and to Lothbury<sup>17</sup>

For all the copper.

SUR. What, and turn that, too?

MAM. Yes, and I'll purchase Devonshire and Cornwall,
And make them perfect Indies!<sup>18</sup> You admire now?

SUR. No, faith.

MAM. But when you see th' effects of the great med'cine,
Of which one part projected on a hundred
Of Mercury, or Venus, or the Moon,
Shall turn it to as many of the Sun,<sup>19</sup> 40
Nay, to a thousand, so ad infinitum,
You will believe me.

SUR. Yes, when I see 't, I will.
But if my eyes do cozen me so, and I Giving 'em no occasion, sure I'll have
A whore, shall piss 'em out<sup>20</sup> next day.

MAM. Ha! why?
Do you think I fable with you? I assure you,
He that has once the flower of the sun,
The perfect ruby, which we call elixir,
Not only can do that, but by its virtue
Can confer honor, love, respect, long life; 50
Give safety, valor, yea, and victory,
To whom he will. In eight-and-twenty days,
I'll make an old man of fourscore, a child.

SUR. No doubt; he's that already.

<sup>20</sup> Urine was applied to the eyes as a remedy.

MAM. Nay, I mean,
Restore his years, renew him, like an eagle,
To the fifth age; make him get sons and daughters,

Young giants; as our philosophers have done,
The ancient patriarchs, afore the flood,
But taking, once a week, on a knife's point,
The quantity of a grain of mustard of it: 60
Become stout Marses, and beget young Cupids.

SUR. The decay'd vestals of Pickt-hatch<sup>21</sup>
would thank you,
That keep the fire alive there.

MAM. 'T is the secret
Of nature naturiz'd<sup>22</sup> 'gainst all infections,
Cures all diseases coming of all causes:
A month's grief in a day, a year's in twelve,
And of what age soever in a month —
Past all the doses of your drugging doctors.
I'll undertake, withal, to fright the plague
Out o' the kingdom in three months.

SUR. And I'll
Be bound, the players shall sing your praises
then, 71
Without their poets.<sup>23</sup>

MAM. Sir, I'll do 't. Meantime,
I'll give away so much unto my man,
Shall serve th' whole city with preservative Weekly; each house his dose, and at the rate —

SUR. As he that built the Waterwork<sup>24</sup> does with water?

MAM. You are incredulous.

SUR. Faith, I have a humor:
I would not willingly be gull'd. Your stone
Cannot transmute me.

MAM. Pertinax Surly,
Will you believe antiquity? records? 80
I'll show you a book where Moses, and his sister,<sup>25</sup>

And Solomon have written of the art;
Ay, and a treatise penn'd by Adam —

SUR. How!

<sup>23</sup> I.e., since the theatres had to close when the plague was severe, expression of the actors' gratitude will not require the intermediary of the dramatists, who normally provide them with their utterances.

<sup>25</sup> Miriam. All these names were cited by alchemists.

MAM. O' the philosopher's stone, and in High Dutch.

SUR. Did Adam write, sir, in High Dutch? <sup>26</sup>

MAM. He did ;

Which proves it was the primitive tongue.

SUR. What paper?

MAM. On cedar board.

SUR. O that, indeed, they say, Will last 'gainst worms.

MAM. 'T is like your Irish wood 'Gainst cobwebs. I have a piece of Jason's fleece, <sup>27</sup> too, 89

Which was no other than a book of alchemy, Writ in large sheepskin, a good fat ram-vellum. Such was Pythagoras' thigh, Pandora's tub, And all that fable of Medea's charms, The manner of our work ; the bulls, our furnace,

Still breathing fire ; our argent-vive, <sup>28</sup> the dragon ;

The dragon's teeth, mercury sublimate, That keeps the whiteness, hardness, and the biting ;

And they are gather'd into Jason's helm, Th' alembic, <sup>29</sup> and then sow'd in Mars his field, 99

And thence sublim'd so often, till they are fix'd. Both this, th' Hesperian garden, Cadmus' story, Jove's shower, the boon of Midas, Argus' eyes, Boccace his Demogorgon, <sup>30</sup> thousands more, All abstract riddles of our stone. — How now?

SCENE II <sup>31</sup>

[To] MAMMON [and] SURLY [enter] FACE, [as a servant.]

MAM. Do we succeed? Is our day come? and holds it?

FACE. The evening will set red upon you, sir ;

You have color for it, crimson ; the red ferment

Has done his office. Three hours hence prepare you

To see projection. <sup>32</sup>

MAM. Pertinax, my Surly, Again I say to thee, aloud, " Be rich."

<sup>26</sup> This had been seriously asserted.

<sup>30</sup> A mighty demon ; Boccaccio mentions him.

<sup>32</sup> The final alchemical process ; the substance then turned red, and was ready for use in transmutation.

This day thou shalt have ingots ; and to-morrow

Give lords th' affront. — Is it, my Zephyrus, right?

Blushes the bolt's-head? <sup>33</sup>

FACE. Like a wench with child, sir, That were but now discover'd to her master.

MAM. Excellent witty Lungs! — My only care is 11

Where to get stuff enough now, to project on ; This town will not half serve me.

FACE. No, sir? Buy The covering off o' churches.

MAM. That's true.

FACE. Yes. Let 'em stand bare, as do their auditory ; <sup>34</sup> Or cap 'em new with shingles.

MAM. No, good thatch ; Thatch will lie light upo' the rafters, Lungs. Lungs, I will manumit thee from the furnace ; I will restore thee thy complexion, Puff, Lost in the embers ; and repair this brain, 20 Hurt wi' the fume o' the metals.

FACE. I have blown, sir, Hard, for your Worship ; thrown by many a coal,

When 't was not beech ; weigh'd those I put in, just,

To keep your heat still even. These blear'd eyes

Have wak'd to read your several colors, sir, Of the pale citron, the green lion, the crow, The peacock's tail, the plumed swan. <sup>35</sup>

MAM. And, lastly, Thou hast descried the flower, the sanguis agni?

FACE. Yes, sir.

MAM. Where's master?

FACE. At 's prayers, sir ; he, Good man, he's doing his devotions 30 For the success.

MAM. Lungs, I will set a period To all thy labors ; thou shalt be the master Of my seragli[o].

FACE. Good, sir.

MAM. But do you hear? I'll geld you, Lungs.

FACE. Yes, sir.

MAM. For I do mean To have a list of wives and concubines Equal with Solomon, who had the stone Alike with me ; and I will make me a back

With the elixir, that shall be as tough
As Hercules, to encounter fifty a night. —
Th' art sure thou saw'st it blood?

FACE. Both blood and spirit, sir. 40

MAM. I will have all my beds blown up, not stuff'd;

Down is too hard. And then, mine oval room
Fill'd with such pictures as Tiberius took
From Elephantis, and dull Aretine
But coldly imitated. Then, my glasses
Cut in more subtle angles, to disperse
And multiply the figures, as I walk
Naked between my succubae.<sup>36</sup> My mists
I'll have of perfume, vapor'd 'bout the room,
To lose ourselves in; and my baths, like pits
To fall into; from whence we will come forth
And roll us dry in gossamer and roses. — 52
Is it arrived at ruby? — Where I spy
A wealthy citizen or rich lawyer
Have a sublim'd pure wife, unto that fellow
I'll send a thousand pound to be my cuckold.

FACE. And I shall carry it?

MAM. No. I'll ha' no bawds
But fathers and mothers. They will do it best,
Best of all others. And my flatterers
Shall be the pure<sup>37</sup> and gravest of divines 60
That I can get for money. My mere fools,
Eloquent burgesses;<sup>38</sup> and then my poets
The same that writ so subtly of the fart,<sup>39</sup>
Whom I will entertain still for that subject.
The few that would give out themselves to be
Court and town stallions, and, eachwhere, bely Ladies who are known most innocent, for them,<sup>40</sup> —

Those will I beg, to make me eunuchs of;
And they shall fan me with ten estrich tails
Apiece, made in a plume to gather wind. 70
We will be brave, Puff, now we ha' the med'- cine.

My meat shall all come in, in Indian shells,
Dishes of agate set in gold, and studded
With emeralds, sapphires, hyacinths, and ru-bies.

The tongues of carps, dormice, and camels'
heels,

Boil'd i' the spirit of Sol, and dissolv'd pearl
(Apicius'<sup>41</sup> diet, 'gainst the epilepsy);

<sup>36</sup> I.e., concubines. All these voluptuous ideas Jonson found in his classical reading. On Tiberius see Suetonius's Life, chap. 43.

<sup>41</sup> The famous gourmand. He is mentioned in chapter 18 of Lampridius's Vita Heliogabali, in the Scriptores Historiae Augustae, from which Jonson takes most of these delicacies.

And I will eat these broths with spoons of amber,

Headed with diamond and carbuncle.

My footboy shall eat pheasants, calver'd<sup>42</sup>
salmons, 80

Knots,<sup>43</sup> godwits, lampreys. I myself will have

The beards of barbels serv'd instead of salads, Oil'd mushrooms, and the swelling unctuous
paps

Of a fat pregnant sow, newly cut off,
Dress'd with an exquisite and poignant sauce,
For which I'll say unto my cook, "There's
gold;

Go forth, and be a knight." 44

FACE. Sir, I'll go look
A little, how it heightens. [Exit.]

MAM. Do. — My shirts
I'll have of taffeta-sars'net, soft and light
As cobwebs; and for all my other raiment, 90
It shall be such as might provoke the Persian,
Were he to teach the world riot anew.

My gloves of fishes and birds' skins, perfum'd
With gums of paradise, and Eastern air —

SUR. And do you think to have the stone with this?

MAM. No, I do think t' have all this with the stone.

SUR. Why, I have heard he must be homo
frugi,

A pious, holy, and religious man,
One free from mortal sin, a very virgin.

MAM. That makes it, sir; he is so. But I buy it; 100

My venture brings it me. He, honest wretch,
A notable, superstitious, good soul,
Has worn his knees bare, and his slippers bald,
With prayer and fasting for it; and, sir, let
him

Do it alone, for me, still. Here he comes.
Not a profane word afore him; 't is poison. —

SCENE III 45

[To] MAMMON [and] SURLY [enter] SUBTLE.

MAM. Good morrow, father.

SUB. Gentle son, good morrow,
And to your friend there. What is he with
you?

MAM. An heretic, that I did bring along,
In hope, sir, to convert him.

<sup>42</sup> Specially dressed, but just how is uncertain.

<sup>44</sup> A hit at the cheapening of knighthood which resulted from James's lavish creations.

<sup>45</sup> The same.

SUB. Son, I doubt
Yo' are covetous, that thus you meet your time
I' the just <sup>46</sup> point; prevent <sup>47</sup> your day at morning.

This argues something worthy of a fear
Of importune and carnal appetite.
Take heed you do not cause the blessing leave
you,
With your ungovern'd haste. I should be sorry

To see my labors, now e'en at perfection, 11
Got by long watching and large patience,
Not prosper where my love and zeal hath plac'd 'em.

Which (Heaven I call to witness, with yourself, To whom I have pour'd my thoughts) in all my ends,

Have look'd no way, but unto public good,
To pious uses, and dear charity,
[Now]<sup>48</sup> grown a prodigy with men. Wherein
If you, my son, should now prevaricate,
And to your own particular lusts employ 20
So great and catholic a bliss, be sure
A curse will follow, yea, and overtake
Your subtle and most secret ways.

MAM. I know, sir;
You shall not need to fear me. I but come
To ha' you confute this gentleman.

SUR. Who is,
Indeed, sir, somewhat costive of belief
Toward your stone; would not be gull'd.

SUB. Well, son,
All that I can convince him in, is this:
The work is done; bright Sol is in his robe.
We have a med'cine of the triple soul,<sup>49</sup> 30
The glorified spirit. Thanks be to Heaven,
And make us worthy of it! — Ulen Spiegel! <sup>50</sup>

FACE. [within] Anon, sir.

SUB. Look well to the register.<sup>51</sup>
And let your heat still lessen by degrees,
To the aludels.<sup>52</sup>

FACE. [within] Yes, sir.

SUB. Did you look
O' the bolt's-head yet?

FACE. [within] Which? On D, sir?

SUB. Ay;

What's the complexion?

FACE. [within] Whitish.

<sup>46</sup> Exact. <sup>47</sup> Anticipate.

<sup>48</sup> Cor. F<sub>2</sub>; Q, F<sub>1</sub>, No.

<sup>49</sup> A triple spirit ("vital", "natural", and "animal") was supposed to knit man's soul to his body.

<sup>50</sup> Owl-glass, the knavish hero of an early German

<sup>51</sup> Which regulated the draft.

<sup>52</sup> Pear-shaped vessels, open at both ends.

SUB. Infuse vinegar,
To draw his volatile substance and his tinc-
ture;

And let the water in glass E be filt' red,
And put into the gripe's egg.<sup>53</sup> Lute <sup>54</sup> him
well; 40

And leave him clos'd in balneo.<sup>55</sup>

FACE. [within] I will, sir.

SUR. [aside] What a brave language here is!
next to canting! <sup>56</sup>

SUB. I have another work you never saw,
son,
That three days since pass'd the philosopher's wheel,<sup>57</sup>

In the lent heat of Athanor; <sup>58</sup> and 's become Sulphur o' Nature.<sup>59</sup>

MAM. But 't is for me?

SUB. What need you?
You have enough, in that <sup>60</sup> is perfect.

MAM. O, but ——

SUB. Why, this is covetise! <sup>61</sup>
MAM. No, I assure you,
I shall employ it all in pious uses,
Founding of colleges and grammar schools, [50
Marrying <sup>62</sup> young virgins, building hospitals,
And, now and then, a church.

[Re-enter FACE]

SUB. How now!
FACE. Sir, please you,
Shall I not change the filter?

SUB. Marry, yes;
And bring me the complexion of glass B.
[Exit FACE.]

MAM. Ha' you another?

SUB. Yes, son; were I assur'd
Your piety were firm, we would not want
The means to glorify it. But I hope the best.
I mean to tinct C in sand-heat to-morrow,
And give him imbibition.<sup>63</sup>

MAM. Of white oil?

SUB. No, sir, of red. F is come over the helm<sup>64</sup> too, 60

<sup>56</sup> The jargon of the underworld, of rogues, vagabonds, and beggars.

<sup>57</sup> A series of alchemical operations. (Hathaway.)

<sup>58</sup> A self-feeding furnace which maintained an even and mild ("lent") temperature.

<sup>59</sup> Sulphur vive, or red sulphur. In this state (never reached) sulphur was perfect for the further stages of the alchemical process.

<sup>60</sup> I.e., in having that which.

I thank my Maker, in Saint Mary's bath.<sup>65</sup>
And shows lac virginis.<sup>66</sup> Blessed be Heaven.
I sent you of his faeces<sup>67</sup> there calcin'd :

Out of that calx, I ha' won the salt of mercury.

MAM. By pouring on your rectified<sup>68</sup> water?

SUB. Yes, and reverberating<sup>69</sup> in Athanor.

[Re-enter FACE.]

How now? what color says it?

FACE. The ground black, sir.

MAM. That's your crow's head?

SUR. [aside] Your cock's comb's, is 't
not?

SUB. No, 't is not perfect; would it were the crow. 69

That work wants something.

SUR. [aside] Oh, I look'd for this.

The hay<sup>70</sup> is a-pitching.

SUB. Are you sure you loos'd 'em
In their own menstree?<sup>71</sup>

FACE. Yes, sir, and then married 'em,
And put 'em in a bolt's-head nipp'd<sup>72</sup> to digestion,<sup>73</sup>

Accord as you bade me, when I set

The liquor of Mars<sup>74</sup> to circulation

In the same heat.

SUB. The process then was right.

FACE. Yes, by the token, sir, the retort brake,

~~And what was sav'd~~ was put into the pelican,<sup>75</sup>

~~And sign'd with~~ Hermes seal.<sup>76</sup>

SUB. I think 't was so.
We should have a new amalgama.

SUR. [aside] O, this ferret<sup>77</sup> 80
Is rank<sup>78</sup> as any polecat.

SUB. But I care not;

Let him e'en die; we have enough beside,

In embryon.<sup>79</sup> He has his white shirt on?

FACE. Yes, sir,
He's ripe for inceration: <sup>80</sup> he stands warm,

<sup>65</sup> In this process one vessel is heated by being placed in another which holds water to which the fire is applied.

circulation.

<sup>76</sup> Hermetically sealed, by heating the vessel's neck and twisting it.

In his ash-fire. I would not you should let Any die now, if I might counsel, sir,
For luck's sake to the rest; it is not good.

MAM. He says right.

SUR. [aside] Ay, are you bolted?<sup>81</sup>

FACE. Nay, I know 't, sir;

I have seen th' ill fortune. What is some three ounces

Of fresh materials?

MAM. Is 't no more?

FACE. No more, sir; 90

Of gold, t' amalgam with some six of mercury.

MAM. Away; here's money. What will serve?

FACE. Ask him, sir.

MAM. How much?

SUB. Give him nine pound;
you may gi' him ten.

SUR. [aside] Yes, twenty, and be cozen'd,
do.

MAM. There 't is.

SUB. This needs not; but that you will have it so,

To see conclusions of all. For two

Of our inferior works are at fixation; <sup>82</sup>

A third is in ascension.<sup>83</sup> Go your ways.

Ha' you set the oil of Luna in kemia?<sup>84</sup>

FACE. Yes, sir.

SUB. And the philosophers' vinegar?

FACE. Ay. [Exit.] 100

SUR. [aside] We shall have a salad.

MAM. When do you make projection?

SUB. Son, be not hasty; I exalt our med'-
cine,

By hanging him in balneo vaporoso,

And giving him solution; then congeal him;

And then dissolve him; then again congeal
him;

For look, how oft I iterate the work,

So many times I add unto his virtue.

As, if at first one ounce convert a hundred,

After his second loose, he'll turn a thousand;

His third solution, ten; his fourth, a hundred;

After his fifth, a thousand thousand ounces [111

Of any imperfect metal, into pure

Silver or gold, in all examinations

As good as any of the natural mine.

Get you your stuff here against afternoon,

Your brass, your pewter, and your andirons.

MAM. Not those of iron?

SUB. Yes, you may bring them too;
We'll change all metals.

<sup>83</sup> Distillation. <sup>84</sup> In a cucurbit.

SUR. I believe you in that.
 MAM. Then I may send my spits?
 SUB. Yes, and your racks.
 SUR. And dripping pans, and pot hangers, and hooks? 120
 Shall he not?
 SUB. If he please.
 SUR. — To be an ass.
 SUB. How sir!
 MAM. This gent'man you must bear withal.
 I told you he had no faith.
 SUR. And little hope, sir;
 But much less charity, should I gull myself.
 SUB. Why, what have you observ'd, sir, in our art,
 Seems so impossible?
 SUR. But your whole work, no more.
 That you should hatch gold in a furnace, sir,
 As they do eggs in Egypt!
 SUB. Sir, do you
 Believe that eggs are hatch'd so?
 SUR. If I should?
 SUB. Why, I think that the greater miracle.
 No egg but differs from a chicken more 131
 Than metals in themselves.
 SUR. That cannot be.
 The egg's ordain'd by nature to that end,
 And is a chicken in potentia.
 SUB. The same we say of lead and other metals.
 Which would be gold if they had time.
 MAM. And that
 Our art doth further.
 SUB. Ay, for 't were absurd
 To think that nature in the earth bred gold
 Perfect i' the instant; something went before.
 There must be remote matter.
 SUR. Ay, what is that? [140
 SUB. Marry, we say —
 MAM. Ay, now it heats; stand, father;
 Pound him to dust.
 SUB. It is, of the one part,
 A humid exhalation, which we call
Materia liquida, or the unctuous water;
 On th' other part, a certain crass and viscous
 Portion of earth; both which, con corporate,
 Do make the elementary matter of gold;
 Which is not yet propria materia,
 But common to all metals and all stones.
 For, where it is forsaken of that moisture, 150
 And hath more dryness, it becomes a stone;
 Where it retains more of the humid fatness,
 It turns to sulphur, or to quicksilver,
 Who are the parents of all other metals.

Nor can this remote matter suddenly
 Progress so from extreme unto extreme,
 As to grow gold, and leap o'er all the means.
 Nature doth first beget th' imperfect; then
 Proceeds she to the perfect. Of that airy
 And oily water, mercury is engend'ed; 160
 Sulphur o' the fat and earthy part; the one,
 Which is the last, supplying the place of male,
 The other of the female, in all metals.
 Some do believe hermaphrodeity,
 That both do act and suffer. But these two
 Make the rest ductile, malleable, extensive.
 And even in gold they are; for we do find
 Seeds of them by our fire, and gold in them;
 And can produce the species of each metal
 More perfect thence than nature doth in
 earth. 170
 Beside, who doth not see in daily practice
 Art can beget bees, hornets, beetles, wasps,
 Out of the carcasses and dung of creatures;<sup>85</sup>
 Yea, scorpions of an herb, being rightly plac'd?
 And these are living creatures, far more perfect
 And excellent than metals.
 MAM. Well said, father! —
 Nay, if he take you in hand, sir, with an argument,
 He'll bray you in a mortar.
 SUR. Pray you, sir, stay.
 Rather than I'll be bray'd, sir, I'll believe
 That alchemy is a pretty kind of game, 180
 Somewhat like tricks o' the cards, to cheat a
 man
 With charming.
 SUB. Sir?
 SUR. What else are all your terms, Whereon no one o' your writers 'grees with
 other?
 Of your elixir, your lac virginis,
 Your stone, your med'cine, and your chryso-sperm.<sup>86</sup>
 Your sal, your sulphur, and your mercury,
 Your oil of height,<sup>87</sup> your tree of life, your
 blood,
 Your marcasite, your tutty, your magnesia,
 Your toad,<sup>88</sup> your crow, your dragon,<sup>89</sup> and your panther,<sup>90</sup> Your sun, your moon, your firmament, your

<sup>91</sup> Apparently = either the stone itself, or the matter from which it is to be extracted.

Your lato, azoch, zernich, chibrit,<sup>92</sup> heautarit,
And then your red man, and your white woman,<sup>93</sup>

With all your broths, your menstrues, and materials

Of piss and eggshells, women's terms, man's
blood,

Hair o' the head, burnt clouts, chalk, merds,<sup>94</sup> and clay,

Powder of bones, scalings of iron, glass,
And worlds of other strange ingredients,
Would burst a man to name?

SUB. And all these, nam'd,
Intending but one thing; which art our writers
Us'd to obscure their art.

MAM. Sir, so I told him; 200
Because <sup>95</sup> the simple idiot should not learn it,
And make it vulgar.

SUB. Was not all the knowledge
Of the Egyptians writ in mystic symbols?
Speak not the scriptures oft in parables?
Are not the choicest fables of the poets,
That were the fountains and first springs of wisdom,

Wrapp'd in perplexed allegories?

MAM. I urg'd that,
And clear'd to him that Sisyphus was damn'd
To roll the ceaseless stone, only because He would have made ours common. (DOL is seen) [at the door.] — Who is this? 210

SUB. God's precious! — What do you mean? Go in, good lady,
Let me entreat you. [DOL retires.] — Where's
this varlet?

[Re-enter FACE.]

FACE. Sir?

SUB. You very knave! do you use me thus?

FACE. Wherein, sir?

SUB. Go in and see, you traitor. Go!

[Exit FACE.]

MAM. Who is it, sir?

SUB. Nothing, sir; nothing.

MAM. What's the matter, good sir?
I have not seen you thus distemp'rd. Who
is 't?

SUB. All arts have still had, sir, their adversaries;

But ours the most ignorant. —

FACE returns.

What now?

FACE. 'T was not my fault, sir; she would speak with you.

SUB. Would she, sir! Follow me. [Exit.]

MAM. Stay, Lungs.

FACE. I dare not, sir. 220

MAM. Stay, man; what is she?

FACE. A lord's sister, sir.<sup>96</sup>

MAM. How! 'pray thee, stay!

FACE. She's mad, sir, and sent hither —
He'll be mad too. —

MAM. I warrant thee.<sup>97</sup> — Why sent hither?

FACE. Sir, to be cur'd.

SUB. [within] Why, rascal!

FACE. Lo you! — Here, sir!
He goes out.

MAM. 'Fore God, a Bradamante,<sup>98</sup> a brave piece.

SUR. Heart, this is a bawdyhouse! I'll be burnt else.

MAM. O, by this light, no. Do not wrong
him. H' is Too scrupulous that way: it is his vice.

No, h' is a rare physician, do him right,

An excellent Paracelsian, and has done 230
Strange cures with mineral physic.<sup>99</sup> He deals
all

With spirits, he. He will not hear a word
Of Galen, or his tedious recipes. —

FACE again.

How now, Lungs!

FACE. Softly, sir; speak softly. I meant
To ha' told your Worship all. This must not hear.

MAM. No, he will not be gull'd; let him alone.

FACE. Y' are very right; sir, she is a most rare scholar,
And is gone mad with studying Br[o]ughton's <sup>100</sup> works.

If you but name a word touching the Hebrew,
She falls into her fit, and will discourse 240
So learnedly of genealogies,

As you would run mad, too, to hear her, sir.

MAM. How might one do t' have conference with her, Lungs?

<sup>96</sup> So Q and Gifford. This and the following line are transposed in FF.

orthodox physicians, who followed Galen.

<sup>100</sup> See on Volpone, II, ii, 145.

FACE. O, divers have run mad upon the conference.

I do not know, sir; I am sent in haste To fetch a vial.

SUR. Be not gull'd, Sir Mammon.

MAM. Wherein? 'Pray ye, be patient.

SUR. Yes, as you are; And trust confederate knaves and bawds and whores.

MAM. You are too foul, believe it. — Come here, U'n;

One word.

FACE. I dare not, in good faith.

MAM. Stay, knave. 250

FACE. H' is extreme angry that you saw her, sir.

MAM. Drink that. [Gives him money.] What is she when she's out of her fit?

FACE. O, the most affablest creature, sir! so merry!

So pleasant! She'll mount you up, like quicksilver,

Over the helm; and circulate, like oil;

A very vegetal:<sup>101</sup> discourse of state, Of mathematics, bawdry, anything —

MAM. Is she no way accessible? no means, No trick to give a man a taste of her — wit — Or so? — U'en.<sup>102</sup>

FACE. I'll come to you again, sir. 260 [Exit.]

MAM. Surly, I did not think one o' your breeding

Would traduce personages of worth.

SUR. Sir Epicure, Your friend to use; yet still loth to be gull'd. I do not like your philosophical bawds. Their stone is lechery enough to pay for, Without this bait.

MAM. 'Heart, you abuse yourself. I know the lady, and her friends, and means, The original of this disaster. Her brother Has told me all.

SUR. And yet you ne'er saw her till now!

MAM. Oh yes, but I forgot. I have, believe it, 270

One o' the treacherou'st memories, I do think, Of all mankind.

SUR. What call you her brother?

MAM. My Lord —

He wi' not have his name known, now I think on't.

SUR. A very treacherous memory!

MAM. O' my faith —

SUR. Tut, if you ha' it not about you, pass it

Till we meet next.

MAM. Nay, by this hand, 't is true. He's one I honor, and my noble friend; And I respect his house.

SUR. Heart! can it be That a grave sir, a rich, that has no need, A wise sir, too, at other times, should thus, 280 With his own oaths, and arguments, make hard means

To gull himself? An this be your elixir, Your lapis mineralis, and your lunny,<sup>103</sup> Give me your honest trick yet at primero, Or glee,<sup>104</sup> and take your lutum sapientis,<sup>105</sup> Your menstruum<sup>106</sup> simplex! I'll have gold before you, And with less danger of the quicksilver, Or the hot sulphur.<sup>107</sup>

[Re-enter FACE.]

FACE. (to SURLY) Here's one from Captain Face, sir.

Desires you meet him i' the Temple Church, Some half-hour hence, and upon earnest business. — 290

[Whispers MAMMON.] Sir, if you please to quit us now, and come

Again within two hours, you shall have My master busy examining o' the works; And I will steal you in unto the party, That you may see her converse.<sup>108</sup> — Sir, shall

I say

You'll meet the Captain's worship?

SUR. Sir, I will. — [aside] But, by attorney,<sup>109</sup> and to a second purpose. Now, I am sure it is a bawdyhouse; I'll swear it, were the marshal here to thank me: 299

The naming this commander doth confirm it.

Don Face! why, he's the most authentic dealer

I' these commodities! the superintendent To all the quainter traffickers in town.

He is their visitor, and does appoint Who lies with whom, and at what hour, what price,

<sup>102</sup> Om. Q. Gifford assigns to Subtle.

Which gown, and in what smock, what fall,<sup>110</sup>
what tire.<sup>111</sup>

Him will I prove, by a third person, to find
The subtleties of this dark labyrinth ;
Which if I do discover, dear Sir Mammon,
You'll give your poor friend leave, though no
philosopher, 310
To laugh ; for you that are, 't is thought, shall weep.

FACE. Sir, he does pray you'll not forget.

SUR. I will not, sir. —

Sir Epicure, I shall leave you. [Exit.]

MAM. I follow you straight.

FACE. But do so, good sir, to avoid suspicion.

This gent'man has a parlous head.

MAM. But wilt thou, Ulen,
Be constant to thy promise ?

FACE. As my life, sir.

MAM. And wilt thou insinuate what I am,
and praise me,

And say I am a noble fellow ?

FACE. Oh, what else, sir ?

And that you'll make her royal with the stone, 319

An empress ; and yourself King of Bantam.<sup>112</sup>

MAM. Wilt thou do this ?

FACE. Will I, sir !

MAM. Lungs, my Lungs !

I love thee.

FACE. Send your stuff, sir, that my master
May busy himself about projection.

MAM. Th' hast witch'd me, rogue ; take,
go. [Gives him money.]

FACE. Your jack,<sup>113</sup> and all, sir.

MAM. Thou art a villain — I will send my jack,

And the weights too. Slave, I could bite thine
ear.

Away, thou dost not care for me.

FACE. Not I, sir ?

MAM. Come, I was born to make thee, my good weasel,

Set thee on a bench, and ha' thee twirl a chain

With the best lord's vermin of 'em all.

FACE. Away, sir. [330]

MAM. A count, nay, a count palatine —

FACE. Good sir, go.

MAM. Shall not advance thee better ; no,
nor faster. [Exit.]

<sup>113</sup> For turning the spit.

SCENE IV <sup>114</sup>

[To] FACE [enter] SUBTLE [and] DOL.

SUB. Has he bit ? has he bit ?

FACE. And swallow'd, too, my Subtle.

I ha' giv'n him line, and now he plays, i' faith.

SUB. And shall we twitch him ?

FACE. Thorough both the gills.
A wench is a rare bait, with which a man
No sooner's taken but he straight firks mad.<sup>115</sup>

SUB. Dol, my Lord What's-hum's <sup>116</sup> sister, you must now

Bear yourself Statlish.<sup>117</sup>

DOL. Oh, let me alone ;

I'll not forget my race, I warrant you.

I'll keep my distance, laugh, and talk aloud ;
Have all the tricks of a proud scurvy lady, 10
And be as rude as her woman.

FACE. Well said, sanguine.<sup>118</sup>

SUB. But will he send his andirons ?

FACE. His jack, too,
And 's iron shoeing-horn ; I ha' spoke to him.
Well,

I must not lose my wary gamester yonder.

SUB. Oh, Monsieur Caution, that will not be gull'd ?

FACE. Ay, if I can strike a fine hook into him, now ! —

The Temple Church, there I have cast mine angle.

Well, pray for me. I'll about it.

(One knocks.)

SUB. What, more gudgeons ! <sup>119</sup>

Dol, scout, scout ! [DOL goes to the window.]

— Stay, Face, you must go to the door ;
'Pray God it be my Anabaptist. — Who is 't,
Dol ? 20

DOL. I know him not. He looks like a gold-end-man.<sup>120</sup>

SUB. Gods so ! 't is he ; he said he would send — what call you him ?

The sanctified elder, that should deal

For Mammon's jack and andirons ! Let him in.

Stay ; help me off, first, with my gown. —
Away,

<sup>115</sup> Is stirred up to the point of madness.

in black letter.

<sup>118</sup> Perhaps with reference to Dol's hair, nose, or blonde complexion in general.

<sup>119</sup> I.e., fools, that will bite at anything.

<sup>120</sup> One who buys broken bits of gold and silver.

Madam, to your withdrawing chamber. Now,
 [Exit DOL.]
 in a new tune, new gesture, but old language. — [Exit FACE.]
 This fellow is sent from one negotiates with me
 About the stone too; for the holy brethren
 Of Amsterdam, the exil'd saints, that hope 30
 To raise their discipline <sup>121</sup> by it. I must use
 him
 In some strange fashion now, to make him admire me.

SCENE V <sup>122</sup>

[To] SUBTLE [enter] ANANIAS.

SUB. Where is my drudge?

[Enter] FACE.

FACE. Sir.

SUB. Take away the recipient, <sup>123</sup>
 And rectify <sup>124</sup> your menstree from the phleg-
 ma. <sup>125</sup>

Then pour it o' the Sol, in the cucurbit,
 And let 'em macerate together.

FACE. Yes, sir.
 And save the ground? <sup>126</sup>

SUB. No: terra damnata <sup>126</sup> Must not have entrance in the work. — Who are you?

ANA. A faithful brother, <sup>127</sup> if it please you.

SUB. What's that?
 A Lullianist? a Ripley? <sup>128</sup> Filius artis?
 Can you sublime and dulcify? <sup>129</sup> calcine?

Know you the sapor pontic? sapor stiptic? <sup>130</sup>
 Or what is homogene, or heterogene? 11

ANA. I understand no heathen language, truly.

SUB. Heathen! You Knipperdoling! <sup>131</sup> Is Ars sacra,
 Or chrysopoeia, or spagyrica, <sup>132</sup>
 Or the pamphysic, or panarchic <sup>133</sup> knowledge,
 A heathen language?

<sup>121</sup> Ecclesiastical polity.

understand.

Subtle for the occasion; they appear to signify (1) the (knowledge) of all nature and (2) sovereign (knowledge).

ANA. Heathen Greek, I take it.

SUB. How! Heathen Greek?

ANA. All's heathen but the Hebrew.

SUB. Sirrah my varlet, stand you forth and speak to him

Like a philosopher; answer i' the language.
 Name the vexations and the martyrizations <sup>134</sup>
 Of metals in the work.

FACE. Sir, putrefaction, 21
 Solution, ablution, sublimation,
 Cohobation, calcination, ceration, <sup>135</sup> and Fixation.

SUB. This is heathen Greek, to you,
 now? —

And when comes vivification? <sup>136</sup>

FACE. After mortification. <sup>137</sup>

SUB. What's cohobation?

FACE. 'T is the pouring on
 Your aqua regis, and then drawing him off,
 To the trine circle of the seven spheres.

SUB. What's the proper passion <sup>138</sup> of metals.

FACE. Malleation.

SUB. What's your ultimum supplicium
auri? <sup>139</sup>

FACE. Antimonium. <sup>140</sup> 30

SUB. This's heathen Greek to you? — and what's your mercury?

FACE. A very fugitive; he will be gone, sir.

SUB. How know you him?

FACE. By his viscosity,
 His oleosity, and his suscitability. <sup>141</sup>

SUB. How do you sublime him?

FACE. With the calce <sup>142</sup> of eggshells,
 White marble, talc.

SUB. Your magisterium <sup>143</sup> now?
 What's that?

FACE. Shifting, sir, your elements,
 Dry into cold, cold into moist, moist into hot,
 Hot into dry.

SUB. This's heathen Greek to you still? —

Your lapis philosophicus?

FACE. 'T is a stone, 40
 And not a stone: a spirit, a soul, and a body;

purities are being expelled.

<sup>140</sup> Since gold loses its malleability when alloyed

with antimony. (Hathaway.)

<sup>143</sup> Mastery; a synonym for the philosophers' stone

though here the use seems a little hazy.

Which if you do dissolve, it is dissolv'd ;
If you coagulate, it is coagulated ;
If you make it to fly, it flieth.

SUB. Enough. [Exit FACE.]
This 's heathen Greek to you? What are you,
sir?

ANA. Please you, a servant of the exil'd brethren,
That deal with widows' and with orphans'
goods,
And make a just account unto the saints :
A deacon.

SUB. O, you are sent from Master Wholesome,
Your teacher?

ANA. From Tribulation Wholesome, 50
Our very zealous pastor.

SUB. Good. I have
Some orphans' goods to come here.

ANA. Of what kind, sir?

SUB. Pewter and brass, andirons and kitch-enware.

Metals, that we must use our med'cine on ;
Wherein the brethren may have a penn'orth
For ready money.

ANA. Were the orphans' parents
Sincere professors?

SUB. Why do you ask?

ANA. Because
We then are to deal justly, and give, in truth,
Their utmost value.

SUB. 'Slid, you'd cozen else, 59
An if their parents were not of the faithful? —
I will not trust you, now I think on it, Till I ha' talk'd with your pastor. Ha' you brought money

To buy more coals?

ANA. No, surely.

SUB. No? How so?

ANA. The brethren bid me say unto you,
sir,

Surely, they will not venture any more
Till they may see projection.

SUB. How!

ANA. Yo' have had
For the instruments, as bricks, and loam, and glasses,

Already thirty pound ; and for materials,
They say, some ninety more. And they have heard, since,

That one, at Heidelberg, made it of an egg, 70
And a small paper of pin-dust.

SUB. What's your name?

ANA. My name is Ananias.

SUB. Out, the varlet

That cozen'd the apostles ! Hence, away,
Flee mischief. Had your holy consistory
No name to send me of another sound
Than wicked Ananias? Send your elders
Hither, to make atonement for you, quickly,
And gi' me satisfaction ; or out goes
The fire ; and down th' alembics, and the furnace, 79

Piger Henricus,<sup>144</sup> or what not. Thou wretch, Both sericon and bufo <sup>145</sup> shall be lost,
Tell 'em. All hope of rooting out the bishops
Or th' antichristian hierarchy shall perish,
If they stay threescore minutes : the aqueity,
Terreity, and sulphureity
Shall run together again, and all be annull'd,
Thou wicked Ananias. [Exit ANANIAS.]—

This will fetch 'em,
And make 'em haste towards their gulling
more.

A man must deal like a rough nurse, and fright
Those that are froward, to an appetite. 90

SCENE VI <sup>146</sup>

[To] SUBTLE [enter] FACE [in his uniform, with DRUGGER.

FACE. He's busy with his spirits, but we'll upon him.

SUB. How now ! What mates, what Bay-ards <sup>147</sup> ha' we here?

FACE. I told you he would be furious. —
Sir, here's Nab

Has brought yo' another piece of gold to look on ;

— We must appease him. Give it me : — and prays you

You would devise — what is it, Nab?

DRUG. A sign, sir.

FACE. Ay, a good lucky one, a thriving sign,
Doctor.

SUB. I was devising now.

FACE. [aside to SUBTLE] 'Slight, do not say so ;

He will repent he ga' you any more. —

What say you to his constellation, Doctor, 10
The Balance?

SUB. No, that way is stale and common.
A townsman born in Taurus gives the bull
Or the bull's head ; in Aries, the ram —

<sup>144</sup> A slow furnace.

<sup>145</sup> Not satisfactorily explained ; according to Gifford = black and red tincture.

<sup>147</sup> I.e., bold ones, Bayard being the magic horse in (e.g.) Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, and the occasion of the proverb "As bold as blind Bayard." "Mates" = fellows (contemptuously).

A poor device! No, I will have his name
Form'd in some mystic character, whose radii,
Striking the senses of the passers-by,
Shall, by a virtual influence,<sup>148</sup> breed affections
That may result upon the party owns it;
As thus — 19

FACE. Nab!

SUB. He first shall have a bell,
that's Abel;

And by it standing one whose name is Dee,<sup>149</sup>
In a rug<sup>150</sup> gown, there's D, and Rug, that's drug;

And right anenst him a dog snarling er:
There's Drugger, Abel Drugger. That's his sign. —

[aside] And here's now mystery and hieroglyphic!

FACE. Abel, thou art made.

DRUG. Sir, I do thank his Worship.

FACE. Six o' thy legs<sup>151</sup> more will not do it, Nab.

He has brought you a pipe of tobacco, Doctor.

DRUG. Yes, sir;

I have another thing I would impart — 29

FACE. Out with it, Nab.

DRUG. Sir, there is lodg'd, hard by me,

A rich young widow —

FACE. Good! a bona roba?<sup>152</sup>

DRUG. But nineteen at the most.

FACE. Very good, Abel.

DRUG. Marry, sh' is not in fashion yet;
she wears

A hood, but 't stands a-cop.<sup>153</sup>

FACE. No matter, Abel.

DRUG. And I do now and then give her a

FACE. What! dost thou deal, Nab?

SUB. I did tell you, Captain.

DRUG. And physio too, sometime, sir; for which she trusts me

With all her mind. She's come up here of purpose

To learn the fashion.

FACE. Good! — [aside] His match too! — On, Nab.

DRUG. And she does strangely long to know her fortune. 40

FACE. God's lid, Nab; send her to the Doctor, hither.

DRUG. Yes, I have spoke to her of his Worship already;

<sup>153</sup> Probably = on top. <sup>154</sup> Cosmetic.

But she's afraid it will be blown abroad,
And hurt her marriage.

FACE. Hurt it! 't is the way
To heal it, if 't were hurt; to make it more Follow'd and sought. Nab, thou shalt tell her
this.

She'll be more known, more talk'd of; and your widows

Are ne'er of any price till they be famous;
Their honor is their multitude of suitors. 49
Send her; it may be thy good fortune. What!
Thou dost not know.

DRUG. No, sir, she'll never marry
Under a knight; her brother has made a vow.

FACE. What! and dost thou despair, my little Nab,

Knowing what the Doctor has set down for
thee,

And seeing so many o' the city dubb'd? <sup>155</sup>
One glass o' thy water, with a madam, I know,
Will have it done, Nab. What's her brother?
a knight?

DRUG. No, sir, a gentleman newly warm in
's land, sir,

Scarce cold in his one-and-twenty, that does govern

His sister here; and is a man himself 60
Of some three thousand a year, and is come up
To learn to quarrel, and to live by his wits,
And will go down again, and die i' the country.

FACE. How! to quarrel?

DRUG. Yes, sir, to carry quarrels,
As gallants do, and manage 'em by line.

FACE. 'Slid, Nab! The Doctor is the only
man

In Christendom for him. He has made a table,

With mathematical demonstrations,
Touching the art of quarrels. He will give him An instrument to quarrel by. Go, bring 'em
both, 70

Him and his sister. And, for thee, with her
The Doctor happ'ly may persuade. Go to.
'Shalt give his Worship a new damask suit
Upon the premises.

SUB. Oh, good Captain!

FACE. He shall;
He is the honestest fellow, Doctor. Stay not,
No offers; bring the damask, and the parties.

DRUG. I'll try my power, sir.

FACE. And thy will too, Nab.

SUB. 'T is good tobacco, this! What is 't an ounce?

FACE. He'll send you a pound, Doctor.

<sup>155</sup> Knighted.

SUB. Oh, no.
 FACE. He will do 't.
 It is the goodest soul! — Abel, about it. 80
 Thou shalt know more anon. Away, begone.
 [Exit ABEL.]

A miserable rogue, and lives with cheese,
 And has the worms. That was the cause, indeed,
 Why he came now: he dealt with me in private,
 To get a med'cine for 'em.

SUB. And shall, sir. This works.

FACE. A wife, a wife for one on us, my dear Subtle.
 We'll e'en draw lots, and he that fails shall have

The more in goods, the other has in tail.

SUB. Rather the less; for she may be so light

She may want grains.<sup>156</sup>

FACE. Ay; or be such a burden, 90
 A man would scarce endure her for the whole.

SUB. Faith, best let's see her first, and then determine.

FACE. Content. But Dol must ha' no breath on 't.

SUB. Mum.

Away you, to your Surly yonder; catch him.

FACE. 'Pray God I ha' not stay'd too long.

SUB. I fear it. [Exeunt.]

ACT III — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] TRIBULATION [WHOLESOME and] ANANIAS.

TRI. These chastisements are common to the saints,
 And such rebukes<sup>2</sup> we of the Separation
 Must bear with willing shoulders, as the trials
 Sent forth to tempt our frailties.

ANA. In pure zeal,
 I do not like the man; he is a heathen,
 And speaks the language of Canaan, truly.

TRI. I think him a profane person indeed.

ANA. He bears
 The visible mark of the Beast in his forehead.
 And for his stone, it is a work of darkness,
 And with philosophy blinds the eyes of man. 10

TRI. Good brother, we must bend unto all means

That may give furtherance to the holy cause.

ANA. Which his cannot; the sanctified cause

Should have a sanctified course.

TRI. Not always necessary.
 The children of perdition are ofttimes
 Made instruments even of the greatest works.
 Beside, we should give somewhat to man's nature,

The place he lives in, still about the fire,
 The fume of metals, that intoxicate
 The brain of man and make him prone to passion. 20

Where have you greater atheists than your cooks?

Or more profane, or choleric, than your glass-men?

More antichristian than your bell founders?
 What makes the Devil so devilish, I would ask you,

Sathan, our common enemy, but his being
 Perpetually about the fire, and boiling
 Brimstone and ars'nic? We must give, I say,
 Unto the motives, and the stirrers up
 Of humors in the blood. It may be so,

Whenas the work is done, the stone is made,
 This heat of his may turn into a zeal, 31

And stand up for the beauteous discipline
 Against the menstruous cloth and rag of Rome.
 We must await his calling, and the coming
 Of the good spirit. You did fault, t' upbraid him

With the brethren's blessing of Heidelberg, weighing

What need we have to hasten on the work,
 For the restoring of the silenc'd saints,<sup>3</sup>
 Which ne'er will be but by the philosopher's stone.

And so a learned elder, one of Scotland, 40
 Assur'd me; aurum potable<sup>4</sup> being
 The only med'cine for the civil magistrate,
 T' incline him to a feeling of the cause;
 And must be daily us'd in the disease.

ANA. I have not edified more, truly, by man;

Not since the beautiful light first shone on me;
 And I am sad my zeal hath so offended.

TRI. Let us call on him then.

ANA. The motion's good.
 And of the spirit; I will knock first. — [Knocks.] Peace be within!

<sup>3</sup> The dissenting clergy, who were prohibited from preaching.

<sup>4</sup> I.e., bribery.

SCENE II <sup>5</sup>

[To them enter] SUBTLE.

SUB. Oh, are you come? 'T was time.
Your threescore minutes
Were at the last thread, you see; and down had gone

Furnus acediae, turris circulatorius: <sup>6</sup>

Limbec, bolt's-head, retort, and pelican
Had all been cinders. Wicked Ananias!
Art thou return'd? Nay, then it goes down
yet.

TRI. Sir, be appeased; he is come to humble
Himself in spirit, and to ask your patience,
If too much zeal hath carried him aside
From the due path.

SUB. Why, this doth qualify! <sup>7</sup> 10

TRI. The brethren had no purpose, verily,
To give you the least grievance, but are ready
To lend their willing hands to any project
The spirit and you direct.

SUB. This qualifies more!

TRI. And for the orphans' goods, let them be valu'd,
Or what is needful else to the holy work,
It shall be numb'ed; here, by me, the saints
Throw down their purse before you.

SUB. This qualifies most!
Why, thus it should be; now you understand.
Have I discours'd so unto you of our stone, 20
And of the good that it shall bring your cause?
Show'd you (beside the main of hiring forces
Abroad, drawing the Hollanders, your friends,
From th' Indies, to serve you, with all their fleet)

That even the med'cinal use shall make you a faction

And party in the realm? As, put the case That some great man in state, he have the gout,

Why, you but send three drops of your elixir,
You help him straight; there you have made a friend.

Another has the palsy or the dropsy: 30
He takes of your incombustible stuff —
He's young again; there you have made a friend.

A lady that is past the feat of body,
Though not of mind, and hath her face decay'd
Beyond all cure of paintings, you restore

With the oil of talc; <sup>8</sup> there you have made a friend —

And all her friends. <sup>9</sup> A lord that is a leper,
A knight that has the bone-ache, or a squire
That hath both these, you make 'em smooth and sound 39

With a bare fricace <sup>10</sup> of your med'cine; still
You increase your friends.

TRI. Ay, 't is very pregnant.

SUB. And then the turning of this lawyer's pewter

To plate at Christmas —

ANA. Christ-tide, I pray you.

SUB. Yet, Ananias?

ANA.

I have done.

SUB. Or changing

His parcel <sup>11</sup> gilt to massy gold. You cannot
But raise you friends. Withal, to be of power
To pay an army in the field, to buy
The King of France out of his realms, or Spain
Out of his Indies. What can you not do
Against lords spiritual or temporal, 50
That shall oppone <sup>12</sup> you?

TRI. Verily, 't is true.

We may be temporal lords ourselves, I take it.

SUB. You may be anything, and leave off to make

Long-winded exercises; or suck up
Your ha! and hum! in a tune. I not deny
But such as are not graced in a state,
May, for their ends, be adverse in religion,
And get a tune to call the flock together;
For, to say sooth, a tune does much with women

And other phlegmatic people; it is your bell.

ANA. Bells are profane; a tune may be religious. 61

SUB. No warning with you? Then farewell my patience.

'Slight, it shall down; I will not be thus tor-tur'd.

TRI. I pray you, sir.

SUB. All shall perish. I have spoke it.

TRI. Let me find grace, sir, in your eyes;
the man,

He stands corrected: neither did his zeal,
But as yourself, allow a tune somewhere,
Which now, being to'ard <sup>13</sup> the stone, we shall not need.

SUB. No, nor your holy vizard, <sup>14</sup> to win widows

<sup>8</sup> The elixir in a particular form and color.
Q Talc; Ff Talek.

<sup>14</sup> Mask of holiness.

To give you legacies, or make zealous wives 70
To rob their husbands for the common cause ;
Nor take the start of bonds broke but one day,
And say they were forfeited by providence.

Nor shall you need o'er night to eat huge meals,

To celebrate your next day's fast the better ;
The whilst the brethren and the sisters, humbled,

Abate the stiffness of the flesh. Nor cast Before your hungry hearers scrupulous bones ;<sup>15</sup>

As whether a Christian may hawk or hunt,
Or whether matrons of the holy assembly 80
May lay their hair out, or wear doublets,
Or have that idol, starch, about their linen.

ANA. It is indeed an idol.

TRI. Mind him not, sir. —
I do command thee, spirit (of zeal, but trouble),
To peace within him. — Pray you, sir, go on.

SUB. Nor shall you need to libel 'gainst the prelates,

And shorten so your ears<sup>16</sup> against the hearing
Of the next wire-drawn grace. Nor of necessity

Rail against plays, to please the alderman
Whose daily custard you devour ; nor lie 90
With zealous rage till you are hoarse. Not one Of these so singular arts. Nor call yourselves
By names of Tribulation, Persecution, Restraint, Long-patience, and such like,
affected

By the whole family or wood<sup>17</sup> of you,
Only for glory, and to catch the ear
Of the disciple.

TRI. Truly, sir, they are Ways that the godly brethren have invented
For propagation of the glorious<sup>18</sup> cause,
As very notable means, and whereby also 100
Themselves grow soon, and profitably, famous.

SUB. O, but the stone, all's idle to it !<sup>19</sup>
nothing !

The art of angels, nature's miracle,
The divine secret that doth fly in clouds
From east to west ; and whose tradition
Is not from men, but spirits.

ANA. I hate traditions ;<sup>20</sup>
I do not trust them —

TRI. Peace !

ANA. They are popish all.
I will not peace. I will not —

TRI.

Ananias !

ANA. Please the profane, to grieve the godly ; I may not.

SUB. Well, Ananias, thou shalt overcome.

TRI. It is an ignorant zeal that haunts him, sir ; 111

But truly else a very faithful brother,
A botcher,<sup>21</sup> and a man by revelation
That hath a competent knowledge of the truth.

SUB. Has he a competent sum there i' the bag

To buy the goods within ? I am made guardian,
And must, for charity and conscience' sake,
Now see the most be made for my poor orphan ;
Though I desire the brethren, too, good gainers.

There they are within. When you have view'd and bought 'em, 120

And ta'en the inventory of what they are,
They are ready for projection ; there's no
more

To do : cast on the med'cine, so much silver
As there is tin there, so much gold as brass,
I'll gi' it you in by weight.

TRI. But how long time,
Sir, must the saints expect<sup>22</sup> yet ?

SUB. Let me see,
How's the moon now ? Eight, nine, ten days
hence,

He will be silver potato ;<sup>23</sup> then three days
Before he citronize.<sup>24</sup> Some fifteen days,
The magisterium will be perfected. 130

ANA. About the second day of the third week,

In the ninth month ?

SUB. Yes, my good Ananias.

TRI. What will the orphans' goods arise to,
think you ?

SUB. Some hundred marks, as much as fill'd three cars,
Unladed now ; you'll make six millions of
'em —

But I must ha' more coals laid in.

TRI. How !

SUB. Another load,
And then we ha' finish'd. We must now increase

Our fire to ignis ardens ;<sup>25</sup> we are past
Fimus equinus, balnei, cineris,<sup>26</sup>

<sup>21</sup> A tailor whose work is limited to repairs.

<sup>26</sup> Heat of horse-dung, warm bath, (and) ashes.

And all those lenter <sup>27</sup> heats. If the holy purse <sup>140</sup>
 Should with this draught fall low, and that <sup>28</sup>
 the saints
 Do need a present sum, I have [a] <sup>29</sup> trick
 To melt the pewter you shall buy now instantly,
 And with a tincture make you as good Dutch dollars
 As any are in Holland.

TRI. Can you so?

SUB. Ay, and shall bide the third examination.

ANA. It will be joyful tidings to the brethren.

SUB. But you must carry it secret.

TRI. Ay; but stay:
 This act of coining, is it lawful?

ANA. Lawful!
 We know no magistrate; or, if we did, <sup>150</sup>
 This's foreign coin.

SUB. It is no coining, sir.
 It is but casting.

TRI. Ha! you distinguish well;
 Casting of money may be lawful.

ANA. 'T is, sir.

TRI. Truly, I take it so.

SUB. There is no scruple,
 Sir, to be made of it; believe Ananias:
 This case of conscience he is studied in.

TRI. I'll make a question of it to the brethren.

ANA. The brethren shall approve it lawful,
 doubt not.

Where shall 't be done?

SUB. For that we'll talk anon.

Knock without.

There's some to speak with me. Go in, I pray you, <sup>160</sup>

And view the parcels. That's the inventory.
 I'll come to you straight. [*Exeunt TRIBULA-
 TION and ANANIAS.*] Who is it? —
 Face! appear.

SCENE III <sup>30</sup>

[To] SUBTLE [enter] FACE [in his uniform].

SUB. How now? good prize?

FACE. Good pox! Yond' costive cheater Never came on.

SUB. How then?

FACE. I ha' walk'd the round
 Till now, and no such thing.

SUB. And ha' you quit him?

<sup>27</sup> Gentler. <sup>28</sup> If. <sup>29</sup> Add. F. <sup>30</sup> The same.

FACE. Quit him! An hell would quit him too, he were happy.

'Slight! would you have me stalk like a milljade,

All day, for one that will not yield us grains?
 I know him of old.

SUB. Oh, but to ha' gull'd him
 Had been a mast'ry.

FACE. Let him go, black <sup>31</sup> boy,
 And turn thee, that some fresh news may possess thee.

A noble count, a don of Spain, my dear <sup>10</sup>
 Delicious compeer, and my party <sup>32</sup>-bawd,
 Who is come hither private for his conscience
 And brought munition with him, six great slops, <sup>33</sup>

Bigger than three Dutch hoys, <sup>34</sup> beside round trunks, <sup>35</sup>

Furnish'd with pistolets, <sup>36</sup> and pieces of eight, <sup>37</sup>
 Will straight be here, my rogue, to have thy bath,

(That is the color, <sup>38</sup>) and to make his batt'ry
 Upon our Dol, our castle, our cinque-port, <sup>39</sup>
 Our Dover pier, our what thou wilt. Where is
 she?

She must prepare perfumes, delicate linen, <sup>20</sup>
 The bath in chief, a banquet, and her wit,
 For she must milk <sup>40</sup> his epididymis.
 Where is the doxy? <sup>41</sup>

SUB. I'll send her to thee,
 And but dispatch my brace of little John Ley-dens <sup>42</sup>

And come again myself.

FACE. Are they within then?

SUB. Numb'ring the sum.

FACE. How much?

SUB. A hundred marks, boy. [Exit.]

FACE. Why, this's a lucky day. Ten pounds of Mammon!

Three o' my clerk! A portague o' my grocer!
 This o' the brethren! Beside reversions
 And states to come, i' the widow, and my count! <sup>30</sup>

My share to-day will not be bought for forty —

[Enter DOL.]

DOL.

What?

<sup>39</sup> One of the five fortified and specially privileged ports of southeastern England; i.e., (cf. "Dover pier") our port of entry for the goods of the don.

<sup>42</sup> See on II, v, 13.

FACE. Pounds, dainty Dorothy ! Art thou so near ?

DOL. Yes ; say, Lord General, how fares our camp ? <sup>43</sup>

FACE. As with the few that had entrench'd themselves

Safe, by their discipline, against a world, Dol, And laugh'd within those trenches, and grew fat

With thinking on the booties, Dol, brought in Daily by their small parties. This dear hour, A doughty don is taken with my Dol ;

And thou mayst make his ransom what thou wilt, <sup>40</sup>

My Dousabel.<sup>44</sup> He shall be brought here, fetter'd

With thy fair looks, before he sees thee ; and thrown

In a down-bed, as dark as any dungeon ; Where thou shalt keep him waking with thy drum ;

Thy drum, my Dol, thy drum ; till he be tame As the poor blackbirds were i' the great frost,<sup>45</sup> Or bees are with a basin ; <sup>46</sup> and so hive him I' the swan-skin coverlid and cambrie sheets, Till he work honey and wax, my little God's-gift.<sup>47</sup>

DOL. What is he, General ?

FACE. An ad[e]lantado,<sup>48</sup> <sup>50</sup>
A grandee, girl. Was not my Dapper here yet ?

DOL. No.

FACE. Nor my Drugger ?

DOL. Neither.

FACE. A pox on 'em, They are so long a-furnishing ! Such stinkards Would not be seen upon these festival days. —

[Re-enter SUBTLE.]

How now ! ha' you done ?

SUB. Done. They are gone ; the sum Is here in bank, my Face. I would we knew Another chapman now would buy 'em out-right.

FACE. 'Slid, Nab shall do't against he ha' the widow, To furnish household.

SUB. Excellent, well thought on ; Pray God he come.

FACE. I pray he keep away <sup>60</sup>
Till our new business be o'erpast.

SUB. But, Face, How cam'st thou by this secret don ?

[FACE.] A spirit Brought me th' intelligence in a paper here, As I was conjuring yonder in my circle <sup>49</sup> For Surly ; I ha' my flies <sup>50</sup> abroad. Your bath

Is famous, Subtle, by my means. Sweet Dol, You must go tune your virginal, no losing O' the least time. And — do you hear ? good action !

Firk<sup>51</sup> like a flounder ; kiss like a scallop, close ; And tickle him with thy mother tongue. His great <sup>70</sup>

Verdugoship <sup>52</sup> has not a jot of language ; So much the easier to be cozen'd, my Dolly. He will come here in a hir'd coach, obscure, And our own coachman, whom I have sent as guide,

No creature else. (One knocks.) Who's that ? [DOL goes to the window.]

SUB. It i' not he ?

FACE. Oh, no, not yet this hour.

SUB. Who is 't ?

DOL. Dapper,

Your clerk.

FACE. God's will then, Queen of Faërie, On with your tire ; <sup>53</sup> [Exit DOL.] and, Doctor, with your robes.

Let's despatch him, for God's sake.

SUB. 'T will be long.

FACE. I warrant you, take but the cues I give you, <sup>80</sup>

It shall be brief enough. [Goes to the window.] 'Slight, here are more !

Abel, and I think the angry boy, the heir, That fain would quarrel.

SUB. And the widow ?

FACE. No, Not that I see. Away ! — O sir, you are welcome. [Exit SUBTLE.]

SCENE IV <sup>54</sup>

[To] FACE [enter] DAPPER.

FACE. The Doctor is within a-moving for you. —

I have had the most ado to win him to it. — He swears you 'll be the darling o' the dice :

<sup>53</sup> Attire, costume.

He never heard her Highness dote till now,
 he says.<sup>55</sup>
 Your aunt has giv'n you the most gracious
 words
 That can be thought on.

DAP. Shall I see her Grace?

FACE. See her, and kiss her too. —

[Enter ABEL and KASTRIL.]

What, honest Nab!
 Hast brought the damask?

NAB. No, sir; here's tobacco.

FACE. 'T is well done, Nab. Thou 'lt bring the damask too?

DRUG. Yes. Here's the gentleman, Captain, Master Kastril, 10
 I have brought to see the Doctor.

FACE. Where's the widow?

DRUG. Sir, as he likes,<sup>56</sup> his sister, he says, shall come.

FACE. O, is it so? 'Good time. Is your name Kastril, sir?

KAS. Ay, and the best o' the Kastrils, I'd be sorry else,
 By fifteen hundred a year.<sup>57</sup> Where is this doctor?

My mad tobacco boy here tells me of one
 That can do things. Has he any skill?

FACE. Wherein, sir?

KAS. To carry a business, manage a quarrel fairly,
 Upon fit terms.

FACE. It seems, sir, you are but young
 About the town, that can make that a question!

KAS. Sir, not so young but I have heard some speech 21
 Of the angry boys,<sup>58</sup> and seen 'em take tobacco,

And in his shop; and I can take it too.

And I would fain be one of 'em, and go down
 And practise i' the country.

FACE. Sir, for the duello,
 The Doctor, I assure you, shall inform you,
 To the least shadow of a hair; and show you
 An instrument he has, of his own making,
 Wherewith, no sooner shall you make report
 Of any quarrel, but he will take the height
 on 't

Most instantly, and tell in what degree 31
 Of safety it lies in, or mortality.

<sup>55</sup> Q om. he says.

<sup>56</sup> According as he likes (the doctor).

<sup>57</sup> I.e., I am richer by £1500 a year than the others.

<sup>58</sup> "Roaring boys", young bucks, "sports."

And how it may be borne, whether in a right
 line,

Or a half circle; or may else be cast

Into an angle blunt, if not acute;

And this he will demonstrate. And then,
 rules

To give and take the lie by.

KAS. How! to take it?

FACE. Yes, in oblique he'll show you, or in circle;<sup>59</sup>

But never in diameter.<sup>60</sup> The whole town Study his theorems, and dispute them ordinarily 40

At the eating academies.

KAS. But does he teach
 Living by the wits too?

FACE. Anything whatever.
 You cannot think that subtlety but he reads it.
 He made me a captain. I was a stark pimp,
 Just o' your standing, 'fore I met with him;
 It i' not two months since. I'll tell you his method:

First, he will enter you at some ordinary.

KAS. No, I'll not come there; you shall pardon me.

FACE. For why, sir?

KAS. There's gaming there, and tricks.

FACE. Why, would you be
 A gallant, and not game?

KAS. Ay, 't will spend a man. 50

FACE. Spend you! It will repair you when you are spent.

How do they live by their wits there, that have vented

Six times your fortunes?

KAS. What, three thousand a year?

FACE. Ay, forty thousand.

KAS. Are there such?

FACE. Ay, sir,
 And gallants yet. Here's a young gentleman Is born to nothing — [pointing to DAPPER]
 forty marks a year,

Which I count nothing. H' is to be initiated,
 And have a fly o' the Doctor. He will win you
 By irresistible luck, within this fortnight, 59
 Enough to buy a barony. They will set him Upmost, at the groom porter's,<sup>61</sup> all the Christmas;

And for the whole year through at every place
 Where there is play, present him with the chair,

<sup>59</sup> Forms of the lie circumstantial.

<sup>61</sup> This officer of the royal household had charge of gaming at court.

The best attendance, the best drink, sometimes

Two glasses of Canary, and pay nothing;
The purest linen and the sharpest knife,
The partridge next his trencher; and somewhere

The dainty bed, in private, with the dainty.
You shall ha' your ordinaries bid for him,
As playhouses for a poet; and the master 70
Pray him aloud to name what dish he affects,
Which must be butter'd shrimps; and those that drink

To no mouth else, will drink to his, as being
The goodly president mouth of all the board.

KAS. Do you not gull one?

FACE. 'Ods my life! Do you think it?
You shall have a cast commander, (can but get
In credit with a glover, or a spurrier,
For some two pair of either's ware aforehand,)
Will, by most swift posts, dealing with him,
Arrive at competent means to keep himself, 80
His punk, and naked boy, in excellent fashion,
And be admir'd for't.

KAS. Will the Doctor teach this?

FACE. He will do more, sir; when your land is gone,
(As men of spirit hate to keep earth long),
In a vacation, when small money is stirring,
And ordinaries suspended till the term,
He'll show a perspective,<sup>62</sup> where on one side
You shall behold the faces and the persons
Of all sufficient young heirs in town,
Whose bonds are current for commodity; <sup>63</sup>
On th' other side, the merchants' forms, and
others, 91
That without help of any second broker,
Who would expect a share, will trust such parcels;

In the third square, the very street and sign
Where the commodity dwells, and does but wait
To be deliver'd, be it pepper, soap,
Hops, or tobacco, oatmeal, woad,<sup>64</sup> or cheeses.
All which you may so handle, to enjoy
To your own use, and never stand oblig'd. 99

KAS. I' faith! is he such a fellow?

FACE. Why, Nab here knows him.

<sup>62</sup> A multiple picture, which showed two or more separate subjects, according to the angle from which one looked at it.

<sup>63</sup> Alluding to the commodity swindle. The borrower had to take part or all of the loan in kind; this was likely to be inferior in quality or to consist of highly specialized goods for which there was little or no demand. Through an agent the swindler would then buy them back at a fraction of their value as computed in the loan, and retaining a handsome profit return them to the merchant who had lent them to him.

And then for making matches for rich widows,
Young gentlewomen, heirs, the fortunat'st
man!

He's sent to, far and near, all over England,
To have his counsel, and to know their fortunes.

KAS. God's will, my suster shall see him.

FACE. I'll tell you, sir;

What he did tell me of Nab. It's a strange thing! —

By the way, you must eat no cheese, Nab; it breeds melancholy,

And that same melancholy breeds worms, —
but pass it —

He told me honest Nab here was ne'er at tavern 109

But once in 's life!

DRUG. Truth, and no more I was not.

FACE. And then he was so sick —

DRUG. Could he tell you that too?

FACE. How should I know it?

DRUG. In troth, we had been a-shooting,
And had a piece of fat ram-mutton to supper,
That lay so heavy o' my stomach —

FACE. And he has no head
To bear any wine; for what with the noise o'
the fiddlers,

And care of his shop, for he dares keep no servants —

DRUG. My head did so ache —

FACE. As he was fain to be brought home.

The Doctor told me; and then a good old woman —

DRUG. Yes, faith, she dwells in Seacoal
Lane, — did cure me, 119

With sodden ale, and pellitory <sup>65</sup> o' the wall,
Cost me but twopence. I had another sickness
Was worse than that.

FACE. Ay, that was with the grief
Thou took'st for being 'sess'd <sup>66</sup> at eighteenpence,

For the waterwork.

DRUG. In truth, and it was like
T' have cost me almost my life.

FACE. Thy hair went off?

DRUG. Yes, sir; 't was done for spite.

FACE. Nay, so says the Doctor.

KAS. Pray thee, tobacco boy, go fetch my suster;

I'll see this learned boy before I go;

And so shall she.

FACE. Sir, he is busy now;
But if you have a sister to fetch hither, 130

<sup>65</sup> A medicinal root.

<sup>66</sup> Assessed.

Perhaps your own pains may command her sooner ;
And he by that time will be free.

KAS. I go. [Exit.]

FACE. Druggier, she's thine : the damask !
[Exit DRUGGIER.] — [aside] Subtle and I Must wrastle for her. — Come on, Master Dapper.

You see how I turn clients here away,
To give your cause dispatch. Ha' you perform'd

The ceremonies were enjoyn'd you ?

DAP. Yes, o' the vinegar,
And the clean shirt.

FACE. 'T is well ; that shirt may do you
More worship than you think. Your aunt's afire,

But that she will not show it, t' have a sight
on you. 140

Ha' you provided for her Grace's servants ?

DAP. Yes, here are sixscore Edward shillings.

FACE. Good.

DAP. And an old Harry's sovereign.<sup>67</sup>

FACE. Very good.

DAP. And three James shillings, and an Elizabeth groat :

Just twenty nobles.<sup>68</sup>

FACE. Oh, you are too just.
I would you had had the other noble in Maries.<sup>69</sup>

DAP. I have some Philip and Maries.

FACE. Ay, those same
Are best of all. Where are they ? Hark, the doctor.

SCENE V <sup>70</sup>

[To] FACE [and] DAPPER [enter] SUBTLE, dis-guis'd like a priest of Faërie.

SUB. Is yet her Grace's cousin come ?

FACE. He is come.

SUB. And is he fasting ?

FACE. Yes.

SUB. And hath cried " hum " ?

FACE. Thrice, you must answer.

DAP. Thrice.

SUB. And as oft " buz " ?

FACE. If you have, say.

DAP. I have.

SUB. Then, to her coz,

Hoping that he hath vinegar'd his senses,

<sup>67</sup> Valued, says Whalley, at only ten shillings.

<sup>68</sup> Worth 6s. 8d. each.

represented.

<sup>70</sup> The same.

As he was bid, the Fairy Queen dispenses,
By me, this robe, the petticoat of Fortune ;
Which that he straight put on, she doth impor-
tune.

And though to Fortune near be her petticoat,
Yet nearer is her smock, the Queen doth
note ; 10

And therefore, even of that a piece she hath sent,

Which, being a child, to wrap him in was rent ;
And prays him for a scarf he now will wear it,
With as much love as then her Grace did tear
it,

About his eyes, to show he is fortunate.

They blind him with a rag.

And, trusting unto her to make his state,
He'll throw away all worldly pelf about him ;
Which that he will perform, she doth not doubt
him.

FACE. She need not doubt him, sir. Alas,
he has nothing

But what he will part withal as willingly, 20
Upon her Grace's word — throw away your purse —

As she would ask it : — handkerchiefs and
all —

She cannot bid that thing but he'll obey. —
If you have a ring about you, cast it off,
Or a silver seal at your wrist ; her Grace will send (He throws away, as they bid him.)

Her fairies here to search you ; therefore deal Directly <sup>71</sup> with her Highness. If they find
That you conceal a mite, you are undone.

DAP. Truly, there's all.

FACE. All what ?

DAP. My money ; truly.

FACE. Keep nothing that is transitory about you. 30

— [aside to SUBTLE] Bid Dol play music. —
Look, the elves are come

DOL enters with a cittern.

To pinch you, if you tell not truth. (They pinch him.) Advise you.

DAP. Oh, I have a paper with a spur-ryal <sup>72</sup> in 't.

FACE. Ti, ti. —

They knew 't, they say.

SUB. Ti, ti, ti, ti ; — he has more yet.

FACE. Ti, ti-ti-ti. I' the tother pocket ?

SUB. Titi, titi, titi, titi. —

They must pinch him or he will never confess, they say. [They pinch him again.]

15s. ; so-called because the sun on it looked like the rowel of a spur.

DAP. Oh, oh!

FACE. Nay, pray you, hold; he is her Grace's nephew —

Ti, ti, ti! — What care you! Good faith, you shall care. — 39

Deal plainly, sir, and shame the fairies. Show You are an innocent.

DAP. By this good light, I ha' nothing.

SUB. Ti ti, ti ti to, ta. — He does equivocate she says.

Ti, ti do ti, ti ti do, ti da, — and swears by the light when he is blinded.

DAP. By this good dark, I ha' nothing but a half-crown

Of gold about my wrist, that my love gave me; And a leaden heart I wore sin' she forsook me.

FACE. I thought 't was something. And would you incur

Your aunt's displeasure for these trifles? Come,

I had rather you had thrown away twenty half-crowns. [Takes it off.]

You may wear your leaden heart still. — [aside] How now! 50

[DOL comes from the window.]

SUB. [aside] What news, Dol?

DOL. [aside] Yonder's your knight, Sir Mammon.

FACE. [aside] God's lid, we never thought of him till now.

Where is he?

DOL. [aside] Here hard by. H' is at the door.

SUB. [aside] And you are not ready, now! Dol, get his suit. [Exit DOL.]

He must not be sent back.

FACE. [aside] O, by no means.

What shall we do with this same puffin here, Now he's o' the spit?

SUB. [aside] Why, lay him back awhile, With some device.

[Re-enter DOL with FACE's clothes.]

— Ti, ti ti, ti ti ti. Would her

Grace speak with me?

I come. — [aside] Help, Dol! 73

FACE. (speaks [aside] through the keyhole, the other knocking) Who's there?

Sir Epicure;

My master's i' the way. Please you to walk Three or four turns, but till his back be turn'd, 61

And I am for you. — [aside] Quickly, Dol!

<sup>73</sup> Help Face out of his uniform and into his servant's clothes.

SUB.

Her Grace

Commends her kindly to you, Master Dapper.

DAP. I long to see her Grace.

SUB.

She now is set

At dinner in her bed, and she has sent you From her own private trencher, a dead mouse, And a piece of gingerbread, to be merry withal, And stay your stomach, lest you faint with fasting.

Yet if you could hold out till she saw you, she says,

It would be better for you.

FACE.

Sir, he shall 70

Hold out, an 't were this two hours, for her Highness;

I can assure you that. We will not lose

All we ha' done. —

SUB.

He must not see, nor speak

To anybody, till then.

FACE.

For that we'll put, sir,

A stay in 'is mouth.

SUB.

Of what?

FACE.

Of gingerbread.

Make you it fit. He that hath pleas'd her Grace

Thus far, shall not now crinkle,<sup>74</sup> for a little — Gape, sir, and let him fit you.

[They thrust a gag of gingerbread into his mouth.]

SUB. [aside]

Where shall we now

Bestow him?

DOL. [aside]

I' the privy. —

SUB.

Come along, sir;

I must now show you Fortune's privy lodgings. 80

FACE. Are they perfum'd, and his bath ready?

SUB.

All;

Only, the fumigation's somewhat strong.

FACE. [speaking through the keyhole] Sir

Epicure, I am yours, sir, by and by.<sup>75</sup>

[Exeunt all but FACE.]

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[To] FACE [enter] MAMMON.

FACE. Oh, sir, yo' are come i' the only finest time —

MAM. Where's master?

FACE. Now preparing for projection, sir. Your stuff will b' all chang'd shortly.

MAM.

Into gold?

<sup>75</sup> At once.

<sup>1</sup> The same.

FACE. To gold and silver, sir.
 MAM. Silver I care not for.
 FACE. Yes, sir, a little to give beggars.
 MAM. Where's the lady?
 FACE. At hand here. I ha' told her such brave things o' you,
 Touching your bounty and your noble spirit —
 MAM. Hast thou?
 FACE. As she is almost in her fit to see you.
 But, good sir, no divinity<sup>2</sup> i' your conference,
 For fear of putting her in rage —
 MAM. I warrant thee. 10
 FACE. Six men will not hold her down.
 And then,
 If the old man should hear or see you —
 MAM. Fear not.
 FACE. The very house, sir, would run mad.
 You know it,
 How scrupulous he is, and violent,
 'Gainst the least act of sin. Physic or mathematics,
 Poetry, state,<sup>3</sup> or bawdry, as I told you,
 She will endure, and never startle; but
 No word of controversy.
 MAM. I am school'd, good Ufen.
 FACE. And you must praise her house, remember that,
 And her nobility.
 MAM. Let me alone : 20
 No herald, no, nor antiquary, Lungs,
 Shall do it better. Go.
 FACE. [aside] Why, this is yet
 A kind of modern happiness,<sup>4</sup> to have Dol Common for a great lady. [Exit.]
 MAM. Now, Epicure,
 Heighten thyself; talk to her all in gold;
 Rain her as many showers as Jove did drops
 Unto his Danaë; show the god a miser, Compar'd with Mammon. What! the stone will do 't.
 She shall feel gold, taste gold, hear gold, sleep
 gold;
 Nay, we will concumbere gold. I will be puissant, 30
 And mighty in my talk to her! —

[Re-enter FACE with DOL richly dressed.]

Here she comes.

FACE. [aside] To him, Dol; suckle him. —
 This is the noble knight
 I told your Ladyship —
 MAM. Madam, with your pardon,
 I kiss your vesture.

<sup>2</sup> Theology.      <sup>3</sup> Politics.
<sup>4</sup> Felicity, appropriateness.

DOL. Sir, I were uncivil
 If I would suffer that; my lip to you, sir.
 MAM. I hope my Lord your brother be in health, lady?
 DOL. My Lord my brother is, though I no lady, sir.
 FACE. [aside] Well said, my Guinea bird.<sup>5</sup>
 MAM. Right noble madam —
 FACE [aside] Oh, we shall have most fierce idolatry!
 MAM. 'T is your prerogative.
 DOL. Rather your courtesies. 40
 MAM. Were there naught else t' enlarge your virtues to me,
 These answers speak your breeding and your
 blood.
 DOL. Blood we boast none, sir; a poor
 baron's daughter.
 MAM. Poor! and gat you? Profane not.
 Had your father
 Slept all the happy remnant of his life
 After that act, lien but there still, and panted,
 H' had done enough to make himself, his issue,
 And his posterity noble.
 DOL. Sir, although
 We may be said to want the gilt and trappings,
 The dress of honor, yet we strive to keep 50
 The seeds and the materials.
 MAM. I do see
 The old ingredient, virtue, was not lost,
 Nor the drug, money, us'd to make your compound.
 There is a strange nobility i' your eye,
 This lip, that chin! Methinks you do resemble
 One o' the Austriack princes.
 FACE. [aside] Very like!
 Her father was an Irish costermonger.
 MAM. The house of Valois just had such a
 nose,
 And such a forehead yet the Medici
 Of Florence boast.
 DOL. Troth, and I have been lik'ned 60
 To all these princes.
 FACE. [aside] I'll be sworn, I heard it.
 MAM. I know not how! it is not any one,
 But e'en the very choice of all their features.
 FACE. [aside] I'll in, and laugh. [Exit.]
 MAM. A certain touch, or air,
 That sparkles a divinity beyond
 An earthly beauty!
 DOL. Oh, you play the courtier.
 MAM. Good lady, gi' me leave —
 DOL. In faith, I may not,
 To mock me, sir.
<sup>5</sup> "Guinea-hen" = prostitute.

MAM. To burn i' this sweet flame ;
The phoenix never knew a nobler death.

DOL. Nay, now you court the courtier, and destroy 70
What you would build. This art, sir, i' your
words,
Calls your whole faith in question.

MAM. By my soul —

DOL. Nay, oaths are made o' the same air,
sir.

MAM. Nature
Never bestow'd upon mortality
A more unblam'd, a more harmonious feature ;
She play'd the stepdame in all faces else :
Sweet madam, le' me be particular —

DOL. Particular,<sup>6</sup> sir ! I pray you, know your distance.

MAM. In no ill sense, sweet lady : but to ask
How your fair graces pass the hours ? I see 80
Yo' are lodg'd here, i' the house of a rare man,
An excellent artist ; but what's that to you ?

DOL. Yes, sir. I study here the mathematics,
And distillation.<sup>7</sup>

MAM. O, I cry your pardon.
H' is a divine instructor ! can extract
The souls of all things by his art ; call all
The virtues, and the miracles of the sun,
Into a temperate furnace ; teach dull nature
What her own forces are. A man, the emp'ror
Has courted above Kelley ;<sup>8</sup> sent his medals
And chains, t' invite him.

DOL. Ay, and for his physic, sir —

MAM. Above the art of Aesculapius, 92
That drew the envy of the thunderer !<sup>9</sup>
I know all this, and more.

DOL. Troth, I am taken, sir,
Whole with these studies that contemplate nature.

MAM. It is a noble humor. But this form
Was not intended to so dark a use !

Had you been crooked, foul, of some coarse mold,

A cloister had done well ; but such a feature,
That might stand up the glory of a kingdom,
To live recluse is a mere solecism, 101

Though in a nunnery ! It must not be.

I muse my Lord your brother will permit it !
You should spend half my land first, were I he.
Does not this diamond better on my finger
Than i' the quarry ?

<sup>7</sup> I.e., astrology and alchemy.

visited at Prague in 1584, was one of his dupes.

<sup>9</sup> Zeus, who killed him with a thunderbolt.

DOL. Yes.

MAM. Why, you are like it.
You were created, lady, for the light !
Here, you shall wear it ; take it, the first pledge

Of what I speak, to bind you to believe me.

DOL. In chains of adamant ?<sup>10</sup>

MAM. Yes, the strongest bands. 110
And take a secret too. — Here, by your side,
Doth stand this hour the happiest man in Europe.

DOL. You are contented, sir ?

MAM. Nay, in true being,
The envy of princes and the fear of states.

DOL. Say you so, Sir Epicure !

MAM. Yes, and thou shalt prove it,
Daughter of honor. I have cast mine eye
Upon thy form, and I will rear this beauty
Above all styles.

DOL. You mean no treason, sir !

MAM. No, I will take away that jealousy.
I am the lord of the philosopher's stone, 120
And thou the lady.

DOL. How, sir ! ha' you that ?

MAM. I am the master of the mast'ry<sup>11</sup>
This day the good old wretch here o' the house
Has made it for us. Now he's at projection.

Think therefore thy first wish now, let me hear
it,

And it shall rain into thy lap, no shower,
But floods of gold, whole cataracts, a deluge,
To get a nation on thee !

DOL. You are pleas'd, sir,
To work on the ambition of our sex.

MAM. I am pleas'd the glory of her sex should know 130

This nook here of the Friars<sup>12</sup> is no climate
For her to live obscurely in, to learn

Physic and surgery, for the constable's wife
Of some odd hundred in Essex ; but come
forth,

And taste the air of palaces ; eat, drink
The toils of emp'rics,<sup>13</sup> and their boasted practice,

Tincture of pearl, and coral, gold, and amber ;
Be seen at feasts and triumphs ; have it ask'd
What miracle she is ; set all the eyes

Of court afire, like a burning glass, 140

And work 'em into cinders, when the jewels
Of twenty states adorn thee, and the light

<sup>10</sup> Punning on diamond, spelled diamant in the old

Strikes out the stars; that, when thy name
is mention'd,
Queens may look pale; and, we but showing
our love,
Nero's Poppaea may be lost in story!
Thus will we have it.

DOL. I could well consent, sir.
But in a monarchy, how will this be?
The prince will soon take notice, and both seize

You and your stone, it being a wealth unfit
For any private subject.

MAM. If he knew it. 150

DOL. Yourself do boast it, sir.

MAM. To thee, my life.

DOL. Oh, but beware, sir! You may come to end

The remnant of your days in a loath'd prison,
By speaking of it.

MAM. 'T is no idle fear!
We'll therefore go with all, my girl, and live
In a free state; where we will eat our mullets Sous'd in high-country wines, sup pheasants'
eggs,

And have our cockles boil'd in silver shells,
Our shrimps to swim again, as when they liv'd,

In a rare butter made of dolphins' milk, 160
Whose cream does look like opals; and with these

Delicate meats set ourselves high for pleasure,

And take us down again, and then renew
Our youth and strength with drinking the elixir,

And so enjoy a perpetuity
Of life and lust. And thou shalt ha' thy wardrobe

Richer than Nature's, still to change thyself,
And vary oft'ner, for thy pride, than she,
Or Art, her wise and almost equal servant.

[Re-enter FACE.]

FACE. Sir, you are too loud. I hear you
every word 170
Into the laboratory. Some fitter place;
The garden, or great chamber above. —
[aside] How like you her?

MAM. Excellent, Lungs! There's for thee.
[Gives him money.]

FACE. [aside] But do you hear?
Good sir, beware, no mention of the rabbins.

MAM. We think not on 'em.

[Exeunt MAMMON and DOL.]

FACE. O, it is well, sir. — Subtle!

SCENE II <sup>14</sup>

[To] FACE [enter] SUBTLE.

FACE. Dost thou not laugh?

SUB. Yes. Are they gone?

FACE. All's clear.

SUB. The widow is come.

FACE. And your quarreling disciple?

SUB. Ay.

FACE. I must to my captainship again
then.

SUB. Stay, bring 'em in first.

FACE. So I meant. What is she?
A bonnibel? <sup>15</sup>

SUB. I know not.

FACE. We'll draw lots.

You'll stand to that?

SUB. What else?

FACE. Oh, for a suit,
To fall now like a curtain, flap! <sup>16</sup>

SUB. To th' door, man.

FACE. You'll ha' the first kiss, 'cause I am not ready. [Exit.]

SUB. Yes, and perhaps hit you through both the nostrils. <sup>17</sup>

FACE. [within] Who would you speak with?

KAS. [within] Where's the captain?

FACE. [within] Gone, sir, 10
About some business.

KAS. [within] Gone!

FACE. [within] He'll return straight.
But, Master Doctor, his lieutenant, is here.

[Enter KASTRIL, and DAME PLIANT.]

SUB. Come near, my worshipful boy, my terrae fili,
That is, my boy of land <sup>18</sup>; make thy approaches.

Welcome; I know thy lusts and thy desires,
And I will serve and satisfy 'em. Begin,
Charge me from thence, or thence, or in this line;

Here is my centre: ground thy quarrel.

KAS. You lie.

SUB. How, child of wrath and anger! the loud lie?

For what, my sudden boy?

KAS. Nay, that look you to, 20
I am aforehand.

SUB. O, this's no true grammar,

<sup>15</sup> Bonne et belle.

<sup>16</sup> And so relieve him of the necessity of leaving Subtle with the lady.

<sup>18</sup> But it also means a person of obscure parentage.

And as ill logic!<sup>19</sup> You must render causes, child,
Your first and second intentions, know your canons
And your divisions, moods, degrees, and differences,
Your prædicaments, substance, and accident,
Series extern and intern, with their causes,
Efficient, material, formal, final,
And ha' your elements perfect —

KAS. What is this!
The angry<sup>20</sup> tongue he talks in?

SUB. That false precept,
Of being aforehand, has deceiv'd a number,
And made 'em enter quarrels oftentimes 31
Before they were aware; and afterward,
Against their wills.

KAS. How must I do then, sir?

SUB. I cry this lady mercy; she should first
Have been saluted. I do call you lady,
Because you are to be one ere 't be long,
My soft and buxom widow. (He kisses her.)

KAS. Is she, i' faith?

SUB. Yes, or my art is an egregious liar.

KAS. How know you?

SUB. By inspection on her forehead,
And subtlety of her lip, which must be tasted Often to make a judgment. (He kisses her again.) 'Slight, she melts 41

Like a myrobalan. Here is yet a line,
In rivo frontis<sup>21</sup> tells me he is no knight.

DAME P. What is he then, sir?

SUB. Let me see your hand.
O, your linea fortunæ makes it plain;
And stella here in monte Veneris,
But, most of all, junctura annularis.<sup>22</sup>
He is a soldier, or a man of art, lady,
But shall have some great honor shortly.

DAME P. Brother,
He's a rare man, believe me!

[Re enter FACE, in his uniform.]

KAS. Hold your peace. 50
Here comes the tother rare man. — 'Save you,
Captain.

FACE. Good Master Kastril. Is this your sister?

KAS. Ay, sir.
Please you to kuss her, and be proud to know
her!

<sup>19</sup> The terms which follow are from the jargon of scholastic philosophy. For the refinements of giving and resenting the lie see such treatises as The Book

Practise (1595).

<sup>22</sup> Stock phrases of palmistry.

FACE. I shall be proud to know you, lady.
[Kisses her.]

DAME P. Brother,

He calls me lady, too.

KAS. Ay, peace. I heard it.
[Takes her aside.]

FACE. The Count is come.

SUB. Where is he?

FACE. At the door.

SUB. Why, you must entertain him.

FACE. What 'll you do

With these the while?

SUB. Why, have 'em up, and show 'em
Some fustian book,<sup>23</sup> or the dark<sup>24</sup> glass.

FACE. 'Fore God,
She is a delicate dabchick! I must have her.

[Exit.]

SUB. Must you? Ay, if your fortune will,
you must. — 61

Come, sir, the Captain will come to us presently.

I'll ha' you to my chamber of demonstrations,
Where I'll show you both the grammar and logic

And rhetoric of quarreling, my whole method
Drawn out in tables, and my instrument,
That hath the several scale upon 't, shall make
you

Able to quarrel at a straw's breadth by moonlight.

And, lady, I'll have you look in a glass, 69
Some half an hour, but to clear your eyesight, Against you see<sup>25</sup> your fortune; which is greater

Than I may judge upon the sudden, trust me.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III <sup>26</sup>

[Enter] FACE.

FACE. Where are you, Doctor?

SUB. [within] I'll come to you presently.

FACE. I will ha' this same widow, now I ha' seen her,
On any composition.<sup>27</sup>

[Enter SUBTLE]

SUB. What do you say?

FACE. Ha' you dispos'd of them?

SUB. I ha' sent 'em up.

FACE. Subtle, in troth, I needs must have this widow.

SUB. Is that the matter?

<sup>27</sup> Terms.

FACE. Nay, but hear me.
SUB. Go to.
If you rebel once, Dol shall know it all ;
Therefore be quiet, and obey your chance.

FACE. Nay, thou art so violent now — Do but conceive,
Thou art old, and canst not serve —

SUB. Who cannot? I? 10
'Slight, I will serve her with thee, for a —

FACE. Nay,
But understand ; I'll gi' you composition.

SUB. I will not treat with thee. What, sell my fortune?

'T is better than my birthright. Do not murmur.

Win her, and carry her. If you grumble, Dol
Knows it directly.

FACE. Well, sir, I am silent.
Will you go help to fetch in Don in state?

[Exit.]
SUB. I follow you, sir. — We must keep Face in awe,
Or he will overlook us like a tyrant[t]. —

[Re-enter FACE, with] SURLY like a Spaniard.

Brain of a tailor! who comes here? Don
John! <sup>28</sup>

SUR. Señores, beso las manos à vuestras mercedes. <sup>29</sup>

SUB. Would you had stoop'd a little, and kiss'd our anos.

FACE. Peace, Subtle!

SUB. Stab me ; I shall never hold, man.
He looks in that deep ruff like a head in a plat-
ter,

Serv'd in by a short cloak upon two trestles! <sup>30</sup>

FACE. Or what do you say to a collar of brawn, <sup>31</sup> cut down

Beneath the souse, <sup>32</sup> and wriggled <sup>33</sup> with a knife?

SUB. 'Slud, he does look too fat to be a Spaniard.

FACE. Perhaps some Fleming or some Hollander got him

In d'Alva's <sup>34</sup> time ; Count Egmont's <sup>35</sup> bastard.

SUB. Don, 30
Your scurvy, yellow, Madrid face is welcome.

<sup>28</sup> Don John of Austria, the famous Spaniard who commanded at Lepanto.

<sup>29</sup> Gentlemen, I kiss hands to your Honors.

Countries 1567-73.

<sup>35</sup> Egmont (d. 1568) was a famous Flemish patriot.

SUR. Gratia.

SUB. He speaks out of a fortification.

'Pray God he ha' no squibs in those deep sets. <sup>36</sup>

SUR. Por dios, señores, muy linda casa! <sup>37</sup>

SUB. What says he?

FACE. Praises the house, I think ;
I know no more but's action.

SUB. Yes, the casa,
My precious Diego, will prove fair enough
To cozen you in. Do you mark? You shall Be cozened, Diego. <sup>38</sup>

FACE. Cozened, do you see,
My worthy Donzel, <sup>39</sup> cozened.

SUR. Entiendo. <sup>40</sup> 40

SUB. Do you intend it? So do we, dear
Don.

Have you brought pistolets or portagues,
My solemn Don? — [To FACE] Dost thou feel any?

FACE. (feels his pockets.) Full.

SUB. You shall be emptied, Don, pumped and drawn

Dry, as they say.

FACE. Milked, in troth, sweet Don.

SUB. See all the monsters ; the great lion of all, <sup>41</sup> Don.

SUR. Con licencia, se puede ver à esta señora? <sup>42</sup>

SUB. What talks he now?

FACE. O' the señora.

SUB. Oh, Don,
This is the lioness, which you shall see
Also, my Don.

FACE. 'Slid, Subtle, how shall we do? 50

SUB. For what?

FACE. Why, Dol's employ'd, you know.

SUB. That's true!

'Fore Heav'n I know not ; he must stay, that's
all.

FACE. Stay! that he must not, by no means.

SUB. No? why?

FACE. Unless you'll mar all. 'Slight, he'll suspect it ;

And then he will not pay, not half so well.

This is a travell'd punk-master, and does know
All the delays ; a notable hot rascal,
And looks already rampant.

SUB. 'Sdeath! and Mammon
Must not be troubled.

<sup>36</sup> The plaits of his huge ruff.

<sup>41</sup> If you please, may I see the lady?

FACE. Mammon! in no case!

SUB. What shall we do then?

FACE. Think: you must be sudden. 60

SUR. Entiendo que la señora es tan hermosa, que codicio tan à verla como la bien aventurança de mi vida.<sup>43</sup>

FACE. Mi vida! 'Slid, Subtle, he puts me in mind o' the widow.

What dost thou say to draw her to 't, ha?

And tell her it is her fortune? All our venture

Now lies upon it. It is but one man more,

Which on 's<sup>44</sup> chance to have her; and beside,

There is no maidenhead to be fear'd or lost.

What dost thou think on 't, Subtle?

SUB. Who, I? why — 70

FACE. The credit of our house too is engag'd.

SUB. You made me an offer for my share erewhile.

What wilt thou gi' me, i' faith?

FACE. Oh, by that light,

I'll not buy now. You know your doom<sup>45</sup> to me.

E'en take your lot, obey your chance, sir; win her,

And wear her — out, for me.<sup>46</sup>

SUB. 'Slight, I'll not work her then.

FACE. It is the common cause; therefore bethink you.

Dol else must know it, as you said.

SUB. I care not.

SUR. Señores, porque se tarda tant[o]?<sup>47</sup>

SUB. Faith, I am not fit; I am old.

FACE. That's now no reason, sir.

SUR. Puede ser de hazer burla de mi amor?<sup>48</sup> 81

FACE. You hear the don too? By this air I call,

And loose the hinges. Dol!

SUB. A plague of hell —

FACE. Will you then do?

SUB. Yo' are a terrible rogue;

I'll think of this. Will you, sir, call the widow?

FACE. Yes, and I'll take her too with all her faults,

Now I do think on 't better.

SUB. With all my heart, sir;

Am I discharg'd o' the lot?

<sup>43</sup> I understand that the lady is so handsome that I long to see her as the most fortunate event of my life.

<sup>48</sup> Is it possible you make sport of my love?

FACE. As you please.

SUB. Hands. [They shake hands.]

FACE. Remember now, that upon any change 89

You never claim her.

SUB. Much good joy and health to you, sir.

Marry a whore! Fate, let me wed a witch first.

SUR. Por estas honradas barbas<sup>49</sup> —

SUB. He swears by his beard.

Dispatch, and call the brother, too.

[Exit FACE.]

SUR. [Tengo duda,]<sup>50</sup> señores, que no me hagan alguna traycion.<sup>51</sup>

SUB. How, issue on? Yes, praesto, señor. Please you

Enthratha the chambratha, worthy don;

Where if it please the fates, in your bathada,

You shall be soak'd, and strok'd, and tubb'd, and rubb'd,

And scrubb'd, and fubb'd,<sup>52</sup> dear don, before you go. 100

You shall in faith, my scurvy baboon don, Be curried, claw'd, and flaw'd,<sup>53</sup> and taw'd,<sup>54</sup> indeed.

I will the heartilier go about it now, And make the widow a punk so much the sooner, To be reveng'd on this impetuous Face:

The quickly doing of it is the grace.

[Exeunt SUBTLE and SURLY.]

SCENE IV<sup>55</sup>

[Enter] FACE, KASTRIL, [and] DAME PLIANT.

FACE. Come, lady. — I knew the Doctor would not leave

Till he had found the very nick of her fortune.

KAS. To be a countess, say you?

[FACE.]<sup>56</sup> A Spanish countess, sir.

DAME P. Why, is that better than an English countess?

FACE. Better! 'Slight, make you that a question, lady?

KAS. Nay, she is a fool, Captain; you must pardon her.

FACE. Ask from your courtier to your inns-of-court man,

To your mere milliner; they will tell you all,

<sup>49</sup> By this honored beard.

<sup>51</sup> I fear, gentlemen, that you play me some trick. (In this scene Jonson seems to have had the Pænulus of Plautus in view. — Gifford.)

<sup>55</sup> The same. <sup>56</sup> So Q; Ff omit.

Your Spanish jennet is the best horse ; your Spanish 9
 Stoop is the best garb ; <sup>57</sup> your Spanish beard
 Is the best cut ; your Spanish ruffs are the best
 Wear ; your Spanish pavin the best dance ;
 Your Spanish titillation in a glove
 The best perfume. And for your Spanish pike,
 And Spanish blade, let your poor Captain
 speak. —
 Here comes the Doctor.

[Enter SUBTLE with a paper.]

SUB. My most honor'd lady,
 For so I am now to style you, having found
 By this my scheme, <sup>58</sup> you are to undergo An honorable fortune very shortly, 19
 What will you say now, if some —

FACE. I ha' told her all, sir,
 And her right worshipful brother here, that she shall be
 A countess ; do not delay 'em, sir ; a Spanish countess.

SUB. Still, my scarce-worshipful Captain, you can keep
 No secret ! Well, since he has told you,
 madam,
 Do you forgive him, and I do.

KAS. She shall do that, sir ;
 I'll look to 't ; 't is my charge.

SUB. Well then. Naught rests
 But that she fit her love now to her fortune.

DAME P. Truly I shall never brook a Spaniard.

SUB. No ?

DAME P. Never sin' eighty-eight <sup>59</sup> could I abide 'em,
 And that was some three year afore I was born, in truth. 30

SUB. Come, you must love him, or be miserable ;
 Choose which you will.

FACE. By this good rush, <sup>60</sup> persuade her ;
 She will cry <sup>61</sup> strawberries else within this twelvemonth.

SUB. Nay, shads and mack'rel, which is worse.

FACE. Indeed, sir !

KAS. God's lid, you shall love him, or I'll kick you.

DAME P. Why,
 I'll do as you will ha' me, Brother.

<sup>60</sup> Floors (and the stage) were strewn with rushes.

<sup>61</sup> As a hawk.

KAS. Do,
 Or, by this hand, I'll maul you.
 FACE. Nay, good sir,
 Be not so fierce.

SUB. No, my enraged child ;
 She will be rul'd. What, when she comes to taste 39

The pleasures of a countess ! to be courted —
 FACE. And kiss'd and ruffled !

SUB. Ay, behind the hangings.

FACE. And then come forth in pomp !

SUB. And know her state !

FACE. Of keeping all th' idolaters o' the chamber

Barer to her than at their prayers !

SUB. Is serv'd
 Upon the knee !

FACE. And has her pages, [ushers], <sup>62</sup>
 Footmen, and coaches —

SUB. Her six mares —

FACE. Nay, eight !

SUB. To hurry her through London, to th'
 Exchange, <sup>63</sup>

FACE. Yes, and have
 The citizens gape at her, and praise her tires,
 And my Lord's goose-turd <sup>66</sup> bands, <sup>67</sup> that rides with her ! 50

KAS. Most brave ! By this hand, you are not my suster

If you refuse.

DAME P. I will not refuse, Brother.

[Enter SURLY.]

SUR. *Que es esto, señores, que non se venga ?
 Esta tardanza me mata !* <sup>68</sup>

FACE. It is the count come !
 The Doctor knew he would be here, by his art.

SUB. En gallanta, madama, Don ! gallantis-sima !

SUR. *Por todos los dioses, la mas acabada
 Hermosura, que he visto en mi vida !* <sup>69</sup>

FACE. Is 't not a gallant language that they speak ?

KAS. An admirable language ! Is't not French ? 60

FACE. No, Spanish, sir.

<sup>62</sup> So F<sub>2</sub> ; Q, F<sub>1</sub>, huishers.

 house, was an Elizabethan amusement.

<sup>68</sup> Why doesn't she come, gentlemen ? This delay is killing me.

<sup>69</sup> By all the gods, the most perfect beauty I have seen in all my life.

KAS. It goes like law French,
And that, they say, is the courtliest <sup>70</sup> language.

FACE. List, sir.

SUR. El sol ha perdido su lumbre, con el Resplandor que trae esta dama! Valgame dios! <sup>71</sup>

FACE. He admires your sister.

KAS. Must not she make curt'sy?

SUB. 'Ods will, she must go to him, man,
and kiss him!

It is the Spanish fashion, for the women
To make first court.

FACE. 'T is true he tells you, sir :
His art knows all.

SUR. Porque no se acude? <sup>72</sup>

KAS. He speaks to her, I think?

FACE. That he does, sir. <sup>70</sup>

SUR. Por el amor de dios, que es esto que se tarda? <sup>73</sup>

KAS. Nay, see; she will not understand him! Gull! Noddy!

DAME P. What say you, Brother?

KAS. Ass, my suster!
Go kuss him, as the cunning man would ha'
you;

I'll thrust a pin i' your buttocks else.

FACE. Oh, no, sir.

SUR. Señora mia, mi persona muy indigna est[à]

A llegar à tanta hermosa. <sup>74</sup>

FACE. Does he not use her bravely?

KAS. Bravely, i' faith!

FACE. Nay, he will use her better.

KAS. Do you think so?

SUR. Señora, si sera servida, entrem[os]. <sup>75</sup> 80
[Exit with DAME PLIANT.]

KAS. Where does he carry her?

FACE. Into the garden, sir;
Take you no thought; I must interpret for
her.

SUB. [aside to FACE, who goes out] Give Dol
the word.

— Come, my fierce child, advance;
We'll to our quarreling lesson again.

KAS. Agreed.
I love a Spanish boy with all my heart.

SUB. And by this means, sir, you shall be brother
To a great count.

<sup>70</sup> Since it was used in court.

<sup>71</sup> The sun has lost his light with the splendor
this lady brings, so help me God.

<sup>72</sup> Why don't you approach?

<sup>73</sup> For the love of God, why this delay?

<sup>74</sup> My Lady, my person is very unworthy of approaching such beauty.

<sup>75</sup> Madam, if you please, let's go in.

KAS. Ay, I knew that at first.
This match will advance the house of the Kas-trils.

SUB. 'Pray God your sister prove but pliant.

KAS. Why,

Her name is so, by her other husband.

SUB. How! 90

KAS. The Widow Pliant. Knew you not
that?

SUB. No, faith, sir;

Yet, by the erection of her figure, <sup>76</sup> I guess'd
it.

Come, let's go practise.

KAS. Yes, but do you think, Doctor,
I e'er shall quarrel well?

SUB. I warrant you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V <sup>77</sup>

[Enter] DOL [and] MAMMON.

DOL. <sup>78</sup> (in her fit of talking) For after Alexander's death —

MAM. Good lady —

DOL. That Perdiccas and Antigonus were
slain;

The two that stood, Seleuc' and Ptolemy —

MAM. Madam.

DOL. Made up the two legs, and the fourth
beast,

That was Gog-north and Egypt-south: which after

Was called Gog-iron-leg and South-iron-leg —

MAM. Lady —

DOL. And then Gog-horned. So was Egypt, too:

Then Egypt-clay-leg, and Gog-clay-leg —

MAM. Sweet madam —

DOL. And last Gog-dust, and Egypt-dust, which fall 9

In the last link of the fourth chain. And these Be stars in story, which none see, or look at —

MAM. What shall I do?

DOL. For, as he <sup>79</sup> says, except
We call the rabbins, and the heathen Greeks —

MAM. Dear lady —

DOL. To come from Salem, <sup>80</sup> and from Athens,

And teach the people of Great Britain —

<sup>74</sup> Calculation of her horoscope, with a pun on another meaning of the phrase: her bearing.

<sup>78</sup> Doll's ravings are chiefly unrelated phrases from Hugh Broughton's Concent of Scripture.

[Enter FACE, in his servant's dress.]

FACE. What's the matter, sir?

DOL. To speak the tongue of Eber and Javan<sup>81</sup> —

MAM. Oh,
Sh' is in her fit.

DOL. We shall know nothing —

FACE. Death, sir,
We are undone.

DOL. Where then a learned linguist
Shall see the ancient us'd communion
Of vowels and consonants —

FACE. My master will hear! 20

DOL. A wisdom, which Pythagoras held most high —

MAM. Sweet honorable lady.

DOL. To comprise
All sounds of voices, in few marks of letters —

FACE. Nay, you must never hope to lay her
now. They speak together.

<sup>82</sup>DOL. And so we may arrive by Talmud
skill,

And profane Greek, to raise the building up
Of Helen's house against the Ismaelite,
King of Thogarma, and his habergions
Brimstony, blue, and fiery; and the force
Of King Abaddon, and the beast of Cittim<sup>83</sup>:
Which Rabbi David Kimchi, Onkelos, 31
And Aben Ezra do interpret Rome.

FACE. How did you put her into 't?

MAM. Alas, I talk'd
Of a fifth monarchy I would erect
With the philosopher's stone, by chance, and
she

Falls on the other four straight.

FACE. Out of Broughton!
I told you so. 'Slid, stop her mouth.

MAM. Is't best?

FACE. She'll never leave else. If the old man hear her,

We are but faeces, ashes.

SUB. [within] What's to do there?

FACE. Oh, we are lost! Now she hears him, she is quiet. 40

Upon SUBTLE's entry they disperse.

MAM. Where shall I hide me?

SUB. How! What sight is here?
Close deeds of darkness, and that shun the
light!

Bring him again. Who is he? What, my son!
Oh, I have liv'd too long.

MAM. Nay, good, dear father,
There was no unchaste purpose.

SUB. Not? and flee me
When I come in?

MAM. That was my error.

SUB. Error?
Guilt, guilt, my son; give it the right name.

No marvel

If I found check in our great work within,
When such affairs as these were managing! 49

MAM. Why, have you so?

SUB. It has stood still this half hour:
And all the rest of our less works gone back.
Where is the instrument of wickedness,
My lewd, false drudge?

MAM. Nay, good sir, blame not him;
Believe me, 't was against his will or knowledge.

I saw her by chance.

SUB. Will you commit more sin,
T' excuse a varlet?

MAM. By my hope, 't is true, sir.

SUB. Nay, then I wonder less, if you, for whom
The blessing was prepar'd, would so tempt
Heaven,
And lose your fortunes.

MAM. Why, sir?

SUB. This will retard
The work a month at least.

MAM. Why, if it do, 60
What remedy? But think it not, good
father;

Our purposes were honest.<sup>84</sup>

SUB. As they were,
So the reward will prove. (A great crack and noise within.) — How now! ay me!
God and all saints be good to us. —

[Re-enter FACE.]

What's that?

FACE. Oh, sir, we are defeated! All the works

Are flown in fumo, every glass is burst;
Furnace and all rent down! as if a bolt
Of thunder had been driven through the house.
Retorts, receivers, pelicans, bolt-heads, 69
All struck in shivers!

SUBTLE falls down as in a swoon

Help, good sir! Alas,
Coldness and death invades him. Nay, Sir
Mammon,

<sup>84</sup> Chaste.

Do the fair offices of a man ! You stand
As you were readier to depart than he.

One knocks.

Who's there? My Lord her brother is come.

MAM. Ha, Lungs !

FACE. His coach is at the door. Avoid his
sight,

For he's as furious as his sister is mad.

MAM. Alas !

FACE. My brain is quite undone with the fume, sir ;

I ne'er must hope to be mine own man again.

MAM. Is all lost, Lungs? Will nothing be preserv'd

Of all our cost?

FACE. Faith, very little, sir ; 80
A peck of coals or so, which is cold comfort,
sir.

MAM. Oh, my voluptuous mind ! I am justly punish'd.

FACE. And so am I, sir.

MAM. Cast from all my hopes —

FACE. Nay, certainties, sir.

MAM. By mine own base affections.

SUB. (seems to come to himself.) Oh, the curs'd fruits of vice and lust !

MAM. Good father,

It was my sin. Forgive it.

SUB. Hangs my roof
Over us still, and will not fall, O Justice,
Upon us, for this wicked man !

FACE. Nay, look, sir,
You grieve him now with staying in his
sight.

Good sir, the nobleman will come too, and take you, 90

And that may breed a tragedy.

MAM. I'll go.

FACE. Ay, and repent at home, sir. It may be,

For some good penance you may ha' it yet ;
A hundred pound to the box at Bet'lem —

MAM. Yes.

FACE. For the restoring such as ha' their wits.

MAM. I'll do 't.

FACE. I'll send one to you to receive it.

MAM. Do.

Is no projection left?

FACE. All flown, or stinks, sir.

MAM. Will nought be sav'd that's good for med'cine, think'st thou?

FACE. I cannot tell, sir. There will be perhaps

Something about the scraping of the shards,

Will cure the itch ; though not your itch of mind, sir. 101

It shall be sav'd for you, and sent home.

Good sir,

This way, for fear the lord shall meet you.

[Exit MAMMON.]

Face.

SUB.

FACE. Ay.

SUB. Is he gone?

FACE. Yes, and as heavily

As all the gold he hop'd for were in his blood.
Let us be light though.

SUB. Ay, as balls, and bound
And hit our heads against the roof for joy.

There's so much of our care now cast away.

FACE. Now to our don.

SUB. Yes, your young widow by this time
Is made a countess, Face. Sh' has been in travail 110

Of a young heir for you.

FACE. Good, sir.

SUB. Off with your case,
And greet her kindly, as a bridegroom should,
After these common hazards.

FACE. Very well, sir.

Will you go fetch Don Diego off the while?

SUB. And fetch him over too, if you'll be pleas'd, sir.

Would Dol were in her place, to pick his pockets now !

FACE. Why, you can do it as well, if you would set to 't.

I pray you prove your virtue.<sup>85</sup>

SUB. For your sake, sir. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI <sup>86</sup>

[Enter] SURLY [and] DAME PLIANT.

SUR. Lady, you see into what hands you are fall'n ;

'Mongst what a nest of villains ! and how near
Your honor was t' have catch'd a certain clap,
Through your credulity, had I but been
So punctually forward, as place, time,
And other circumstance would ha' made a
man.

For yo' are a handsome woman ; would yo'
were wise, too !

I am a gentleman come here disguis'd
Only to find the knaveries of this citadel ;
And where I might have wrong'd your honor,
and have not, 10

I claim some interest in your love. You are
They say, a widow, rich ; and I'm a bachelor.

<sup>85</sup> Powers.

Worth naught. Your fortunes may make me
a man,
As mine ha' preserv'd you a woman. Think
upon it,
And whether I have deserv'd you or no.

DAME P. I will, sir.

SUR. And for these household rogues, let me alone
To treat with them.

[Enter SUBTLE.]

SUB. How doth my noble Diego,
And my dear madam Countess? Hath the Count

Been courteous, lady? liberal and open?
Donzell, methinks you look melancholic, 20
After your coitum, and scurvy! Truly,
I do not like the dulness of your eye;
It hath a heavy cast, 't is upsy<sup>87</sup> Dutch,
And says you are a lumpish whoremaster.
Be lighter: I will make your pockets so.

He falls to picking of them.

SUR. Will you, Don Bawd and Pick-purse?
[Knocks him down.] How now! Reel
you?

Stand up, sir; you shall find, since I am so heavy,
I'll gi' you equal weight.

SUB. Help! murder.

SUR. No, sir,
There's no such thing intended. A good cart
And a clean whip shall ease you of that fear.
I am the Spanish don that should be cozened,
Do you see? cozened? Where's your Captain Face, 31
That parcel broker, and whole bawd, all rascal?

[Enter FACE in his uniform.]

FACE. How, Surly!

SUR. Oh, make your approach,
good Captain.
I have found from whence your copper rings and spoons
Come now, wherewith you cheat abroad in taverns.
'T was here you learn'd t' anoint your boot with brimstone,
Then rub men's gold on 't for a kind of touch,
And say 't was naught, when you had chang'd
the color,
That you might ha' 't for nothing! And this doctor,
Your sooty, smoky bearded compere, he 40

<sup>87</sup> Thoroughly. Old eds. upsee.

Will close you so much gold, in a belt's-head,
And, on a turn, convey, i' the stead, another
With sublim'd mercury, that shall burst i' the heat,

And fly out all in fumo! Then weeps Mammon;

Then swoons his Worship. Or, [Exit FACE.]
he is the Faustus,

That casteth figures and can conjure, cures
Plagues, piles, and pox, by the ephemerides;<sup>88</sup>
And holds intelligence with all the bawds
And midwives of three shires: while you send
in —

Captain! — What, is he gone? — damsels with child, 50

Wives that are barren, or the waiting maid
With the greensickness.<sup>89</sup> — [Seizes SUBTLE.]

Nay, sir, you must tarry,
Though he be scap'd; and answer by the ears,
sir.

SCENE VII<sup>90</sup>

[To them re-enter] FACE [with] KASTRIL.

FACE. Why, now's the time, if ever you will quarrel

Well, as they say, and be a true-born child.
The Doctor and your sister both are abus'd.

KAS. Where is he? Which is he? He is a slave.

Whate'er he is, and the son of a whore. — Are
you

The man, sir, I would know?

SUR. I should be loth, sir,

To confess so much.

KAS. Then you lie i' your throat.

SUR. How?

FACE. [to KASTRIL] A very errant rogue, sir,
and a cheater,

Employ'd here by another conjurer

That does not love the doctor, and would cross
him 10

If he knew how —

SUR. Sir, you are abus'd.

KAS. You lie;

And 't is no matter.

FACE. Well said, sir! He is

The impudent rascal —

SUR. You are indeed. — Will you hear me, sir?

FACE. By no means. Bid him be gone.

KAS. Begone, sir, quickly.

SUR. This 's strange! — Lady, do you inform your brother.

FACE. There is not such a foist <sup>91</sup> in all the town.

The Doctor had him presently ; and finds yet
The Spanish count will come here. — [aside]
Bear up, Subtle.

SUB. Yes, sir, he must appear within this hour.

FACE. And yet this rogue would come in a disguise, 20

By the temptation of another spirit, <sup>92</sup>
To trouble our art, though he could not hurt it !

KAS. Ay,
I know — [to his sister] Away, you talk like a foolish mauther. <sup>93</sup>

SUR. Sir, all is truth she says.

FACE. Do not believe him, sir.
He is the lying'st swabber ! Come your ways, sir.

SUR. You are valiant, out of company.

KAS. Yes, how then, sir ?

[Enter DRUGGER with a piece of damask.]

FACE. Nay, here's an honest fellow too that knows him,
And all his tricks. — [aside to DRUGGER] Make good what I say, Abel.

This cheater would ha' cozen'd thee o' the widow. —

He owes this honest Drugger, here, seven pound, 30

He has had on him in twopenny'orths of tobacco.

DRUG. Yes, sir. And h' has damn'd himself three terms to pay me.

FACE. And what does he owe for lotium ? <sup>94</sup>

DRUG. Thirty shillings, sir ;
And for six syringes.

SUR. Hydra of villainy !

FACE. Nay, sir, you must quarrel him out o' the house.

KAS. I will.

— Sir, if you get not out o' doors, you lie ;
And you are a pimp.

SUR. Why, this is madness, sir,
Not valor in you ; I must laugh at this.

KAS. It is my humor ; you are a pimp and a trig. <sup>95</sup>

And an Amadis de Gaul, or a Don Quixote. 40

DRUG. Or a knight o' the curious coxcomb, do you see ?

<sup>95</sup> Dandy, cockscomb.

[Enter ANANIAS.]

ANA. Peace to the household.

KAS. I'll keep peace for no man.

ANA. Casting of dollars is concluded lawful.

KAS. Is he the constable ?

SUB. Peace, Ananias.

FACE. No, sir.

KAS. Then you are an otter, and a shad, a whit, <sup>96</sup>

A very tim.

SUR. You'll hear me, sir ?

KAS. I will not.

ANA. What is the motive ?

SUB. Zeal in the young gentleman,
Against his Spanish slops.

ANA. They are profane,
Lewd, superstitious, and idolatrous breeches.

SUR. New rascals !

KAS. Will you be gone, sir ?

ANA. Avoid, Sathan ; 50
Thou art not of the light. That ruff of pride
About thy neck betrays thee ; and is the same
With that which the unclean birds, in seventy-seven, <sup>97</sup>

Were seen to prank it with on divers coasts.
Thou look'st like Antichrist, in that lewd hat.

SUR. I must give way.

KAS. Begone, sir.

SUR. But I'll take

A course with you. —

ANA. Depart, proud Spanish fiend.

SUR. Captain and Doctor —

ANA. Child of perdition.

KAS. Hence, sir ! [Exit SURLY.]
— Did I not quarrel bravely ?

FACE. Yes, indeed, sir.

KAS. Nay, an I give my mind to 't, I shall do 't. 60

FACE. O, you must follow, sir, and threaten him tame.

He'll turn again else.

KAS. I'll re-turn him then. [Exit.]

FACE. Drugger, this rogue prevented us, for thee ;

We had determin'd that thou should'st ha' come

In a Spanish suit, and ha' carried her so ; and he,

A brokerly slave, goes, puts it on himself.

<sup>97</sup> This allusion remains unexplained ; perhaps there was a migration of birds, notable for ruffled necks, which came in such numbers that they constituted a foul nuisance.

Hast brought the damask?

DRUG. Yes, sir.

FACE. Thou must borrow
A Spanish suit. Hast thou no credit with the players?

DRUG. Yes, sir; did you never see me play the Fool? <sup>98</sup>

FACE. I know not, Nab; [aside] thou shalt, if I can help it. — 70
Hieronimo's old cloak, ruff, and hat will serve;
I'll tell thee more when thou bring'st 'em.

[Exit DRUGGER.] SUBTLE hath whisper'd with [ANANIAS] this while.

ANA. Sir, I know
The Spaniard hates the brethren, and hath spies

Upon their actions; and that this was one
I make no scruple. — But the holy synod
Have been in prayer and meditation for it;
And 't is reveal'd no less to them than me,
That casting of money is most lawful.

SUB. True.
But here I cannot do it; if the house
Should chance to be suspected, all would out,
And we be lock'd up in the Tower for ever, 81
To make gold there for th' state, never come
out;

And then are you defeated.

ANA. I will tell
This to the elders and the weaker brethren,
That the whole company of the separation
May join in humble prayer again.

SUB. And fasting.

ANA. Yea, for some fitter place. The peace of mind

Rest with these walls! [Exit.]

SUB. Thanks, courteous Ananias.

FACE. What did he come for?

SUB. About casting dollars,
Presently, out of hand. And so I told him 90
A Spanish minister came here to spy,
Against the faithful —

FACE. I conceive. Come, Subtle,
Thou art so down upon the least disaster!
How wouldst thou ha' done, if I had not help'd thee out?

SUB. I thank thee, Face, for the angry boy,
i' faith.

FACE. Who would ha' look'd it should ha' been that rascal

Surly? He had dy'd his beard and all. Well,
sir;

Here 's damask come to make you a suit.

SUB. Where's Druggier?

FACE. He is gone to borrow me a Spanish habit;

I'll be the count now.

SUB. But where's the widow?

FACE. Within, with my Lord's sister;
Madam Dol 101

Is entertaining her.

SUB. By your favor, Face,

Now she is honest, I will stand again.

FACE. You will not offer it?

SUB. Why?

FACE. Stand to your word,

Or — here comes Dol. She knows —

SUB. You are tyrannous still.

[Enter DOL.]

FACE. Strict for my right. — How now,
Dol! Hast told her

The Spanish count will come?

DOL. Yes; but another is come,
You little look'd for!

FACE. Who's that?

DOL. Your master —

The master of the house.

SUB. How, Dol!

FACE. She lies;
This is some trick. Come, leave your quib-bles, <sup>99</sup> Dorothy. 110

DOL. Look out and see.

[FACE goes to the window.]

SUB. Art thou in earnest?

DOL. 'Slight,

Forty o' the neighbors are about him, talking.

FACE. 'T is he, by this good day.

DOL. 'T will prove ill day

For some on us.

FACE. We are undone, and taken.

DOL. Lost, I'm afraid.

SUB. You said he would not come,
While there died one a week within the liberties. <sup>100</sup>

FACE. No; 't was within the walls.

SUB. Was't so? Cry you mercy.

I thought the liberties. What shall we do now, Face?

FACE. Be silent: not a word, if he call or
knock. 119

I'll into mine old shape again and meet him,
Of Jeremy, the butler. 'I' the meantime,
Do you two pack up all the goods and purchase <sup>101</sup>

That we can carry i' the two trunks. I'll keep him

Off for to-day, if I cannot longer; and then At night, I'll ship you both away to Ratcliff,<sup>102</sup> Where we'll meet to-morrow, and there we'll share.

Let Mammon's brass and pewter keep the cellar;

We'll have another time for that. But, Dol, Prithee go heat a little water quickly; Subtle must shave me. All my captain's beard 130

Must off, to make me appear smooth Jeremy. You'll do 't?

SUB. Yes, I'll shave you as well as I can. FACE. And not cut my throat, but trim me?

SUB. You shall see, sir. [Exeunt.]

ACT V — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] LOVEWIT [and] Neighbors.

LOVE. Has there been such resort, say you?

1 NEI. Daily, sir.

2 NEI. And nightly, too.

3 NEI. Ay, some as brave as lords.

4 NEI. Ladies and gentlewomen.

5 NEI. Citizens' wives.

1 NEI. And knights.

6 NEI. In coaches.

2 NEI. Yes, and oyster-women.

1 NEI. Beside other gallants.

3 NEI. Sailors' wives.

4 NEI. Tobacco men.

5 NEI. Another Pimlico.<sup>2</sup>

LOVE. What should my knave advance, To draw this company? He hung out no banners

Of a strange calf with five legs to be seen,

Or a huge lobster with six claws?

6 NEI. No, sir.

3 NEI. We had gone in then, sir.

LOVE. He has no gift 10

Of teaching i' the nose<sup>3</sup> that e'er I knew of!

You saw no bills set up that promis'd cure

Of agues or the toothache?

2 NEI. No such thing, sir!

LOVE. Nor heard a drum struck for baboons or puppets?

5 NEI. Neither, sir.

LOVE. What device should he bring forth now?

I love a teeming wit as I love my nourishment. 'Pray God he ha' not kept such open house That he hath sold my hangings, and my bedding —

I left him nothing else. If he have eat 'em, A plague o' the moth, say I. Sure he has got 20

Some bawdy pictures to call all this ging:<sup>4</sup>

The Friar and the Nun; or the new motion<sup>5</sup>

Of the knight's courser covering the parson's mare;

The boy of six year old, with the great thing; Or 't may be, he has the fleas that run at tilt Upon a table, or some dog to dance!

When saw you him?

1 NEI. Who, sir, Jeremy?

2 NEI. Jeremy butler?

We saw him not this month.

LOVE. How!

[3] NEI. Not these five weeks, sir.

[4] NEI. These six weeks, at the least.

LOVE. Yo' amaze me, neighbors!

5 NEI. Sure, if your Worship know not where he is, 30

He's slipp'd away.

6 NEI. Pray God he be not made away!

LOVE. Ha? It's no time to question, then. He knocks.

6 NEI. About

Some three weeks since I heard a doleful cry, As I sat up a-mending my wife's stockings.

LOVE. This 's strange that none will answer! Didst thou hear

A cry, say'st thou?

6 NEI. Yes, sir, like unto a man

That had been strangled an hour, and could not speak.

2 NEI. I heard it, too, just this day three weeks, at two a'clock

Next morning.

LOVE. These be miracles, or you make 'em so!

A man an hour strangled, and could not speak, And both you heard him cry?

3 NEI. Yes, downward, sir. 41

LOVE. Thou art a wise fellow. Give me thy hand, I pray thee.

What trade art thou on?

3 NEI. A smith, an't please your Worship.

LOVE. A smith! Then lend me thy help to get this door open.

3 NEI. That I will presently, sir ; but fetch my tools — [Exit.]

1 NEI. Sir, best to knock again afore you break it.

SCENE II *

LOVEWIT [and] Neighbors [remain.]

LOVE. I will.

[Enter FACE in his butler's livery.]

FACE. What mean you, sir?

1, 2, 4 NEI. Oh, here's Jeremy!

FACE. Good sir, come from the door.

LOVE. Why, what's the matter?

FACE. Yet farther, you are too near yet.

LOVE. I the name of wonder!

What means the fellow?

FACE. The house, sir, has been visited.

LOVE. What, with the plague? Stand thou then farther.

FACE. No, sir,

I had it not.

LOVE. Who had it then? I left

None else but thee 'i the house!

FACE. Yes, sir; my fellow,

The cat that kept the butt'ry, had it on her

A week before I spied it; but I got her

Convey'd away i' the night. And so I shut 10

The house up for a month —

LOVE. How!

FACE. Purposing then, sir,

T' have burnt rose-vinegar, treacle, and tar,

And ha' made it sweet, that you should ne'er ha' known it;

Because I knew the news would but afflict you, sir.

LOVE. Breathe less, and farther off. Why this is stranger!

The neighbors tell me all here that the doors Have still been open —

FACE. How, sir!

LOVE. Gallants, men and women,

And of all sorts, tag-rag, been seen to flock here

In threaves,<sup>7</sup> these ten weeks, as to a second

Hogsden,<sup>8</sup>

In days of Pimlico and Eye-bright.<sup>9</sup>

FACE. Sir, 20

Their wisdoms will not say so!

LOVE. To-day they speak

Of coaches and gallants; one in a French hood

Went in, they tell me; and another was seen

* The same.

<sup>7</sup> I.e., in droves (lit. = two dozens of sheaves).

Hoxton, then a resort of the citizens.

<sup>8</sup> Possibly a malt or vinous beverage; possibly the name of a tavern or its keeper.

In a velvet gown at the windore! divers more Pass in and out!

FACE. They did pass through the doors, then,

Or walls, I assure their eyesights, and their spectacles;

For here, sir, are the keys, and here have been, In this my pocket, now above twenty days!

And for before, I kept the fort alone there.

But that 't is yet not deep i' the afternoon, 30

I should believe my neighbors had seen double

Through the black pot,<sup>10</sup> and made these apparitions!

For, on my faith to your Worship, for these three weeks

And upwards, the door has not been open'd.

LOVE. Strange!

1 NEI. Good faith, I think I saw a coach!

2 NEI. And I too,

I'd ha' been sworn!

LOVE. Do you but think it now?

And but one coach?

4 NEI. We cannot tell, sir; Jeremy

Is a very honest fellow.

FACE. Did you see me at all?

1 NEI. No; that we are sure on.

2 NEI. I'll be sworn o' that.

LOVE. Fine rogues to have your testimonies built on! 40

[Re-enter Third Neighbor, with his tools.]

3 NEI. Is Jeremy come?

1 NEI. Oh, yes; you may leave your tools;

We were deceiv'd, he says.

2 NEI. He has had the keys;

And the door has been shut these three weeks.

3 NEI. Like enough.

LOVE. Peace, and get hence, you changelings.

FACE. [aside] Surly come!

And Mammon made acquainted! They'll tell all.

How shall I beat them off? What shall I do? Nothing's more wretched than a guilty conscience.<sup>11</sup>

SCENE III <sup>12</sup>

[To them enter] SURLY [and] MAMMON.

SUR. No, sir, he was a great physician. This,

It was no bawdyhouse, but a mere<sup>13</sup> chancel.
You knew the lord and his sister.

MAM. Nay, good Surly —

SUR. The happy word, "Be rich" —

MAM. Play not the tyrant —

SUR. Should be to-day pronounc'd to all
your friends.

And where be your andirons now? and your brass pots,
That should ha' been golden flagons, and great wedges?

MAM. Let me but breathe. What! They ha' shut their doors,

Methinks! MAMMON and SURLY knock.

SUR. Ay, now 't is holiday with them.

MAM. Rogues,

Cozeners, impostors, bawds!

FACE. What mean you, sir? 10

MAM. To enter if we can.

FACE. Another man's house?
Here is the owner, sir; turn you to him,
And speak your business.

MAM. Are you, sir, the owner?

LOVE. Yes, sir.

MAM. And are those knaves within,
your cheaters?

LOVE. What knaves? what cheaters?

MAM. Subtle and his Lungs.

FACE. The gentleman is distracted, sir!
No lungs

Nor lights ha' been seen here these three weeks,
sir,

Within these doors upon my word!

SUR. Your word,

Groom arrogant!

FACE. Yes, sir, I am the housekeeper,
And know the keys ha' not been out o' my
hands. 20

SUR. This's a new Face!

FACE. You do mistake the house, sir!
What sign was't at?

SUR. You rascal! This is one
O' the confederacy. Come, let's get officers,
And force the door.

LOVE. 'Pray you stay, gentlemen.

SUR. No, sir, we'll come with warrant.

MAM. Ay, and then
We shall ha' your doors open.

[Exeunt MAMMON and SURLY.]

LOVE. What means this?

FACE. I cannot tell, sir!

1 NEI. These are two o' the gallants
That we do think we saw.

FACE. Two o' the fools!

<sup>13</sup> Absolute, actual.

You talk as idly as they. Good faith, sir,
I think the moon has craz'd 'em all. — [aside]
Oh me, 30

The angry boy come too? He'll make a noise,
And ne'er away till he have betray'd us all.

KASTRIL [enters and] knocks.

KAS. What, rogues, bawds, slaves, you'll open the door anon!

Punk, cockatrice, my suster! By this light I'll fetch the marshal to you. You are a whore

To keep your castle —

FACE. Who would you speak with, sir?

KAS. The bawdy doctor, and the cozening
captain,

And puss my suster.

LOVE. This is something, sure!

FACE. Upon my trust, the doors were never open, sir.

KAS. I have heard all their tricks told me twice over, 40

By the fat knight and the lean gentleman.

LOVE. Here comes another.

[Enter ANANIAS and TRIBULATION.]

FACE. [aside] Ananias too!
And his pastor!

TRI. The doors are shut against us.
They beat, too, at the door.

ANA. Come forth, you seed of sulphur, sons of fire;

Your stench it is broke forth; abomination
Is in the house.

KAS. Ay, my suster's there.

ANA. The place,
It is become a cage of unclean birds.

KAS. Yes, I will fetch the scavenger, and the constable.

TRI. You shall do well.

ANA. We'll join to weed them out.

KAS. You will not come then? punk-devise,<sup>14</sup> my suster! 50

ANA. Call her not sister; she is a harlot verily.

KAS. I'll raise the street.

LOVE. Good gentlemen, a word.

ANA. Sathan avoid, and hinder not our zeal.

[Exeunt ANANIAS, TRIBULATION, and KASTRIL.]

LOVE. The world's turn'd Bet'lem.

FACE. These are all broke loose,
Out of St. Kather'ne's, where they use to keep
The better sort of mad-folks.

<sup>14</sup> Perfect.

1 NEI. All these persons
We saw go in and out here.

2 NEI. Yes, indeed, sir.

3 NEI. These were the parties.

FACE. Peace, you drunkards. — Sir,
I wonder at it! Please you to give me leave To touch the door; I'll try an the lock be chang'd. 60

LOVE. It mazes me!

FACE. [going to the door.] Good faith, sir,
I believe
There's no such thing. 'T is all deceptio visus. —

[aside] Would I could get him away.

DAP. (cries out within.) Master
Captain! Master Doctor!

LOVE. Who's that?

FACE. [aside] Our clerk within, that
I forgot! — I know not, sir.

DAP. [within] For God's sake, when will her Grace be at leisure?

FACE. Ha!
Illusions, some spirit o' the air! — [aside] His gag is melted,
And now he sets out the throat.

DAP. [within] I am almost stifled —

FACE. [aside] Would you were altogether.

LOVE. 'T is i' the house.

Ha! list.

FACE. Believe it, sir, i' the air!

LOVE. Peace, you —

DAP. [within] Mine aunt's Grace does not use me well.

SUB. [within] You fool, 70
Peace; you'll mar all.

FACE. [speaks through the keyhole, while LOVEWIT advances to the door unobserved.] Or you will else, you rogue.

LOVE. Oh, is it so? Then you converse with spirits!

Come, sir. No more o' your tricks, good Jeremy.

The truth, the shortest way.

FACE. Dismiss this rabble, sir. —
[aside] What shall I do? I am catch'd,

LOVE. Good neighbors,
I thank you all. You may depart. [*Exeunt
Neighbors.*] — Come, sir,

You know that I am an indulgent master;
And therefore conceal nothing. What's your med'cine,

To draw so many several sorts of wild fowl?

FACE. Sir, you were wont to affect mirth and wit — 80

But here's no place to talk on 't i' the street.

Give me but leave to make the best of my fortune,

And only pardon me th' abuse of your house:
It's all I beg. I'll help you to a widow,
In recompense, that you shall gi' me thanks for,

Will make you seven years younger, and a rich
one.

'T is but your putting on a Spanish cloak;
I have her within. You need not fear the
house;

It was not visited.

LOVE. But by me, who came Sooner than you expected.

FACE. It is true, sir. 90

'Pray you forgive me.

LOVE. Well, let's see your widow.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV<sup>15</sup>

[Enter] SUBTLE [leading in] DAPPER, [with his eyes bound as before].

SUB. How! ha' you eaten your gag?

DAP. Yes, faith, it crumbled
Away i' my mouth.

SUB. You ha' spoil'd all then.

DAP. No;
I hope my aunt of Faërie will forgive me.

SUB. Your aunt's a gracious lady; but in troth

You were to blame.

DAP. The fume did overcome me,
And I did do 't to stay my stomach. 'Pray
you

So satisfy her Grace.

[Enter FACE.]

Here comes the Captain.

FACE. How now! Is his mouth down?

SUB. Ay, he has spoken!

FACE. [aside to SUBTLE] A pox, I heard him, and you too. — He's undone then. — [aside] I have been fain to say the house is haunted 10

With spirits, to keep churl back.

SUB. [aside] And hast thou done it?

FACE. [aside] Sure, for this night.

SUB. [aside] Why, then triumph and sing

Of Face so famous, the precious king

Of present wits.

FACE. [aside] Did you not hear the coil
About the door?

<sup>15</sup> A room inside the house.

SUB. [aside] Yes, and I dwindled with it.

FACE. Show him his aunt, and let him be dispatch'd ;

I'll send her to you. [Exit FACE.]

SUB. Well, sir, your aunt, her Grace,
Will give you audience presently, on my suit, —
And the Captain's word that you did not eat your gag

In any contempt of her Highness.

[Unbinds his eyes.]

DAP. Not I, in troth, sir. 20

[Enter] DOL like the Queen of Faerie.

SUB. Here she is come. Down o' your knees and wriggle ;
She has a stately presence. — Good. Yet nearer,
And bid, God save you.

DAP. Madam !

SUB. And your aunt.

DAP. And my most Gracious aunt, God
save your Grace.

DOL. Nephew, we thought to have been angry with you ;
But that sweet face of yours hath turn'd the tide,
And made it flow with joy, that ebb'd of
love.

Arise, and touch our velvet gown.

SUB. The skirts,
And kiss 'em. So !

DOL. Let me now stroke that head.
Much, Nephew, shalt thou win, much shalt thou spend ; 30

Much shalt thou give away, much shalt thou lend.

SUB. [aside] Ay, much ! indeed. — Why do you not thank her Grace ?

DAP. I cannot speak for joy.

SUB. See, the kind wretch !
Your Grace's kinsman right.

DOL. Give me the bird.<sup>16</sup> —
Here is your fly<sup>16</sup> in a purse, about your neck, Cousin ;

Wear it, and feed it about this day sev'n-night,
On your right wrist —

SUB. Open a vein with a pin
And let it suck but once a week ; till then,
You must not look on 't.

DOL. No ; and, kinsman,
Bear yourself worthy of the blood you come
on.

SUB. Her Grace would ha' you eat no more Woolsack<sup>17</sup> pies, 41

Nor Dagger<sup>17</sup> frume'ty.

DOL. Nor break his fast
In Heaven<sup>17</sup> and Hell.<sup>17</sup>

SUB. She's with you everywhere !
Nor play with costermongers, at mumchance,<sup>18</sup>
traytrip,<sup>18</sup>

God-make-you-rich<sup>18</sup> (whenas your aunt has done it) ; but keep

The gallant'st company, and the best games —

DAP. Yes, sir.

SUB. Gleek<sup>18</sup> and primero ;<sup>18</sup> and what you get, be true to us.

DAP. By this hand, I will.

SUB. You may bring 's a thousand pound
Before to-morrow night, if but three thousand
Be stirring, an you will.

DAP. I swear I will then. 50

SUB. Your fly will learn you all games.

FACE. [within] Ha' you done there ?

SUB. Your Grace will command him no more duties ?

DOL. No ;

But come and see me often. I may chance
To leave him three or four hundred chests of treasure,

And some twelve thousand acres of faerie land,
If he game well and comely with good game-
sters.

SUB. There's a kind aunt. Kiss her departing part. —
But you must sell you[r] forty mark a year
now.

DAP. Ay, sir, I mean.

SUB. Or, gi't away ; pox on 't !

[DAP.] I'll gi' 't mine aunt. I'll go and fetch the writings. [Exit.] 60

SUB. 'T is well ; away.

[Re-enter FACE.]

FACE. Where's Subtle ?

SUB. Here ; what news ?

FACE. Drugger is at the door ; go take his suit,

And bid him fetch a parson presently.

Say he shall marry the widow. Thou shalt spend

A hundred pound by the service !

[Exit] SUBTLE.]

Now, Queen Dol,

Ha' you pack'd up all ?

DOL. Yes.

the Woolsack was outside Aldgate ; for the Dagger, see I, i, 191 and note.

<sup>18</sup> Games of chance.

<sup>17</sup> Taverns. The last two were in Westminster ;

FACE. And how do you like
The Lady Pliant?

DOL. A good dull innocent.

[Re-enter SUBTLE.]

SUB. Here's your Hieronimo's cloak and hat.

FACE. Give me 'em.

SUB. And the ruff too?

FACE. Yes; I'll come to you presently.
[Exit.]

SUB. Now he is gone about his project,
Dol, 70
I told you of, for the widow.

DOL. 'T is direct
Against our articles.

SUB. Well, we'll fit him, wench.
Hast thou gull'd her of her jewels or her bracelets?

DOL. No, but I will do 't.

SUB. Soon at night, my Dolly,
When we are shipp'd, and all our goods aboard,
Eastward for Rateliff, we will turn our course
To Brainford,<sup>19</sup> westward, if thou say'st the
word,

And take our leaves of this o'erweening rascal,
This peremptory Face.

DOL. Content; I am weary of him.

SUB. Tho' hast cause, when the slave will run a-wiving, Dol, 80
Against the instrument that was drawn between us.

DOL. I'll pluck his bird as bare as I can.

SUB. Yes, tell her
She must by any means address some present
To th' cunning man; make him amends for wronging

His art with her suspicion; send a ring,
Or chain of pearl; she will be tortur'd else
Extremely in her sleep, say, and ha' strange things

Come to her. Wilt thou?

DOL. Yes.

SUB. My fine flittermouse,<sup>20</sup>
My bird o' the night; we'll tickle it at the Pigeons,<sup>21</sup> 89

When we have all, and may unlock the trunks,
And say, this's mine, and thine, and thine,
and mine. They kiss.

Re-enter FACE.

FACE. What now! a-billing?

SUB. Yes, a little exalted
In the good passage of our stock-affairs.

<sup>19</sup> Brentford. <sup>20</sup> Bat. <sup>21</sup> An inn at Brentford.

FACE. Drugger has brought his parson;
take him in, Subtle,

And send Nab back again to wash his face.

SUB. I will; and shave himself? [Exit.]

FACE. If you can get him.

DOL. You are hot upon it, Face, whate'er
it is!

FACE. A trick that Dol shall spend ten pound a month by.

[Re-enter SUBTLE.]

Is he gone?

SUB. The chaplain waits you i' the hall, sir.

FACE. I'll go bestow him. [Exit.]

DOL. He'll now marry her instantly.

SUB. He cannot yet; he is not ready.

Dear Dol, 101

Cozen her of all thou canst. To deceive him
Is no deceit, but justice, that would break
Such an inextricable tie as ours was.

DOL. Let me alone to fit him.

[Re-enter FACE.]

FACE. Come, my venturers,
You ha' pack'd up all? Where be the trunks?
Bring forth.

SUB. Here.

FACE. Let's see 'em. Where's the money?

SUB. Here,
In this.

FACE. Mammon's ten pound; eight-score before.

The brethren's money this. Drugger's and Dapper's.

What paper's that?

DOL. The jewel of the waiting maid's,
That stole it from her lady, to know certain — 111

FACE. If she should have precedence of her mistress?

DOL. Yes.

FACE. What box is that?

SUB. The fishwife's rings, I think,
And th' alewife's single money.<sup>22</sup> Is 't not,
Dol?

DOL. Yes; and the whistle that the sailor's
wife

Brought you, to know an her husband were with Ward.<sup>23</sup>

FACE. We'll wet it to-morrow; and our silver beakers

<sup>23</sup> A famous pirate.

And tavern cups. Where be the French petti-coats
And girdles and hangers?

SUB. Here, i' the trunk,
And the bolts of lawn.

FACE. Is Druggers' damask there,
And the tobacco?

SUB. Yes.

FACE. Give me the keys. 121

DOL. Why you the keys?

SUB. No matter, Dol; because
We shall not open 'em before he comes.

FACE. 'T is true, you shall not open them,
indeed;

Nor have 'em forth. Do you see? Not forth, Dol.

DOL. No!

FACE. No, my smock rampant. The right is, my master

Knows all, has pardon'd me, and he will keep
'em.

Doctor, 't is true — you look — for all your figures;

I sent for him, indeed. Wherefore, good partners,

Both he and she, be satisfied; for here 130
Determines <sup>24</sup> the indenture tripartite

'Twixt Subtle, Dol, and Face. All I can do
Is to help you over the wall, o' the back side,

Or lend you a sheet to save your velvet gown,
Dol.

Here will be officers presently; bethink you
Of some course suddenly to scape the dock,

For thither you'll come else. (Some knock.)
Hark you, thunder.

SUB. You are a precious fiend!

OFFICERS. [without] Open the door.

FACE. Dol, I am sorry for thee i' faith.
But hear'st thou?

It shall go hard but I will place thee somewhere; 140

Thou shalt ha' my letter to Mistress Amo —

DOL. Hang you —

FACE. Or Madam Caesarean.

DOL. Pox upon you, rogue;
Would I had but time to beat thee.

FACE. Subtle,
Let's know where you set up next; I'll send
you

A customer now and then, for old acquaintance.

What new course ha' you?

SUB. Rogue, I'll hang myself;

<sup>24</sup> Ends.

That I may walk a greater devil than thou,
And haunt thee i' the flock-bed <sup>25</sup> and the buttery. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V <sup>26</sup>

[Enter] LOVEWIT [in the Spanish dress, with the Parson. Loud knocking at the door.]

LOVE. What do you mean, my masters?

MAM. [without] Open your door,
Cheaters, bawds, conjurers.

OFFI. [without] Or we'll break it open.

LOVE. What warrant have you?

OFFI. [without] Warrant enough, sir,
doubt not,

If you'll not open it.

LOVE. Is there an officer there?

OFFI. [without] Yes, two or three for <sup>27</sup>
failing.

LOVE. Have but patience,
And I will open it straight.

[Enter FACE.]

FACE. Sir, ha' you done?
Is it a marriage? perfect?

LOVE. Yes, my brain.

FACE. Off with your ruff and cloak then;
be yourself, sir.

SUR. [without] Down with the door.

KAS. [without] 'Slight, ding <sup>28</sup> it open.

LOVE. [opening the door] Hold,
Hold, gentlemen; what means this violence? 10

[Enter MAMMON, SURLY, KASTRIL, ANANIAS,
TRIBULATION, and Officers.]

MAM. Where is this collier?

SUR. And my Captain Face?

MAM. These day-owls.

SUR. That are birding <sup>29</sup> in men's purses.

MAM. Madam Suppository.

KAS. Doxy, my suster.

ANA. Locusts

Of the foul pit.

TRI. Profane as Bel and the Dragon.

ANA. Worse than the grasshoppers, or the lice of Egypt.

LOVE. Good gentlemen, hear me. Are you officers,

And cannot stay this violence?

[1] OFFI. Keep the peace.

LOVE. Gentlemen, what is the matter?
Whom do you seek?

MAM. The chemical cozeners.

SUR. And the captain pander.

KAS. The nun my suster.

MAM. Madam Rabbi.

ANA. Scorpions, 20

And caterpillars.

LOVE. Fewer at once, I pray you.

[1] OFFI. One after another, gentlemen, I charge you,

By virtue of my staff —

ANA. They are the vessels
Of pride, lust, and the cart.

LOVE. Good zeal, lie still
A little while.

TRI. Peace, Deacon Ananias.

LOVE. The house is mine here, and the doors are open ;

If there be any such persons as you seek for,
Use your authority, search on o' God's name.
I am but newly come to town, and finding
This tumult 'bout my door, to tell you true, 30
It somewhat maz'd me ; till my man here, fearing

My more displeasure, told me [he] <sup>30</sup> had done
Somewhat an insolent part : let out my house
(Belike presuming on my known aversion
From any air o' the town while there was sickness),

To a doctor and a captain ; who, what they are
Or where they be, he knows not.

MAM. Are they gone?

LOVE. You may go in and search, sir.

(They enter.) Here, I find

The empty walls worse than I left 'em, smok'd,
A few crack'd pots, and glasses, and a furnace ;
The ceiling fill'd with poesies of the candle, <sup>31</sup> 41
And "Madam with a dildo" <sup>32</sup> writ o' the walls.

Only one gentlewoman I met here

That is within, that said she was a widow —

KAS. Ay, that's my suster ; I'll go thump her. Where is she? [Exit.]

LOVE. And should ha' married a Spanish count, but he,

When he came to 't, neglected her so grossly,
That I, a widower, am gone through with her.

SUR. How! have I lost her then?

LOVE. Were you the don, sir?
Good faith, now she does blame yo' extremely,
and says 50

You swore, and told her you had ta'en the
pains

To dye your beard, and umber o'er your face,
Borrowed a suit and ruff, all for her love ;
And then did nothing. What an oversight
And want of putting forward, sir, was this !
Well fare an old harquebusier <sup>33</sup> yet,
Could prime his powder, and give fire, and hit,
All in a twinkling ! MAMMON comes forth.

MAM. The whole nest are fled !

LOVE. What sort of birds were they?

MAM. A kind of choughs,
Or thievish daws, sir, that have pick'd my
purse, 60

Of eightscore and ten pounds within these five weeks,

Beside my first materials ; and my goods,
That lie i' the cellar, which I am glad they ha' left ;

I may have home yet.

LOVE. Think you so, sir?

MAM. Ay.

LOVE. By order of law, sir, but not otherwise.

MAM. Not mine own stuff?

LOVE. Sir, I can take no knowledge
That they are yours, but by public means.

If you can bring certificate that you were
gull'd of 'em,

Or any formal writ out of a court,
That you did cozen yourself, I will not hold
them. 70

MAM. I'll rather lose 'em.

LOVE. That you shall not, sir,
By me, in troth ; upon these terms, they are
yours.

What, should they ha' been, sir, turn'd into gold, all?

MAM. No.

I cannot tell. — It may be they should. —
What then?

LOVE. What a great loss in hope have you sustain'd !

MAM. Not I ; the commonwealth has.

FACE. Ay, he would ha' built
The city new ; and made a ditch about it
Of silver, should have run with cream from Hogsden ;

That every Sunday in Moorfields the young-
ers,

And tits <sup>34</sup> and tomboys should have fed on,
gratis. 80

MAM. I will go mount a turnip-cart, and preach

<sup>32</sup> Probably a line from an obscene song.

The end o' the world within these two months.

Surly,

What! in a dream?

SUR.

Must I needs cheat myself

With that same foolish vice of honesty!

Come, let us go and hearken out the rogues.

That Face I'll mark for mine, if e'er I meet him.

FACE. If I can hear of him, sir, I'll bring you word

Unto your lodging; for in troth, they were strangers

To me; I thought 'em honest as myself, sir.

[ANANIAS and TRIBULATION] come forth.

TRI. 'T is well; the saints shall not lose all yet. Go 90

And get some carts —

LOVE. For what, my zealous friends?

ANA. To bear away the portion of the righteous

Out of this den of thieves.

LOVE. What is that portion?

ANA. The goods, sometimes <sup>38</sup> the orphans', that the brethren Bought with their silver pence.

LOVE. What, those i' the cellar, The knight Sir Mammon claims?

ANA. I do defy The wicked Mammon, so do all the brethren, Thou profane man! I ask thee with what conscience

Thou canst advance that idol against us, That have the seal? <sup>38</sup> Were not the shillings numb'red 100

That made the pounds; were not the pounds told out

Upon the second day of the fourth week, In the eighth month, upon the table dormant, The year of the last patience of the saints, Six hundred and ten?

LOVE. Mine earnest vehement botcher, And deacon also, I cannot dispute with you: But if you get you not away the sooner, I shall confute you with a cudgel.

ANA. Sir.

TRI. Be patient, Ananias.

ANA. I am strong, 109 And will stand up, well girt, against an host That threaten Gad in exile.

LOVE. I shall send you To Amsterdam, to your cellar.

ANA. I will pray there, Against thy house. May dogs defile thy walls,

And wasps and hornets breed beneath thy roof,

This seat of falsehood, and this cave of coz'nage!

[Exeunt ANANIAS and TRIBULATION.]

DRUGGER enters, and [LOVEWIT] beats him away.

LOVE. Another too?

DRUG. Not I, sir; I am no brother.

LOVE. Away, you Harry Nicholas! <sup>37</sup> do you talk? [Exit DRUGGER.]

FACE. (to the Parson) No, this was Abel Drugger. Good sir, go,

And satisfy him; tell him all is done;

He stay'd too long a-washing of his face. 120 The Doctor, he shall hear of him at Westchester; <sup>38</sup>

And of the Captain, tell him, at Yarmouth, or Some good port town else, lying for a wind.

[Exit Parson.]

If you can get off the angry child now, sir —

[Enter KASTRIL and DAME PLIANT.]

KAS. (to his sister) Come on, you ewe, you have match'd most sweetly, ha' you not?

Did not I say I would never ha' you tupp'd But by a dubb'd boy, <sup>39</sup> to make you a lady-tom?

'Slight, you are a mammet! <sup>40</sup> O, I could touse you now.

Death, mun <sup>41</sup> you marry, with a pox!

LOVE. You lie, boy; As sound as you; and I am aforehand with you.

KAS. Anan? <sup>42</sup> 130

LOVE. Come, will you quarrel? I will feeze <sup>43</sup> you, sirrah;

Why do you not buckle to your tools?

KAS. God's light,

This is a fine old boy as e'er I saw!

LOVE. What, do you change your copy now? Proceed;

Here stands my dove: stoop <sup>44</sup> at her if you dare.

KAS. 'Slight, I must love him! I cannot choose, i' faith!

An I should be hang'd for 't. Suster, I protest,

I honor thee for this match.

LOVE. Oh, do you so, sir?

KAS. Yes, an thou canst take tobacco and drink, old boy,

I'll give her five hundred pound more to her marriage, 140

Than her own state.

LOVE. Fill a pipeful, Jeremy.

FACE. Yes; but go in and take it, sir.

LOVE. We will.

I will be rul'd by thee in anything, Jeremy.

KAS. 'Slight, thou art not hidebound! thou art a jovy <sup>45</sup> boy!

Come, let 's in, I pray thee, and take our whiffs.

LOVE. Whiff in with your sister, brother boy.

[Exeunt KASTRIL and DAME PLIANT.]

— That master

That had receiv'd such happiness by a servant,

In such a widow, and with so much wealth,
Were very ungrateful, if he would not be

<sup>45</sup> Jovial.

A little indulgent to that servant's wit, 150
And help his fortune, though were some small strain

Of his own candor.<sup>46</sup> — [advancing] Therefore, gentlemen,

And kind spectators, if I have outstripp'd
An old man's gravity, or strict canon, think
What a young wife and a good brain may do
Stretch age's truth sometimes, and crack it too. —

Speak for thyself, knave.

FACE. So I will, sir. — Gentlemen,
My part a little fell in this last scene,
Yet 't was decorum.<sup>47</sup> And though I am clean
Got off from Subtle, Surly, Mammon, Dol, 160
Hot Ananias, Dapper, Drugger, all
With whom I traded, yet I put myself
On you, that are my country;<sup>48</sup> and this pelf

Which I have got, if you do quit <sup>49</sup> me, rests,
To feast you often, and invite new guests.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

THIS gaudiest of Elizabethan plays, and most unctuously comic of Jonson's masterpieces, was produced in 1614 but was not included in the Folio of 1616, perhaps because the Lady Elizabeth's Men, who acted it, were unwilling to release a still successful piece. It was separately printed, in folio, in 1631, and reissued in 1640 in the Second Folio, which was edited by Sir Kenelm Digby. According to Aubrey, Jonson wrote it at King James's suggestion. Whether or not the tradition is authentic, the play was given at court the day after its opening performance at the Hope on October 31, 1614. The monarch who wished to harry the whole Puritan sect out of his kingdom must have enjoyed with the keenest relish this attempt at laughing them out of it.

Yet so wide is the net of his satire, and so carefully does he refrain from mounting the rostrum in propria persona, that Jonson almost succeeds in giving the impression that we are not listening to the prejudices of a court dramatist but are actually watching his victims as, against the multi-colored background of the best fair in English literature, they expose themselves. Comparison with the other great dramatic indictment of religious hypocrisy is inevitable, and not wholly to Jonson's discredit. For if, excepting its conclusion, Molière's is the better drama, Tartuffe himself is but a pale abstraction beside the immortal pig-eater, Rabbi Busy. And the latter is surrounded by a gallery of Hogarthian portraits unsurpassed, if indeed equalled, in dramatic literature. Rogues, hypocrites, and fools are the satirist's staples, and here they are — in droves. Though the action takes place on a single day, plot sometimes sinks temporarily out of sight beneath the glittering surface of the Fair itself; but character, never. Jonson is everything in this play that the dramatist of manners ought to be: fascinated by the human circus, but sceptical of its fiery hoops and tinsel; full himself of fantastic clowneries, but steadily dominated by an idea; amused by all excesses, even of wickedness, but morally unshaken by his amusement; and, above all, omniscient. How he gained his knowledge, how he gained even his several vocabularies, we had perhaps better not inquire. But gain them he did, and not from books.

Attempts have been made to identify various contemporaries as the objects of personal satire. The most plausible suggestion is that Lantern Leatherhead is in part intended to ridicule the great architect Inigo Jones, Jonson's collaborator in staging his court masques, and afterwards his detested enemy.

Unlike Catiline, its immediate predecessor on the public stage, Bartholomew Fair was a great success. Jonson had made up his mind to give his public not, as before, what he considered best for it, but what he knew it wanted. The Induction still betrays a Shavian complex of superiority to the drama's patrons, who are supposed to promulgate its laws; but now the tone is genial, and the author's tolerance is even extended to his characters: this time the rascals get off scot-free. This relaxation of Jonson's habitual severity is not unwelcome, for if all the rogues and simpletons of the Fair came by their deserts we should have a conclusion far too dismal and depressing to be subject to the comic spirit that presides over this play.

The success of Bartholomew Fair continued under the Restoration, when, as might be expected, its revival captivated the Merry Monarch and his courtiers, whose long exile had been enforced by the triumph of the party it derides. The play has been separately edited by C. S. Alden (1904). The present text is based on the Folio of 1631, with a few corrections from the Folio of 1692.

THE PROLOGUE

TO THE KING'S MAJESTY

Your Majesty is welcome to a fair :
Such place, such men, such language, and such ware
You must expect ; with these, the zealous noise

Founded in the twelfth century, and so called because it was held in the precinct of St. Bartholomew's Priory in Smithfield, and at Bartholomew tide, the Fair, which with few exceptions was held annually till 1855, became a great cloth mart, but by the seventeenth century had to a considerable extent lost that dignified character and become a sort of carnival. At the time of our play the Fair lasted three days (August 23-25), beginning the afternoon before St. Bartholomew's Day.

THE INDUCTION

On the Stage

[Enter the] Stage-keeper.<sup>17</sup>

STAGE. Gentlemen, have a little patience; they are e'en upon <sup>18</sup> coming, instantly. He that should begin the play, Master Littlewit, the proctor, has a stitch new fall'n in his black silk stocking; 'twill be drawn up ere you can tell <sup>19</sup> twenty. He plays one o' the Arches <sup>20</sup> that dwells about the Hospital,<sup>21</sup> and he has a very pretty part. But for the whole play, will you ha' the truth on 't? — I am looking, lest the poet hear me, or his man, Master [10] Brome,<sup>22</sup> behind the arras <sup>23</sup> — it is like to be a very conceited,<sup>24</sup> scurvy one, in plain English. When 't comes to the Fair once, you were e'en as good go to Virginia, for anything there is of Smithfield. He has not hit the humors; he does not know 'em; he has not convers'd with the Bartholomew birds, as they say; he has ne'er a sword and buckler man in his Fair; nor a little Davy,<sup>25</sup> to take toll o' the bawds there, as in my time; nor a Kindheart,<sup>26</sup> [20] if anybody's teeth should chance to ache, in his play; nor a juggler with a well-educated ape, to come over the chain for the King of England and back again for the Prince,<sup>27</sup> and sit still on his arse for the Pope and the King of Spain! None o' these fine sights!

<sup>23</sup> I.e., a proctor of the Court of Arches, the highest court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. It was then held in St. Mary-le-Bow Church in Cheapside, the first church in London, according to Stowe, to be built on arches, from which both it and the court got their names.

Nor has he the canvas cut i' the night, for a hobbyhorse man to creep into his she-neighbor, and take his leap there! Nothing! No! an some writer that I know had had but [30] the penning o' this matter, he would ha' made you such a jig-a-jog i' the booths, you should ha' thought an earthquake had been i' the Fair! But these master-poets, they will ha' their own absurd courses; they will be inform'd of nothing. He has (sir reverence) <sup>31</sup> kick'd me three or four times about the tiring-house, I thank him, for but offering to put in with my experience. I'll be judg'd by you, gentlemen, now, but for one conceit <sup>32</sup> of [40] mine! Would not a fine pump upon the stage ha' done well for a property now? and a punk set under upon her head, with her stern upward, and ha' been sous'd by my witty young masters <sup>33</sup> o' the Inns o' Court? <sup>34</sup> What think you o' this for a show, now? he will not hear o' this! I am an ass! I! and yet I kept the stage in Master Tarleton's <sup>35</sup> time, I thank my stars. Ho! an that man had liv'd to have play'd in Bartholomew Fair, you [50] should ha' seen him ha' come in, and ha' been cozened i' the cloth-quarter <sup>36</sup> so finely! and Adams,<sup>37</sup> the rogue, ha' leap'd and caper'd upon him, and ha' dealt his vermin about, as though they had cost him nothing! and then a substantial watch to ha' stol'n in upon 'em, and taken 'em away, with mistaking words,<sup>38</sup> as the fashion is in the stage practice.

BOOK. How now! what rare discourse are you fall'n upon, ha? Ha' you found [60 any familiars here, that you are so free? What's the business?

STAGE. Nothing, but the understanding gentlemen o' the ground <sup>37</sup> here ask'd my judgment.

BOOK. Your judgment, rascal! for what? sweeping the stage, or gathering up the broken apples for the bears within? <sup>38</sup> Away, rogue; it's come to a fine degree in these spectacles, when such a youth <sup>39</sup> as you pretend to [70 a judgment. [Exit Stage-keeper] — And yet he may, i' the most o' this matter, i' faith; for the author has writ it just to his meridian, and the scale of the grounded judgments here, his playfellows in wit. — Gentlemen, not for want of a prologue, but by way of a new one, I am sent out to you here, with a scrivener, and certain articles drawn out in haste between our author and you; which if you please to hear, and, as they appear reason- [80 able, to approve of, the play will follow presently. Read, scribe; gi' me the counterpane.<sup>40</sup>

SCRIV. "Articles of agreement, indented,<sup>41</sup> between the spectators or hearers at the Hope <sup>42</sup> on the Bankside <sup>43</sup> in the county of Surrey on the one party; and the author of Bartholomew Fair, in the said place and county, on the other party: the one-and-thirtieth day of October, 1614, and in the twelfth year of [90 the reign of our sovereign lord, James, by the grace of God King of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith; and of Scotland the seven-and-fortieth.

curious <sup>44</sup> and envious <sup>45</sup> as the favoring and judicious, as also the grounded judgments and understandings, do for themselves [100 severally covenant and agree to remain in the places their money or friends have put them in, with patience, for the space of two hours and an half, and somewhat more. In which time the author promiseth to present them, by us, with a new, sufficient play, called Bartholomew Fair, merry, and as full of noise as sport, made to delight all and to offend none, provided they have either the wit or the honesty to think well of themselves. 110

"It is further agreed that every person here have his or their free will of censure,<sup>46</sup> to like or dislike at their own charge, the author having now departed with <sup>47</sup> his right. It shall be lawful for any man to judge his six pen'orth, his twelve pen'orth, so to his eighteenpence, two shillings, half a crown,<sup>48</sup> to the value of his place; provided always his place get not above his wit.<sup>49</sup> And if he pay for half a dozen, he may censure for all [120 them too, so <sup>50</sup> that he will undertake that they shall be silent. He shall put in for censures here, as they do for lots at the lottery; marry, if he drop but sixpence at the door and will censure a crown's-worth, it is thought there is no conscience or justice in that.

"It is also agreed that every man here exercise his own judgment, and not censure by contagion, or upon trust, from another's voice or face, that sits by him, be he never [130 so first in the commission of wit; as also, that he be fix'd and settled in his censure, that <sup>51</sup> what he approves or not approves to-day he will do the same to-morrow; and, if to-morrow, the next day; and so the next week, if need be; and not to be brought about by any that sits on the bench <sup>52</sup> with him, though they indict and arraign plays daily. He that will swear Jeronimo <sup>53</sup> or Andronicus <sup>54</sup> are the best plays yet shall [140 pass unexcepted at here, as a man whose judgment shows it is constant and hath stood still these five-and-twenty or thirty years. Though it be an ignorance, it is a virtuous and staid ignorance; and, next to truth, a confirm'd error does well; such a one the author knows where to find him.

"It is further covenanted, concluded, and agreed that how great soever the expectation be, no person here is to expect more than [150] he knows, or better ware than a fair will afford; neither to look back to the sword and buckler age of Smithfield, but content himself with the present. Instead of a little Davy, to take toll o' the bawds, the author doth promise a strutting horse-courser, with a leer<sup>55</sup> drunkard, two or three to attend him, in as good equipage as you would wish. And then, for Kindheart the toothdrawer, a fine, oily pig woman, with her tapster, to bid [160] you welcome, and a consort of roarsers,<sup>56</sup> for music; a wise Justice of Peace meditant,<sup>57</sup> instead of a juggler with an ape; a civil cut-purse searchant; a sweet singer of new ballads allurant; and as fresh an hypocrite as ever was broach'd, rampant. If there be never a servant monster<sup>58</sup> i' the Fair, who can help it, he says? nor a nest of antics:<sup>59</sup> he is loth to make Nature afraid in his plays, like those that beget 'Tales', 'Tempests',<sup>60</sup> and [170] such like drolleries,<sup>61</sup> to mix his head with other men's heels. Let the concupiscence of jigs<sup>62</sup> and dances reign as strong as it will amongst you; yet if the puppets will please anybody they shall be entreated to come in.

"In consideration of which, it is finally agreed, by the foresaid hearers and spectators, that they neither in themselves conceal, nor suffer by them to be concealed, any state-decipherer, or politic picklock of the [180] scene, so solemnly ridiculous as to search out who was meant by the gingerbread woman, who by the hobbyhorse man, who by the costardmonger, nay, who by their wares; or that will pretend to affirm, on his own inspired ignorance, what Mirror of Magistrates<sup>63</sup> is meant by the Justice, what great lady by the pig woman, what conceal'd statesman by the seller of mousetraps, and so of the rest; but that such person, or persons, so [190] found, be left discovered to the mercy of the author, as a forfeiture to the stage, and your laughter aforesaid. As also such as shall so desperately, or ambitiously, play the fool by his place aforesaid, to challenge the author of scurrility, because the language somewhere savors of Smithfield, the booth, and the pig-broth, or of profaneness because a madman cries, 'God quit<sup>64</sup> you,' or 'bless you!'<sup>65</sup> In witness whereof, as you have preposterously<sup>66</sup> put to your seals already, which is your money, you will now add the other part of suffrage, your hands.—The play shall presently begin. And, though the Fair be not kept in the same region that some here perhaps would have it, yet think that therein the author hath observ'd a special decorum,<sup>67</sup> the place being as dirty as Smithfield, and as stinking every whit.

Howsoever, he prays you to believe [210] his ware is still the same; else you will make him justly suspect that he that is so loth to look on a baby or an hobbyhorse here, would be glad to take up a commodity<sup>67</sup> of them, at any laughter or loss, in another place. [Exeunt.]

ACT I — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] LITTLEWIT, [with a paper.]

LIT. A pretty conceit, and worth the finding! I ha' such luck to spin out these fine things still, and, like a silkworm, out of myself. Here's Master Bartholomew Cokes, of Harrow o' th' Hill, i' th' county of Middlesex, Esquire, takes forth his license to marry Mistress Grace Wellborn, of the said place and county. And when does he take it forth? to-day! the four-and-twentieth of August! Bartholomew Day! Bartholomew upon [10] Bartholomew! there's the device! Who would have mark'd such a leapfrog chance,

[Enter MRS. LITTLEWIT.]

Win, good morrow, Win. Ay, marry, Win, now you look finely indeed, Win! this cap does convince.<sup>9</sup> You'd not ha' worn it, Win, nor ha' had it velvet, but a rough country beaver, with a copper band, like the coney-skin woman of Budge Row!<sup>10</sup> Sweet Win, [30 let me kiss it. And her fine high shoes, like the Spanish lady! Good Win, go<sup>11</sup> a little; I would fain see thee pace, pretty Win. By this fine cap, I could never leave kissing on 't.

MRS. LIT. Come, indeed, la; you are such a fool still!

LIT. No, but half a one, Win; you are the tother half: man and wife make one fool, Win. (Good!) Is there the proctor, or doctor indeed, i' the diocese, that ever [40 had the fortune to win him such a Win? (There I am again!) I do feel conceits coming upon me, more than I am able to turn tongue to. A pox o' these pretenders to wit! your Three Cranes, Mitre, and Mermaid men!<sup>12</sup> not a corn<sup>13</sup> of true salt, nor a grain of right mustard, amongst them all. They may stand for places, or so, again<sup>14</sup> the next wit-fall, and pay twopence in a quart more for their canary than other men. But gi' me the man [50 can start up a justice of wit out of six-shillings beer, and give the law to all the poets and poet-suckers i' town; because they are the players'

SCENE II<sup>16</sup>

[Enter] WINWIFE, [to] LITTLEWIT [and MISTRESS LITTLEWIT.]

WINW. Why, how now, Master Littlewit! measuring of lips, or molding of kisses? which is it?

LIT. Troth, I am a little taken with my Win's dressing here! Does 't not fine, Master Winwife? How do you apprehend,<sup>17</sup> sir? she would not ha' worn this habit. I challenge all Cheapside to show such another: Moorfields,<sup>18</sup> Pimlico<sup>19</sup> path, or the Exchange,<sup>20</sup> in a summer evening — with [10 a lace to boot, as this has. Dear Win, let Master Winwife kiss you. He comes a-wooing to our mother, Win, and may be our father perhaps, Win. There's no harm in him, Win.

WINW. None i' the earth, Master Littlewit. [Kisses her.]

LIT. I envy no man my delicates, sir.

WINW. Alas, you ha' the garden where they grow still!<sup>21</sup> A wife here with a [20 strawberry breath, cherry lips, apricot cheeks, and a soft velvet head,<sup>22</sup> like a melocoton.<sup>23</sup>

LIT. Good, i' faith! — [aside] Now dullness upon me, that I had not that before him, that I should not light on 't as well as he! velvet head!

WINW. But my taste, Master Littlewit, tends to fruit of a later kind — the sober matron, your wife's mother.

LIT. Ay, we know you are a suitor, [30 sir; Win and I both wish you well. By this license here, would you had her, that your two names were as fast in it as here are a couple. Win would fain have a fine young father-i'-law, with a feather:<sup>24</sup> that her mother might hood it and chain it with Mistress Overdo. But you do not take the right course, Master Winwife.

WINW. No, Master Littlewit? Why?

LIT. You are not mad enough. 40

WINW. How! Is madness a right course?

LIT. I say nothing, but I wink upon Win. You have a friend, one Master Quarlous, comes here sometimes.

WINW. Why, he makes no love to her, does he?

LIT. Not a tokenworth<sup>25</sup> that ever I saw, I assure you; but —

WINW. What?

LIT. He is the more madcap o' the [50 two. You do not apprehend me.

MRS. LIT. You have a hot coal i' your mouth now, you cannot hold.

LIT. Let me out with it, dear Win.

MRS. LIT. I'll tell him myself.

LIT. Do, and take all the thanks; and much do good thy pretty heart, Win!

MRS. LIT. Sir, my mother has had her nativity-water<sup>26</sup> cast<sup>27</sup> lately by the cunning men in Cow Lane; and they ha' told [60 her her fortune, and do ensure her she shall never have happy hour unless she marry within this se'nnight; and, when it is, it must be a madman, they say.

LIT. Ay, but it must be a gentleman madman.

MRS. LIT. Yes, so the tother man of Moorfields says.

WINW. But does she believe 'em?

LIT. Yes, and has been at Bedlam twice [70 since every day, to inquire if any gentleman be there or to come there mad.

WINW. Why, this is a confederacy,<sup>28</sup> a mere piece of practice<sup>29</sup> upon her by these impostors!

LIT. I tell her so; or else say I that they mean some young madcap gentleman (for the Devil can equivocate as well as a shopkeeper); and therefore would I advise you to be a little madder than Master Quarlous hereafter. 80

WINW. Where is she? stirring yet?

LIT. Stirring! yes; and studying an old elder come from Banbury, a suitor that puts in here at mealtide, to praise the painful<sup>30</sup> brethren, or pray that the sweet singers may be restor'd;<sup>31</sup> says a grace as long as his breath lasts him! Sometime the spirit is so strong with him, it gets quite out of him; and then my mother, or Win, are fain to fetch it again with malmsey or aqua coelestis.<sup>32</sup> 90

MRS. LIT. Yes, indeed, we have such a tedious life with him for<sup>33</sup> his diet, and his clothes too! He breaks his buttons and cracks seams at every saying he sobs out.

LIT. He cannot abide my vocation, he says.

MRS. LIT. No; he told my mother a proctor was a claw of the Beast,<sup>34</sup> and that she had little less than committed abomination in marrying me so as she has done. 100

LIT. Every line, he says, that a proctor writes, when it comes to be read in the Bishop's court, is a long black hair kemb'd out of the tail of Antichrist.

WINW. When came this proselyte?

LIT. Some three days since.

SCENE III<sup>35</sup>

[Enter] QUARLOUS [to] LITTLEWIT, MRS. LITTLEWIT, [and] WINWIFE.

QUAR. Oh, sir, ha' you ta'en soil<sup>36</sup> here? It's well a man may reach you after three hours' running yet! What an unmerciful companion<sup>37</sup> art thou, to quit thy lodging at such ungentlemanly hours! None but a scatter'd covey of fiddlers, or one of these rag-rakers in dunghills, or some marrowbone man<sup>38</sup> at most, would have been up when thou wert gone abroad, by all description. I pray thee what ailest thou, thou canst not [10 sleep? Hast thou thorns i' thy eyelids, or thistles i' thy bed?

WINW. I cannot tell; it seems you had neither i' your feet, that took this pain to find me.

QUAR. No; an I had, all the lime-<sup>39</sup> hounds o' the city should have drawn after you by the scent rather. — Master John Littlewit! God save you, sir. 'T was a hot night with some of us, last night, John. Shall we [20

LIT. Do you remember, Master Quarlous, what we discours'd on last night?

QUAR. Not I, John, nothing that I either discourse or do; at those times I forfeit all to forgetfulness.

LIT. No? not concerning Win? Look you, there she is, and dress'd as I told you she should<sup>41</sup> be. Hark you, sir, [whispering]. — Had you forgot?

QUAR. By this head, I'll beware how I keep you company, John, when I [drink],<sup>42</sup> an you have this dangerous memory, that's certain!

LIT. Why, sir?

QUAR. Why? we were all a little stain'd last night, sprinkled with a cup or two, and I agreed with Proctor John here, to come and do somewhat with Win (I know not [40 what 't was] to-day; and he puts me in mind on 't now; he says he was coming to fetch me. Before truth, if you have that fearful quality, John, to remember when you are sober, John, what you promise drunk, John, I shall take heed of you, John. For this once I am content to wink at<sup>43</sup> you. Where's your wife? — Come hither, Win.

He kisseth her.

MRS. LIT. Why, John! Do you see this, John? Look you! help me, John. 50

LIT. O Win, fie, what do you mean, Win? Be womanly, Win; make an outcry to your mother, Win! Master Quarlous is an honest gentleman, and our worshipful good friend, Win; and he is Master Winwife's friend too; and Master Winwife comes a suitor to your mother, Win, as I told you before, Win, and may perhaps be our father, Win: they'll do you no harm, Win; they are both our worshipful good friends. Master Quarlous! you [60 must know Master Quarlous, Win; you must not quarrel with Master Quarlous, Win.

QUAR. No, we'll kiss again, and fall in.<sup>44</sup>

[Kisses her again.]

LIT. Yes, do, good Win.

MRS. LIT. I' faith, you are a fool, John.

LIT. A fool-John, she calls me; do you mark that, gentlemen? Pretty Littlewit of velvet! a fool-John!

QUAR. [aside] She may call you an apple-John,<sup>45</sup> if you use<sup>46</sup> this. 70

[Kisses her again.]

WINW. Pray thee, forbear, for my respect, somewhat.

QUAR. Hoy-day! how respective you are become o' the sudden! I fear this family will turn you reformed<sup>47</sup> too; pray you come about again.<sup>48</sup> Because she is in possibility to be your daughter-in-law, and may ask you blessing hereafter, when she courts it to Totnam,<sup>49</sup> to eat cream! Well, I will forbear, sir; but, i' faith, would thou wouldst [80 leave thy exercise of widow-hunting once, this drawing after an old reverend smock by the splay-foot!<sup>50</sup> There cannot be an ancient tripe or trillibub i' the town, but thou art straight nosing it; and 't is a fine occupation thou'lt confine thyself to when thou hast got one: scrubbing a piece of buff,<sup>51</sup> as if thou hadst the perpetuity of Pannier Alley<sup>52</sup> to stink in; or, perhaps, worse, currying a carcass that thou hast bound thyself to alive. [90 I'll be sworn, some of them that thou art or hast been a suitor to are so old as no chaste or married pleasure can ever become 'em; the honest instrument of procreation has forty years since left to belong to 'em; thou must visit 'em as thou wouldst do a tomb, with a torch or three handfuls of link,<sup>53</sup> flaming hot, and so thou mayst hap to make 'em feel thee, and after come to inherit<sup>54</sup> according to thy inches.<sup>55</sup> A sweet course for [100 a man to waste the brand of life for, to be still raking himself a fortune in an old woman's embers! We shall ha' thee, after thou hast been but a month married to one of 'em, look like the quartan ague<sup>56</sup> and the black jaundice met in a<sup>57</sup> face, and walk as if thou hadst borrow'd legs of a spinner<sup>58</sup> and voice of a cricket. I would endure to hear fifteen sermons a week for<sup>59</sup> her, and such coarse and loud ones as some of 'em must be! I [110 would e'en desire of fate I might dwell in a drum and take in my sustenance with an old broken tobacco pipe and a straw. Dost thou ever think to bring thine ears or stomach to the patience of a dry grace as long as thy tablecloth; and dron'd out by thy son here (that might be thy father), till all the meat o' thy board has forgot it was that day i' the kitchen?<sup>60</sup> or to brook the noise made in a question of predestination by the good labor- [120] ers and painful<sup>61</sup> eaters assembled together, put to 'em by the matron, your spouse, who moderates with a cup of wine ever and anon, and a sentence out of Knox between? or the perpetual spitting before and after a sober-drawn exhortation of six hours, whose better part was the hum-ha-hum? or to hear prayers groan'd out over thy iron chests, as if they were charms to break 'em? And all this, for the hope of two apostlespoons,<sup>62</sup> to [130] suffer! and a cup to eat a caudle in! For that will be thy legacy. She'll ha' convey'd her state<sup>63</sup> safe enough from thee, an she be a right widow.

WINW. Alas, I am quite off that scent now.

QUAR. How so?

WINW. Put off by a brother of Banbury, one that, they say, is come here, and governs all already. 140

QUAR. What do you call him? I knew divers of those Banburians when I was in Oxford.

WINW. Master Littlewit can tell us.

LIT. Sir! — Good Win, go in, and if Master Bartholomew Cokes his man come for the license (the little old fellow), let him speak with me. [Exit MRS. LITTLEWIT.] — What say you, gentlemen?

WINW. What call you the reverend [150] elder you told me of, your Banbury man?

LIT. Rabbi Busy, sir; he is more than an elder: he is a prophet, sir.

QUAR. Oh, I know him! a baker, is he not?

LIT. He was a baker, sir, but he does dream now and see visions; he has given over his trade.

QUAR. I remember that too — out of a scruple he took that, in spic'd conscience, those cakes he made were serv'd to bridals, [160] maypoles, morrises, and such profane feasts and meetings. His Christian name is Zeal-of-the-land.

LIT. Yes, sir; Zeal-of-the-land Busy.

WINW. How! what a name's there!

LIT. Oh, they have all such names, sir. He was witness for Win here — they will not be called godfathers — and nam'd her Win-the-fight; you thought her name had been Winifred, did you not? 170

WINW. I did indeed.

LIT. He would ha' thought himself a stark reprobate if it had.

QUAR. Ay, for there was a blue-starch woman o' the name at the same time.<sup>64</sup> A notable hypocritical vermin it is. I know him: one that stands upon his face<sup>65</sup> more than his faith at all times; ever in seditious motion and reproving for vainglory; of a most lunatic conscience and spleen, and [180] affects the violence of singularity in all he does. He has undone a grocer here in Newgate Market that broke with him, trusted him with curran[t]s; as errant a zeal as he (that's by the way). By his profession he will ever be i' the state of innocence, though, and childhood; derides all antiquity, defies any other learning than inspiration; and what discretion soever years should afford him, it is all prevented in his original igno- [190] rance. Ha' not to do with him, for he is a fellow of a most arrogant and invincible dullness, I assure you. — Who is this?

SCENE IV<sup>66</sup>

[Re-enter MRS. LITTLEWIT with] WASP [to] LITTLEWIT, WINWIFE, [and] QUARLOUS.

WASP. By your leave, gentlemen, with all my heart to you; and God you good morrow. — Master Littlewit, my business is to you. Is this license ready?

LIT. Here, I ha' it for you in my hand, Master Humphrey.

WASP. That's well; nay, never open or read it to me; it's labor in vain, you know. I am no clerk; I scorn to be sav'd by my book;<sup>67</sup> i' faith, I'll hang first. Fold it up [10] o' your word, and gi' it me. What must you ha' for 't?

<sup>67</sup> By benefit of clergy; Jonson himself by demonstrating his ability to read, was exempted from paying (though he was branded) a more serious penalty for killing the actor, Gabriel Spencer, in a duel.

LIT. We'll talk of that anon, Master Humphrey.

WASP. Now, or not at all, good Master Proctor; I am for no anons, I assure you.

LIT. Sweet Win, bid Solomon send me the little black box within in my study.

WASP. Ay, quickly, good mistress, I pray you; for I have both eggs o' the spit [20 and iron i' the fire. [Exit MRS. LITTLEWIT.]— Say what you must have, good Master Littlewit.

LIT. Why, you know the price, Master Numps.<sup>68</sup>

WASP. I know! I know nothing, I! what tell you me of knowing? Now I am in haste, sir, I do not know, and I will not know, and I scorn to know; and yet, now I think on't, I will, and do know as well [30 as another; you must have a mark<sup>69</sup> for your thing here, and eightpence for the box; I could ha' sav'd twopence i' that, an I had bought it myself; but here's fourteen shillings for you. Good Lord, how long your little wife stays! Pray God, Solomon, your clerk, be not looking i' the wrong box, Master Proctor.

LIT. Good i' faith! No, I warrant you; Solomon is wiser than so, sir. 40

WASP. Fic, fie, fie, by your leave, Master Littlewit, this is scurvy, idle, foolish, and abominable, with all my heart; I do not like it. [Walks aside.]

WINW. Do you hear, Jack Littlewit? What business does thy pretty head think this fellow may have, that he keeps such a coil<sup>70</sup> with?

QUAR. More than buying of gingerbread i' the cloister<sup>71</sup> here, for that we allow him, [50 or a gilt pouch in the Fair?

LIT. Master Quarlous, do not mistake him; he is his master's both-hands, I assure you.

QUAR. What? to pull on his boots a-mornings, or his stockings, does he?

LIT. Sir, if you have a mind to mock him, mock him softly, and look tother way; for if he apprehend you flout him once, he will fly at you presently. A terrible testy old [60 fellow, and his name is Wasp too.

QUAR. Pretty insect! Make much on him.

WASP. [returning] A plague o' this box, and the pox<sup>72</sup> too, and on him that made it, and her that went for't, and all that should ha' sought it, sent it, or brought it! do you see, sir?

LIT. Nay, good Master Wasp.

WASP. Good Master Hornet, turd i' [70 your teeth; hold you your tongue. Do not I know you? Your father was a pothecary, and sold glysters, more than he gave, I wusse.<sup>73</sup> And turd i' your little wife's teeth too — here she comes —

[Re-enter MRS. LITTLEWIT, with the box.]

'twill make her spit, as fine as she is, for all her velvet custard on her head, sir.

LIT. Oh! be civil, Master Numps.

WASP. Why, say I have a humor not to be civil; how then? who shall compel me? [80 you?

LIT. Here is the box now.

WASP. Why, a pox o' your box, once again! Let your little wife stale<sup>74</sup> in it, an she will. Sir, I would have you to understand, and these gentlemen too, if they please —

WINW. With all our hearts, sir.

WASP. That I have a charge, gentlemen.

LIT. They do apprehend, sir.

WASP. Pardon me, sir, neither they [90 nor you can apprehend me yet. You are an ass. I have a young master; he is now upon his making and marring; the whole care of his well-doing is now mine. His foolish schoolmasters have done nothing but run up and down the country with him to beg puddings and cake-bread of his tenants, and almost spoiled him; he has learn'd nothing but to sing catches and repeat, "Rattle, bladder, rattle!" and "O Madge!" I dare [100 not let him walk alone for fear of learning of vile tunes, which he will sing at supper and in the sermon-times! If he meet but a carman i' the street, and I find him not talk to keep him off on him, he will whistle him and all his tunes over at night in his sleep! He has a head full of bees. I am fain now, for this little time I am absent, to leave him in charge with a gentlewoman. 'Tis true, she is a justice of peace his wife, and a gentle- [110 woman o' the hood, and his natural sister; but what may happen under a woman's government, there's the doubt. Gentlemen, you do not know him; he is another manner of piece than you think for! but nineteen year old, and yet he is taller than either of you by the head, God bless him!

QUAR. [aside] Well, methinks this is a fine fellow! 119

WINW. [aside] He has made his master a finer by this description, I should think.

QUAR. [aside] 'Faith, much about one; it's cross and pile <sup>75</sup> whether for a new farthing.

WASP. I'll tell you, gentlemen —

LIT. Will 't please you drink, Master Wasp?

WASP. Why, I ha' not talk'd so long to be dry, sir. You see no dust or cobwebs come out o' my mouth, do you? You'd ha' me gone, would you?

LIT. No; but you were in haste e'en [130 now, Master Numps.

WASP. What an I were? So I am still, and yet I will stay too; meddle you with your match, your Win there; she has as little wit as her husband, it seems. I have others to talk to.

LIT. She's my match indeed, and as littlewit as I. Good!

WASP. We ha' been but a day and a half in town, gentlemen, 't is true; and yes- [140 terday i' the afternoon we walk'd London, to show the city to the gentlewoman he shall marry, Mistress Grace; but afore I will endure such another half day with him, I'll be drawn with a good gib-cat <sup>76</sup> through the great pond at home, as his uncle Hodge was! Why, we could not meet that heathen thing all day but stay'd him: he would name you all the signs over, as he went, aloud; and where he spied a parrot or a monkey, [150 there he was pitch'd, with all the little long coats <sup>77</sup> about him, male and female; no getting him away! I thought he would ha' run mad o' the black boy in Bucklersbury <sup>78</sup> that takes the scurvy, rogyu tobacco there.

LIT. You say true, Master Numps; there's such a one indeed.

WASP. It's no matter whether there be or no; what's that to you?

QUAR. [aside] He will not allow of [160 John's reading <sup>79</sup> at any hand.<sup>80</sup>

SCENE V

[Enter] COKES, MISTRESS OVERDO, [and] GRACE, [to] WASP, QUARLOUS, WINWIFE, LITTLEWIT, [and] MRS. LITTLEWIT.

COKES. Oh, Numps! are you here, Numps? Look where I am, Numps! and Mistress Grace too! Nay, do not look angrily, Numps; my sister is here and all; <sup>81</sup> I do not come without her.

WASP. What the mischief <sup>82</sup> do you come with her? or she with you?

COKES. We came all to seek you, Numps.

WASP. To seek me! Why, did you all think I was lost, or run away with your [10 fourteen shillings' worth of small ware here? or that I had chang'd it in the Fair for hobby-horses? 'Sprecious <sup>83</sup> — to seek me!

MRS. OVER. Nay, good Master Numps, do you show discretion, though he be exorbitant, as Master Overdo says, an't be but for conservation of the peace.

WASP. Marry gip, <sup>84</sup> Goody She-justice, Mistress French-hood! Turd 'n your teeth, and turd in your French-hood's teeth, [20 too, to do you service, do you see? Must you quote your Adam to me? You think you are Madam Regent still, Mistress Overdo, when I am in place! No such matter, I assure you; your reign is out when I am in, dame.

MRS. OVER. I am content to be in abeyance, sir, and be govern'd by you; so should he too, if he did well; but 't will be expected you should also govern your passions. [30

WASP. Will 't so, forsooth! Good Lord, how sharp you are, with being at Bedlam yesterday! Whetstone <sup>85</sup> has set an edge upon you, has he?

MRS. OVER. Nay, if you know not what belongs to your dignity, I do yet to mine.

"A fool may eek a wyse man ofte gyde.
A whetston is no kerving instrument,
And yet it maketh sharpe kerving-tolis."

Cf. also Ascham, Toxophilus (Whole Works, ed. Giles, 1864, II, 9): "Yet some man will marvel why that I being an imperfect shooter, should take in hand to write of making a perfect archer: the same man, perchance, will marvel how a whetstone, which is blunt, can make the edge of a knife sharp." Similarly, the senseless patients at Bedlam have served to set an edge on Mrs. Overdo. (Kittredge.)

WASP. Very well then.

COKES. Is this the license, Numps? For love's sake let me see 't; I never saw a license. 40

WASP. Did you not so? Why, you shall not see 't then.

COKES. An you love me, good Numps.

WASP. Sir, I love you, and yet I do not love you i' these fooleries. Set your heart at rest; there's nothing in't but hard words; and what would you see 't for?

COKES. I would see the length and the breadth on't, that's all; and I will see 't now, so I will. 50

WASP. You sha' not see it here.

COKES. Then I'll see 't at home, and I'll look upo' the case here.

WASP. Why, do so.—A man must give way to him a little in trifles, gentlemen. These are errors, diseases of youth, which he will mend when he comes to judgment and knowledge of matters. I pray you conceive so, and I thank you. And I pray you pardon him, and I thank you again. [Walks aside 60 with COKES, MRS. OVERDO, and GRACE.]

QUAR. Well, this dry nurse, I say still, is a delicate man.

WINW. And I am for the cosset,<sup>86</sup> his charge. Did you ever see a fellow's face more accuse him for an ass?

QUAR. Accuse him! It confesses him one without accusing. What pity 't is yonder wench should marry such a Cokes! <sup>87</sup>

WINW. 'T is true.

QUAR. She seems to be discreet, and [70 as sober as she is handsome.

WINW. Ay, and, if you mark her, what a restrain'd scorn she casts upon all his behavior and speeches!

COKES. Well, Numps, I am now for another piece of business more—the Fair, Numps, and then—

WASP. Bless me! deliver me! help, hold me! the Fair! 79

COKES. Nay, never fidge up and down, Numps, and vex itself.<sup>88</sup> I am resolute Bartholomew in this; I'll make no suit on't to you; 't was all the end of my journey indeed, to show Mistress Grace my Fair. I call 't my Fair, because of Bartholomew: you know my name is Bartholomew, and Bartholomew Fair.

LIT. That was mine afore, gentlemen; this morning. I had that, i' faith, upon his license; believe me, there he comes after me. [90

QUAR. Come, John, this ambitious wit of yours, I am afraid, will do you no good i' the end.

LIT. No? why, sir?

QUAR. You grow so insolent with it, and overdoing, John, that if you look not to it, and tie it up, it will bring you to some obscure place in time, and there 't will leave you.

WINW. Do not trust it too much, John; be more sparing, and use it but now and [100 then; a wit is a dangerous thing in this age; do not overbuy it.

LIT. Think you so, gentlemen? I'll take heed on't hereafter.

MRS. LIT. Yes, do, John.

COKES. A pretty little soul, this same Mistress Littlewit; would I might marry her.

GRACE. [aside] So would I, or anybody else,<sup>89</sup> so <sup>90</sup> I might scape you. 109

COKES. Numps, I will see it, Numps; 't is decreed; never be melancholy for the matter.

WASP. Why, see it, sir, see it, do see it! Who hinders you? Why do you not go see it? 'Slid, see it!

COKES. The Fair, Numps, the Fair!

WASP. Would the Fair and all the drums and rattles in 't were i' your belly for me.<sup>91</sup> They are already i' your brain! He that had the means to travel your head now, should meet finer sights than any are i' the Fair, [120 and make a finer voyage on't; to see it all hung with cockleshells, pebbles, fine wheat straws, and here and there a chicken's feather, and a cobweb.

QUAR. [aside] Good faith, he looks, methinks, an you mark him, like one that were made to catch flies, with his Sir Cranion legs.<sup>92</sup>

WINW. [aside] And his Numps,<sup>93</sup> to flap 'em away. 129

WASP. God be w' you, sir! There's your bee in a box, and much good do't you!

[Gives COKES the box.]

COKES. Why, your friend, and Bartholomew, an you be so contumacious.

QUAR. What mean you, Numps?

[Takes WASP aside as he is going out.]

<sup>88</sup> For all of me, as far as I am concerned.

WASP. I'll not be guilty, I, gentlemen.

MRS. OVER. You will not let him go, Brother, and lose him?

COKES. Who can hold that will away?<sup>94</sup> I had rather lose him than the Fair, I wusse. 140

WASP. You do not know the inconvenience, gentlemen, you persuade to, nor what trouble I have with him in these humors. If he go to the Fair, he will buy of everything to a baby there, and household stuff for that<sup>95</sup> too. If a leg or an arm on him did not grow on, he would lose it i' the press. Pray Heaven I bring him off with one stone!<sup>96</sup> And then he is such a ravener after fruit! You will not believe what a coil I had tother day [150 to compound a business between a Cat'er'ne-pear<sup>97</sup> woman and him, about snatching! 'T is intolerable, gentlemen.

WINW. Oh! but you must not leave him now to these hazards, Numps.

WASP. Nay, he knows too well I will not leave him; and that makes him presume.—Well, sir, will you go now? If you have such an itch i' your feet, to foot it to the Fair, why do you stop? Am I your tarriers? Go, [160 will you go, sir? why do you not go?

COKES. Oh, Numps! Have I brought you about?—Come, Mistress Grace, and Sister; I am resolute Bat,<sup>98</sup> i' faith, still.

GRA. Truly, I have no such fancy to the Fair, nor ambition to see it; there's none goes thither of any quality<sup>99</sup> or fashion.

COKES. O Lord, sir! You shall pardon me, Mistress Grace; we are enow of ourselves to make it a fashion; and, for qualities, let Numps alone—he'll find qualities. 171

[Exeunt COKES, MISTRESS OVERDO, GRACE, and WASP.]

QUAR. What a rogue in apprehension is this, to understand her language no better!

WINW. Ay, and offer to marry to her! Well, I will leave the chase of my widow for to-day, and directly to the Fair. These flies cannot, this hot season, but engender us excellent creeping sport.

QUAR. A man that has but a spoonful of brain would think so.—Farewell, John. 180

[Exeunt QUARLOUS and WINWIFE.]

LIT. Win, you see 't is in fashion to go to the Fair, Win; we must to the Fair too,

you and I, Win. I have an affair i' the Fair, Win, a puppet-play of mine own making (say nothing), that I writ for the motion<sup>100</sup> man, which you must see, Win.

MRS. LIT. I would I might, John; but my mother will never consent to such a profane motion,<sup>101</sup> she will call it. 189

LIT. Tut! we'll have a device, a dainty one.—Now, Wit, help at a pinch, good Wit, come, come, good Wit, an't be thy will!—I have it, Win; I have it, i' faith, and 't is a fine one. Win, long<sup>102</sup> to eat of a pig, sweet Win, i' the Fair, do you see? i' the heart o' the Fair, not at Pie Corner.<sup>103</sup> Your mother will do anything, Win, to satisfy your longing, you know; pray thee long presently; and be sick o' the sudden, good Win. I'll go in and tell her; cut thy lace i' the meantime, and [200 play the hypocrite, sweet Win.

MRS. LIT. No, I'll not make me unready<sup>104</sup> for it. I can be hypocrite enough, though I were never so straight-lac'd.

LIT. You say true, you have been bred i' the family, and brought up to 't. Our mother is a most elect hypocrite, and has maintain'd us all this seven year with it like gentlefolks. 209

MRS. LIT. Ay, let her alone, John; she is not a wise, wilful widow for nothing, nor a sanctified sister for a song. And let me alone too; I ha' somewhat o' the mother in me, you shall see; fetch her, fetch her. [Exit LITTLEWIT.]—Ah! ah!

SCENE VI<sup>105</sup>

[Re-enter] LITTLEWIT [with DAME] PURECRAFT, [to] MRS. LITTLEWIT.

PURE. Now the blaze of the beauteous discipline<sup>106</sup> fright away this evil from our house!—How now, Win-the-fight, child! How do you? Sweet child, speak to me.

MRS. LIT. Yes, forsooth.

PURE. Look up, sweet Win-the-fight, and suffer not the enemy to enter you at this door. Remember that your education has been with the purest. What polluted one was it that nam'd first the unclean beast, [10 pig, to you, child?

<sup>106</sup> Ecclesiastical system; i.e., of the reformers.

Mrs. Lit. Uh, uh !

Lit. Not I, o' my sincerity, Mother. She long'd above three hours ere she would let me know it. — Who was it, Win?

Mrs. Lit. A profane black thing with a beard, John.

Pure. Oh, resist it, Win-the-fight : it is the tempter, the wicked tempter ; you may know it by the fleshly motion of pig. Be [20 strong against it and its foul temptations in these assaults, whereby it broacheth flesh and blood, as it were on the weaker side ; and pray against its carnal provocations ; good child, sweet child, pray.

Lit. Good Mother, I pray you that she may eat some pig, and her bellyful too ; and do not you cast away your own child, and perhaps one of mine, with your tale of the tempter. How do you, Win? Are you [30 not sick?

Mrs. Lit. Yes, a great deal, John. — Uh, uh !

Pure. What shall we do? Call our zealous brother Busy hither, for his faithful fortification in this charge of the Adversary. [Exit LITTLEWIT.] — Child, my dear child, you shall eat pig ; be comforted, my sweet child.

Mrs. Lit. Ay, but i' the Fair, Mother. [40

Pure. I mean i' the Fair, if it can be any way made or found lawful.

[Re-enter LITTLEWIT.]

Where is our brother Busy? Will he not come? — Look up, child.

Lit. Presently, Mother, as soon as he has cleans'd his beard. I found him fast by the teeth i' the cold turkey pie i' the cupboard, with a great white loaf on his left hand, and a glass of malmsey on his right. 49

Pure. Slander not the brethren, wicked one.

Lit. Here he is now, purified, Mother.

[Enter ZEAL-OF-THE-LAND BUSY.]

Pure. O brother Busy! your help here, to edify and raise us up in a scruple. My daughter Win-the-fight is visited with a natural disease <sup>107</sup> of women, call'd a longing to eat pig.

Lit. Ay, sir, a Bartholomew pig ; and in the Fair. 59

Pure. And I would be satisfied from you, religiously-wise, whether a widow of the sanctified assembly, or a widow's daughter, may commit the act without offence to the weaker sisters.

Busy. Verily, for the disease of longing, it is a disease, a carnal disease or appetite, incident to women ; and, as it is carnal and incident, it is natural, very natural. Now pig, it is a meat, and a meat that is nourishing and may be long'd for, and so consequently [70 eaten ; it may be eaten, very exceeding well eaten. But in the Fair, and as a Bartholomew pig, it cannot be eaten ; for the very calling it a Bartholomew pig, and to eat it so, is a spice of idolatry, and you make the Fair no better than one of the high places.<sup>108</sup> This, I take it, is the state of the question : a high place.

Lit. Ay, but in state of necessity, place should give place, Master Busy. (I have a conceit left yet.) 81

Pure. Good Brother Zeal-of-the-land, think to make it as lawful as you can.

Lit. Yes, sir, and as soon as you can ; for it must be, sir. You see the danger my little wife is in, sir.

Pure. Truly, I do love my child dearly, and I would not have her miscarry, or hazard her first fruits, if it might be otherwise. 89

Bus. Surely, it may be otherwise ; but it is subject to construction — subject ; and hath a face of offence,<sup>109</sup> with the weak ; a great face, a foul face. But that face may have a veil put over it, and be shadowed, as it were : it may be eaten, and in the Fair, I take it, in a booth — the tents of the wicked : the place is not much, not very much ; we may be religious in midst of the profane — so it be eaten with a reformed mouth, with sobriety and humbleness ; not [100 gorg'd in with gluttony or greediness — there's the fear. For, should she go there as taking pride in the place, or delight in the unclean dressing, to feed the vanity of the eye or the lust of the palate, it were not well, it were not fit, it were abominable, and not good.

Lit. Nay, I knew that afore, and told her on't. — But courage, Win ; we'll be humble enough : we'll seek out the homeliest booth i' the Fair, that's certain ; rather than fail, we'll eat it o' the ground. 112

Pure. Ay, and I'll go with you myself,

<sup>108</sup> Where the Jews were sometimes seduced into the worship of the heathen gods.

Win-the-fight, and my brother Zeal-of-the-land shall go with us too, for our better consolation.

MRS. LIT. Uh, uh!

LIT. Ay, and Solomon too, Win; the more the merrier. — [aside] Win, we'll leave Rabbi Busy in a booth. — Solomon, my cloak. 120

[Enter SOLOMON with the cloak.]

SOL. Here, sir.

BUS. In the way of comfort to the weak, I will go and eat. I will eat exceedingly, and prophesy; there may be a good use made of it too, now I think on 't: by the public eating of swine's flesh, to profess our hate and loathing of Judaism, whereof the brethren stand taxed. I will therefore eat; yea, I will eat exceedingly. 129

LIT. Good, i' faith; I will eat heartily too, because I will be no Jew; I could never away with <sup>110</sup> that stiff-necked generation. And truly, I hope my little one will be like me, that cries for pig so i' the mother's belly.

BUS. Very likely, exceeding likely, very exceeding likely.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[A number of booths, stalls, etc., set out. LANTERN LEATHERHEAD, JOAN TRASH, and others, sitting by their wares. Enter JUSTICE OVERDO, [disguised; he stands aside.]

OVER. Well, in Justice' name, and the King's, and for the Commonwealth! Defy all the world, Adam Overdo, for a disguise, and all story; for thou hast fitted thyself, I swear. Fain would I meet the Lynceus<sup>2</sup> now, that eagle's eye, that piercing Epidaurian serpent (as my Quintus Horace<sup>3</sup> calls him), that could discover a justice of peace (and lately of the Quorum),<sup>4</sup> under this covering. They may have seen many a fool in the [10 habit of a justice; but never till now, a justice in the habit of a fool. Thus must we do though, that wake for the public good; and thus hath the wise magistrate done in all ages. There is a doing of right out of wrong, if the way be found. Never shall I enough commend a worthy worshipful man,<sup>5</sup> sometime a capital member of this city, for his high wisdom in this point, who would take you now the habit of a porter, now of a car- [20 man, now of the dog-killer, in this month of August;<sup>6</sup> and in the winter, of a seller of tinderboxes. And what would he do in all these shapes? Marry, go you into every ale-house, and down into every cellar; measure the length of puddings,<sup>7</sup> take the gauge of black pots and cans, ay, and custards, with a stick; and their circumference, with a thread; weigh the loaves of bread on his middle finger; then would he send for 'em [30 home; give the puddings to the poor, the bread to the hungry, the custards to his children; break the pots, and burn the cans, himself: he would not trust his corrupt officers; he would do 't himself. Would all men in authority would follow this worthy precedent!<sup>8</sup> for, alas, as we are public persons, what do we know? nay, what can we know? We hear with other men's ears, we see with other men's eyes! A foolish constable or [40 a sleepy watchman is all our information. He slanders a gentleman by the virtue of his place, as he calls it, and we, by the vice of ours, must believe him. As, awhile ago, they made me, yea, me, to mistake an honest zealous pursuivant<sup>9</sup> for a seminary;<sup>10</sup> and a proper<sup>11</sup> young bachelor of music, for a bawd. This we are subject to that live in high place; all our intelligence is idle, and most of our intelligencers,<sup>12</sup> knaves; and, by your [50 leave, ourselves thought little better, if not errant fools, for believing 'em. I, Adam Overdo, am resolv'd therefore to spare spy-money hereafter, and make mine own discoveries. Many are the yearly enormities of this Fair, in whose courts of Pie-powders<sup>13</sup> I have had the honor, during the three days, sometimes to sit as judge. But this is the special day for detection of those foresaid enormities. Here is my black book for [60 the purpose; this the cloud that hides me;

under this covert I shall see and not be seen. On, Junius Brutus!<sup>14</sup> And, as I began, so I'll end; in Justice' name, and the King's, and for the Commonwealth!

SCENE II<sup>15</sup>

[OVERDO overhears] LEATHERHEAD
[and] TRASH.

LEATH. The Fair's pestilence<sup>16</sup> dead me-thinks; people come not abroad to-day, whatever the matter is. — Do you hear, Sister Trash, Lady o' the Basket? Sit farther with your gingerbread progeny there, and hinder not the prospect of my shop, or I'll ha' it proclaim'd i' the Fair, what stuff they are made on.

TRASH. Why, what stuff are they made on, Brother Leatherhead? Nothing but [10 what's wholesome, I assure you.

LEATH. Yes, stale bread, rotten eggs, musty ginger, and dead honey, you know.

OVER. Ay! have I met with enormity so soon? [Makes a note in his black book.]

LEATH. I shall mar your market, old Joan.

TRASH. Mar my market, thou too-proud peddler? Do thy worst; I defy thee, ay, and thy stable of hobbyhorses. I pay for my ground as well as thou dost. An thou [20 wrong'st me, for all thou art parcel-poet<sup>17</sup> and an inginer,<sup>18</sup> I'll find a friend shall right me and make a ballad of thee and thy cattle all over. Are you puff'd up with the pride of your wares, your arsedine?<sup>19</sup>

LEATH. Go to, old Joan, I'll talk with you anon; and take you down, too, afore Justice Overdo. He is the man must charm<sup>20</sup> you; I'll have you in the Pie-powders.

TRASH. Charm me? I'll meet thee [30 face to face, afore his Worship, when thou dar'st; and, though I be a little crooked o' my body, I'll be found as upright in my dealing as any woman in Smithfield, I. Charm me!

OVER. [aside] I am glad to hear my name is their terror yet; this is doing of justice!

<sup>14</sup> Overdo thinks of himself as no less zealous for the state.

<sup>16</sup> Plaguy. As a matter of fact the Fair had been suspended in 1603 on account of the plague.

[Enter Passengers; they cross the stage and exeunt.]

LEATH. What do you lack? what is 't you buy? what do you lack? rattles, drums, halberts, horses, babies o' the best, fiddles [40 o' th' finest!

Enter Costermonger.

COST. Buy any pears, pears, fine, very fine pears? [Exit Costardmonger.]

TRASH. Buy any gingerbread, gilt gingerbread?

[Enter NIGHTINGALE.]

NIGHT. Hey, [Sings.]

Now the Fair's a-filling!
Oh, for a tune to startle
The birds o' the booths here billing,
Yearly with old Saint Bartle! 50
The drunkards they are wading,
The punks and chapmen<sup>21</sup> trading;
Who'd see the Fair without his lading?

Buy any ballads, new ballads?

[Enter URSULA from inside her booth.]

URS. Fie upon't! who would wear out their youth and prime thus in roasting of pigs that had any cooler vocation? Hell's a kind of cold cellar to't, a very fine vault, o' my conscience! — What, Mooncalf!

MOON. [within] Here, Mistress. 60

NIGHT. How now, Urs'la? in a heat, in a heat?

URS. [to MOONCALF] My chair, you false faucet, you; and my morning's draught, quickly: a bottle of ale, to quench me, rascal. — I am all fire and fat, Nightingale; I shall e'en melt away to the first woman, a rib again, I am afraid. I do water the ground in knots, as I go, like a great garden pot; you may follow me by the esses<sup>22</sup> I make. 70

NIGHT. Alas, good Urs. Was Zekiel here this morning?

URS. Zekiel? what Zekiel?

NIGHT. Zekiel Edgeworth, the civil cutpurse — you know him well enough: he that talks bawdy to you still; I call him my secretary.

URS. He promis'd to be here this morning, I remember.

NIGHT. When he comes, bid him stay; I'll be back again presently. 81

URS. Best take your morning's dew in your belly, Nightingale. —

MOONCALF brings in the chair.

Come, sir, set it here ; did not I bid you should get this chair let out o' the sides for me, that my hips might play? You'll never think of anything till your dame be rump-gall'd. 'Tis well, changeling ;<sup>23</sup> because it can take in your grasshopper's thighs, you care for no more. Now you look as you had been i' [90 the corner o' the booth, fleaing your breech with a candle's end, and set fire o' the Fair. Fill, stoat,<sup>24</sup> fill.

OVER. [aside] This pig woman do I know and I will put her in, for my second enormity ; [making a note] she hath been before me, punk, pinnace,<sup>25</sup> and hawd, any time these two-and-twenty years upon record i' the Pie-powders.

URS. Fill again, you unlucky vermin !

MOON. Pray you be not angry, Mistress ; I'll ha' it widen'd anon. 101

URS. No, no, I shall e'en dwindle away to 't ere the Fair be done, you think, now you ha' heated me ! A poor vex'd thing I am ; I feel myself dropping already as fast as I can ; two stone a' suet a day is my proportion. I can but hold life and soul together with this (here's to you, Nightingale), — and a whiff of tobacco at most. — Where's my pipe now? not fill'd? thou arrant incubee.<sup>26</sup> [110

NIGHT. Nay, Urs'la, thou'lt gall between the tongue and the teeth, with fretting, now.

URS. How can I hope that ever he'll discharge his place of trust, tapster, a man of reckoning under me, that remembers nothing I say to him? [Exit NIGHTINGALE.] — But look to 't, sirrah, you were best. Threepence a pipeful I will ha' made of all my whole half pound of tobacco, and a quarter [120 of a pound of coltsfoot mix'd with it too, to [eke]<sup>27</sup> it out. I, that have dealt so long in the fire, will not be to seek in<sup>28</sup> smoke now. Then six-and-twenty shillings a barrel I will advance o' my beer, and fifty shillings a hundred o' my bottle-ale ; I ha' told you the ways how to raise it. Froth your cans well i' the filling, at length, rogue, and jog your bottles o' the buttock, sirrah ; then skink out<sup>29</sup> the first glass ever, and drink with all companies, though you be sure to be drunk — [131 you'll misreckon the better, and be less asham'd on't. But your true trick, rascal, must be to be ever busy, and mistake away the bottles and cans, in haste, before they be half drunk off, and never hear anybody call (if they should chance to mark you), till you ha' brought fresh, and be able to forswear 'em. Give me a drink of ale.

OVER. [aside] This is the very womb [140 and bed of enormity ! gross as herself ! This must all down for enormity, all, every whit on't. [Makes another note.] — One knocks.

URS. Look who's there, sirrah ; five shillings a pig is my price, at least ; if it be a sow pig, sixpence more. If she be a great-bellied wife and long for't, sixpence more for that.

[Exit MOONCALF.]

OVER. [aside] O tempora ! O mores ! I would not ha' lost my discovery of this one grievance, for my place and worship o' the bench. [150 How is the poor subject abus'd here ! Well, I will fall in with her and with her Mooncalf, and win out wonders of enormity. —

[Re-enter MOONCALF.]

By thy leave, goodly woman, and the fatness of the Fair, oily as the King's constable's lamp, and shining as his shoeing-horn ! Hath thy ale virtue,<sup>30</sup> or thy beer strength, that the tongue of man may be tickled, and his palate pleas'd in the morning? Let thy pretty nephew<sup>31</sup> here go search and see. [160

URS. What new roarer<sup>32</sup> is this?

MOON. O Lord, do you not know him, Mistress? 'tis mad Arthur of Bradley,<sup>33</sup> that makes the orations. — Brave master, old Arthur of Bradley, how do you? Welcome to the Fair ! When shall we hear you again, to handle your matters,<sup>34</sup> with your back again' a booth, ha? I ha' been one o' your little disciples i' my days !

OVER. Let me drink, boy, with my [170 love, thy aunt here, that I may be eloquent : but of thy best, lest it be bitter in my mouth, and my words fall foul on the Fair.

URS. Why dost thou not fetch him drink, and offer him to sit?

<sup>26</sup> There was a whimsical popular character of this name, about whom ballads were composed. But, though "mad" may be equivalent to "eccentric", Overdo has told us that he is in the garb of a fool. There may be a topical allusion here.

MOON. Is it ale or beer, Master Arthur?

OVER. Thy best, pretty stripling, thy best; the same thy dove drinketh and thou drawest on holidays.

URS. [aside to MOONCALF] Bring him [180 a sixpenny bottle of ale; they say a fool's handsel<sup>35</sup> is lucky.

OVER. Bring both, child. Ale for Arthur, and beer for Bradley. Ale for thine aunt, boy. [Exit MOONCALF.]—[aside] My disguise takes to the very wish and reach of it. I shall, by the benefit of this, discover enough and more, and yet get off with the reputation of what I would be—a certain middling thing, between a fool and a madman. 190

SCENE III<sup>36</sup>

[Enter] KNOCKHUM to them.

KNOCK. What, my little lean Urs! la! my she-bear!<sup>37</sup> art thou alive yet, with thy litter of pigs to grunt out another Bartholomew Fair? ha?

URS. Yes, and to amble afoot, when the Fair is done, to hear you groan out of a car, up the heavy hill.<sup>38</sup>

KNOCK. Of Holborn,<sup>39</sup> Urs! la; mean'st thou so? For what, for what, pretty Urs?

URS. For cutting halfpenny purses, or [10 stealing little penny dogs out o' the Fair.

KNOCK. Oh! good words, good words, Urs!

OVER. [aside] Another special enormity. A cutpurse of the sword, the boot, and the feather! those are his marks. [Makes another note.]

[Re-enter MOONCALF with the ale, etc.]

URS. You are one of those horseleeches that gave out I was dead, in Turnbull Street, of a surfeit of bottle-ale and tripes!

KNOCK. No, 't was better meat, Urs: cows' udders, cows' udders! 21

URS. Well, I shall be meet<sup>40</sup> with your mumbling mouth one day.

KNOCK. What! thou'lt poison me with a newt in a bottle of ale, wilt thou? or a spider in a tobacco pipe, Urs? Come, there's no malice in these fat folks! I never fear thee,

an I can scape thy lean Mooncalf here. Let's drink it out, good Urs, and no vapors!<sup>41</sup> 29

[Exit URSULA.]

OVER. Dost thou hear, boy? There's for thy ale, and the remnant for thee.—[aside to MOONCALF] Speak in thy faith of a faucet now; is this goodly person before us here, this vapors, a knight of the knife?

MOON. [aside to OVERDO] What mean you by that, Master Arthur?

OVER. [aside to MOONCALF] I mean a child of the horn-thumb,<sup>42</sup> a babe of booty, boy, a cutpurse. 39

MOON. [aside to OVERDO] O Lord, sir! far from it. This is Master Dan Knockhum: Jordan,<sup>43</sup> the ranger of Turnbull.<sup>44</sup> He is a horse-courser, sir.

OVER. [aside to MOONCALF] Thy dainty dame, though, call'd him cutpurse.

MOON. [aside to OVERDO] Like enough, sir; she'll do forty such things in an hour, an you listen to her, for her recreation, if the toy take her i' the greasy kerchief:<sup>45</sup> it makes her fat, you see; she battens with it. 50

OVER. [aside] Here might I ha' been deceiv'd now, and ha' put a fool's blot upon myself, if I had not play'd an after game<sup>46</sup> o' discretion!

URS! LA comes in again, dropping.<sup>47</sup>

KNOCK. Alas, poor Urs! this 's an ill season for thee.

URS. Hang yourself, hackneyman!

KNOCK. How, how, Urs! vapors? motion breed vapors? 59

URS. Vapors! Never tusk,<sup>48</sup> nor twirl your dibble,<sup>49</sup> good Jordan; I know what you'll take to a very drop. Though you be captain o' the roarers, and fight well at the case of pisspots,<sup>50</sup> you shall not fright me with your lion-chap,<sup>51</sup> sir, nor your tusks.

You angry? You are hungry. Come, a pig's head will stop your mouth, and stay your stomach at all times.

KNOCK. Thou art such another mad, [69 merry Urs, still! Troth, I do make conscience of vexing thee now i' the dog days, this hot weather, for fear of found'ring thee i' the body, and melting down a pillar of the Fair. Pray thee, take thy chair again, and keep state, and let's have a fresh bottle of ale and a pipe of tobacco, and no vapors. I'll ha' this belly o' thine taken up, and thy grass<sup>62</sup> scour'd, wench. — Look, here's Ezekiel Edgeworth; a fine boy of his inches, as any is i' the Fair! has still money in his purse, [80 and will pay all, with a kind heart and good vapors.

SCENE IV<sup>63</sup>

[Enter] EDGEWORTH to them.

EDG. That I will indeed, willingly, Master Knockum. — Fetch some ale and tobacco.

[Exit MOONCALF. Passengers cross the stage.]

LEATH. What do you lack, gentlemen? — Maid, see a fine hobbyhorse for your young master; cost you but a token a week his provender.

[Enter Corn-cutter and Tinderbox Man.]

CORN. Ha' you any corns i' your feet and toes?

TIN. Buy a mousetrap, a mousetrap, or a tormentor<sup>64</sup> for a flea? 10

TRASH. Buy some gingerbread?

[Enter NIGHTINGALE.]

NIGHT. Ballads, ballads! fine new ballads! Hear for your love, and buy for your money, A delicate ballad o' "The Ferret and the Coney";<sup>65</sup>

A preservative again' the punk's evil;
Another of goose-green starch<sup>66</sup> and the Devil;

"A Dozen of Divine Points";<sup>67</sup> and "The Godly Garters";

<sup>62</sup> Grasso, a contemporary horse-doctor's term for fat. It was to be scoured by "natural and gentle purging medicines." (Alden.)

<sup>65</sup> Pronounced, and often spelled, cunny. Here it means the dupe of the ferret, the seller in the commodity swindle, already explained more than once. See on The Alchemist, III, iv, 90.

<sup>67</sup> Tagged laces which held various portions of the clothing together.

"The Fairing of Good Counsel," of an ell and three-quarters.

(What is't you buy?)

The windmill blown down by the witch's fart, 20

Or "Saint George," that, oh! did break the dragon's heart?

[Re-enter MOONCALF.]

EDG. Master Nightingale, come hither; leave your mart a little.

NIGHT. Oh, my secretary! what says my secretary? [They step aside.]

OVER. Child o' the bottles, what's he? what<sup>68</sup> he? [Points to EDGEWORTH.]

MOON. A civil young gentleman, Master Arthur, that keeps company with the roarers, and disburses all still. He has ever money [30 in his purse; he pays for them, and they roar for him; one does good offices for another. They call him the secretary, but he serves nobody. A great friend of the ballad man's; they are never asunder.

OVER. What pity 't is, so civil a young man should haunt this debauch'd company! Here's the bane of the youth of our time apparent. A proper penman, I see 't in his countenance; he has a good clerk's look [40 with him, and, I warrant him, a quick hand.

MOON. A very quick hand, sir! [Exit.]

EDG. All the purses and purchase<sup>69</sup> I give you to-day by conveyance, bring hither to Urs'la's presently. Here we will meet at night in her lodge, and share. Look you choose good places for your standing i' the Fair, when you sing, Nightingale. (This they whisper, that OVERDO hears it not.)

URS. Ay, near the fullest passages; and shift 'em often. 50

EDG. And i' your singing you must use your hawk's eye nimbly, and fly the purse to a mark<sup>70</sup> still, where 't is worn, and o' which side; that you may gi' me the sign with your beak, or hang your head that way i' the tune.

URS. Enough, talk no more on 't: your friendship, masters, is not now to begin. Drink your draught of indenture,<sup>71</sup> your sup of covenant, and away. The Fair fills apace, company begins to come in, and I have [60 ne'er a pig ready yet.

KNOCK. Well said! Fill the cups, and light the tobacco: let's give fire i' th' works, and noble vapors.

EDG. And shall we ha' smocks,<sup>62</sup> Urs'la, and good whimsies,<sup>62</sup> ha?

URS. Come, you are i' your bawdy vein! The best the Fair will afford, Zekiel, if bawd Whit keep his word. —

[Re-enter MOONCALF.]

How do the pigs, Mooncalf? 70

MOON. Very passionate, Mistress; one on 'em has wept out an eye.<sup>63</sup> Master Arthur o' Bradley is melancholy here: nobody talks to him. — Will you any tobacco, Master Arthur?

OVER. No, boy; let my meditations alone.

MOON. He's studying for an oration now.

OVER. [aside] If I can with this day's travail, and all my policy, but rescue this youth here out of the hands of the lewd man and [80 the strange woman,<sup>64</sup> I will sit down at night, and say with my friend Ovid, "Jamque opus exegi, quod nec Jovis ira, nec ignis," etc.<sup>65</sup>

KNOCK. Here, Zekiel, here's a health to Urs'la, and a kind vapor; thou hast money i' thy purse still, and store! How dost thou come by it? Pray thee, vapor thy friends some in a courteous vapor.

EDG. Half I have, Master Dan Knockhum, is always at your service. 90

OVER. [aside] Ha, sweet nature! what goshawk would prey upon such a lamb?

KNOCK. Let's see what 't is, Zekiel; count it. Come, fill him to pledge me.

SCENE V <sup>66</sup>

[Enter] WINWIFE [and] QUARLOUS to them.

WINW. We are here before 'em, methinks.

QUAR. All the better; we shall see 'em come in now.

LEATH. What do you lack, gentlemen, what is't you lack? a fine horse? a lion? a bull? a bear? a dog or a cat? an excellent fine Bartholomew bird? or an instrument? What is't you lack?

QUAR. 'Slid! here's Orpheus among the beasts, with his fiddle and all! 10

<sup>63</sup> A sign it is nearly done.

TRASH. Will you buy any comfortable bread,<sup>67</sup> gentlemen?

QUAR. And Ceres selling her daughter's <sup>68</sup> picture, in ginger-work!

WINW. That these people should be so ignorant to think us chapmen<sup>69</sup> for 'em! Do we look as if we would buy gingerbread, or hobbyhorses?

QUAR. Why, they know no better ware than they have, nor better customers than [20 come. And our very being here makes us fit to be demanded, as well as others. Would Cokes would come! there were a true customer for 'em!

KNOCK. [to EDGEWORTH] How much is 't? thirty shillings? Who's yonder? Ned Winwife and Tom Quarlous, I think! Yes. Gi' me it all, gi' me it all.<sup>70</sup> — Master Winwife! Master Quarlous! will you take a pipe of tobacco with us? — Do not discredit me now, [30 Zekiel. [EDGEWORTH gives him his purse.]

WINW. [aside to QUARLOUS] Do not see him; he is the roaring horse-courser; pray thee, let's avoid him: turn down this way.

QUAR. [aside] 'Slud, I'll see him, and roar with him, too, an he roar'd as loud as Neptune; pray thee, go with me.

WINW. [aside] You may draw me to as likely an inconvenience,<sup>71</sup> when you please, as this. 40

QUAR. [aside] Go to, then; come along; we ha' nothing to do, man, but to see sights now.

[They advance to URSULA'S booth.]

KNOCK. Welcome, Master Quarlous, and Master Winwife! Will you take any froth and smoke with us?

QUAR. Yes, sir; but you'll pardon us if we knew not of so much familiarity between us afore.

KNOCK. As what, sir? 50

QUAR. To be so lightly invited to smoke and froth.

KNOCK. A good vapor! Will you sit down, sir? This is old Urs'la's mansion — how like you her bower? Here you may ha' your punk and your pig in state, sir, both piping hot.

QUAR. I had rather ha' my punk cold,<sup>72</sup> sir.

<sup>71</sup> As promising a piece of mischief.

OVER. [aside] There's for me : punk ! and pig ! 60

[Makes another note.]

URS. [calls within.] What Mooncalf, you rogue !

MOON. By and by ; <sup>73</sup> the bottle is almost off, <sup>74</sup> Mistress. — Here, Master Arthur.

URS. [within] I'll part you and your play-fellow there i' the guarded <sup>75</sup> coat, an you sunder not the sooner.

KNOCK. Master Winwife, you are proud, methinks ; you do not talk, nor drink ; are you proud ? 70

WINW. Not of the company I am in, sir, nor the place, I assure you.

KNOCK. You do not except at the company, do you ? are you in vapors, sir ?

MOON. Nay, good Master Dan Knockhum, respect my mistress' bower, as you call it ; for the honor of our booth, none o' your vapors here.

[URSULA comes out with a firebrand.]

URS. [aside to MOONCALF] Why, you thin, lean polecat you, an they have a mind [80 to be i' their vapors, must you hinder 'em ? What did you know, vermin, if they would ha' lost a cloak, or such a trifle ? Must you be drawing the air of pacification here, while I am tormented within i' the fire, you weasel ?

MOON. [aside to URSULA] Good Mistress, 't was in the behalf of your booth's credit <sup>76</sup> that I spoke.

URS. [aside to MOONCALF] Why ! would my booth ha' broke <sup>77</sup> if they had fall'n out [90 in 't, sir ? or would their heat ha' fir'd it ? — In, you rogue, and wipe the pigs, and mend the fire, that they fall not, or I'll both baste and roast you till your eyes drop out, like 'em. Leave the bottle behind you, and be curs'd <sup>78</sup> awhile ! [Exit MOONCALF.]

QUAR. Body o' the Fair ! <sup>79</sup> what 's this ? mother o' the bawds ?

KNOCK. No, she's mother o' the pigs, sir, mother o' the pigs. 100

WINW. Mother o' the Furies, I think, by her firebrand.

QUAR. Nay, she is too fat to be a Fury ; sure, some walking sow of tallow !

WINW. An inspir'd <sup>80</sup> vessel of kitchen stuff !

QUAR. She'll make excellent gear for the coachmakers here in Smithfield to anoint wheels and axletrees with.

She drinks this while.

URS. Ay, ay, gamesters ; mock a plain, [110 plump, soft wench o' the suburbs, <sup>81</sup> do, because she's juicy and wholesome. You must ha' your thin pinch'd ware, pent up i' the compass of a dog-collar, or 't will not do — that looks like a long-lac'd conger set upright, and a green feather, like fennel, i' the jowl <sup>82</sup> on 't.

KNOCK. Well said, Urs, my good Urs. To 'em, Urs.

QUAR. Is she your quagmire, <sup>83</sup> Dan [120 Knockhum ? Is this your bog ?

NIGHT. We shall have a quarrel presently.

KNOCK. How ! bog ? quagmire ? foul vapors ! hum'h !

QUAR. Yes, he that would venture for 't, I assure him, might sink into her and be drown'd a week ere any friend he had could find where he were.

WINW. And then he would be a fortnight weighing up again. 130

QUAR. 'T were like falling into a whole shire of butter ; they had need be a team of Dutchmen should draw him out.

KNOCK. Answer 'em, Urs ! Where's thy Bartholomew wit now, Urs, thy Bartholomew wit ?

URS. Hang 'em, rotten, roguish cheaters ! I hope to see 'em plagu'd one day (pox'd they are already, I am sure) with lean playhouse poultry, <sup>84</sup> that has the bony rump sticking [140 out like the ace of spades or the point of a partisan, <sup>85</sup> that every rib of 'em is like the tooth of a saw, and will so grate 'em with their hips and shoulders as, take 'em altogether, they were as good lie with a hurdle. <sup>86</sup>

QUAR. Out upon her, how she drips ! She's able to give a man the sweating sickness <sup>87</sup> with looking on her.

URS. Marry look off, with a patch o' your

face and a dozen i' your breech,<sup>88</sup> though [150 they<sup>89</sup> be o' scarlet, sir! I ha' seen as fine outsides as either o' yours bring lousy linings to the brokers, ere now, twice a week!

QUAR. Do you think there may be a fine new cucking-stool i' the Fair, to be purchas'd — one large enough, I mean. I know there is a pond<sup>90</sup> of capacity for her.

URS. For your mother, you rascal! Out, you rogue, you hedge-bird,<sup>91</sup> you pimp, you pannier-man's<sup>92</sup> bastard, you! 160

QUAR. Ha, ha, ha!

URS. Do you sneer, you dog's-head, you trendle-tail!<sup>93</sup> You look as you were begotten atop of a cart in harvest time, when the whelp was hot and eager. Go, snuff after your brother's bitch, Mistress Commodity; <sup>94</sup> that's the livery you wear: 't will be out at the elbows shortly. It's time you went to 't for the tother remnant.

KNOCK. Peace, URS; peace, URS. — [170 aside] They'll kill the poor whale and make oil of her. — Pray thee, go in.

URS. I'll see 'em pox'd first, and pil'd,<sup>95</sup> and double pil'd.

WINW. Let's away. Her language grows greasier than her pigs.

URS. Does 't so, snotty-nose? Good Lord! are you snivelling? You were engend'red on a she-beggar in a barn, when the bald thrasher, your sire, was scarce warm. 180

WINW. Pray thee, let's go.

QUAR. No, faith; I'll stay the end of her now; I know she cannot last long: I find by her similes she wanes apace.

URS. Does she so? I'll set you gone. — Gi' me my pig-pan hither a little. — I'll scald you hence, an you will not go.

[Exit URSULA.]

KNOCK. Gentlemen, these are very strange vapors, and very idle vapors, I assure you!

QUAR. You are a very serious ass, we [190 assure you.

KNOCK. Humh! "Ass"? and "serious"? Nay, then pardon me my vapor. I have a foolish vapor, gentlemen. Any man that does vapor me the "ass", Master Quar-
lous —

QUAR. What then, Master Jordan?

KNOCK. I do vapor him the lie.

QUAR. Faith, and to any man that vapors me the lie, I do vapor that. 200

[Strikes him.]

KNOCK. Nay then, vapors upon vapors.

They fight.

URS'LA comes in with the scalding-pan.

EDG. [AND] NIGHT. 'Ware the pan, the pan, the pan — she comes with the pan, gentlemen! — (She falls with it.) God bless the woman.

URS. Oh!

[Exeunt QUARLOUS and WINWIFE.]

TRASH. [running to the booth, as does LEATHERHEAD, also.] — What's the matter?

OVER. Goodly woman!

MOON. Mistress!

URS. Curse of hell, that ever I saw [210 these fiends! Oh! I ha' scalded my leg, my leg, my leg, my leg! I ha' lost a limb in the service! Run for some cream and salad oil, quickly. Are you underpeering, you baboon? Rip off my hose, an you be men, men, men.

MOON. Run you for some cream, good Mother Joan. I'll look to your basket.

[Exit TRASH.]

LEATH. Best sit up i' your chair, URS'la. Help, gentlemen.

KNOCK. Be of good cheer, URS; thou [220 hast hind'red me the currying of a couple of stallions here, that abus'd the good race-bawd<sup>96</sup> o' Smithfield; 't was time for 'em to go.

NIGHT. I' faith, when the pan came; they had made you run else. — [aside to EDGEWORTH.] This had been a fine time for purchase, if you had ventur'd.

EDG. [aside to NIGHTINGALE] Not a whit; these fellows were too fine to carry money.

KNOCK. Nightingale, get some help to [230 carry her leg out o' the air; take off her shoes. Body o' me! she has the mallanders, the scratches, the crown scab, and the quittor-bone<sup>97</sup> i' the tother leg.

URS. Oh, the pox! why do you put me in mind o' my leg thus, to make it prick and shoot? Would you ha' me i' the hospital afore my time?

KNOCK. Patience, URS; take a good heart; 't is but a blister as big as a windgall. I'll [240 take it away with the white of an egg, a little honey and hog's grease, ha' thy pasterns well roll'd,<sup>98</sup> and thou shalt pace again by tomorrow. I'll tend thy booth, and look to thy affairs the while; thou shalt sit i' thy chair, and give directions, and shine Ursa Major.

[Exeunt KNOCKHUM and MOONCALF with URSULA in her chair.]

SCENE VI <sup>99</sup>

OVER. These are the fruits of bottle-ale and tobacco! the foam of the one, and the fumes of the other! — Stay, young man, and despise not the wisdom of these few hairs that are grown grey in care of thee.

EDG. [aside to NIGHTINGALE] Nightingale, stay a little. Indeed I'll hear some o' this!

[Enter COKES, with his box, WASP, MISTRESS OVERDO, and GRACE.]

COKES. Come, Numps, come, where are you? Welcome into the Fair, Mistress Grace. 10

EDG. [aside to NIGHTINGALE] 'Slight,<sup>100</sup> he will call company, you shall see, and put us into doings presently.

OVER. Thirst not after that frothy liquor, ale; for who knows, when he openeth the stopple, what may be in the bottle? Hath not a snail, a spider, yea, a newt been found there? Thirst not after it, youth; thirst not after it.

COKES. This is a brave<sup>101</sup> fellow, [20 Numps; let's hear him.

WASP. 'Sblood! how brave<sup>102</sup> is he? in a guarded coat! You were best truck<sup>103</sup> with him; e'en strip, and truck presently; it will become you. Why will you hear him? because he is an ass, and may be akin to the Cokeses?<sup>104</sup>

COKES. Oh, good Numps!

OVER. Neither do thou lust after that tawny weed, tobacco. 30

COKES. Brave words!

OVER. Whose complexion is like the Indian's that vents it.

COKES. Are they not brave words, Sister?

OVER. And who can tell, if before the gathering and making up thereof, the alligarta hath not piss'd thereon?

WASP. 'Heart! let 'em be brave words, as brave as they will! An they were all the brave words in a country, how then? [40 Will you away yet? Ha' you enough on him? — Mistress Grace, come you away; I pray you be not you accessory. — If you do lose your licence, or somewhat else, sir, with list'ning to his fables, say Numps is a witch, with all my heart; do, say so.

COKES. Avoid, i' your satin doublet, Numps!

OVER. The creeping venom of which subtle serpent, as some late writers affirm, [50 neither the cutting of the perilous plant, nor the drying of it, nor the lighting or burning, can any way persway<sup>105</sup> or assuage.

COKES. Good, i' faith! is't not, Sister?

OVER. Hence it is that the lungs of the tobaccoist are rotted, the liver spotted, the brain smok'd like the backside of the pig woman's booth here, and the whole body within, black as her pan you saw e'en now without. 60

COKES. [to EDGEWORTH] A fine similitude that, sir! Did you see the pan?

EDG. Yes, sir.

OVER. Nay, the hole in the nose here of some tobacco-takers, or the third nostril, if I may so call it, which makes that they can vent the tobacco out, like the ace of clubs, or rather the flower-de-l[u]ce,<sup>106</sup> is caused from the tobacco, the mere tobacco! when the poor innocent pox, having nothing to do [70 there, is miserably and most unconscionably slander'd.

COKES. Who would ha' miss'd this, Sister?

MRS. OVER. Not anybody but Numps.

COKES. He does not understand.

EDG. [aside] Nor you feel!

He picketh his purse.

COKES. What would you have, Sister, of a fellow that knows nothing but a basket-hilt, and an old fox<sup>107</sup> in't? The best music i' the Fair will not move a log. 80

EDG. [aside, passing the purse to NIGHTINGALE.] In, to Urs'la, Nightingale, and carry her comfort. See it told.<sup>108</sup> This fellow was sent to us by Fortune, for our first fairing.

[Exit NIGHTINGALE.]

OVER. But what<sup>109</sup> speak I of the diseases of the body, children of the Fair?

COKES. That 's to us, Sister. Brave, i' faith!

OVER. Hark, O you sons and daughters of Smithfield! and hear what malady it doth the mind: it causeth swearing, it causeth [90

swaggering, it causeth snuffling and snarling, and now and then a hurt.<sup>110</sup>

MRS. OVER. He hath something of Master Overdo, methinks, Brother.

COKES. So methought, Sister, very much of my brother Overdo; and 't is when he speaks.

OVER. Look into any angle o' the town, the Straits, or the Bermudas,<sup>111</sup> where the [99] quarrelling lesson is read, and how do they entertain the time, but with bottle-ale and tobacco? The lecturer is o' one side, and his pupils o' the other; but the seconds are still bottle-ale and tobacco, for which the lecturer reads, and the novices pay. Thirty pound a week in bottle-ale! forty in tobacco! and ten more in ale again! Then, for a suit to drink in, so much; and, that being slaver'd, so much for another suit; and then a third suit, and a fourth suit! and still the bottle- [110] ale slavereth, and the tobacco stinketh!

WASP. [to COKES] Heart of a madman! are you rooted here? w[ill] you never away? What can any man find out in this bawling fellow to grow here for? — He is a full handful higher sin' he heard him. — Will you fix here, and set up a booth, sir?

OVER. I will conclude briefly —

WASP. Hold your peace, you roaring rascal, I'll run my head i' your chaps else. — [120] You were best build a booth, and entertain him; make your will, an you say the word, and him your heir! — Heart, I never knew one taken with a mouth of a peck<sup>112</sup> afore. — By this light, I'll carry you away o' my back, an you will not come.

He gets him up on pick-pack.

COKES. Stay, Numps, stay; set me down. I ha' lost my purse, Numps. Oh, my purse! One o' my fine purses is gone!

MRS. OVER. Is 't indeed, Brother? 130

COKES. Ay, as I am an honest man. Would I were an errant rogue else! A plague of all roguery damn'd cutpurses for me.

WASP. Bless 'em with all my heart, with all my heart, do you see? Now, as I am no infidel, that I know of, I am glad on 't. Ay, I am (here 's my witness!), do you see, sir? I did not tell you of his fables, I! No, no, I am a dull malthorse,<sup>113</sup> I; I know nothing.

Are you not justly serv'd, i' your con- [140] science now? speak i' your conscience! Much good do you with all my heart, and his good heart that has it, with all my heart again.

EDG. [aside] This fellow is very charitable; would he had a purse too! But I must not be too bold all at a time.

COKES. Nay, Numps, it is not my best purse.

WASP. Not your best! Death! why should it be your worst? Why should it be any, indeed, at all? Answer me to that: gi' me a reason from you, why it should be any. 152

COKES. Nor my gold, Numps; I ha' that yet. — Look here else, Sister.

[Shows the other purse.]

WASP. Why, so; there's all the feeling he has!

MRS. OVER. I pray you have a better care of that, Brother.

COKES. Nay, so I will, I warrant you; let him catch this that catch can. I would fain see him get this, look you here. 161

WASP. So, so, so, so, so, so, so, so! Very good!

COKES. I would ha' him come again now, and but offer at it. Sister, will you take notice of a good jest? I will put it just where th' other was, and, if we ha' good luck, you shall see a delicate fine trap to catch the cutpurse nibbling.

EDG. [aside] Faith, and he'll try ere you be out o' the Fair. 171

COKES. Come, Mistress Grace, pri'thee be not melancholy for my mischance; sorrow wi' not keep it,<sup>114</sup> sweetheart.

GRACE. I do not think on 't, sir.

COKES. 'T was but a little scurvy white money, hang it! It may hang the cutpurse one day. I ha' gold left to gi' thee a fairing yet, as hard as the world goes. Nothing angers me but that nobody here [180] look'd like a cutpurse, unless 't were Numps.

WASP. How! I? I look like a cutpurse? Death! your sister's a cutpurse! and your mother and father, and all your kin, were cutpurses! And here is a rogue is the bawd o' the cutpurses, whom I will beat to begin with.

They speak all together, and WASP beats the JUSTICE.

COKES. Numps, Numps.

MRS. OVER. Good Master Humphrey. [189

OVER. Hold thy hand, child of wrath, and heir of anger; make it not Childermas Day<sup>115</sup> in thy fury, or the feast of the French Bartholomew, parent of the massacre.

WASP. You are the patrico,<sup>116</sup> are you? the patriarch of the cutpurses? You share, sir, they say; let them share this with you. Are you i' your hot fit of preaching again? I'll cool you!

OVER. Murder, murder, murder!

[Exeunt.]

ACT III — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

LEATHERHEAD [and] TRASH [are seated by their wares]. [Enter] WHIT, HAGGIS, [and] BRISTLE.

WHIT.<sup>2</sup> Nay, 'tish<sup>3</sup> all gone, now! Dish<sup>4</sup> tish, phen tou vilt not be phitin call, Master Offisher; phat ish a man te better to lishen out noyshes<sup>5</sup> for tee, and tou art in an oder 'orld, being very shuffishient noyshes, and gallantsh, too? One o' their brabblesh would have fed ush all dish fortnight, but tou art so bushy about beggersh still, tou hast no leshure to intend<sup>6</sup> shentlemen, an 't be.

HAG. Why, I told you, Davy Bristle. 10

BRI. Come, come, you told me a pudding, Toby Haggis; a matter of nothing; I am sure it came to nothing. You said, let's go to Urs'la's, indeed; but then you met the man with the monsters, and I could not get you from him. An old fool! not leave seeing yet?

HAG. Why, who would ha' thought anybody would ha' quarrell'd so early; or that the ale o' the fair would ha' been up so soon? 20

WHIT. Phy, phat a' clock toest tou 'tink it ish, man?

HAG. I cannot tell.

WHIT. Tou art a vishe<sup>8</sup> vatchman, i' te mean teem.<sup>9</sup>

HAG. Why, should the watch go by the clock, or the clock by the watch, I pray?

BRI. One should go by another, if they did well.

WHIT. Tou art right now! Phen didst 30 tou ever know or hear of a shuffishient vatchman, but he did tell the clock, phat bushiness soever he had?

BRI. Nay, that's most true, a sufficient watchman knows what a'clock it is.

WHIT. Shleeping or vaking! Ash well as te clock himself, or te Jack dat shtrikes him!<sup>10</sup>

BRI. Let's inquire of Master Leatherhead, or Joan Trash here. — Master Leather- 40 head, do you hear, Master Leatherhead?

WHIT. If it be a Ledderhead, tish a very tick Ledderhead, tat sho mush noish vill not piersh him.

LEATH. I have a little business now, good friends; do not trouble me.

WHIT. Phat, because o' ty wrought neet-cap,<sup>11</sup> and ty phelvet sherkin, man? Phy! I have sheen tee in ty ledder sherkin, ere now, mashter o' de hobbyhorses, as bushy and 50 as stately as tou sheem'st to be.

TRASH. Why, what an you have, Captain Whit? He has his choice of jerkins, you may see by that, and his caps too, I assure you, when he pleases to be either sick or employ'd.

LEATH. God-a-mercy, Joan, answer for me.

WHIT. Away, be not sheen i' my company; here be shentlemen, and men of vorship.

[Exeunt HAGGIS and BRISTLE.]

SCENE II<sup>12</sup>

Enter QUARLOUS and WINWIFE [to them].

QUAR. We had wonderful ill luck, to miss this prologue o' the purse; but the best is, we shall have five acts of him ere night: he'll be spectacle enough! I'll answer for 't.

WHIT. O Creesh!<sup>13</sup> Duke Quarulous, how dosht tou? Tou dosht not know me, I fear! I am te vishesht man, but Justish Overdo, in all Bartholomew Fair now. Gi' me twelve-pence from tee, I vill help tee to a vife vorth forty marks for 't, an 't be. 10

QUAR. Away, rogue; pimp, away.

WHIT. And she shall shew tee as fine cut-'ork<sup>14</sup> for 't in her shmock too as tou cansht vish, i' faith. — Vilt tou have her, vorshipful Vinwife? I vill help tee to her here, be an 't be,<sup>15</sup> in te pig-quarter; gi' me ty<sup>16</sup> twel'pence from tee.

WINW. Why, there's twel'pence; pray thee, wilt thou be gone?

WHIT. Tou art a vorthy man, and a [20] vorshipful man still.

QUAR. Get you gone, rascal.

WHIT. I do mean it, man. — Prinsh Quar-lous, if tou hasht need on me, tou shalt find me here at Urs'la's. I vill see phat ale and punk ish i' te pigshty for tee, bless ty good Vorship. [Exit.]

QUAR. Look, who comes here! John Littlewit!

WINW. And his wife, and my widow, [30] her mother: the whole family.

QUAR. 'Slight, you must gi' 'em all fair-ings now!

WINW. Not I, I'll not see 'em.

QUAR. They are going a-feasting. What schoolmaster's that is with 'em?

WINW. That's my rival, I believe, the baker!

[Enter BUSY, DAME PURECRAFT, LITTLEWIT, and MRS. LITTLEWIT.]

BUSY. So; walk on in the middle way, fore-right;<sup>17</sup> turn neither to the right [40] hand nor to the left; let not your eyes be drawn aside with vanity, nor your ear with noises.

QUAR. [aside] Oh, I know him by that start!

LEATH. What do you lack, what do you buy, pretty mistress? a fine hobbyhorse, to make your son a tilter? a drum, to make him a soldier? a fiddle, to make him a reveler? What is 't you lack? little dogs for your [50] daughters? or babies, male or female?

BUSY. Look not toward them; hearken not; the place is Smithfield, or the field of smiths,<sup>18</sup> the grove of hobbyhorses and trinkets; the wares are the wares of devils, and the whole Fair is the shop of Satan! They are hooks and baits, very baits, that are hung out on every side, to catch you, and to hold you, as it were, by the gills, and by the nostrils, as the fisher doth; therefore you [60] must not look nor turn toward them. The heathen man could stop his ears with wax against the harlot o' the sea.<sup>19</sup> Do you the like with your fingers against the bells of the Beast.

<sup>19</sup> Alluding to Ulysses and the Sirens, though it was the crew, not the commander, whose ears were stopped up.

WINW. [aside] What flashes comes from him!

QUAR. [aside] Oh, he has those of his oven! A notable hot baker 't was when he plied the peel.<sup>20</sup> He is leading his flock into the [70] Fair now.

WINW. [aside] Rather driving 'em to the pens; for he will let 'em look upon nothing.

[Enter KNOCKHUM and WHIT from URSULA's booth.] LITTLEWIT is gazing at the sign, which is the pig's head, with a large writing under it.

KNOCK. Gentlemen, the weather's hot. Whither walk you? Have a care o' your fine velvet caps; the Fair is dusty. Take a sweet delicate booth, with boughs, here i' the way, and cool yourselves i' the shade, you and your friends. The best pig and bottle-ale i' the Fair, sir. Old Urs'la is cook, there [80] you may read: the pig's head speaks it. Poor soul, she has had a s[t]ringhalt, the mary-hinchco;<sup>21</sup> but she's prettily amended.

WHIT. A delicate show-pig, little mistress, with shweet sauce, and crackling, like de bay leaf i' de fire, la! Tou shalt ha' de clean side o' de tableclot, and di glass vash'd with phatersh of Dame Annesh Clear.<sup>22</sup>

LIT. This's fine, verily: here be the best pigs, and she does roast 'em as well as [90] ever she did, the pig's head says.

KNOCK. Excellent, excellent, mistress, with fire o' juniper and rosemary branches! — The oracle of the pig's head, that, sir.

PURE. Son, were you not warn'd of the vanity of the eye? Have you forgot the wholesome admonition so soon?

LIT. Good Mother, how shall we find a pig, if we do not look about for 't? Will it run off o' the spit, into our mouths, think [100] you, as in Lubberland,<sup>23</sup> and cry "wee, wee"?

BUSY. No, but your mother, religiously wise, conceiveth it may offer itself by other means to the sense, as by way of steam, which I think it doth, here in this place — huh, huh — (BUSY scents after it like a hound) yes, it doth. And it were a sin of obstinacy, great obstinacy, high and horrible obstinacy, to decline or resist the good titillation of the famelic<sup>24</sup> sense, which is the smell. [110 Therefore be bold — huh, huh, huh — follow the scent. Enter the tents of the unclean, for once, and satisfy your wife's frailty. Let your frail wife be satisfied; your zealous mother and my suffering self will also be satisfied.]

LIT. Come, Win, as good winny<sup>25</sup> here as go farther and see nothing.

BUSY. We scape so much of the other vanities by our early ent'ring. 120

PURE. It is an edifying consideration.

MRS. LIT. This is scurvy, that we must come into the Fair, and not look on 't.

LIT. Win, have patience, Win; I'll tell you more anon. [Exeunt, into the booth, LITTLEWIT, MRS. LITTLEWIT, BUSY, and DAME PURECRAFT.]

KNOCK. Mooncalf, entertain within there the best pig i' the booth, a porklike pig. — These are Banbury bloods, o' the sincere stud,<sup>26</sup> come a-pig-hunting. — Whit, wait, Whit; look to your charge. 130

[Exit WHIT.]

BUSY [within] A pig prepare presently; let a pig be prepared to us.

[Enter, from the booth, MOONCALF and URSULA.]

MOON. 'Slight, who be these?

URS. Is this the good service, Jordan, you'd do me?

KNOCK. Why, Urs! why, Urs! thou 'lt ha' vapors i' thy leg again presently. Pray thee go in; 't may turn to the scratches<sup>27</sup> else.

URS. Hang your vapors; they are stale, [140 and stink like you! Are these the guests o' the game you promis'd to fill my pit withal to-day?

KNOCK. Ay; what ail they, Urs?

URS. Ail they! they are all sippers, sippers o' the city; they look as they would not drink off two penn'orth of bottle-ale amongst 'em.

MOON. A body may read that i' their small printed ruffs.

KNOCK. Away! thou art a fool, Urs, [150 and thy Mooncalf too! I' your ignorant vapors now? Hence! Good guests, I say, right hypocrites, good gluttons. — In, and set a couple o' pigs o' the board, and half a dozen of the biggest bottles afore 'em, and call Whit. [Exit MOONCALF.] — I do not love to hear innocents abus'd: fine ambling hypocrites! and a stone-puritan<sup>28</sup> with a sorrel head and beard; good mouth'd gluttons; two to a pig. Away! 160

URS. Are you sure they are such?

KNOCK. O' the right breed; thou shalt try 'em by the teeth, Urs. — Where's this Whit?

[Re-enter WHIT.]

WHIT.

Behold, man, and see,
What a worthy man am ee!
With the fury of my sword,
And the shaking of my beard,
I will make ten thousand men afraid.

KNOCK. Well said, brave Whit! — In, [170 and fear the ale out o' the bottles into the bellies of the brethren, and the sisters.<sup>29</sup> Drink to the cause, and pure vapors.

[Exeunt KNOCKHUM, WHIT, and URSULA.]

QUAR. My roarer is turn'd tapster, methinks. Now were a fine time for thee, Winwife, to lay aboard<sup>30</sup> thy widow; thou 'lt never be master of a better season or place. She that will venture herself into the Fair and a pig-box will admit any assault, be assur'd of that. 180

WINW. I love not enterprises of that suddenness, though.

QUAR. I'll warrant thee, then, no wife out o' the widow's hundred.<sup>31</sup> If I had but as much title to her as to have breath'd once on that straight stomacher of hers, I would now assure myself to carry her yet, ere she went out of Smithfield; or she should carry me, which were the fitter sight, I confess. But you are a modest undertaker — by [190 circumstances and degrees. Come, 't is disease in thee, not judgment; I should offer at all together. — Look, here's the poor fool again, that was stung by the Wasp ere-while.

SCENE III<sup>32</sup>

[Enter OVERDO; they stand aside.]

OVER. I will make no more orations shall draw on these tragical conclusions. And I begin now to think that, by a spice<sup>33</sup> of collateral justice, Adam Overdo deserv'd this beating; for I, the said Adam, was one cause (a by-cause) why the purse was lost; and my wife's brother's purse too, which they know not of yet. But I shall make very good mirth with it at supper — that will be the sport — and put my little friend Master Hum- [10 phrey Wasp's choler quite out of countenance, when, sitting at the upper end o' my table, as I use, and drinking to my brother Cokes, and Mistress Alice Overdo, as I will, my wife, for their good affection to old Bradley, I deliver to 'em it was I that was cudgel'd, and show 'em the marks. To see what bad events may peep out o' the tail of good purposes! The care I had of that civil young man I took fancy to this morning (and have not left [20 it yet) drew me to that exhortation; which drew the company indeed; which drew the cutpurse; which drew the money; which drew my brother Cokes his loss; which drew on Wasp's anger; which drew on my beating: a pretty gradation! And they shall ha' it i' their dish, i' faith, at night for fruit; <sup>34</sup> I love to be merry at my table. I had thought once, at one special blow he ga' me, to have revealed myself! But then (I thank thee, forti- [30 tude) I remem' b' red that a wise man, and who is ever so great a part o' the commonwealth in himself, for no particular disaster ought to abandon a public good design. The husbandman ought not, for one unthankful year, to forsake the plough; the shepherd ought not, for one scabb'd sheep, to throw by his tar-box; <sup>35</sup> the pilot ought not, for one leak i' the poop, to quit the helm; nor the alderman ought not, for one custard more at [40 a meal, to give up his cloak; the constable ought not to break his staff, and forswear the watch, for one roaring night; nor the piper o' the parish, ut <sup>36</sup> parvis componere magna solebam, to put up his pipes for one rainy Sunday. These are certain knocking conclusions; out of which, I am resolv'd, come what come can, come beating, come imprisonment, come infamy, come banishment, nay, come the rack, come the hurdle (welcome [50 all), I will not discover who I am, till my due time; and yet still all shall be, as I said ever, in Justice' name, and the King's, and for the Commonwealth. [Exit.]

WINW. What does he talk to himself, and act so seriously? poor fool!

QUAR. No matter what. Here's fresher argument: intend <sup>37</sup> that. [They stand aside.]

SCENE IV <sup>38</sup>

[Enter to them COKES, MISTRESS OVERDO, and GRACE WELLBORN, followed by WASP, loaded with toys.]

COKES. Come, Mistress Grace, come, Sister, here's more fine sights yet, i' faith. God'slid! where's Numps?

LEATH. What do you lack, gentlemen? what is 't you buy? fine rattles, drums, babies, little dogs, and birds for ladies? What do you lack?

COKES. Good honest Numps, keep afore; I am so afraid thou'lt lose somewhat. My heart was at my mouth when I miss'd thee. [10

WASP. You were best buy a whip i' your hand to drive me.

COKES. Nay, do not mistake, Numps; thou art so apt to mistake. I would but watch the goods. Look you now, the treble fiddle was e'en almost like to be lost.

WASP. Pray you take heed you lose not yourself; your best way were e'en get up and ride for more surety. Buy a token's worth of great pins, to fasten yourself to my [20 shoulder.

LEATH. What do you lack, gentlemen? fine purses, pouches, pin-cases, pipes? What is 't you lack? a pair o' smiths <sup>39</sup> to wake you i' the morning? or a fine whistling bird?

COKES. Numps, here be finer things than any we ha' bought, by odds! and more delicate horses, a great deal. Good Numps, stay, and come hither.

WASP. Will you scourse <sup>40</sup> with him? [30 You are in Smithfield; you may fit yourself with a fine easy-going street-nag, for your saddle, again' Michaelmas term; do! Has he ne'er a little odd cart for you to make a caroché on i' the country, with four pied hobbyhorses? Why the measles should you stand here, with your train, cheaping of dogs, birds, and babies? You ha' no children to bestow 'em on, ha' you?

COKES. No, but again' <sup>41</sup> I ha' chil- [40 dren, Numps, that's all one. <sup>42</sup>

WASP. Do, do, do, do! How many shall you have, think you? An I were as you, I'd buy for all my tenants too. They are a kind o' civil savages that will part with their children for rattles, pipes, and knives. You were best buy a hatchet or two, and truck with 'em.

COKES. Good Numps, hold that little tongue o' thine, and save it a labor. I [50 am resolute Bat, thou know'st.

WASP. A resolute fool you are, I know, and a very sufficient coxcomb,<sup>43</sup> with all my heart! Nay, you have it, sir, an you be angry: turd i' your teeth, twice, if I said it not once afore, and much good do you!

WINW. [aside] Was there ever such a self-affliction, and so impertinent?

QUAR. [aside] Alas, his care will go near to crack him; let's in and comfort him. 60

[They come forward.]

WASP. Would I had been set i' the ground, all but the head on me, and had my brains bowl'd at or thresh'd out when first I underwent this plague of a charge!

QUAR. How now, Numps! almost tir'd i' your protectorship? overparted?<sup>44</sup> overparted?

WASP. Why, I cannot tell, sir; it may be I am; does 't grieve you?

QUAR. No, I swear does 't not, Numps; [70 to satisfy you.

WASP. Numps! 'Sblood, you are fine and familiar! How long ha' we been acquainted, I pray you?

QUAR. I think it may be rememb'ed, Numps, that! 't was since morning, sure.

WASP. Why, I hope I know 't well enough, sir; I did not ask to be told.

QUAR. No? why, then?

WASP. It's no matter why; you see [80 with your eyes now what I said to you to-day! You'll believe me another time!

QUAR. Are you removing the Fair, Numps?

WASP. A pretty question, and a very civil one! Yes, faith, I ha' my lading, you see, or shall have anon; you may know whose beast I am by my burden. If the pannier-man's jack were ever better known by his loins of mutton, I'll be flay'd, and feed dogs for him when his time comes. 90

WINW. How [melancholic]<sup>45</sup> Mistress Grace is yonder! Pray thee, let's go enter ourselves in grace with her.

COKES. Those six horses, friend, I'll have — WASP. How!

COKES. And the three Jew's-trumps; and half a dozen o' birds; and that drum (I have one drum already); and your smiths: I like that device o' your smiths, very pretty well; and four halberts — and, le' me see, that [100 fine painted great lady and her three women for state, I'll have.

WASP. No, the shop; buy the whole shop, it will be best; the shop, the shop!

LEATH. If his Worship please.

WASP. Yes, and keep it during the Fair, Bobchin.<sup>46</sup>

COKES. Peace, Numps. — Friend, do not meddle with him, an' you be wise, and would show your head aboveboard; <sup>47</sup> he will [110 sting thorough your wrought nightcap, believe me. A set of these violins I would buy too, for a delicate young noise <sup>48</sup> I have i' the country, that are every one a size less than another, just like your fiddles. I would fain have a fine young masque at my marriage, now I think on 't; but I do want such a number o' things! And Numps will not help me now, and I dare not speak to him.

TRASH. Will your Worship buy any [120 gingerbread, very good bread, comfortable bread?

COKES. Gingerbread! yes, let's see!

[He runs to her shop.]

WASP. There's the tother spring! <sup>49</sup>

LEATH. Is this well, goody Joan, to interrupt my market in the midst, and call away my customers? Can you answer this at the pie-powders?

TRASH. Why, if his Mastership have a mind to buy, I hope my ware lies as [130 open as another's; I may show my ware as well as you yours.

COKES. Hold your peace; I'll content you both. I'll buy up his shop, and thy basket.

WASP. Will you, i' faith?

LEATH. Why should you put him from it, friend?

WASP. Cry you mercy! You'd be sold too, would you? What's the price on [140 you, jerkin and all, as you stand? Ha' you any qualities?

TRASH. Yes, Goodman Angry-man, you shall find he has qualities, if you cheapen him.

WASP. Gods-so! you ha' the selling of him! What are they? Will they be bought for love or money?

TRASH. No, indeed, sir.

WASP. For what then, victuals?

TRASH. He scorns victuals, sir; he has [150 bread and butter at home, thanks be to God! And yet he will do more for a good meal, if the toy take <sup>60</sup> him, i' the belly — marry, then they must not set him at lower end; if they do, he'll go away, though he fast. But put him a-top o' the table, where his place is, and he'll do you forty fine things. He has not been sent for and sought out for nothing, at your great city suppers, to put down Coryat <sup>61</sup> and Cokely, <sup>62</sup> and been laugh'd at for his [160 labor; he'll play you all the puppets i' the town over, and the players, every company, and his own company too; he spares nobody!

COKES. I' faith?

TRASH. He was the first, sir, that ever baited the fellow i' the bear's skin, <sup>63</sup> an't like your Worship; no dog ever came near him since. And for fine motions!

COKES. Is he good at those too? Can he set out a masque, trow? 170

TRASH. O Lord, master! sought to far and near for his inventions; and he engrosses all; he makes all the puppets i' the Fair.

COKES. Dost thou, in troth, old velvet jerkin? Give me thy hand.

TRASH. Nay, sir, you shall see him in his velvet jerkin, and a scarf too at night, when you hear him interpret Master Littlewit's motion.

COKES. Speak no more, but shut up [180 shop presently, friend. I'll buy both it and thee too, to carry down with me; and her hamper beside. Thy shop shall furnish out the masque, and hers the banquet. I cannot go less, to set out anything with credit. What's the price, at a word, o' thy whole shop, case, and all as it stands?

LEATH. Sir, it stands me in six-and-twenty shillings, sevenpence, halfpenny; besides three shillings for my ground. 190

<sup>63</sup> Perhaps an allusion, as Fleay suggests, to Inigo Jones's connection with some entertainment in which bear-baiting was burlesqued.

COKES. Well, thirty shillings will do all then! — And what comes yours to?

TRASH. Four shillings and elevenpence, sir, ground and all, an't like your Worship.

COKES. Yes, it does like my Worship very well, poor woman; that's five shillings more. What a masque shall I furnish out, for forty shillings (twenty pound Scotch) and a banquet of gingerbread! There's a stately thing! Numps! Sister! And my wedding [200 gloves too! — that I never thought on afore! All my wedding gloves, gingerbread! <sup>64</sup> O me! what a device will there be, to make 'em eat their fingers' ends! And delicate brooches for the bridemen! and all! And then I'll ha' this poesie <sup>65</sup> put to 'em, "For the best grace," meaning Mistress Grace, my wedding poesie.

GRACE. I am beholden to you, sir, and to your Bartholomew wit.

WASP. You do not mean this, do you? [210 Is this your first purchase?

COKES. Yes, faith; and I do not think, Numps, but thou'lt say it was the wisest act that ever I did in my wardship.

WASP. Like enough! I shall say anything, I!

SCENE V <sup>66</sup>

[Enter] EDGEWORTH [and] NIGHTINGALE, [followed by] JUSTICE [OVERDO].

OVER. [aside] I cannot beget a project, with all my political brain, yet. My project is how to fetch off this proper young man from his debauch'd company. I have followed him all the Fair over, and still I find him with this songster; and I begin shrewdly to suspect their familiarity, and the young man of a terrible taint, poetry! with which idle disease if he be infected, there's no hope of him in a state-course. Actum est of him [10 for a commonwealth's-man, <sup>67</sup> if he go to 't in rhyme once.

EDG. [aside to NIGHTINGALE] Yonder he is, buying o' gingerbread; set in quickly, before he part with too much on his money.

NIGHT [advancing and singing]

"My masters and friends, and good people, draw near", etc. —

COKES. Ballads! hark, hark! Pray thee, fellow, stay a little. — Good Numps, look to

<sup>67</sup> Good citizen.

the goods. — What ballads hast thou? Let me see; let me see myself. [20]

He runs to the Ballad Man.

WASP. Why so! he's flown to another lime-bush.<sup>58</sup> There he will flutter as long more; till he ha' ne'er a feather left. Is there a vexation like this, gentlemen? Will you believe me now hereafter? shall I have credit with you?

QUAR. Yes, faith, shalt thou, Numps; and thou art worthy on 't, for thou sweatest for 't. — [aside to the rest] I never saw a [29 young pimp-errant and his squire better match'd.

WINW. Faith, the sister comes after 'em well too.

GRACE. Nay, if you saw the justice her husband, my guardian, you were fitted for the mess;<sup>59</sup> he is such a wise one his way —

WINW. I wonder we see him not here.

GRACE. Oh, he is too serious for this place, and yet better sport than than the other [40 three, I assure you, gentlemen, where'er he is, though 't be o' the bench.

COKES. How dost thou call it? "A Caveat against Cutpurses"! a good jest, i' faith! I would fain see that demon, your cutpurse you talk of, that delicate-handed devil. They say he walks hereabout; I would see him walk, now. Look you, Sister, here, here (He shows his purse boastingly). Let him come, Sister, and welcome. [50 Ballad man, does any cutpurses haunt hereabout? Pray thee raise me one or two; begin, and show me one.

NIGHT. Sir, this is a spell against 'em, spick and span new; and 't is made as 't were in mine own person, and I sing it in mine own defence. But 't will cost a penny alone, if you buy it.

COKES. No matter for the price; thou dost not know me, I see; I am an odd [60 Bartholomew.

MRS. OVER. Has 't a fine picture, Brother?

COKES. O, Sister, do you remember the ballads over the nursery chimney at home o' my own pasting up? There be brave pictures, other manner of pictures than these, friend.

WASP. Yet these will serve to pick the pictures<sup>60</sup> out o' your pockets, you shall see.

COKES. So I heard 'em say. — Pray [70 thee mind him not, fellow; he'll have an oar in everything.

NIGHT. It was intended, sir, as if a purse should chance to be cut in my presence now; I may be blameless though, as by the sequel will more plainly appear.

COKES. We shall find that i' the matter. Pray thee begin.

NIGHT. To the tune of "Paggington's Pound,"<sup>61</sup> sir. 80

COKES. [singing] Fa, la la la, la la la, fa la la la! — Nay, I'll put thee in tune and all! Mine own country-dance! Pray thee begin.

NIGHT. It is a gentle admonition, you must know, sir, both to the purse-cutter and the purse-bearer.

COKES. Not a word more out o' the tune, an thou lov'st me! — Fa, la la la, la la la, fa la la la. — Come, when?

NIGHT.

My masters, and friends, and good people, draw <sup>near,</sup> 90
And look to your purses; for that I do say;

COKES. Ha, ha, this chimes! Good counsel at first dash.

NIGHT.

And, though little money in them you do bear,
It cost more to get than to lose in a day.

COKES. Good!

NIGHT.

You oft have been told,
Both the young and the old,
And bidden beware of the cutpurse so bold; 99
Then, if you take heed not, free me from the curse,
Who both give you warning for and<sup>62</sup> the cutpurse.

COKES. Well said! He were to blame that would not, i' faith.

NIGHT.

Youth, youth, thou hadst better been starv'd by
thy nurse,
Than live to be hanged for cutting a purse.

COKES. Good, i' faith. How say you, Numps? is there any harm i' this?

NIGHT.

It hath been upbraided to men of my trade,
That oftentimes we are the cause of this crime;

COKES. The more coxcombs they that [110 did it, I wusse.

NIGHT.

Alack and for pity, why should it be said?
As if they regarded or places or time.

Examples have been
Of some that were seen

<sup>62</sup> And moreover.

In Westminster Hall,<sup>63</sup> yea, the pleaders between;
Then why should the judges be free from this curse,
More than my poor self, for cutting the purse?

COKES. God 'a mercy for that! Why should they be more free indeed? 120

NIGHT.

Youth, youth, thou hadst better been starv'd by
thy nurse,
Than live to be hanged for cutting a purse.

COKES. That again, good ballad man, that again. (He sings the burden with him.) Oh, rare! — I would fain rub mine elbow now, but I dare not pull out my hand. — On, I pray thee; he that made this ballad shall be poet to my masque.

NIGHT.

At Worcester 'tis known well, and even i' the jail,
A knight of good worship did there show his face,
Against the foul sinners in zeal for to rail, 131
And lost ipso facto his purse in the place.

COKES. Is it possible?

NIGHT.

Nay, once from the seat
Of judgment so great,
A judge there did lose a fair pouch of velvete.

COKES. I' faith?

NIGHT.

O Lord for thy mercy, how wicked or worse
Are those that so venture their necks for a purse!
Youth, youth, etc. 140

COKES. [singing with him] "Youth, youth,"
etc. — Pray thee, stay a little, friend. — Yet, o' thy conscience, Numps, speak, is there any harm i' this?

WASP. To tell you true, 't is too good for you, 'less you had grace to follow it.

OVER. [aside] It doth discover enormity;
I'll mark it more. I ha' not lik'd a paltry piece of poetry so well a good while.

COKES. "Youth, youth," etc. — [150
Where's this youth, now? A man must call upon him for his own good, and yet he will not appear. Look here, here's for him:
(He shows his purse.) Handy dandy,<sup>64</sup> which hand will he have? On, I pray thee with the rest; I do hear of him, but I cannot see him, this Master Youth, the cutpurse.

NIGHT.

At plays, and at sermons, and at the sessions,
'Tis daily their practice such booty to make;
Yea, under the gallows at executions, 160
They stick not the stare-abouts' purses to take

Nay, one without grace,
At a better place,
At court, and in Christmas, before the King's face!

<sup>63</sup> The law courts were held there.

<sup>64</sup> An allusion to the children's game of handy dandy, or which hand will you have?

COKES. That was a fine fellow! I would have him, now.

NIGHT.

Alack then for pity must I bear the curse,
That only belongs to the cunning cutpurse?

COKES. But where's their cunning now, when they should use it? They are all [170
chain'd now, I warrant you. — "Youth, youth, thou hadst better," etc. — The rat-catchers' charm[s] are all fools and asses to this! A pox on 'em, that they will not come!
that a man should have such a desire to a thing, and want it.

QUAR. 'Fore God I'd give half the Fair, an
't were mine, for a cutpurse for him, to save his longing. 179

COKES. (shows his purse again.) Look you, sister: here, here, where is 't now? Which pocket is 't in, for a wager?

WASP. I beseech you leave your wagers, and let him end his matter, an't may be.

COKES. Oh, are you edified, Numps?

OVER. [aside] Indeed he does interrupt him too much; there Numps spoke to purpose.

COKES. (again) Sister, I am an ass, I cannot keep my purse! — On, on, I pray thee, friend. (EDGEWORTH gets up to him and [190
tickles him in the ear with a straw twice to draw his hand out of his pocket.)

NIGHT.

But O you vile nation of cutpurses all,
Relent and repent, and amend and be sound,
And know that you ought not, by honest men's fall,
Advance your own fortunes, to die above ground; <sup>65</sup>
And, though you go gay
In silks, as you may, —

WINW.<sup>66</sup> [aside to QUARLOUS] Will you see sport? Look, there's a fellow gathers up to him; mark.

QUAR. [aside] Good, i' faith! Oh, he [200 has lighted on the wrong pocket.<sup>67</sup>

WINW. [aside] He has it! 'Fore God, he is a brave fellow. Pity he should be detected.

NIGHT.

It is not the highway to Heaven, as they say.
Repent then, repent you, for better, for worse,
And kiss not the gallows for cutting a purse.
Youth, youth, thou hadst better been starv'd by
thy nurse
Than live to be hanged for cutting a purse.

ALL. An excellent ballad! an excellent ballad! 210

<sup>65</sup> Be hanged.

<sup>66</sup> This group of speeches, as well as most of those of Cokes preceding, are printed in the Folios at the right of the text of the song, indicating simultaneous delivery.

<sup>67</sup> Actually, however, Edgeworth is stealing the handkerchief.

EDG. Friend, let me ha' the first, let me ha' the first, I pray you. [As NIGHTINGALE reaches out the ballad, EDGEWORTH slips the purse into his hand.]

COKES. Pardon me, sir. First come first serv'd; and I'll buy the whole bundle too.

WINW. [aside] That conveyance was better than all. Did you see 't? He has given the purse to the ballad singer.

QUAR. [aside] Has he?

EDG. Sir, I cry you mercy.<sup>68</sup> I'll not hinder the poor man's profit; pray you, mistake me not. 221

COKES. Sir, I take you for an honest gentleman, if that be mistaking; I met you to-day afore — ha! humh! O God! my purse is gone, my purse, my purse! etc.<sup>69</sup>

WASP. Come, do not make a stir, and cry yourself an ass thorough the Fair afore your time.<sup>70</sup>

COKES. Why, hast thou it, Numps? Good Numps, how came you by it? I mar'! <sup>71</sup> [230

WASP. I pray you seek some other gamester to play the fool with; you may lose it time enough, for all your Fair wit.

COKES. By this good hand, glove and all, I ha' lost it already, if thou hast it not; feel else, and Mistress Grace's handkercher too, out o' the tother pocket.

WASP. Why, 't is well, very well, exceeding pretty, and well.

EDG. Are you sure you ha' lost it, sir? [240

COKES. O God! yes; as I am an honest man, I had it but e'en now, at "Youth, youth."

NIGHT. I hope you suspect not me, sir?

EDG. Thee! that were a jest indeed! Dost thou think the gentleman is foolish? Where hadst thou hands, I pray thee? — [aside] Away, ass, away!

[Exit NIGHTINGALE.]

OVER. [aside] I shall be beaten again if I be spi'd. 251

EDG. Sir, I suspect an odd fellow, yonder, is stealing away.

MRS. OVER. Brother, it is the preaching fellow! You shall suspect him. He was at your tother purse, you know! — [seizing OVERDO] Nay, stay, sir, and view the work you

ha' done; an you be benefic'd at the gallows,<sup>72</sup> and preach there, thank your own handiwork.

COKES. Sir, you shall take no pride in your preferment; you shall be silenc'd quickly.

[They seize OVERDO.]

OVER. What do you mean, sweet buds <sup>73</sup> of gentility? 263

COKES. To ha' my pennyworths out on you, bud. No less than two purses a day serve you? I thought you a simple fellow, when my man Numps beat you i' the morning, and pitied you —

MRS. OVER. So did I, I'll be sworn, Brother; but now I see he is a lewd and pernicious enormity, as Master Overdo calls him.

OVER. [aside] Mine own words turn'd [272 upon me like swords!

COKES. Cannot a man's purse be at quiet for you i' the master's pocket, but you must entice it forth, and debauch it?

[OVERDO is carried off.]

WASP. Sir, sir, keep your debauch, and your fine Bartholomew terms to yourself, and make as much on 'em as you please. But gi' me this from you i' the meantime, I beseech you; see if I can look to this. 281

COKES. Why, Numps?

WASP. Why! because you are an ass, sir; there's a reason the shortest way, an you will needs ha' it. Now you ha' got the trick of losing, you'd lose your breech, an 't were loose. I know you, sir, come, deliver. (WASP takes [the box with] the license from him.) You'll go and crack the vermin you breed now,<sup>74</sup> will you? 'T is very fine. Will you ha' the truth on 't? They are such reckless flies as [291 you are that blow <sup>75</sup> cutpurses abroad in every corner; your foolish having of money makes 'em. An there were no wiser than I, sir, the trade should lie open for you, sir;<sup>76</sup> it should, i' faith, sir. I would teach your wit to come to your head, sir, as well as your land to come into your hand, I assure you, sir.

WINW. Alack, good Numps! 299

WASP. Nay, gentlemen, never pity me; I am not worth it. — Lord send me at home

<sup>72</sup> If you, who aspire to preaching, receive the rope as your ecclesiastical living.

<sup>76</sup> I.e., if it weren't that wiser heads than mine would not permit it, I would turn you loose to ply your trade of creating cutpurses.

once to Harrow o' the Hill again! If I travel any more, call me Coryat,<sup>77</sup> with all my heart.

[Exeunt WASP, COKES, and MRS. OVERDO.]

QUAR. [stopping EDGEWORTH] Stay, sir, I must have a word with you in private. Do you hear?

EDG. With me, sir? What's your pleasure, good sir? 308

QUAR. Do not deny it: you are a cut-purse, sir; this gentleman here and I saw you; nor do we mean to detect you, though we can sufficiently inform ourselves toward the danger of concealing you; but you must do us a piece of service.

EDG. Good gentlemen, do not undo me; I am a civil young man, and but a beginner indeed.

QUAR. Sir, your beginning shall bring on your ending for us; <sup>78</sup> we are no catchpoles nor constables. That you are to undertake is this: you saw the old fellow with the black box here? 322

EDG. The little old governor, sir?

QUAR. That same. I see you have flown him to a mark <sup>79</sup> already. I would ha' you get away that box from him, and bring it us.

EDG. Would you ha' the box and all, sir, or only that that is in 't? I'll get you that, and leave him the box to play with still, which will be the harder o' the two, because I would gain your Worship's good opinion of me. 332

WINW. He says well; 't is the greater mast'ry, and 't will make the more sport when 't is miss'd.

EDG. Ay, and 't will be the longer a-missing, to draw on the sport.

QUAR. But look you do it, now, sirrah, and keep your word; or —

EDG. Sir, if ever I break my word with a gentleman, may I never read word at my need.<sup>80</sup> Where shall I find you? 342

QUAR. Somewhere i' the Fair hereabouts. Dispatch it quickly. — [Exit EDGEWORTH.] — I would fain see the careful fool deluded! Of all beasts, I love the serious ass: he that takes pains to be one, and plays the fool with the greatest diligence that can be.

GRACE. Then you would not choose, sir, but love my guardian, Justice Overdo, who is answerable to that description in every hair of him. 352

QUAR. So I have heard. But how came you, Mistress Wellborn, to be his ward, or have relation to him at first?

GRACE. Faith, through a common calamity; he bought me,<sup>81</sup> sir; and now he will marry me to his wife's brother, this wise gentleman that you see; or else I must pay value o' my land. 360

QUAR. 'Slid! Is there no device of disparagement <sup>82</sup> or so? Talk with some crafty fellow, some picklock o' the law. Would I had studied a year longer i' the Inns of Court, an't had been but i' your case.

WINW. [aside] Ay, Master Quarlous, are you proffering?

GRACE. You'd bring but little aid, sir.

WINW. [aside] I'll look to you, i' faith, gamester. — An unfortunate foolish tribe you are fall'n into, lady; I wonder you can endure 'em. 372

GRACE. Sir, they that cannot work their fetters off must wear 'em.

WINW. You see what care they have on you, to leave you thus.

GRACE. Faith, the same they have of themselves, sir. I cannot greatly complain if this were all the plea I had against 'em. [379]

WINW. 'T is true! But will you please to withdraw with us a little, and make them think they have lost you? I hope our manners ha' been such hitherto, and our language, as will give you no cause to doubt yourself in our company.

GRACE. Sir, I will give myself no cause; I am so secure of mine own manners as I suspect not yours.

QUAR. Look where John Littlewit comes.

WINW. Away; I'll not be seen by him.

QUAR. No, you were not best; he'd [391] tell his mother, the widow.

WINW. Heart! what do you mean?

QUAR. Cry you mercy, is the wind there? <sup>83</sup> Must not the widow be named?

[Exeunt all but LEATHERHEAD and TRASH.]

<sup>81</sup> Certain classes of landholders were during nonage the king's wards, and he could sell or bestow the right of guardianship.

<sup>82</sup> The guardian could offer the ward a match, provided it was "without disparagement or inequality." If the ward refused it, the guardian was entitled, out of the ward's property, to a recompense equal in value to what a suitor would have paid him for the ward's hand. Quarious proposes Grace's asking redress on the ground that marriage to Cokes would be a "disparagement," i.e., beneath her.

<sup>77</sup> See on III, iv, 159.

<sup>79</sup> See on II, iv, 53.

<sup>80</sup> See on I, iv, 10.

SCENE VI <sup>84</sup>

[Enter to them] LITTLEWIT [and] MRS. LITTLEWIT, [from URSULA'S booth.]

LIT. Do you hear, Win, Win?

MRS. LIT. What say you, John?

LIT. While they are paying the reckoning, Win, I'll tell you a thing, Win : we shall never see any sights i' the Fair, Win, except you long still, Win. Good Win, sweet Win, long to see some hobbyhorses, and some drums, and rattles, and dogs, and fine devices, Win. The bull with the five legs, Win ; and the great hog. Now you ha' begun with pig, [10 you may long for anything, Win, and so for my motion,<sup>85</sup> Win.

MRS. LIT. But we sha' not eat o' the bull and the hog, John. How shall I long, then?

LIT. O yes, Win. You may long to see as well as to taste, Win. How did the pothecary's wife, Win, that long'd to see the anatomy,<sup>86</sup> Win? or the lady, Win, that desir'd to spit i' the great lawyer's mouth, after an eloquent pleading? I assure you, they [20 long'd, Win. Good Win, go in and long.

[Exeunt LITTLEWIT and MRS. LITTLEWIT into the booth.]

TRASH. I think we are rid of our new customer, Brother Leatherhead ; we shall hear no more of him. They plot to be gone.

LEATH. All the better ; let's pack up all and be gone, before he find us.

TRASH. Stay a little ; yonder comes a company. It may be we may take some more money. 29

[Enter KNOCKHUM and BUSY from the booth.]

KNOCK. Sir, I will take your counsel, and cut my hair,<sup>87</sup> and leave vapors. I see that tobacco and bottle-ale and pig and Whit and very Urs'la herself — is all vanity.

BUSY. Only pig was not comprehended in my admonition ; the rest were. For <sup>88</sup> long hair, it is an ensign of pride, a banner ; and the world is full of those banners, very full of banners. And bottle-ale is a drink of Satan's, a diet-drink of Satan's, devised to puff us up, and make us swell in this latter age [40 of vanity, as the smoke of tobacco, to keep us in mist and error. But the fleshly woman, which you call Urs'la, is above all to be avoided, having the marks upon her of the three enemies of man : the World, as being in the Fair ; the Devil, as being in the fire ; and the Flesh, as being herself.

[Enter DAME PURECRAFT from the booth.]

PURE. Brother Zeal-of-the-land ! what shall we do? My daughter Win-the-fight is fall'n into her fit of longing again. 50

BUSY. For more pig? There is no more, is there?

PURE. To see some sights i' the Fair.

BUSY. Sister, let her fly the impurity of the place swiftly, lest she partake of the pitch thereof. — Thou art the seat of the Beast, O Smithfield, and I will leave thee. Idolatry peepeth out on every side of thee. 58

KNOCK. [aside] An excellent right hypocrite ! Now his belly is full, he falls a-railing and kicking, the jade. A very good vapor ! I'll in, and joy Urs'la, with telling how her pig works ; two and a half he ate to his share. And he has drunk a pailful. He eats with his eyes, as well as his teeth. [Exit.]

LEATH. What do you lack, gentlemen? What is 't you buy? rattles, drums, babies — 68

BUSY. Peace, with thy apocryphal wares, thou profane publican : thy bells, thy dragons, and thy Tobie's dogs.<sup>89</sup> Thy hobbyhorse is an idol, a very idol, a fierce and rank idol ; and thou the Nebuchadnezzar, the proud Nebuchadnezzar of the Fair, that sett'st it up, for children to fall down to, and worship.

LEATH. Cry you mercy, sir ; will you buy a fiddle to fill up your noise? <sup>90</sup>

[Re-enter LITTLEWIT and his wife.]

LIT. Look, Win, do, look, a' God's name, and save your longing. Here be fine sights. 80

PURE. Ay, child, so you hate 'em, as our brother Zeal does, you may look on 'em.

LEATH. Or what do you say to a drum, sir?

BUSY. It is the broken belly of the Beast, and thy bellows there are his lungs, and these pipes are his throat, those feathers are of his tail, and thy rattles the gnashing of his teeth. 89

TRASH. And what's my gingerbread, I pray you?

BUSY. The provender that pricks him up. Hence with thy basket of popery, thy nest of images, and whole legend of ginger-work.

<sup>87</sup> Puppet-show.

LEATH. Sir, if you be not quiet the quick-lie, I'll ha' you clapp'd fairly by the heels,<sup>91</sup> for disturbing the Fair.

BUSY. The sin of the Fair provokes me ; I cannot be silent.

PURE. Good Brother Zeal ! 100

LEATH. Sir, I'll make you silent, believe it.

LIT. [aside to LEATHERHEAD] I'd give a shilling you could, i' faith, friend.

LEATH. [aside] Sir, give me your shilling. I'll give you my shop, if I do not ; and I'll leave it in pawn with you i' the meantime.

LIT. [aside] A match, i' faith ; but do it quickly then. [Exit LEATHERHEAD.] 108

BUSY. (speaks to the Widow.) Hinder me not, woman. I was mov'd in spirit, to be here this day, in this Fair, this wicked and foul Fair (and fitter may it be called a foul than a fair) ; to protest against the abuses of it, the foul abuses of it, in regard of the afflicted saints, that are troubled, very much troubled, exceedingly troubled, with the opening of the merchandise of Babylon again, and the peeping of popery upon the stalls here, here, in the high places. See you not Goldyllocks, the purple strumpet there, in her yellow [120 gown and green sleeves? the profane pipes, the tinkling timbrels? A shop of relics!

[Attempts to seize the toys.]

LIT. Pray you forbear ; I am put in trust with 'em.

BUSY. And this idolatrous grove of images, this flasket<sup>92</sup> of idols, which I will pull down —
Overthrows the gingerbread.

TRASH. Oh, my ware, my ware ! God bless it !

BUSY. In my zeal, and glory to be thus exercis'd. 130

LEATHERHEAD re-enters, with Officers, [BRISTLE and HAGGIS].

LEATH. Here he is. Pray you lay hold on his zeal ; we cannot sell a whistle for him in tune. Stop his noise first.

BUSY. Thou canst not ; 't is a sanctified noise. I will make a loud and most strong noise, till I have daunted the profane enemy. And for this cause —

LEATH. Sir, here's no man afraid of you, or your cause. You shall swear it i' the stocks, sir. 140

BUSY. I will thrust myself into the stocks, upon the pikes of the land.

LEATH. Carry him away.

<sup>91</sup> Set in the stocks.      <sup>92</sup> Shallow basket.

PURE. What do you mean, wicked men?

BUSY. Let them alone ; I fear them not.

[Exeunt Officers with BUSY, followed by DAME PURECRAFT.]

LIT. Was not this shilling well ventur'd, Win, for our liberty? Now we may go play, and see over the Fair, where we list ourselves. My mother is gone after him, and let her e'en go, and loose us.<sup>93</sup> 150

MRS. LIT. Yes, John ; but I know not what to do.

LIT. For what, Win?

MRS. LIT. For a thing I am asham'd to tell you, i' faith ; and 't is too far to go home.

LIT. I pray thee be not asham'd, Win. Come, i' faith, thou shall not be asham'd. Is it anything about the hobbyhorse man? An't be, speak freely. 159

MRS. LIT. Hang him, base Bobchin, I scorn him. No, I have very great what sha' call 'um, John.

LIT. Oh ! is that all, Win? We'll go back to Captain Jordan, to the pig woman's, Win. He'll help us, or she, with a dripping-pan, or an old kettle, or something. The poor greasy soul loves you, Win ; and after we'll visit the Fair all over, Win, and see my puppet-play, Win ; you know it's a fine matter, Win. [Exeunt into URSULA's booth.] 170

LEATH. Let's away ; I counsell'd you to pack up afore, Joan.

TRASH. A pox of his Bedlam purity ! He has spoil'd half my ware. But the best is, we lose nothing if we miss our first merchant.

LEATH. It shall be hard for him to find or know us, when we are translated, Joan. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[The stocks. Enter BRISTLE and HAGGIS, and Officers with OVERDO in custody ; followed by COKEs and TROUBLEALL.]

TRO. My masters, I do make no doubt but you are officers.

BRI. What then, sir?

TRO. And the King's loving and obedient subjects.

BRI. Obedient, friend ! Take heed what you speak, I advise you. Oliver<sup>2</sup> Bristle advises you. His loving subjects, we grant you; but not his obedient, at this time, by your leave; we know ourselves a little [10 better than so; we are to command, sir, and such as you are to be obedient. Here's one of his obedient subjects going to the stocks; and we'll make you such another, if you talk.

TRO. You are all wise enough i' your places, I know.

BRI. If you know it, sir, why do you bring it in question?

TRO. I question nothing, pardon me. I do only hope you have warrant for what [20 you do, and so quit you,<sup>3</sup> and so multiply<sup>4</sup> you.

He goes away again.

HAG. What's he? — Bring him up to the stocks there. Why bring you him not up?

TRO. (comes again.) If you have Justice Overdo's warrant, 't is well; you are safe: that is the warrant of warrants. I'll not give this button for any man's warrant else.

BRI. Like enough, sir; but let me tell you, an you play away your buttons thus, you [30 will want 'em ere night, for any store I see about you. You might keep 'em, and save pins, I wuss.

[TROUBLEALL] goes away.

OVER. [aside] What should he be, that doth so esteeme and advance my warrant? He seems a sober and discreet person! It is a comfort to a good conscience to be follow'd with a good fame in his sufferings. The world will have a pretty taste by this, how I can bear adversity; and it will beget a kind of [40 reverence toward me hereafter, even from mine enemies, when they shall see I carry my calamity nobly, and that it doth neither break me nor bend me.

HAG. Come, sir, here's a place for you to preach in. Will you put in your leg?

OVER. That I will, cheerfully.

They put him in the stocks.

BRI. O' my conscience, a seminary!<sup>5</sup> He kisses the stocks. 49

COKE. Well, my masters, I'll leave him with you; now I see him bestow'd, I'll go look for my goods and Numps. [Exit COKE.]

HAG. You may, sir, I warrant you. — Where's the tother bawler? Fetch him too. You shall find 'em both fast enough.

[Exeunt Officers.]

<sup>2</sup> He is called Davy in III, i, 10.

OVER. [aside] In the midst of this tumult, I will yet be the author of mine own rest, and, not minding their fury, sit in the stocks in that calm as shall be able to trouble a triumph. 59

TRO. (comes again.) Do you assure me upon your words? May I undertake for you, if I be ask'd the question, that you have this warrant?

HAG. What's this fellow, for God's sake?

TRO. Do but show me Adam Overdo, and I am satisfied. Goes out.

BRI. He is a fellow that is distracted, they say; one Troubleall: he was an officer in the court of pie-powders here last year, and put out on his place by Justice Overdo. 70

OVER. [aside] Ha!

BRI. Upon which he took an idle conceit,<sup>6</sup> and 's run mad upon 't. So that ever since he will do nothing but by Justice Overdo's warrant; he will not eat a crust, nor drink a little, nor make him in his apparel ready. His wife (sir reverence)<sup>7</sup> cannot get him make his water, or shift his shirt, without his warrant. 79

OVER. [aside] If this be true, this is my greatest disaster. How am I bound to satisfy this poor man, that is of so good a nature to me, out of his wits, where there is no room left for dissembling!

TROUBLEALL comes in.

TRO. If you cannot show me Adam Overdo, I am in doubt of you; I am afraid you cannot answer it. Goes again.

HAG. Before me, neighbor Bristle — and now I think on 't better — Justice Overdo is a very parantory<sup>8</sup> person. 90

BRI. Oh, are you advis'd of that? and a severe justicer, by your leave.

OVER. [aside] Do I hear ill o' that side too?

BRI. He will sit as upright o' the bench, and you mark him, as a candle i' the socket, and give light to the whole court in every business.

HAG. But he will burn blue, and swell like a bile,<sup>9</sup> God bless us, an he be angry. 99

BRI. Ay, and he will be angry too, when [him]<sup>10</sup> list: that's more; and, when he is angry, be it right or wrong, he has the law on 's side ever. Ay, mark that too.

OVER. [aside] I will be more tender hereafter. I see compassion may become a jus-

tice, though it be a weakness, I confess, and nearer a vice than a virtue.

HAG. Well, take him out o' the stocks again; we'll go a sure way to work; we'll ha' the ace of hearts of our side, if we can. [110
They take the JUSTICE out.

[Enter POCHER, and Officers with BUSY, followed by DAME PURECRAFT.]

POCH. Come, bring him away to his fellow there.—Master Busy, we shall rule your legs, I hope, though we cannot rule your tongue.

BUSY. No, minister of darkness, no; thou canst not rule my tongue. My tongue it is mine own, and with it I will both knock and mock down your Bartholomew abominations, till you be made a hissing to the neighbor parishes round about. 120

HAG. Let him alone; we have devis'd better upon 't.

PURE. And shall he not into the stocks, then?

BRI. No, mistress, we'll have 'em both to Justice Overdo, and let him do over 'em as is fitting. Then I, and my gossip Haggis, and my beadle Pocher, are discharg'd.<sup>11</sup>

PURE. Oh, I thank you, blessed honest men! 130

BRI. Nay, never thank us; but thank this madman that comes here; he put it in our heads.

[TROUBLEALL comes again.]

PURE. Is he mad? now Heaven increase his madness, and bless it, and thank it!—Sir, your poor handmaid thanks you.

TRO. Have you a warrant? An you have a warrant, show it.

PURE. Yes, I have a warrant out of the Word,<sup>12</sup> to give thanks for removing any [140 scorn intended to the brethren.

TRO. It is Justice Overdo's warrant that I look for; if you have not that, keep your word, I'll keep mine. Quit ye, and multiply ye. [Exeunt all but TROUBLEALL.]

SCENE II <sup>13</sup>

[Enter, to] TROUBLEALL, EDGEWORTH [and] NIGHTINGALE.

EDG. Come away, Nightingale, I pray thee.

TRO. Whither go you? Where's your warrant?

EDG. Warrant! for what, sir?

TRO. For what you go about. You know how fit it is; an you have no warrant, bless you, I'll pray for you; that's all I can do.

Goes out.

EDG. What means he?

NIGHT. A madman that haunts the [10
Fair. Do you not know him? It's marvel he has not more followers after his ragged heels.

EDG. Beshrew him, he startled me. I thought he had known of our plot. Guilt's a terrible thing. Ha' you prepar'd the costardmonger?

NIGHT. Yes, and agreed for his basket of pears; he is at the corner here, ready. And your prize, he comes down sailing [20 that way all alone, without his protector; he is rid of him, it seems.

EDG. Ay, I know; I should ha' followed his Protectorship, for a feat I am to do upon him. But this offer'd itself so i' the way, I could not let it scape. Here he comes. Whistle; be this sport call'd Dorrington the Dottrel.<sup>14</sup>

[Enter COKES.]

NIGHT. (whistles.) Wh, wh, wh, wh, etc.

COKES. By this light, I cannot find my [30 gingerbread wife,<sup>15</sup> nor my hobbyhorse man, in all the Fair now, to ha' my money again.<sup>16</sup> And I do not know the way out on 't, to go home for more.—Do you hear, friend, you that whistle? What tune is that you whistle?

NIGHT. A new tune I am practising, sir.

COKES. Dost thou know where I dwell, I pray thee? Nay, on with thy tune; I ha' no such haste for an answer. I'll practise with thee. 40

[Enter Passengers and Costardmonger.]

Cos. Buy any pears, very fine pears, pears fine.

NIGHTINGALE sets his foot afore him, and he falls with his basket.

COKES. Gods-so! a muss,<sup>17</sup> a muss, a muss, a muss!

Cos. Good gentlemen, my ware, my ware; I am a poor man. Good sir, my ware.

COKES falls a-scrambling whilst they run away with his things.

NIGHT. Let me hold your sword, sir; it troubles you.

COKES. Do, and my cloak, an thou wilt, and my hat too. 50

EDG. [aside] A delicate great boy! Methinks he out-scrambles 'em all. I cannot persuade myself but he goes to grammar school yet, and plays the truant to-day.

NIGHT. [aside] Would he had another purse to cut, Zekiel.

EDG. [aside] Purse! a man might cut out his kidneys, I think, and he never feel 'em, he is so earnest at the sport.

NIGHT. [aside] His soul is halfway out on 's body at the game. 61

EDG. [aside] Away, Nightingale—that way. [Exit NIGHTINGALE.]

COKES. I think I am furnish'd for Cather'ne pears, for one undermeal.<sup>18</sup> Gi' me my cloak.

COS. Good gentleman, give me my ware.

COKES. Where's the fellow I ga' my cloak to? my cloak! and my hat! Ha! God's lid, is he gone? Thieves! thieves! Help me to cry, gentlemen. He runs out. 69

EDG. Away, costermonger; come to us to Urs'la's. [Exit Costardmonger.]—Talk of him to have a soul! 'Heart, if he have any more than a thing given him instead of salt, only to keep him from stinking, I'll be hang'd afore my time, presently. Where should it be, trow? in his blood? He has not so much toward it in his whole body as will maintain a good flea! An if he take this course, he will not ha' so much land left as to rear a calf, within this twelvemonth. Was there ever green [80 plover]<sup>19</sup> so pull'd!<sup>20</sup> That his little overseer had been here now, and been but tall enough to see him steal pears, in exchange for his beaver hat and his cloak thus! I must go find him out next, for his black box, and his patent, it seems, he has of his place;<sup>21</sup> which I think the gentleman would have a reversion<sup>22</sup> of, that spoke to me for it so earnestly. [Exit.] [88

[COKES] comes again.

COKES. Would I might lose my doublet, and hose, too, as I am an honest man, and never stir, if I think there be anything but thieving and coz'ning i' this whole Fair. Bartholomew Fair, quoth he!<sup>23</sup> An ever any

<sup>21</sup> A patent of place was the document conferring an appointment or privilege. Wasp's custody of the license is a symbol of his governorship.

<sup>22</sup> The reversion of an office was the promise of possessing it upon the incumbent's death or surrender of it.

Bartholomew had that luck in 't that I have had, I'll be martyr'd for him, and in Smithfield,<sup>24</sup> too. I ha' paid for my pears, a rot on 'em! I'll keep 'em no longer. (Throws away his pears.) You were choke-pears to me. I had been better ha' gone to mumchance<sup>25</sup> for you, I-wuss. Methinks the Fair should [100 not have us'd me thus, an 't were but for my name's sake. I would not ha' us'd a dog o' the name so. Oh, Numps will triumph now!—

TROUBLEALL comes again.

Friend, do you know who I am, or where I lie? <sup>26</sup> I do not myself, I'll be sworn. Do but carry me home, and I'll please thee; I ha' money enough there. I ha' lost myself, and my cloak, and my hat, and my fine sword, and my sister, and Numps, and Mistress Grace, a gentlewoman that I should ha' [110 married, and a cut-work handkercher she ga' me, and two purses, to-day. And my bargain o' hobbyhorses and gingerbread, which grieves me worst of all.

TRO. By whose warrant, sir, have you done all this?

COKES. Warrant! thou art a wise fellow indeed; as if a man need a warrant to lose anything with.

TRO. Yes, Justice Overdo's warrant, [120 a man may get and lose with, I'll stand to 't.

COKES. Justice Overdo! dost thou know him? I lie there; he is my brother-in-law; he married my sister. Pray thee, show me the way; dost thou know the house?

TRO. Sir, show me your warrant; I know nothing without a warrant, pardon me.

COKES. Why, I warrant thee; come along. Thou shalt see I have wrought pillows there, and cambric sheets,<sup>27</sup> and sweet bags<sup>28</sup> too. Pray thee, guide me to the house. 131

TRO. Sir, I'll tell you; go you thither yourself first alone, tell your worshipful brother your mind, and but bring me three lines of his hand, or his clerk's, with Adam Overdo underneath (here I'll stay<sup>29</sup> you), I'll obey you, and I'll guide you presently.

COKES. 'Slid! this is an ass; I ha' found him, pox upon me; what do I talking to such a dull fool? Farewell! you are a very coxcomb, do you hear? [Exit.] [141

TRO. I think I am ; if Justice Overdo sign to it, I am, and so we are all. He'll quit <sup>30</sup> us all, multiply us all.

SCENE III <sup>31</sup>

[To him] enter GRACE, [and] QUARLOUS [and] WINWIFE with their swords drawn.

GRACE. Gentlemen, this is no way that you take ; you do but breed one another trouble and offence, and give me no contentment at all. I am no she that affects to be quarrell'd for or have my name or fortune made the question of men's swords.

QUAR. 'Sblood, we love you !

GRACE. If you both love me, as you pretend, your own reason will tell you but one can enjoy me ; and to that point there [10] leads a directer line than by my infamy, which must follow if you fight. 'T is true, I have profess'd it to you ingenuously, that, rather than to be yok'd with this bridegroom is appointed me, I would take up any husband almost upon any trust ; though subtlety would say to me, I know, he is a fool, and has an estate, and I might govern him, and enjoy a friend <sup>32</sup> beside. But these are not my aims ; I must have a husband I must <sup>33</sup> love, or [20] I cannot live with him. I shall ill make one of these politic wives !

WINW. Why, if you can like either of us, lady, say which is he, and the other shall swear instantly to desist.

QUAR. Content ; I accord to that willingly.

GRACE. Sure you think me a woman of an extreme levity, gentlemen, or a strange fancy, that, meeting you by chance in such a [30] place as this, both at one instant, and not yet of two hours' acquaintance, neither of you deserving afore the other of me, I should so forsake my modesty, though I might affect one more particularly, as to say, "This is he," and name him.

QUAR. Why, wherefore should you not ? What should hinder you ?

GRACE. If you would not give it to my modesty, allow it yet to my wit. Give me [40]

so much of woman and cunning as not to betray myself impertinently. How can I judge of you, so far as to a choice, without knowing you more ? You are both equal, and alike to me yet, and so indifferently affected <sup>34</sup> by me, as each of you might be the man, if the other were away. For you are reasonable creatures, you have understanding and discourse ; and, if fate send me an understanding husband, I have no fear at all but mine [50] own manners shall make him a good one.

QUAR. Would I were put forth to making for you then.

GRACE. It may be you are ; you know not what's toward you. Will you consent to a motion <sup>35</sup> of mine, gentlemen ?

WINW. Whatever it be, we'll presume reasonableness, coming from you.

QUAR. And fitness, too.

GRACE. I saw one of you buy a pair of [60] tables <sup>36</sup> e'en now.

WINW. Yes, here they be, and maiden ones too, unwritten in.

GRACE. The fitter for what they may be employed in. You shall write either of you here a word or a name, what you like <sup>37</sup> best, but of two or three syllables at most ; and the next person that comes this way, because destiny has a high hand in business of this nature, <sup>38</sup> I'll demand which of the two [70] words he or she doth approve, and according to that sentence fix my resolution and affection without change.

QUAR. Agreed ; my word is conceived already.

WINW. And mine shall not be long creating after.

GRACE. But you shall promise, gentlemen, not to be curious to know which of you it is, taken ; but give me leave to conceal [80] that till you have brought me either home or where I may safely tender myself.

WINW. Why, that's but equal. <sup>39</sup>

QUAR. We are pleas'd.

GRACE. Because I will bind both your endeavors to work together friendly and jointly, each to the other's fortune, and have myself fitted with some means to make him that is forsaken a part of amends.

<sup>30</sup> Requite.

<sup>31</sup> The scene is unchanged, and Troubleall remains on stage, but the last speech shows that we are again in the vicinity of Ursula's booth.

<sup>32</sup> Lover.

<sup>36</sup> A memorandum book.

QUAR. These conditions are very courte- [90
ous. Well, my word is out of the "Arcadia," then : Argalus.<sup>40</sup>

WINW. And mine out of the play : Palemon.<sup>41</sup>

TROUBLEALL comes again.

TRO. Have you any warrant for this, gentlemen?

QUAR. [AND] WINW. Ha?

TRO. There must be a warrant had, believe it.

WINW. For what? 100

TRO. For whatsoever it is, anything indeed, no matter what.

QUAR. 'Slight! here's a fine ragged prophet dropp'd down i' the nick!

TRO. Heaven quit you, gentlemen!

QUAR. Nay, stay a little. Good lady, put him to the question.

GRACE. You are content then?

WINW. [AND] QUAR. Yes, yes.

[They step aside.]

GRACE. Sir, here are two names written —

TRO. Is [Justice] <sup>42</sup> Overdo one? 111

GRACE. How, sir? I pray you read 'em to yourself; it is for a wager between these gentlemen; and with a stroke or any difference mark which you approve best.

TRO. They may be both worshipful names for aught I know, mistress; but Adam Overdo had been worth three of 'em, I assure you, in this place; that's in plain English.

GRACE. This man amazes me! I pray [120 you like one of 'em, sir.

TRO. I do like him there, that has the best warrant, mistress, to save your longing, and (multiply him) it may be this. But I am still for Justice Overdo — that's my conscience; and quit you.

WINW. Is 't done, lady?

GRACE. Ay, and strangely as ever I saw! What fellow is this, trow? 129

QUAR. No matter what; a fortune teller we ha' made him. Which is 't, which is 't?

GRACE. Nay, did you not promise not to inquire?

[Enter EDGEWORTH.]

QUAR. 'Slid, I forgot that! pray you pardon me. — Look, here's our Mercury come. The license arrives i' the finest time too! 't is

WINW. How now, lime-twigg,<sup>43</sup> hast thou touch'd? 140

EDG. Not yet, sir; except you would go with me and see 't, it's not worth speaking on. The act is nothing without a witness. Yonder he is, your man with the box, fall'n into the finest company, and so transported with vapors. They ha' got in a northern clothier; <sup>44</sup> and one Puppy, a western man, that's come to wrastle before my Lord Mayor <sup>45</sup> anon; and Captain Whit; and one Val Cutting, that helps Captain Jordan to roar, a circling boy; <sup>46</sup> [150 with whom your Numps is so taken that you may strip him of his clothes, if you will. I'll undertake to geld him for you, if you had but a surgeon ready to sear him. And Mistress Justice there is the goodest woman! She does so love 'em all over in terms of justice and the style of authority, with her hood upright, that I beseech you come away, gentlemen, and see 't.

QUAR. 'Slight, I would not lose it for [160 the Fair. What'll you do, Ned?

WINW. Why, stay hereabout for you; Mistress Wellborn must not be seen.

QUAR. Do so, and find out a priest i' the meantime. I'll bring the license. — Lead; which way is 't?

EDG. Here, sir, you are o' the backside o' the booth already; you may hear the noise.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV <sup>47</sup>

KNOCKHUM, NORDERN, PUPPY, CUTTING, WHIT, WASP, and [MRS.] OVERDO [are discovered].<sup>48</sup>

KNOCK. [aside] Whit, bid Val Cutting continue the vapors for a lift,<sup>49</sup> Whit, for a lift.

NOR. I'll ne mare, I'll ne mare; the eale's too meeghty.<sup>50</sup>

KNOCK. How now! my Galloway nag, the staggers? Ha! Whit, gi' him a slit i' the forehead. Cheer up, man; a needle and thread to stitch his ears. I'd cure him now, an I had it, with a little butter and garlic, long pepper and grains. Where's my horn? I'll gi' [10 him a mash presently, shall take away this dizziness.

PUP. Why, where are you, zurs? Do you vlinch,<sup>51</sup> and leave us i' the zuds now?

NOR. I'll ne mare; I is e'en as vull as a paiper's bag,<sup>52</sup> by my troth, I.

PUP. Do my northern cloth zhrink i' the wetting, ha?

KNOCK. Why, well said, old flea-bitten; thou 'lt never tire, I sec.<sup>53</sup> 20

They fall to their vapors again.

CUT. No, sir, but he may tire if it please him.

WHIT. Who told dee sho, that he vuld never teer, man?

CUT. No matter who told him so, so long as he knows.

KNOCK. Nay, I know nothing, sir; pardon me there.

[Enter EDGEWORTH and QUARLOUS.]<sup>54</sup>

EDG. [aside to QUARLOUS] They are at it still, sir; this they call vapors. 30

WHIT. He shall not pardon dee, captain; dou shalt not be pardon'd. Pre'dee, shweet-heart, do not pardon him.

CUT. 'Slight, I'll pardon him, an I list, whosoever says nay to 't.

QUAR. [aside] Where's Numps? I miss him.

Here they continue their game of "vapors," which is nonsense; every man to oppose the last man that spoke, whether it concern'd him or no.

WASP. Why, I say nay to 't.

QUAR. Oh, there he is.

KNOCK. To what do you say nay, sir? [40

WASP. To anything, whatsoever it is, so long as I do not like it.

WHIT. Pardon me, little man, dou musht like it a little.

CUT. No, he must not like it at all, sir; there you are i' the wrong.

WHIT. I tink I be: he musht not like it, indeed.

CUT. Nay, then he both must and will like it, sir, for all you. 50

KNOCK. If he have reason, he may like it, sir.

WHIT. By no meensh, captain, upon reason; he may like nothing upon reason.

<sup>51</sup> Flinch, weaken in drinking your share.

WASP. I have no reason, nor I will hear of no reason, nor I will look for no reason, and he is an ass that either knows any, or looks for 't from me.

CUT. Yes, in some sense you may have reason, sir. 60

WASP. Ay, in some sense, I care not if I grant you.

WHIT. Pardon me, thou ousht to grant him nothing in no shensh, if dou do love dysshelf, angry man.

WASP. Why then, I do grant him nothing, and I have no sense.

CUT. 'T is true, thou hast no sense indeed. 69

WASP. 'Slid, but I have sense, now I tink on 't better; and I will grant him anything, do you see?

KNOCK. He is i' the right, and does utter a sufficient vapor.

CUT. Nay, it is no sufficient vapor neither. I deny that.

KNOCK. Then it is a sweet vapor.

CUT. It may be a sweet vapor.

WASP. Nay, it is no sweet vapor neither, sir; it stinks, and I'll stand to 't. 80

WHIT. Yes, I tink it dosh shtink, captain. All vapor dosh shtink.

WASP. Nay, then it does not stink, sir, and it shall not stink.

CUT. By your leave, it may, sir.

WASP. Ay, by my leave it may stink, I know that.

WHIT. Pardon me, thou knowesht nothing; it cannot by thy leave, angry man.

WASP. How can it not? 90

KNOCK. Nay, never question him, for he is i' the right.

WHIT. Yesh, I am i' de right, I confesh it; so ish de little man too.

WASP. I'll have nothing confess'd that concerns me. I am not i' the right, nor never was i' the right, nor never will be i' the right, while I am in my right mind.

CUT. Mind! Why, here's no man minds you, sir, nor anything else. 100

They drink again.

PUP. [offering NORDERN the cup] Vriend, will you mind this that we do?

QUAR. [aside to EDGEWORTH] Call you this vapors? This is such belching of quarrel as I never heard. Will you mind your business,<sup>55</sup> sir?

<sup>55</sup> I.e., try to steal the license.

EDG. [aside to QUARLOUS] You shall see, sir. — [Goes to WASP.]

NOR. I'll ne maire, my waimb warkes too mickle <sup>56</sup> with this auready. 110

EDG. Will you take that, Master Wasp, that nobody should mind you?

WASP. Why! what ha' you to do? Is 't any matter to you?

EDG. No, but methinks you should not be unminded, though.

WASP. Nor I wu' <sup>57</sup> not be, now I think on 't. — Do you hear, new acquaintance? Does no man mind me, say you?

CUT. Yes, sir, every man here minds you — but how? 121

WASP. Nay, I care as little how as you do; that was not my question.

WHIT. No, noting was ty question; tou art a learned man, and I am a valiant man, i' faith la; tou shalt speak for me, and I vill fight for tee.

KNOCK. Fight for him, Whit? a gross vapor! He can fight for himself.

WASP. It may be I can, but it may [130 be I wu' not. How then?

CUT. Why, then you may choose.

WASP. Why, and I'll choose whether I'll choose or no.

KNOCK. I think you may, and 't is true; and I allow it for a resolute vapor.

WASP. Nay then, I do think you do not think, and it is no resolute vapor. 138

CUT. Yes, in some sort he may allow you.

KNOCK. In no sort, sir, pardon me; I can allow him nothing. You mistake the vapor.

WASP. He mistakes nothing, sir, in no sort.

WHIT. Yes, I pre dee now, let him mistake.

WASP. A turd i' your teeth! Never pre dee me, for I will have nothing mistaken.

KNOCK. Turd, ha, turd? a noisome vapor! strike, Whit! [WHIT and WASP]

fall by the ears, [while EDGEWORTH steals the license out of the box, and exit.]

MRS. OVER. Why, gentlemen, why, gentlemen, I charge you upon my authority, conserve the peace. In the King's name, and my husband's, put up your weapons; I shall be driven to commit you myself else. 152

QUAR. Ha, ha, ha.

WASP. Why do you laugh, sir?

QUAR. Sir, you'll allow me my Christian liberty: I may laugh, I hope.

CUT. In some sort you may, and in some sort you may not, sir.

<sup>56</sup> My belly works too much.

KNOCK. Nay, in some sort, sir, he may neither laugh nor hope in this company. 160

WASP. Yes, then he may both laugh and hope in any sort, an 't please him.

QUAR. Faith, and I will then, for it doth please me exceedingly.

WASP. No exceeding <sup>58</sup> neither, sir.

KNOCK. No, that vapor is too lofty.

QUAR. Gentlemen, I do not play well at your game of vapors; I am not very good at it; but — 169

CUT. Do you hear, sir? I would speak with you in circle!

He draws a circle on the ground.

QUAR. In circle, sir? What would you with me in circle?

CUT. Can you lend me a piece, a Jacobus, in circle? <sup>59</sup>

QUAR. 'Slid! your circle will prove more costly than your vapors, then. Sir, no; I lend you none.

CUT. Your beard's not well turn'd up, sir.

QUAR. How, rascal! Are you playing with my beard? I'll break circle with you. 181

They draw all and fight.

PUP. [AND] NOR. Gentlemen, gentlemen!

KNOCK. [aside] Gather up, Whit, gather up, Whit; good vapors! [Exit, while

WHIT takes up the cloaks and hides them.]

MRS. OVER. What mean you? are you rebels, gentlemen? Shall I send out a sergeant at arms, or a writ o' rebellion against you? I'll commit you, upon my womanhood, for a riot; upon my justicehood, if you persist. [Exeunt QUARLOUS and CUTTING.] 190

WASP. Upon your justicehood! Marry shit o' your hood. You'll commit! Spoke like a true justice of peace's wife, indeed, and a fine female lawyer! Turd i' your teeth for a fee, now.

MRS. OVER. Why, Numps, in Master Overdo's name, I charge you.

WASP. Good Mistress Underdo, hold your tongue.

MRS. OVER. Alas, poor Numps! 200

WASP. Alas! and why alas from you, I beseech you? or why poor Numps, Goody Rich? Am I come to be pitied by your tuft-

<sup>59</sup> A Jacobus was a gold coin, the sovereign, originally worth $4.85. — By drawing the circle Cutting is daring Quarulous to invade it and fight. Quarulous asks, "What do you want me to enter that circle for?" "Merely," replies Cutting, "to ask you for a loan." Quarulous still fails to take the procedure as a challenge, whereupon Cutting directly insults him. Quarulous then accepts the challenge. (Kittredge.)

taffeta<sup>60</sup> now? Why, mistress, I knew Adam the clerk, your husband, when he was Adam Scrivener,<sup>61</sup> and writ for twopence a sheet, as high as he bears his head now, or you your hood, dame —

The Watch comes in, [led by BRISTLE].

What are you, sir?

BRI. We be men, and no infidels; [210 what is the matter here, and the noises, can you tell?

WASP. Heart, what ha' you to do? Cannot a man quarrel in quietness, but he must be put out on't by you? What are you?

BRI. Why, we be his Majesty's watch, sir.

WASP. Watch! 'Sblood, you are a sweet watch indeed. A body would think, an you watch'd well a-nights, you should be contented to sleep at this time a' day. Get you to your fleas and your flock-beds, you rogues, your kennels, and lie down close. 222

BRI. Down? yes, we will down, I warrant you. — Down with him, in his Majesty's name; down, down with him, and carry him away, to the pigeon-holes.<sup>62</sup> [Some of the Watch seize WASP, and carry him off.]

MRS. OVER. I thank you, honest friends, in the behalf o' the Crown, and the peace, and in Master Overdo's name, for suppressing enormities. 230

WHIT. Stay, Bristle, here ish anoder brashe<sup>63</sup> o' drunkards, but very quiet, special drunkards, will pay dee five shillings very well. [Points to NORDERN and PUPPY, drunk and asleep on the bench.] Take 'em to dee, in de graish o' God; one of 'em does change cloth for ale in the Fair here; te toder ish a strong man, a mighty man, my Lord Mayor's man, and a wrastler. He has wrashed so long with the bottle here, that [240 the man with the beard<sup>64</sup> hash almosht streek up his heelsh.

BRI. 'Slid, the clerk o' the market has been to cry him all the Fair over here, for my Lord's service.

WHIT. Tere he ish; pre dee taik him hensh, and make ty best on him. [Exeunt BRISTLE and the rest of the Watch with NORDERN and PUPPY.] — How now, woman o' shilk, vat aish ty shweet faish? Art tou melancholy?

MRS. OVER. A little distemper'd [250 with these enormities. Shall I entreat a courtesy of you, captain?

WHIT. Entreat a hundred, velvet voman, I vill do it; shpeak out.

MRS. OVER. I cannot with modesty speak it out; but — [Whispers to him.]

WHIT. I vill do it, and more and more, for dee. — What, Urs'la, an't be bitch, an't be bawd, an't be!

[Enter URSULA.]

URS. How now, rascal; What roar [260 you for, old pimp?

WHIT. [aside] Here, put up de cloaks, Ursh, de purchase. — Pre dee now, shweet Ursh, help dis good, brave voman, to a jordan, an't be.

URS. 'Slid, call your Captain Jordan to her, can you not?

WHIT. Nay, pre dee leave dy consheits, and bring the velvet woman to de —

URS. I bring her, hang her. Heart, must I find a common pot for every punk i' [271 your purlieus?

WHIT. O, good voordsh, Ursh; it ish a guest o' velvet, i' fait, la.

URS. Let her sell her hood, and buy a sponge, with a pox to her. My vessel [is] <sup>65</sup> employed, sir. I have but one, and 't is the bottom of an old bottle. An honest proctor and his wife are at it within; if she'll stay her time, so. [Exit.]

WHIT. As soon ash tou cansht, shwe[e]t [281 Ursh. — Of a valiant man I tink I am te patientsh man i' the world, or in all Smith-field.

[Re-enter KNOCKHUM.]

KNOCK. How now, Whit! Close vapors! Stealing your leaps? Covering <sup>66</sup> in corners, ha?

WHIT. No, fait, captain, dough tou beesht a vishe man, dy vit is a mile hence, now. I vas procuring a shmall courtesie for a woman of fashion here. 291

MRS. OVER. Yes, captain, though I am justice of peace's wife, I do love men of war and the sons of the sword, when they come before my husband.

KNOCK. Say'st thou so, filly? Thou shalt have a leap presently; I'll horse thee myself else.

URS. [within] Come, will you bring her in now, and let her [take] <sup>67</sup> her turn? 300

WHIT. Grammercy, good Ursh, I tank dee.

MRS. OVER. Master Overdo shall thank her. [Exit.]

SCENE V <sup>68</sup>

[Enter] URS'LA, LITTLEWIT, and MRS. LITTLEWIT, [to] WHIT, [and] KNOCKHUM.

LIT. Good gammer Urs, Win and I are exceedingly beholden to you, and to Captain Jordan and Captain Whit. — Win, I'll be bold to leave you i' this good company, Win, for half an hour or so, Win, while I go and see how my matter goes forward, and if the puppets be perfect; <sup>69</sup> and then I'll come and fetch you, Win.

MRS. LIT. [aside] Will you leave me alone with two men, John? 10

LIT. [aside to WIN] Ay, they are honest gentlemen, Win, Captain Jordan and Captain Whit; they'll use you very civilly, Win. God b' w' you, Win. [Exit.]

URS. [aside to KNOCKHUM] What, 's her husband gone?

KNOCK. [aside] On his false gallop, <sup>70</sup> Urs, away.

URS. [aside] An you be right Bartholomew birds, now show yourselves so. We are [20 undone for want of fowl <sup>71</sup> i' the Fair here. Here will be Zekiel Edgeworth, and three or four gallants with him at night, and I ha' neither plover <sup>71</sup> nor quail <sup>71</sup> for 'em. Persuade this between you two, to become a bird o' the game, while I work the velvet woman within, as you call her.

KNOCK. [aside] I conceive thee, Urs! go thy ways. [Exit URSULA.] — Doest thou hear, Whit? Is't not pity my delicate dark [30 chestnut here, with the fine lean head, large forehead, round eyes, even mouth, sharp ears, long neck, thin crest, close withers, plain back, deep sides, short filets, and full flanks; with a round belly, a plump buttock, large thighs, knit knees, straight legs, short pasterns, smooth hoofs, and short heels, should lead a dull honest woman's life, that might live the life of a lady?

WHIT. Yes, by my fait and trot it is, [40 captain; de honesht woman's life is a scurvy dull life, indeed, la.

MRS. LIT. How, sir? Is an honest woman's life a scurvy life?

WHIT. Yes, fait, sweetheart, believe him, de leef of a bondwoman! But if dou vilt hearken to me, I vill make tee a free woman and a lady: dou shalt live like a lady, as te captain saysh.

KNOCK. Ay, and be honest <sup>72</sup> too some- [50 times; have her wires <sup>73</sup> and her tires, <sup>74</sup> her green gowns and velvet petticoats.

WHIT. Ay, and ride to Ware and Romford i' dy coash, shee de players, be in love vit 'em, sup vit gallantsh, be drunk, and cost dee noting.

KNOCK. Brave vapors!

WHIT. And lie by twenty on 'em, if dou pleash, sweetheart.

MRS. LIT. What, and be honest still? [60 That were fine sport.

WHIT. 'Tish common, sweetheart; tou mayst do it, by my hand. It shall be justified to ty husband's faish now. Tou shalt be as honesht as the skin between his hornsh, <sup>75</sup> la!

KNOCK. Yes, and wear a dressing, top and topgallant, to compare with e'er a husband on 'em all, for a foretop. <sup>76</sup> It is the vapor of spirit in the wife to cuckold nowadays, as it is the vapor of fashion in the hus- [70 band not to suspect. Your prying cat-eyed citizen is an abominable vapor.

MRS. LIT. Lord, what a fool have I been!

WHIT. Mend then, and do everyting like a lady hereafter; never know ty husband from another man.

KNOCK. Nor any one man from another, but i' the dark.

WHIT. Ay, and then it ish no disgrash to know any man. 80

URS. [within] Help, help here!

KNOCK. How now! What vapor's there?

[Re-enter URSULA.]

URS. Oh, you are a sweet ranger, and look well to your walks! Yonder is your punk of Turnbull, ramping Alice, has fall'n upon the poor gentlewoman within, and pull'd her hood over her ears, and her hair through it.

<sup>67</sup> Chaste.

<sup>69</sup> Have their parts memorised (!).

<sup>70</sup> Canter, with a play on "false." <sup>71</sup> Wenches.

ALICE enters, beating the Justice's Wife.

MRS. OVER. Help, help, i' the King's name!

ALICE. A mischief on you; they are such as you are, that undo<sup>77</sup> us and take our trade from us, with your tuft-taffeta haunches.

KNOCK. How now, Alice!

ALICE. The poor common whores can ha' no traffic for<sup>78</sup> the privy rich ones. Your caps and hoods of velvet call away our customers, and lick the fat from us.

URS. Peace, you foul, ramping jade, you —

ALICE. Od's foot, you bawd in grease, [100 are you talking?

KNOCK. Why, Alice, I say!

ALICE. Thou sow of Smithfield, thou!

URS. Thou tripe of Turnbull!

KNOCK. Catamountain vapors! Ha!

URS. You know where you were taw'd<sup>79</sup> lately; both lash'd and slash'd you were in Bridewell.<sup>80</sup>

ALICE. Ay, by the same token, you rid<sup>81</sup> that week, and broke out the bottom o' [110 the cart, night-tub.<sup>82</sup>

KNOCK. Why, lion face, ha! Do you know who I am? Shall I tear ruff, slit waistcoat, make rags of petticoat? Ha! go to, vanish, for fear of vapors. Whit, a kick, Whit, in the parting vapor. [They kick ALICE out.] — Come, brave woman, take a good heart, thou shalt be a lady, too.

WHIT. Yes, fait, dey shall all both be ladies, and write madam. I vill do 't my- [120 self for dem. Do is the vord, and D is the middle letter of madam; DD, put 'em together, and make deeds, without which all words are alike, la!

KNOCK. 'Tis true: Urs'la, take 'em in, open thy wardrope, and fit 'em to their calling. Green gowns, crimson petticoats, green<sup>83</sup> women! my Lord Mayor's green women! guests o' the game, true bred. I'll provide you a coach to take the air in. 130

MRS. LIT. But do you think you can get one?

KNOCK. Oh, they are as common as wheelbarrows where there are great dunghills. Every pettifogger's wife has 'em; for first he buys a coach that he may marry, and then he marries that he may be made cuckold in't. For, if their wives ride not to their cuckolding, they do 'em no credit. "Hide and be hidden, ride and be rid- [140 den," says the vapor of experience.

[Exeunt URSULA, MRS. LITTLEWIT, and MRS. OVERDO.]

SCENE VI<sup>84</sup>

[Enter] TROUBLEALL [to] KNOCKHUM [and] WHIT.

TRO. By what warrant does it say so?

KNOCK. Ha, mad child o' the pie-powders! art thou there? Fill us a fresh can, Urs; we may drink together.

TRO. I may not drink without a warrant, captain.

KNOCK. 'Slood,<sup>85</sup> thou'll not stale<sup>86</sup> without a warrant, shortly. — Whit, give me pen, ink, and paper. I'll draw him a warrant presently. 10

TRO. It must be Justice Overdo's!

KNOCK. I know, man. Fetch the drink, Whit.

WHIT. I pre dee now, be very brief, captain; for de new ladies stay for dee.

[Exit, and re-enter with a can.]

KNOCK. Oh, as brief as can be; here 't is, already: "Adam Overdo."

[Gives TROUBLEALL a paper.]

TRO. Why, now I'll pledge you, captain.

[Drinks.]

KNOCK. Drink it off; I'll come to thee anon, again. [Exeunt.] 20

[Enter] QUARLOUS [and EDGEWORTH] the Cutpurse.

QUAR. Well, sir. You are now discharg'd. Beware of being spi'd hereafter.

EDG. Sir, will it please you enter in here at Urs'la's, and take part of a silken gown, a velvet petticoat, or a wrought smock? I am promis'd such, and I can spare any gentleman a moiety.<sup>87</sup>

QUAR. Keep it for your companions in beastliness; I am none of 'em, sir. If I had not already forgiven you a greater trespass, [30 or thought you yet worth my beating, I would instruct your manners to whom you made your offers. But go your ways; talk not to me: the hangman is only fit to discourse <sup>84</sup> The same; but, as in IV, iii, the scene varies. At l. 21 the curtains of the inner stage were probably closed; the outer stage thereafter represents the ground in front of Ursula's booth, till l. 60; after which we are back at the stocks.

with you ; the hand of beadle <sup>88</sup> is too merciful a punishment for your trade of life.

[Exit EDGEWORTH.]

I am sorry I employ'd this fellow, for he thinks me such ; facinus quos inquinat aequat. <sup>89</sup> But, it was for sport. And, would I make it serious, the getting of this license is [40 nothing to me, without other circumstances concur. I do think how impertinently I labor, if the word be not mine that the ragged fellow mark'd. And what advantage I have given Ned Winwife in this time now of working her, though it be mine. He'll go near to form to her what a debauch'd rascal I am, and fright her out of all good conceit of me. I should do so by him, I am sure, if I had the opportunity. But my hope is in her [50 temper yet ; and it must needs be next to despair, that is grounded on any part of a woman's discretion. I would give, by my troth now, all I could spare, to my clothes and my sword, to meet my tatter'd soothsayer again, who was my judge i' the question, to know certainly whose word he has damn'd or sav'd. For, till then, I live but under a reprieve. I must seek him. Who be these?

Enter WASP with the Officers, [led by BRISTLE].

WASP. Sir, you are a Welsh cuckold, [60 and a prating runt, and no constable.

BRI. You say very well. — Come, put in his leg in the middle roundel, and let him hole there.

WASP. You stink of leeks, metheglin, and cheese. You rogue !

BRI. Why, what is that to you, if you sit sweetly in the stocks in the meantime? If you have a mind to stink too, your breeches sit close enough to your bum. Sit you [70 merry, sir.

QUAR. How now, Numps?

WASP. It is no matter how ; pray you look off.

QUAR. Nay, I'll not offend you, Numps ; I thought you had sat there to be seen.

WASP. And to be sold, did you not? Pray you mind your business, an you have any.

QUAR. Cry you mercy, Numps. Does your leg lie high enough? 80

[Enter HAGGIS.]

BRI. How now, neighbor Haggis. What

says Justice Overdo's Worship to the other offenders?

HAG. Why, he says just nothing. What should he say? Or where should he say? He is not to be found, man. He ha' not been seen i' the Fair here all this livelong day, never since seven a'clock i' the morning. His clerks know not what to think on 't. There is no court of pie-powders yet. Here [90 they be return'd.

[Enter Officers with BUSY and OVERDO.]

BRI. What shall be done with 'em then, in your discretion? <sup>90</sup>

HAG. I think we were best put 'em in the stocks in discretion <sup>91</sup> (there they will be safe in discretion) <sup>92</sup> for the valure <sup>93</sup> of an hour, or such a thing, till his Worship come.

BRI. It is but a hole matter if we do, neighbor Haggis. — [to WASP] Come, sir, here is company for you. — Heave up the [100 stocks.

WASP. I shall put a trick upon your Welsh diligence perhaps.

As they open the stocks, WASP puts his shoe on his hand, and slips it in for his leg.

BRI. [to BUSY] Put in your leg, sir.

They bring BUSY and put him in, [and then stand aside.]

QUAR. What, Rabbi Busy! Is he come?

BUSY. I do obey thee. The lion may roar, but he cannot bite. I am glad to be thus separated from the heathen of the land, and put apart in the stocks, for the holy cause.

WASP. What are you, sir? 110

BUSY. One that rejoiceth in his affliction, and sitteth here to prophesy the destruction of fairs and May-games, wakes, and Whitsun-ales, <sup>94</sup> and doth sigh and groan for the reformation of these abuses.

WASP. [to OVERDO] And do you sigh and groan, too, or rejoice in your affliction?

OVER. I do not feel it ; I do not think of it ; it is a thing without me. Adam, thou art above these batteries, these contume- [120 lies. In te manca ruat fortuna, as thy friend Horace <sup>95</sup> says. Thou art one, Quem

<sup>95</sup> "Gainst thee, when Fortune runs, she's sure to trip . . .

Whom neither poverty, nor dungeon drear,
Nor death itself can ever put to fear."
(Satires, II, vii, 84-88.)

neque pauperies, neque mors, neque vincula terrent. And therefore, as another friend of thine says, I think it be thy friend Persius, Non te quæsieris extra.<sup>96</sup>

QUAR. What's here! a stoic i' the stocks? The fool is turn'd philosopher. 128

BUSY. Friend, I will leave to communicate my spirit with you, if I hear any more of those superstitious relics, those lists<sup>97</sup> of Latin, the very rags of Rome, and patches of popery.

WASP. Nay, an you begin to quarrel, gentlemen, I'll leave you. I ha' paid for quarrelling too lately. Look you, a device, but shifting in a hand for a foot. God b' w' you.

He gets out.

BUSY. Wilt thou then leave thy brethren in tribulation?

WASP. For this once, sir. [Exit.]

BUSY. Thou art a halting<sup>98</sup> neutral. — Stay him there; stop him that will not endure the heat of persecution. 142

BRI. How now, what's the matter?

BUSY. He is fled, he is fled, and dares not sit it out.

BRI. What, has he made an escape? which way? — Follow, neighbor Haggis.

[Exeunt HAGGIS and the other Officers.]

[Enter DAME PURECRAFT.]

PURE. O me! in the stocks! Have the wicked prevail'd?

BUSY. Peace, religious sister; it is my [150 calling; comfort yourself; an extraordinary calling, and done for my better standing, my surer standing, hereafter.

[TROUBLEALL] the Madman enters, [with a can].

TRO. By whose warrant, by whose warrant, this?

QUAR. [aside] Oh, here's my man dropp'd in I look'd for.

OVER. Ha!

PURE. Oh, good sir, they have set the faithful here to be wonder'd at, and provided holes for the holy of the land. 161

TRO. Had they warrant for it? Show'd they Justice Overdo's hand? If they had no warrant, they shall answer it.

[Re-enter HAGGIS.]

BRI. Sure, you did not lock the stocks sufficiently, neighbor Toby!

HAG. No! See if you can lock 'em better.

BRI. They are very sufficiently lock'd, and truly; yet something is the matter.

TRO. True; your warrant is the matter that is in question; by what warrant? 171

BRI. Madman, hold your peace; I will put you in his room else, in the very same hole, do you see?

QUAR. How? is he a madman?

TRO. Show me Justice Overdo's warrant. I obey you.

HAG. You are a mad fool; hold your tongue. [Exeunt HAGGIS and BRISTLE.]

TRO. In Justice Overdo's name, I drink to you, and here's my warrant. 181

OVER. Alas, poor wretch! How it earns<sup>99</sup> my heart for him.

QUAR. [aside] If he be mad, it is in vain to question him. I'll try him, though. — Friend, there was a gentlewoman show'd you two names some hour since, Argalus and Palemon, to mark in a book. Which of 'em was it you mark'd?

TRO. I mark no name but Adam Overdo: that is the name of names. He only is [191 the sufficient magistrate; and that name I reverence; show it me.

QUAR. [aside] This fellow's mad indeed; I am further off now than afore.

OVER. [aside] I shall not breathe in peace till I have made him some amends.

QUAR. [aside] Well, I will make another use of him is come in my head: I have a nest of beards in my trunk,<sup>100</sup> one something like his. 201

The Watchmen, [HAGGIS and BRISTLE,] come back again.

BRI. This mad fool has made me that I know not whether I have lock'd the stocks or no; I think I lock'd 'em. [Tries the lock.]

TRO. Take Adam Overdo in your mind, and fear nothing.

BRI. 'Slid, madness itself! Hold thy peace, and take that. [Strikes him.]

TRO. Strikest thou without a warrant? Take thou that. 210

The Madman fights with 'em, and they leave open the stocks.

BUSY. We are delivered by miracle; fellow in fetters, let us not refuse the means:

<sup>100</sup> For trunk-hose were often stuffed with hair.

this madness was of the spirit: the malice of the enemy hath mock'd itself.

[Exeunt BUSY and OVERDO.]

PURE. Mad do they call him! The world is mad in error, but he is mad in truth. I love him o' the sudden (the cunning man said all true) and shall love him more and more. How well it becomes a man to be mad in [219] truth! Oh, that I might be his yokefellow, and be mad with him! What a many should we draw to madness in truth with us! [Exit.]

The Watch, missing them, are affrighted.

BRI. How now! all scaped? Where's the woman? It is witchcraft! Her velvet hat is a witch, o' my conscience, or my key! t' one.<sup>101</sup> — The madman was a devil, and I am an ass; so bless me, my place, and mine office. [Exeunt.]

ACT V — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] LANTERN [LEATHERHEAD, as a showman], FILCHER, and SHARKWELL.

LEATH. Well, luck and Saint Bartholomew! Out with the sign of our invention, in the name of wit, and do you beat the drum the while. All the foul i' the Fair; I mean, all the dirt in Smithfield — that's one of Master Littlewit's carwhitchets<sup>2</sup> now — will be thrown at our banner to-day, if the matter does not please the people. Oh, the motions that I, Lantern Leatherhead, have given light to, i' my time, since my Master [10] Pod died!<sup>3</sup> "Jerusalem" was a stately thing, and so was "Nineveh," and "The City of Norwich," and "Sodom and Gomorrah, with the rising of the prentices, and pulling down the bawdyhouses there upon Shrove Tuesday"<sup>4</sup>; but "The Gunpowder Plot," there was a get-penny! I have presented that to an eighteen or twentypence audience, nine times in an afternoon. Your home-born projects prove ever the best; they are so easy [20] and familiar. They put too much learning i' their things now o' days; and that, I fear, will be the spoil of this. Littlewit? I say, Micklewit! if not too mickle! Look to your gathering there, Goodman Filcher.

FILCH. I warrant you, sir.

LEATH. An there come any gentlefolks, take twopence apiece, Sharkwell.

SHARK. I warrant you, sir; threepence, an we can. [Exeunt.] [30]

SCENE II<sup>5</sup>

The JUSTICE comes in like a porter.

OVER. This later disguise I have borrow'd of a porter; shall carry me out to all my great and good ends, which, however interrupted, were never destroyed in me; neither is the hour of my severity yet come, to reveal myself; wherein, cloud-like, I will break out in rain and hail, lightning and thunder, upon the head of enormity. Two main works I have to prosecute: first, one is to invent some satisfaction for the poor [10] kind wretch who is out of his wits for my sake, and yonder I see him coming; I will walk aside and project for it.

[Enter WINWIFE and GRACE, and stand aside.]

WINW. I wonder where Tom Quarlous is, that he returns not; it may be he is struck in here to seek us.

GRACE. See, here's our madman again.

QUARLOUS, [entering] in the habit of the Madman, is mistaken by MRS. PURECRAFT.

QUAR. [aside] I have made myself as like him as his gown and cap will give me leave.

PURE. Sir, I love you, and would be glad [20] to be mad with you, in truth.

WINW. [aside] How! My widow in love with a madman?

PURE. Verily, I can be as mad in spirit as you.

QUAR. By whose warrant? Leave your canting.<sup>6</sup> — [aside] Gentlewoman, have I found you? — [to GRACE] Save ye, quit ye, and multiply ye! Where's your book? 'T was a sufficient name I mark'd; let me see 't; be [30] not afraid to show 't me.<sup>7</sup>

GRACE. What would you with it, sir?

QUAR. Mark it again and again, at your service.

GRACE. Here it is, sir; this was it you mark'd.

<sup>4</sup> An old London custom.

QUAR. Palemon! Fare you well, fare you well.

WINW. How, Palemon?

GRACE. Yes, faith, he has discover'd it [40 to you now, and therefore 'twere vain to disguise it longer; I am yours, sir, by the benefit of your fortune.

WINW. And you have him, mistress, believe it, that shall never give you cause to repent her benefit, but make you rather to think that in this choice she had both her eyes.

GRACE. I desire to put it to no danger of protestation. [Exeunt GRACE and WINWIFE.]

QUAR. [aside] Palemon the word, and [50 Winwife the man!

PURE. Good sir, vouchsafe a yokefellow in your madness; shun not one of the sanctified sisters, that would draw with you in truth.

QUAR. Away! You are a herd of hypocritical proud ignorants, rather wild than mad; fitter for woods and the society of beasts than houses and the congregation of men. You are the second part of the society of canters,<sup>8</sup> outlaws to order and discipline, and the only privileg'd church-robbers of Christendom. Let me alone! — [aside] Palemon the word, and Winwife the man!

PURE. [aside] I must uncover myself unto him, or I shall never enjoy him, for all the cunning men's promises. — Good sir, hear me; I am worth six thousand pound; my love to you is become my rack; I'll tell you all and the truth, since you hate the hypoc- [70 risy of the parti-colored<sup>9</sup> brotherhood. These seven years I have been a wilful holy widow, only to draw feasts and gifts from my entangled suitors. I am also by office an assisting sister of the deacons, and a devourer, instead of a distributor, of the alms. I am a special maker of marriages for our decayed brethren with our rich widows, for a third part of their wealth, when they are married, for the relief of the poor elect; as also [80 our poor handsome young virgins, with our wealthy bachelors or widowers; to make them steal from their husbands, when I have confirmed them in the faith, and got all put into their custodies. And, if I ha' not my bargain, they may sooner turn a scolding drab into a silent minister than make me leave pronouncing "reprobation" and "damna-tion" unto them. Our elder, Zeal-of-the-land, would have had me; but I know him [90 to be the capital knave of the land, making himself rich by being made feoff in trust<sup>10</sup> to deceased brethren, and coz'ning their heirs by swearing the absolute gift<sup>11</sup> of their inheritance. And thus, having eas'd my conscience and utter'd my heart with the tongue of my love, enjoy all my deceits together. I beseech you. I should not have revealed this to you, but that in time I think you are mad, and I hope you'll think me so too, sir! [100

QUAR. Stand aside; I'll answer you presently. — (He consider[s] with himself of it.) Why should not I marry this six thousand pound, now I think on't, and a good trade too that she has beside, ha? The tother wench Winwife is sure of; there's no expectation for me there! Here I may make myself some saver; yet, if she continue mad, there's the question. It is money that I want; why should I not marry the money when [110 't is offer'd me? I have a license and all; it is but razing out one name, and putting in another. There's no playing with a man's fortune! I am resolv'd: I were truly mad an I would not! — Well, come your ways, follow me; an you will be mad, I'll show you a warrant!

PURE. Most zealously; it is that I zealously desire. He takes her along with him.

The JUSTICE calls him.

OVER. Sir, let me speak with you. 120

QUAR. By whose warrant?

OVER. The warrant that you tender<sup>12</sup> and respect so, Justice Overdo's! I am the man, friend Troubleall, though thus disguis'd, as the careful magistrate ought, for the good of the republic in the Fair, and the weeding out of enormity. Do you want a house, or meat, or drink, or clothes? Speak whatsoever it is, it shall be supplied you. What want you?

QUAR. Nothing but your warrant. 130

OVER. My warrant! for what?

QUAR. To be gone, sir.

OVER. Nay, I pray thee stay; I am serious, and have not many words nor much time to exchange with thee. Think what may do thee good.

QUAR. Your hand and seal will do me a great deal of good; nothing else in the whole Fair that I know.

<sup>8</sup> I.e., of those who speak a jargon; the first part of that society consists of thieves, vagabonds, etc.

<sup>9</sup> "Checker'd"; i.e., inconsistent.

OVER. If it were to any end, thou [140] shouldst have it willingly.

QUAR. Why, it will satisfy me, that's end enough, to look on; an you will not gi' it me, let me go.

OVER. Alas, thou shalt ha' it presently; I'll but step into the scrivener's hereby, and bring it. Do not go away.

The JUSTICE goes out.

QUAR. [aside] Why, this madman's shape<sup>13</sup> will prove a very fortunate one, I think! Can a ragged robe produce these effects? [150] If this be the wise justice, and he bring me his hand, I shall go near to make some use on't.

[OVERDO] returns.

He is come already!

OVER. Look thee! Here is my hand and seal: Adam Overdo. If there be anything to be written above in the paper that thou want'st now, or at any time hereafter, think on't: it is my deed; I deliver it so. Can your friend write?

QUAR. Her hand for a witness, and all [160] is well.

OVER. With all my heart.

He urgeth MISTRESS PURECRAFT.

QUAR. [aside] Why should not I ha' the conscience to make this a bond of a thousand pound now, or what I would else?

OVER. Look you, there it is, and I deliver it as my deed again.

QUAR. Let us now proceed in madness.

He takes her in with him.

OVER. Well, my conscience is much eas'd; I ha' done my part; though it doth him [170] no good, yet Adam hath offer'd satisfaction! The sting is removed from hence. Poor man, he is much alter'd with his affliction, it has brought him low! Now for my other work, reducing<sup>14</sup> the young man I have follow'd so long in love, from the brink of his bane<sup>15</sup> to the center of safety. Here, or in some such like vain place, I shall be sure to find him. I will wait the good time. [He steps aside.]

SCENE III<sup>16</sup>

[Enter] SHARKWELL [and] FILCHER, [with bills, and] COKES. The Boys o' the Fair follow him.

COKES. How now! What's here to do? friend, art thou the master of the monuments?<sup>17</sup> SHARK. 'Tis a motion, an't please your Worship.

OVER. [aside] My fantastical brother-in-law, Master Bartholomew Cokes!

COKES. A motion? what's that? (He reads the bill.) "The ancient modern history of Hero and Leander, otherwise called [10] The Touchstone of True Love, with as true a trial of friendship between Damon and Pythias, two faithful friends o' the Bank-side."<sup>18</sup>—Pretty, i' faith! What's the meaning on't? Is't an interlude? or what is't?

FILCH. Yes, sir, please you come near, we'll take your money within.

COKES. Back with these children; they do so follow me up and down.

[Enter LITTLEWIT.]

LIT. By your leave, friend. 20

FILCH. You must pay, sir, an you go in.

LIT. Who? I? I perceive thou know'st not me. Call the master of the motion.

SHARK. What, do you not know the author, fellow Filcher? You must take no money of him; he must come in gratis. Master Littlewit is a voluntary;<sup>19</sup> he is the author.

LIT. Peace, speak not too loud. I would not have any notice taken that I am the author, till we see how it passes. 30

COKES. Master Littlewit, how dost thou?

LIT. Master Cokes! You are exceeding well met. What, in your doublet and hose, without a cloak or a hat?

COKES. I would I might never stir, as I am an honest man, and by that fire;<sup>20</sup> I have lost all i' the Fair, and all my acquaintance too. Didst thou meet anybody that I know, Master Littlewit? My man Numps, or my sister Overdo, or Mistress Grace? [40] Pray thee, Master Littlewit, lend me some money to see the interlude here; I'll pay thee again, as I am a gentleman. If thou'lt but carry me home, I have money enough there.

LIT. Oh, sir, you shall command it. What, will a crown serve you?

COKES. I think it w[ill]. What do we pay for coming in, fellows?

FILCH. Twopence, sir.

COKES. Twopence! There's twelve- [50] pence, friend. Nay, I am a gallant, as simple as I look now, if you see me with my man about me and my artillery<sup>21</sup> again.

<sup>18</sup> Bringing back.

<sup>19</sup> Destruction.

<sup>21</sup> Effigies.

LIT. Your man was i' the stocks e'en now, sir.

COKES. Who, Numps?

LIT. Yes, faith.

COKES. For what, i' faith? I am glad o' that; remember to tell me on't anon; I have enough now! What manner of mat- [60 ter is this, Master Littlewit? What kind of actors ha' you? Are they good actors?

LIT. Pretty youths, sir, all children both old and young; here 's the master of 'em —

[Enter LEATHERHEAD.]

LEATH. (whispers to LITTLEWIT.) Call me not Leatherhead, but Lantern.

LIT. Master Lantern, that gives light to the business.

COKES. In good time, sir!<sup>22</sup> I would fain see 'em. I would be glad drink with the [70 young company. Which is the tiring-house?

LEATH. Troth, sir, our tiring-house is somewhat little; we are but beginners yet; pray, pardon us: you cannot go upright in 't.

COKES. No? not now my hat is off? What would you have done with me, if you had had me feather and all, as I was once to-day? Ha' you none of your pretty impudent boys now, to bring stools, fill tobacco, fetch ale, and beg money, as they have at other [80 houses? Let me see some o' your actors.

LIT. Show him 'em, show him 'em. Master Lantern, this is a gentleman that is a favorer of the quality.<sup>23</sup> [Exit LEATHERHEAD.]

OVER. [aside] Ay, the favoring of this licentious quality is the consumption of many a young gentleman; a pernicious enormity.

[LEATHERHEAD] brings them out in a basket.

COKES. What! do they live in baskets?

LEATH. They do lie in a basket, sir; they are o' the small players. 90

COKES. These be players minors indeed. Do you call these players?

LEATH. They are actors, sir, and as good as any, none disprais'd — for dumb shows: indeed, I am the mouth of 'em all.

COKES. Thy mouth will hold 'em all. I think one tailor<sup>24</sup> would go near to beat all this company with a hand bound behind him.

LIT. Ay, and eat 'em all too, an they were in cake-bread. 100

COKES. I thank you for that, Master Littlewit; a good jest! Which is your Burbage<sup>25</sup> now?

LEATH. What mean you by that, sir?

COKES. Your best actor, your Field?<sup>26</sup>

LIT. Good, i' faith! You are even with me,<sup>27</sup> sir.

LEATH. This is he, that acts young Leander, sir. He is extremely belov'd of the womankind; they do so affect his action,<sup>28</sup> [110 the green gamesters<sup>29</sup> that come here! And this is lovely Hero; this with the beard, Damon; and this, pretty Pythias. This is the ghost of King Dionysius in the habit of a scrivener; as you shall see anon at large.

COKES. Well, they are a civil company; I like 'em for that; they offer not to flieer, nor jeer, nor break jests, as the great<sup>30</sup> players do. And then, there goes not so much charge to the feasting of 'em, or making 'em [120 drunk, as to the other, by reason of their littleness. Do they use to play perfect? Are they never fluster'd?

LEATH. No, sir, I thank my industry and policy for it; they are as well govern'd a company, though I say it — and here is young Leander is as proper an actor of his inches, and shakes his head like an hostler.

COKES. But do you play it according to the printed book? I have read that. 130

LEATH. By no means, sir.

COKES. No? how then?

LEATH. A better way, sir; that is too learned and poetical for our audience: what do they know what Hellespont is, "guilty of true love's blood"? or what Abydos is? or "the other, Sestos high"?<sup>31</sup>

COKES. Th' art i' the right; I do not know myself.

LEATH. No, I have entreated Master [140 Littlewit to take a little pains to reduce it to a more familiar strain for our people.

COKES. How, I pray thee, good Master Littlewit?

LIT. It pleases him to make a matter of it, sir. But there is no such matter, I assure you: I have only made it a little easy and modern for the times, sir, that's all. As, for the Hellespont, I imagine our Thames here; and then Leander I make a dyer's son [150 about Puddle Wharf; <sup>32</sup> and Hero a wench o' the Bankside, who, going over one morning to Old Fish Street,<sup>33</sup> Leander spies her land at Trig Stairs, and falls in love with her. Now do I introduce Cupid, having metamorphos'd himself into a drawer,<sup>34</sup> and he strikes Hero in love with a pint of sherry. And other pretty passages there are o' the friendship that will delight you, sir, and please you of judgment. 160

COKES. I'll be sworn they shall! I am in love with the actors already, and I'll be allied to them presently. They respect gentlemen, these fellows. Hero shall be my fairing: but which of my fairings? — le' me see — i' faith, my fiddle, and Leander my fiddlestick; then Damon my drum, and Pythias my pipe, and the ghost of Dionysius my hobbyhorse. All fitted!

SCENE IV <sup>35</sup>

[Enter] to them WINWIFE [and] GRACE.

WINW. Look, yonder's your Cokes gotten in among his playfellows; I thought we could not miss him at such a spectacle.

GRACE. Let him alone; <sup>36</sup> he is so busy he will never spy us.

COKES is handling the puppets.

LEATH. Nay, good sir!

COKES. I warrant thee, I will not hurt her, fellow. What, dost think me uncivil? I pray thee be not jealous; I am toward a wife.<sup>37</sup> 10

LIT. Well, good Master Lantern, make ready to begin, that I may fetch my wife; and look you be perfect; you undo me else i' my reputation.

LEATH. I warrant you, sir. Do not you breed too great an expectation of it among your friends; that's the only hurter of these things.

LIT. No, no, no. [Exit.]

COKES. I'll stay here and see; pray [20 thee, let me see.

WINW. How diligent and troublesome he is!

GRACE. The place becomes him, methinks.

OVER. [aside] My ward, Mistress Grace, in the company of a stranger! I doubt <sup>38</sup> I shall be compell'd to discover myself before my time!

[Enter KNOCKHUM, EDGEWORTH, and MRS. LITTLEWIT, followed by WHIT supporting MRS. OVERDO, both women masked.]

FILCH.<sup>39</sup> Twopence apiece, gentlemen; an excellent motion. 30 KNOCK. Shall we have fine fireworks and good vapors?

SHARK. Yes, captain, and waterworks too.

WHIT. I pre dee take a care o' dy shmall lady there, Edgeworth; I will look to dish tall lady myself.

LEATH. Welcome, gentlemen! welcome, gentlemen! <sup>40</sup>

WHIT. Pre dee, mashter o' de monshtersh, help a very sick lady here to a chair to [40 shit in.

LEATH. Presently, sir.

WHIT. Good fait now, Urs'la's ale and aqua vitæ ish to blame for 't. (They bring MISTRESS OVERDO a chair.) — Shit down shweetheart, shit down, and shleep a little.

EDG. [to MRS. LITTLEWIT] Madam, you are very welcome hither.

KNOCK. Yes, and you shall see very good vapors. 50

OVER. [aside] Here is my care <sup>41</sup> come! I like to see him in so good company, and yet I wonder that persons of such fashion should resort hither!

EDG. This is a very private house,<sup>42</sup> madam.

The Cutpurse courts MISTRESS LITTLEWIT.

LEATH. Will it please your Ladyship sit, madam?

MRS. LIT. Yes, good man. — [aside to EDGEWORTH] They do so all-to-be-madam me, I think they think me a very lady! 60

EDG. [aside] What else, madam?

MRS. LIT. [aside] Must I put off my mask to him?

EDG. [aside] Oh, by no means.

MRS. LIT. [aside] How should my husband know me then?

<sup>40</sup> The inner stage now represents the interior of the booth, and by the time the audience is fully assembled the outer stage is probably supposed to be indistinguishable from the inner.

<sup>42</sup> In contradistinction to the public theatre, which was large, only partly roofed, and patronised by a more heterogeneous audience.

KNOCK. [aside] Husband! an idle vapor; he must not know you, nor you him: there's the true vapor.

OVER. [aside] Yea! I will observe more [70 of this. — Is this a lady, friend?

WHIT. Ay, and dat is anoder lady, shweet-heart; if dou hasht a mind to 'em, give me twelvepence from tee, and dou shalt have eder-oder on 'em.

OVER. [aside] Ay! this will prove my chiefest enormity. I will follow this.

EDG. [aside to MRS. LITTLEWIT] Is not this a finer life, lady, than to be clogg'd with a husband? 80

MRS. LIT. [aside] Yes, a great deal. When will they begin, trow,<sup>43</sup> in the name o' the motion?

EDG. [aside] By and by, madam; they stay but for company.

KNOCK. Do you hear, puppet-master? These are tedious vapors. When begin you?

LEATH. We stay but for Master Littlewit, the author, who is gone for his wife; and we begin presently. 90

MRS. LIT. [aside to EDGEWORTH] That's I, that's I.

EDG. [aside] That was you, lady; but now you are no such poor thing.

KNOCK. Hang the author's wife, a running vapor! Here be ladies will stay for ne'er a Delia o' 'em all.

WHIT. But hear me now, here ish one o' de ladiesh ashleep; stay till she but vake, man. 100

[Enter WASP.]

WASP. How now, friends! what's here to do?

FILCH.<sup>44</sup> Twopence apiece, sir, the best motion in the Fair.

WASP. I believe you lie; if you do, I'll have my money again, and beat you.

MRS. LIT. [aside] Numps is come!

WASP. Did you see a master of mine come in here, a tall young squire of Harrow o' the Hill, Master Bartholomew Cokes? 110

FILCH. I think there be such a one within.

WASP. Look he be, you were best; but it is very likely. I wonder I found him not at all the rest. I ha' been at the eagle, and the black wolf, and the bull with the five legs and two pizzles — he was a calf at Uxbridge Fair two years ago — and at the dogs that dance the morris, and the hare o' the tabor; and miss'd him at all these! Sure this must needs be some fine sight that holds him [120 so, if it have him.

COKES. Come, come, are you ready now?

LEATH. Presently, sir.

WASP. Hoyday, he's at work in his doublet and hose. — Do you hear, sir? Are you employ'd, that you are bareheaded and so busy?

COKES. Hold your peace, Numps; you ha' been i' the stocks, I hear.

WASP. Does he know that? Nay, [130 then the date of my authority is out; I must think no longer to reign; my government is at an end. He that will correct another must want fault in himself.

WINW. Sententious Numps! I never heard so much from him before.

LEATH. Sure Master Littlewit will not come. — Please you take your place, sir, we'll begin.

COKES. I pray thee do, mine ears long [140 to be at it, and mine eyes too. — Oh, Numps, i' the stocks, Numps? Where's your sword, Numps?

WASP. I pray you intend <sup>45</sup> your game, sir; let me alone.

COKES. Well then, we are quit for all. Come, sit down, Numps; I'll interpret to thee. Did you see Mistress Grace? It's no matter neither now I think on't; tell me anon. 150

WINW. [aside to GRACE] A great deal of love and care he expresses.

GRACE. [aside] Alas, would you have him to express more than he has? That were tyranny!

COKES. Peace, ho! now, now!

LEATH. Gentles, that no longer your expectations may wander,
Behold our chief actor, amorous Leander,<sup>46</sup>
With a great deal of cloth, lapp'd about him like a scarf, 159
For he yet serves his father, a dyer at Puddle Wharf,
Which place we'll make bold with, to call it our Abydus,
As the Bankside is our Sestos; and let it not be deni'd us.
Now, as he is beating to make the dye take the fuller,
Who chanceth to come by, but fair Hero in a sculler;<sup>47</sup>
And, seeing Leander's naked leg and goodly calf,
Cast at him from the boat a sheep's eye and a half

<sup>44</sup> "Amorous Leander, beautiful and young,
Whose tragedy divine Musaeus sung."

<sup>44</sup> Old eds. note: "The doorkeepers again."

Now she is landed, and the sculler come back.
By and by you shall see what Leander doth lack.

LEAN. Cole, Cole, old Cole!

LEATH. That is the sculler's<sup>48</sup> name, without control. 170

LEAN. Cole, Cole, I say, Cole!

LEATH. We do hear you.

LEAN.

Old Cole!

LEATH. Old Cole! Is the dyer turned collier?
How do you sell?

LEAN. A pox o' your manners, kiss my hole
here, and smell.

LEATH. Kiss your hole and smell! there's manners indeed.

LEAN. Why, Cole, I say, Cole!

LEATH. It's the sculler you need!

LEAN. Ay, and be hang'd.

LEATH. Be hang'd! look you yonder.

Old Cole, you must go hang with Master Leander.

COLE. Where is he? 180

LEAN. Here, Cole; what fairest of fairs

Was that fare that thou lande[d]st but now a[t] Trig Stairs?

COKEs. What was that, fellow? Pray thee tell me; I scarce understand 'em.

LEATH. Leander does ask, sir, what fairest of fairs

Was the fare [that] he landed but now at Trig Stairs!
COLE. It is lovely Hero.

LEAN. Nero?

COLE. No, Hero.

LEATH. It is Hero

Of the Bankside, he saith, to tell you truth without erring,

Is come over into Fish Street to eat some fresh herring. 190

Leander says no more, but as fast as he can,
Gets on all his best clothes, and will after to the Swan.<sup>49</sup>

COKEs. Most admirable good, is 't not?

LEATH. Stay, sculler.

COLE. What say you?

LEATH. You must stay for Leander,
And carry him to the wench.

COLE. You rogue, I am no pander.

COKEs. He says he is no pander. 'T is a fine language; I understand it now.

LEATH. Are you no pander, Goodman Cole?
here's no man says you are;
You'll grow a hot coal, it seems; pray you, stay for your fare.

COLE. Will he come away?

LEATH. What do you say?

COLE. I'd ha' him come away.

LEATH. Would you ha' Leander come away?
why, pray, sir, stay. 201

You are angry, Goodman Cole; I believe the fair
maid

Came over w' you a' trust: tell us, sculler, are you paid?

COLE. Yes, Goodman Hog-rubber<sup>50</sup> o' Pickthatch.<sup>51</sup>

LEATH. How, Hog-rubber o' Pickt-hatch!

COLE. Ay, Hog-rubber of Pickt-hatch. Take you that. The puppet strikes him over the pate.

LEATH. Oh, my head!

COLE. Harm watch, harm catch.

COKEs. "Harm watch, harm catch," he says; very good, i' faith. — The sculler had like to ha' knock'd you, sirrah. 210

LEATH. Yes, but that his fare call'd him
away.

LEAN. Row apace, row apace, row, row, row, row, row.

LEATH. You are knavishly loaden, sculler, take heed where you go.

COLE. Knave i' your face, Goodman Rogue.

LEAN. Row, row, row, row, row, row.

COKEs. He said, "knave i' your face,"
friend.

LEATH. Ay, sir, I heard him. But there's no talking to these watermen; they will [220
ha'] the last word.

COKEs. God's my life! I am not allied to the sculler yet; he shall be Dauphin, my boy.<sup>52</sup> But my fiddlestick<sup>53</sup> does fiddle in and out too much. I pray thee speak to him on 't; tell him I would have him tarry in my sight
more.

LEATH. I pray you be content; you 'll have enough on him, sir.

Now, gentles, I take it, here is none of you so stupid,
But that you have heard of a little god of love call'd
Cupid; 231

Who out of kindness to Leander, hearing he but saw her,

This present day and hour doth turn himself to a drawer.

And because he would have their first meeting to be merry,

He strikes Hero in love to him with a pint of sherry,
Which he tells her from amorous Leander is sent
her,

Who after him into the room of Hero doth venter.
PUPPET LEANDER goes into Mistress Hero's room.

PUPPET JONAS. A pint of sack, score a pint of sack i' the Cony.<sup>54</sup>

COKEs. Sack! you said but e'en now it should be sherry. 240

JONAS. Why, so it is; sherry, sherry, sherry!

COKEs. "Sherry, sherry, sherry!" By my troth, he makes me merry. I must have a name for Cupid too. Let me see, thou might'st help me now, an thou wouldest,
Numps, at a dead lift; <sup>55</sup> but thou art dreaming o' the stocks still! Do not think on 't,
I have forgot it; 't is but a nine days' wonder,
man; let it not trouble thee.

WASP. I would the stocks were about [250 your neck, sir; condition I hung by the heels in them till the wonder were off from you, with all my heart.

COKES. Well said, resolute Numps!—But, hark you, friend, where's the friendship all this while between my drum, Damon, and my pipe, Pythias?

LEATH. You shall see by and by, sir.

COKES. You think my hobbyhorse is forgotten, too. No, I'll see 'em all enact before [260] I go; I shall not know which to love best else.

KNOCK. This gallant has interrupting vapors, troublesome vapors. Whit, puff<sup>66</sup> with him.

WHIT. No, I pre dee, captain, let him alone. He is a child, i' faith, la.

LEATH. Now, gentles, to the friends, who in number are two,
And lodg'd in that alehouse in which fair Hero does do.

Damon, for some kindness done him the last week, Is come, fair Hero in Fish Street this morning to seek. 270

Pythias does smell the knavery of the meeting, And now you shall see their true friendly greeting.

PYTHIAS. You whoremasterly slave, you.

COKES. "Whoremasterly slave, you!" very friendly and familiar that!

DAMON. Whoremaster i' thy face.
Thou hast lien with her thyself; I'll prove't i' this place.

COKES. Damon says Pythias has lien with her himself; he'll prove't in this place.

LEATH. They are whoremasters both, sir; that's a plain case. 280

PYTHIAS. You lie like a rogue.

LEATH. Do I lie like a rogue?

PYTHIAS. A pimp and a scab.

LEATH. A pimp and a scab!
I say, between you, you have both but one drab.

DAMON. You lie again.

LEATH. Do I lie again?

DAMON. Like a rogue again.

LEATH. Like a rogue again!

PYTHIAS. And you are a pimp again.

COKES. And you are a pimp again, he says.

DAMON. And a scab again. 290

COKES. And a scab again, he says.

LEATH. And I say again, you are both whoremasters again, and you have both but one drab again.

DAMON [and] PYTHIAS. Dost thou, dost thou, dost thou? They fight [LEATHERHEAD.]

LEATH. What, both at once?

PYTHIAS. Down with him, Damon.

DAMON. Pink his guts, Pythias.

LEATH. What, so malicious? Will ye murder me, masters both, i' mine own house?

COKES. Ho! well acted, my drum, well acted, my pipe, well acted still!

WASP. Well acted, with all my heart. 300

LEATH. Hold, hold your hands.

<sup>66</sup> "Vapor", bully him. (Alden.)

COKES. Ay, both your hands, for my sake! for you ha' both done well.

DAMON. Gramercy, pure Pythias.

PYTHIAS. Gramercy, dear Damon.

COKES. Gramercy to you both, my pipe and my drum.

PYTHIAS [and] DAMON. Come, now we'll together to breakfast to Hero.

LEATH. 'Tis well you can now go to breakfast to Hero.

You have given [me] my breakfast, with a hone<sup>67</sup> and honero! 310

COKES. How is't, friend, ha' they hurt thee?

LEATH. Oh, no!

Between you and I, sir, we do but make show.—

Thus, gentles, you perceive, without any denial, 'Twixt Damon and Pythias here, friendship's true trial.

Though hourly they quarrel thus, and roar each with other,

They fight you no more than does brother with brother;

But friendly together, at the next man they meet, They let fly their anger, as here you might see 't.

COKES. Well, we have seen 't, and [321] thou hast felt it, whatsoever thou sayest. What's next, what's next?

LEATH. This while young Leander with fair Hero is drinking,

And Hero grown drunk, to any man's thinking! Yet was it not three pints of sherry could flaw her,<sup>68</sup> Till Cupid, distinguish'd like Jonas the drawer, From under his apron, where his lechery lurks, Put love in her sack. Now mark how it works.

HERO. O Leander, Leander, my dear, my dear Leander, 330

I'll for ever be thy goose, so thou't be my gander.

COKES. Excellently well said, Fiddle.—She'll ever be his goose, so he'll be her gander; was't not so?

LEATH. Yes, sir, but mark his answer now.

LEAN. And, sweetest of geese, before I go to bed, I'll swim o'er the Thames, my goose, thee to tread.

COKES. Brave! He will swim o'er the Thames, and tread his goose to-night, he says.

LEATH. Ay, peace, sir, they'll be angry if they hear you eavesdropping, now they are setting their match. 342

LEAN. But, lest the Thames should be dark, my goose, my dear friend,

Let thy window be provided of a candle's end.

HERO. Fear not, my gander, I protest I should handle

My matters very ill, if I had not a whole candle.

LEAN. Well then, look to 't, and kiss me to boot.

LEATH. Now here come the friends again, Pythias and Damon,

And under their cloaks they have of bacon a gammon.<sup>69</sup>

<sup>68</sup> Make her drunk.

<sup>69</sup> Old eds. add. "Damon and Pythias enter."

PYTHIAS. Drawer, fill some wine here.

LEATH. How, some wine there!
There's company already, sir, pray forbear! 351

DAMON. 'T is Hero.

LEATH. Yes, but she will not be taken,
After sack and fresh herring, with your Dunmow<sup>61</sup>
bacon.

PYTHIAS. You lie; it's Westfabian.

LEATH. Westphalian,<sup>62</sup> you should say.

DAMON. If you hold not your peace, you are a coxcomb, I would say.

LEANDER and HERO are kissing.

PYTHIAS.<sup>63</sup> What's here, what's here? kiss, kiss upon kiss.

LEATH. Ay, wherefore should they not? What harm is in this?

'Tis Mistress Hero.

DAMON. Mistress Hero's a whore.

LEATH. Is she a whore? Keep you quiet, or, sir knave, out of door.

DAMON. Knave out of door? 360

HERO. Yes, knave out of door.

DAMON. Where out of door. Here the puppets quarrel and fall together by the ears.

HERO. I say, knave out of door.

DAMON. I say, whore out of door.

PYTHIAS. Yea, so say I too.

HERO. Kiss the whore o' the arse.

LEATH. Now you ha' something to do: you must kiss her o' the arse, she says.

DAMON [and] PYTHIAS. So we will, so we will.
[They kick her.]

HERO. Oh, my haunches, oh, my haunches, hold, hold.

LEATH. Stand'st thou still?
Leander, where art thou? Stand'st thou still like a sot, 371

And not offer'st to break both their heads with a pot?

See who's at thine elbow there! Puppet Jonas-and-Cupid.

JONAS. Upon 'em, Leander; be not so stupid.

They fight.

LEAN. You goat-bearded slave!

DAMON. You whoremaster knave.

LEAN. Thou art a whoremaster.

JONAS. Whoremasters all.

LEATH. See, Cupid with a word has ta'en up the brawl.

KNOCK. These be fine vapors!

COKES. By this good day, they fight bravely! do they not, Numps? 381

WASP. Yes, they lack'd but you to be their second all this while.

LEATH. This tragical encounter falling out thus to busy us.

It raises up the ghost of their friend Dionysius;
Not like a monarch, but the master of a school,
In a scrivener's furr'd gown, which shows he is no
fool;

For therein he hath wit enough to keep himself warm.

"O Damon," he cries, "and Pythias, what harm
Hath poor Dionysius done you in his grave, 390
That after his death you should fall out thus and rave,

And call amorous Leander whoremaster knave?"

BUSY. Down with Dagon!<sup>65</sup> down with Dagon! 't is I will no longer endure your profanations.

LEATH. What mean you, sir?

BUSY. I will remove Dagon there, I say, that idol, that heathenish idol, that remains, as I may say, a beam, a very beam — not a beam of the sun, nor a beam of the moon, nor a beam of a balance, neither a house-beam, nor a weaver's beam, but a beam in the eye, [10

an exceeding great beam; such as are your

BUSY. Thou art all license, even licentiousness itself, Shimei!<sup>66</sup> 20

BUSY. The master of rebels' hand thou is damnable; and in pleading for it thou dost plead for Baal. I have long opened my mouth he be no man o' the fist, he has friends that will go to cuffs for him. — Numps, will not you take our side?

DION. What then, Dagonet?<sup>74</sup> Is a puppet worse than these?

BUSY. Yes, and my main argument [120 against you is, that you are an abomination; for the male among you putteth on the apparel of the female, and the female of the male.

THE EPILOGUE

Your Majesty hath seen the play, and you Can best allow it from your ear and view. You know the scope of writers, and what store Of leave is given them, if they take not more, And turn it into license; you can tell If we have us'd that leave you gave us well, Or whether we to rage or license break, Or be profane, or make profane men speak! This is your power to judge, great Sir, and not The envy of a few; which if we have got, [10 We value less what their dislike can bring, If it so happy be t' have pleas'd the King.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

IN this diverting comedy the authors elect to show a more attractive side of the London cit than the cuckoldy skinflint so often presented by Their Majesties' Servants. This time, though the usurer and the lawyer are roughly handled, too, it is the new gentry and their apes who are the principal objects of genial derision. The hero is the mildly eccentric but sterling businessman, and the youthful winners of love and cash the good apprentice and the obedient daughter. The play is a bid for the favor of the Jacobean Babbitts, and as such is an interesting forerunner of the bourgeois drama of the eighteenth century and after. The shopkeepers and their code are buttered as assiduously as ever in a court play the flattery of the monarch was trowelled on. But if Golding and Mildred are prigs, they are neither hypocrites nor social climbers; and their almost nauseating consciousness of rectitude does not keep us from relishing the discomfiture of those who are.

As realistic as Middleton's amoral comedies of intrigue, Eastward Ho seems partly intended for a sage and serious preachment. The immediate occasion of its composition was pretty clearly the success of the Paul's Boys with one of the earliest of the new comedies of cynical realism, Westward Ho, by Dekker and Webster. In Eastward Ho three staunch moralists wheel their batteries into line. But the play is none the less a good-humored one, and gentle sentiment is not barred. The eleventh-hour repentances and the forgiving of the erring are not handled perfunctorily, but with a humorous joyfulness that has its affecting moments.

No source is known for the main plot, though it belongs to the repentant prodigal type. The Petronel-Winifred story comes from the fortieth novella of Masuccio. It is generally believed that the play was published not long after its composition. It was entered in the Stationers' Register on September 4, 1605. Three quarto editions appeared in that year, the first being twice issued. Of the first issue of the First Quarto but one surviving copy is known. Its importance is due to its preservation of an offensive passage in III, iii; this was omitted from the second issue, in which new matter has been substituted on leaves E3 and E4. The deleted passage is also preserved in a copy of the second issue in the Dyce collection, the original leaves having been bound up along with the cancels which were supposed to replace them. With the exception of this passage (which is here reprinted from photographs of the first issue kindly supplied by Dr. J. Q. Adams) the present text is based on the second issue of the first edition. It has also been collated with the text of Herford and Simpson, which is based on the first issue. The First Quarto was twice reprinted in 1605; i.e., the type for Qq 2 and 3 was almost entirely reset in each case, while the two issues of Q 1 are from the same type-setting except for the resetting on leaves E3 and E4 required by the omission of the suppressed text. The standard edition of Chapman's plays is that of T. M. Parrott (1914), and of Marston's that of A. H. Bullen (1887). The most recent edition of Eastward Ho appears in vol. IV of the Oxford Jonson, edited by Herford and Simpson. Separate editions have been published by J. W. Cunliffe (in Gayley's Representative English Comedies, vol. II) in 1913, by F. E. Schelling (with Jonson's Poetaster) in 1905, and by Miss J. H. Harris in 1926.

It is not known to what extent Eastward Ho was acted before the closing of the theatres in 1642. Either the production, by the Children of the Queen's Revels at the Blackfriars, or the appearance of the First Quarto in its original state, created a scandal. King James was naturally offended by the gibes at the Scots in III, iii, and the rendition of the royal accent in IV, i; and Chapman and Marston were imprisoned, Jonson joining them voluntarily, according to the account of the affair he gave Drummond of Hawthornden. Letters to James and to a number of powerful patrons soon secured their release, with their ears uncropped. That Marston was actually in duress vile is not certain. Drummond's recollection of what Jonson told him may have been faulty, and Ben himself may have drawn the long bow. At any rate his letters and Chapman's, fortunately preserved, mention only their own incarceration, and agree in denying their authorship of the objectionable clauses. Jonson, a firm friend of Chapman, had been at odds with Marston and had pilloried him in his Poetaster (1601). The hatchet had evidently been buried, as witness their collaboration and also Marston's dedication of The Malcontent in 1604. In 1606, however, there is evidence that Marston had dug it up; perhaps Eastward Ho and its aftermath were the cause.

Dr. Adams (Studies in Philology, XXVIII, 689-701) argues that it was the performance of the play that led to the authors' imprisonment and to its early publication, as well as to the suspension of the Blackfriars company. He demonstrates, by analyzing the bibliographical peculiarities of the first edition, that even the first issue must have deleted a good deal of the original text, subsequently to the arrangement of the type in pages. The cancellation of leaves E3 and E4 came still later.

The play continued on the boards, but the last pre-Wars reference is to a performance before the King in 1614. Like many of Shakespeare's plays, Eastward Ho was subjected after the Restoration to degrading adaptation; this was at the hands of Nahum Tate, under the title of Cuckold's Haven. Garrick ventured to revive the original play in 1751; undiscouraged by its failure, he successfully produced in 1775 a new version by Mrs. Charlotte Lennox, entitled Old City Manners.

The precise share of the original collaborators cannot be determined. Professor Parrott's conclusions are widely accepted. He gives to Chapman II, iii; III, i, ii, iii (the offensive passage, however, being touched up by Marston), iv (or to Marston); IV, i (with a Jonsonian interpolation, Quicksilver's chemical proposals); to Marston I, i, ii; II, i, ii (perhaps revised by Jonson); IV, ii; V, i (both revised by Jonson); to Jonson the revisions already mentioned, the prologue, and V, ii, iii, iv, and v. In other words, the general conception of the plot is probably Marston's, and the dramatization of Masuccio's tale largely Chapman's; while Jonson's contribution was general supervision and the composition of the ending. But though stylistic tricks of all the authors may be detected, it is evident that they worked in close coöperation; doubtless there was much discussion, and perhaps revision, all the way along. And, adds Professor Parrott, Chapman's influence is "diffused throughout. Less bitter than Marston, less severe than Jonson, Chapman has a larger portion than either of the laughing spirit of true comedy."

Not out of envy, for there's no effect
 Where there's no cause; nor out of imitation,
 For we have evermore been imitated;
 Nor out of our contention to do better
 Than that which is oppos'd to ours in title,<sup>4</sup>
 For that was good; and better cannot be:
 And, for the title, if it seem affected,
 We might as well have call'd it, "God you

 Only that eastward westwards still exceeds —
 Honor the sun's fair rising, not his setting. 10
 Nor is our title utterly enforc'd,

ACT I — SCENE I<sup>6</sup>

Enter MASTER TOUCHSTONE and QUICKSILVER at several doors, QUICKSILVER with his hat, pumps, short sword and dagger, and a racket trussed up under his cloak. At the middle door, enter GOLDING, discovering<sup>7</sup> a goldsmith's shop and walking short turns before it.

TOUCH. And whither with you now? what loose action are you bound for? Come, what comrades are you to meet withal? where's the supper? where's the rendezvous?

QUICK. Indeed, and in very good sober truth, sir —

TOUCH. "Indeed, and in very good sober truth, sir!" Behind my back thou wilt swear faster than a French footboy, and talk more bawdily than a common midwife; [10 and now "indeed, and in very good sober truth, sir!" But, if a privy search should be made, with what furniture are you rigg'd now? Sirrah, I tell thee, I am thy master, <sup>6</sup> Goldsmith's Row.

William Touchstone, goldsmith; and thou my prentice, Francis Quicksilver; and I will see whither you are running. Work upon that now!<sup>8</sup>

QUICK. Why, sir, I hope a man may use his recreation with his master's profit. 20

TOUCH. Prentices' recreations are seldom with their masters' profit. Work upon that now! You shall give up your cloak, though you be no alderman.<sup>9</sup>—(TOUCHSTONE uncloaks QUICKSILVER.) Heyday! Ruffi[a]ns Hall!<sup>10</sup> Sword, pumps, here's a racket indeed!

QUICK. Work upon that now!

TOUCH. Thou shameless varlet! dost thou jest at thy lawful master, contrary to thy indentures?<sup>11</sup> 30

QUICK. Why, 'zblood, sir! my mother's a gentlewoman, and my father a justice of peace and of quorum;<sup>12</sup> and, though I am a younger brother and a prentice, yet I hope I am my father's son; and by God's lid, 't is for your worship and for your commodity<sup>13</sup> that I keep company. I am entertain'd among gallants, true; they call me cousin Frank, right; I lend them moneys, good; they spend it, well. But, when they are [40 spent, must not they strive to get more? Must not their land fly?—and to whom? Shall not your Worship ha' the refusal? Well, I am a good member of the City, if I were well considered. How would merchants thrive, if gentlemen would not be unthrifths? How could gentlemen be unthrifths if their humors were not fed? How should their humors be fed but by whitemeat<sup>14</sup> and cunning secondings? Well, the City might consider us. [50 I am going to an ordinary<sup>15</sup> now: the gallants fall to play; I carry light gold<sup>16</sup> with me. The gallants call, "Cousin Frank, some gold for silver;" I change, gain by it; the gallants lose the gold, and then call, "Cousin Frank, lend me some silver." Why——

TOUCH. Why? I cannot tell. Seven score pound art thou out in the cash; but look to it, I will not be gallanted out of my moneys. And, as for my rising by other [60 men's fall, God shield me! Did I gain my wealth by ordinaries? no! by exchanging of gold? no! by keeping of gallants' company? no! I hired me a little shop, fought low, took small gain, kept no debt book, garnished my shop, for want of plate, with good wholesome thrifty sentences: as, "Touchstone, keep thy shop, and thy shop will keep thee"; "Light gains makes heavy purses;" "'T is good to be merry and wise." And, when [70 I was wiv'd, having something to stick to, I had the horn of suretyship ever before my eyes.—[to the audience] You all know the device of the horn, where the young fellow slips in at the butt end, and comes squeez'd out at the buccal.<sup>17</sup>—And I grew up, and, I praise Providence, I bear my brows now as high<sup>18</sup> as the best of my neighbors: but thou—well, look to the accounts; your father's bond lies for you: seven score pound [80 is yet in the rear.<sup>19</sup>

QUICK. Why, 'slid, sir, I have as good, as proper<sup>20</sup> gallants' words for it as any are in London—gentlemen of good phrase, perfect language, passingly<sup>21</sup> behav'd; gallants that wear socks and clean linen, and call me "kind cousin Frank," "good cousin Frank," for they know my father: and, by God's lid, shall not I trust 'em?—not trust?

Enter a Page, as inquiring for Touchstone's shop.

GOLD. What do ye lack, sir? what [90 is 't you'll buy, sir?

TOUCH. Ay, marry sir; there's a youth of another piece. There's thy fellow-prentice, as good a gentleman born as thou art: nay, and better mean'd. But does he pump it, or racket it? Well, if he thrive not, if he outlast not a hundred such crackling bavins<sup>22</sup> as thou art, God and men neglect industry.

GOLD. (to the Page) It is his shop, and here my master walks. 100

TOUCH. With me, boy?

PAGE. My master, Sir Petronel Flash, recommends his love to you, and will instantly visit you.

TOUCH. To make up the match with my eldest daughter, my wife's dilling,<sup>23</sup> whom she longs to call madam. — He shall find me unwillingly ready, boy. (Exit PAGE.) — [to the audience] There's another affliction too. As I have two prentices, the one of a bound- [110] less prodigality, the other of a most hopeful industry, so have I only two daughters: the eldest, of a proud ambition and nice wantonness; <sup>24</sup> the other, of a modest humility and comely soberness. The one must be ladyfied forsooth, and be attir'd just to the court cut and long tail.<sup>25</sup> So far is she ill-natur'd to the place and means of my preferment and fortune that she throws all the contempt and despite hatred itself can cast upon it. Well, [120] a piece of land she has; 't was her grandmother's gift; let her and her Sir Petronel flash out that; but, as for my substance, she that scorns me, as I am a citizen and tradesman, shall never pamper her pride with my industry, shall never use me as men do foxes — keep themselves warm in the skin, and throw the body that bare it to the dunghill. I must go entertain this Sir Petronel. — Golding, my utmost care's for thee, and only [130] trust in thee; look to the shop. — As for you, Master Quicksilver, think of husks, for thy course is running directly to the prodigal's hogs' trough; husks, sirrah! <sup>26</sup> Work upon that now!

Exit TOUCHSTONE

QUICK. Marry faugh, Goodman Flat-cap! <sup>27</sup> 'Sfoot! though I am a prentice, I can give arms; <sup>28</sup> and my father's a justice a' peace by descent, and, 'zblood! —

GOLD. Fie, how you swear! 140

QUICK. 'Sfoot, man, I am a gentleman, and may swear by my pedigree, God's my life! Sirrah Golding, wilt be ruled by a fool? Turn good fellow, turn swaggering gallant, and "let the welkin roar, and Erebus also." Look not westward to the fall of Don Phœbus, but to the east — Eastward Ho!

GOLD. What would ye ha' me do?

QUICK. Why, do nothing; be like a gentleman, be idle; the curse of man is labor. Wipe thy bum with testones,<sup>31</sup> and make [160] ducks and drakes with shillings. What, Eastward Ho! Wilt thou cry, "What is't ye lack?" — stand with a bare pate and a dropping nose, under a wooden penthouse,<sup>32</sup> and art a gentleman? Wilt thou bear tankards,<sup>33</sup> and mayst bear arms? Be rul'd; turn gallant. Eastward Ho! — Ta ly re, ly re ro! "Who calls Jeronimo? Speak, here I am." — Gods-so! how like a sheep thou [169] look'st; a' my conscience, some cowherd begot thee, thou Golding of Golding Hall! Ha, boy?

GOLD. Go; ye are a prodigal coxcomb! I a cowherd's son, because I turn not a drunken, whore-hunting rakehell like thyself?

QUICK. Rakehell? rakehell?

Offers to draw, and GOLDING trips up his heels and holds him.

GOLD. Pish, in soft terms, ye are a cowardly, bragging boy. I'll ha' you whipp'd.

QUICK. Whipp'd? — that's good, i' faith! Untruss <sup>34</sup> me! 180

GOLD. No, thou wilt undo <sup>35</sup> thyself. Alas! I behold thee with pity, not with anger; thou common shot-clog,<sup>36</sup> gull of all companies; methinks I see thee already walking in Moorfields <sup>37</sup> without a cloak, with half a hat, without a band, a doublet with three buttons, without a girdle, a hose with one point, and no garter, with a cudgel under thine arm, borrowing and begging threepence.

GOLD. Go, thou most madly vain, whom nothing can recover but that which reclaims atheists, and makes great persons sometimes religious — calamity. As for my place and life, thus I have read :

SCENE II<sup>39</sup>

GER. For the passion of patience, look if Sir Petronel approach — that sweet, that fine, that delicate, that — for love's sake, tell me if he come. Oh, sister Mil, though my father be a low-capp'd tradesman, yet I must be a lady; and I praise God my mother must call me Madam. Does he come? — Off with this gown, for shame's sake; off with this gown: let not my knight take me in the city cut in any hand: <sup>43</sup> tear't, pax <sup>44</sup> on't! — [10 Does he come? tear't off. — [singing] "Thus, whilst she sleeps, I sorrow for her sake," <sup>45</sup> etc.

MIL. Lord, Sister, with what an immodest impatience and disgraceful scorn do you put off your city tire. I am sorry to think you imagine to right yourself in wronging that which hath made both you and us.

GER. I tell you I cannot endure it; I must be a lady. Do you wear your quoin<sup>46</sup> with a London licket,<sup>47</sup> your stammel<sup>48</sup> petticoat [20 with two guards,<sup>49</sup> the buffin<sup>50</sup> gown with the tuff[t]-taffety<sup>51</sup> cape and the velvet lace. I must be a lady, and I will be a lady. I like some humors of the city dames well: to eat cherries only at an angel<sup>52</sup> a pound, good; to dye rich scarlet black, pretty; to line a grogram gown clean<sup>53</sup> thorough with velvet, tolerable; their pure linen, their smocks of three pounds a smock, are to be borne withal. But your mincing niceries, taffeta [30 pipkins,<sup>54</sup> durance<sup>55</sup> petticoats, and silver bodkins — God's my life, as I shall be a lady, I cannot endure it! — Is he come yet? Lord, what a long knight 't is! — [singing] "And ever she cried, 'Sho[o]t<sup>56</sup> home!' " — And yet I knew one longer. — "And ever she cried, 'Sho[o]t home, 'fa, la, ly, re, lo, la! "

MIL. Well, Sister, those that scorn their nest, oft fly with a sick wing.

GER. Bow-bell! <sup>57</sup> 40

MIL. Where titles presume to thrust before fit means to second them, wealth and respect often grow sullen, and will not follow. For sure in this I would for your sake I spake not truth: where ambition of place goes before fitness of birth, contempt and disgrace follow. I heard a scholar once say that Ulysses, when he counterfeited himself mad, yok'd cats and foxes and dogs<sup>58</sup> together to draw his plough, whilst he followed and sowed [50 salt; but, sure, I judge them truly mad, that yoke citizens and courtiers, tradesmen and soldiers, a goldsmith's daughter and a knight. Well, Sister, pray God my father sow not salt too.

GER. Alas! poor Mil, when I am a lady, I'll pray for thee yet, i' faith: nay, and I'll vouchsafe to call thee Sister Mil still; for, though thou art not like to be a lady as I am, yet sure thou art a creature of [60 God's making; and mayest peradventure to be sav'd as soon as I. — Does he come? — [singing.] "And ever and anon she doubled in her song." Now, Lady's<sup>59</sup> my comfort! what a profane ape's here! Tailor, Poldavy,<sup>60</sup>

POLD. Fine and stiffly, i' faith; 't will keep your thighs so cool, and make your waist so small; here was a fault in your body, but [70 I have supplied the defect, with the effect of my steel instrument, which, though it have but one eye, can see to rectify the imperfection of the proportion.

GER. Most edifying tailor! I protest you tailors are most sanctified members, <sup>63</sup> and make many crooked thing go upright. How must I bear my hands? light? light?

POLD. Oh, ay; now you are in the lady-fashion, you must do all things light. Tread light, light. Ay, and fall so; that's the [81 court amble. <sup>64</sup>

She trips about the stage.

GER. Has the court ne'er a trot?

POLD. No, but a false gallop, <sup>65</sup> lady.

GER. [singing] "And if she will not go to bed —"

BET. The knight's come, forsooth.

GER. Is my knight come? O the Lord, my band! <sup>66</sup> Sister, do my cheeks look well? Give me a little box a' the ear, that I may seem to blush; now, now! So, there, there, there! 91

Enter SIR PETRONEL, MASTER TOUCHSTONE, and MISTRESS TOUCHSTONE.

Here he is! O my dearest delight! Lord, Lord! and how does my knight?

TOUCH. Fie! with more modesty.

GER. Modesty! Why, I am no citizen now. Modesty? Am I not to be married? Y' are best to keep me modest, now I am to be a lady!

PET. Boldness is good fashion and court-
Nk. 100

GER. Ay, in a country lady I hope it is, as I shall be. And how chance ye came no sooner, knight?

PET. Faith, I was so entertain'd in the progress with one Count Epernum, a Welsh knight; we had a match at balloon, <sup>67</sup> too, with my Lord Whachum, for four crowns.

PET. Oh, sweet lady: 't is a strong [110 play with the arm.

GER. With arm or leg, or any other member, if it be a court sport. And when shall's be married, my knight?

PET. I come now to consummate it; and your father may call a poor knight son-in-law.

TOUCH. Sir, ye are come. What is not mine to keep I must not be sorry to forgo. A hundred pound land <sup>68</sup> her grandmother left her; 't is yours. Herself, as [120 her mother's gift, is yours. But, if you expect aught from me, know my hand and mine eyes open together: I do not give blindly. Work upon that now!

PET. Sir, you mistrust not my means? I am a knight.

TOUCH. Sir, sir, what I know not, you will give me leave to say I am ignorant of.

MIST. T. Yes, that he is a knight! I know where he had money to pay the gentle- [130 men ushers and heralds their fees. <sup>69</sup> Ay, that he is a knight! And so might you have been too, if you had been aught else than an ass, as well as some of your neighbors. An I thought you would not ha' been knighted, as I am an honest woman, I would ha' dubb'd you myself. I praise God I have wherewithal. But, as for you, Daughter —

GER. Ay, Mother, I must be a lady to-morrow; and, by your leave, Mother [140 (I speak it not without my duty, but only in the right of my husband), I must take place of you, Mother.

MIST. T. That you shall, Lady-Daughter, and have a coach as well as I, too.

GER. Yes, Mother. But by your leave, Mother (I speak it not without my duty, but only in my husband's right), my coach horses must take the wall of your coach horses.

TOUCH. Come, come, the day grows low. [150 'T is supper time: use my house; the wedding solemnity is at my wife's cost; thank me for nothing but my willing blessing: ~~for — I cannot feign — my hopes are faint. And, sir, respect my daughter: she has refus'd for you wealthy and honest matches, known good men, well moneyed, better traded, best reputed.~~

GER. Body a' truth! chitizens, chitizens!

Sweet knight, as soon as ever we are married, take me to thy mercy out of this miserable chity; presently carry me out of the scent of Newcastle coal and the hearing of Bowbell; I beseech thee, down with me,<sup>70</sup> for God sake!

TOUCH. Well, Daughter, I have read that old wit sings:

The greatest rivers flow from little springs:
Though thou art full, scorn not thy means at first;
He that's most drunk may soonest be athirst.
Work upon that now!

171
All but TOUCHSTONE, MILDRED, and GOLDING depart.

No, no! yond' stand my hopes. — Mildred, come hither, Daughter. And how approve you your sister's fashion? how do you fancy<sup>71</sup> her choice? what dost thou think?

MIL. I hope, as a sister, well.

TOUCH. Nay, but, nay, but how dost thou like her behavior and humor? Speak freely.

MIL. I am loath to speak ill; and yet — I am sorry of this — I cannot speak well. [180

TOUCH. Well; very good, as I would wish; a modest answer. — Golding, come hither; hither, Golding. How dost thou like the knight, Sir Flash? Does he not look big? How lik'st thou the elephant? He says he has a castle in the country.

GOLD. Pray Heaven, the elephant carry not his castle on his back.<sup>72</sup>

TOUCH. 'Fore Heaven, very well! But, seriously, how dost repute him?

190
GOLD. The best I can say of him is, I know him not!

TOUCH. Ha, Golding! I commend thee, I approve thee, and will make it appear my affection is strong to thee. My wife has her humor, and I will ha' mine. Dost thou see my daughter here? She is not fair, well-favored or so, indifferent,<sup>73</sup> which modest measure of beauty shall not make it thy only work to watch her, nor sufficient mischance [200 to suspect her. Thou art towardly, she is modest; thou art provident, she is careful. She's now mine. Give me thy hand; she's now thine. Work upon that now!

GOLD. Sir, as your son, I honor you; and, as your servant, obey you.

TOUCH. Sayest thou so? — Come hither,

<sup>73</sup> Moderately.

Mildred. Do you see yond' fellow? He is a gentleman, though my prentice, and has somewhat to take<sup>74</sup> too: a youth of [210 good hope; well friended, well parted.<sup>75</sup> Are you mine? You are his. Work, you, upon that now!

MIL. Sir, I am all yours; your body gave me life; your care and love, happiness of life; let your virtue still direct it, for to your wisdom I wholly dispose myself.

TOUCH. Say'st thou so? Be you two better acquainted. — Lip her, lip her, knave. So, shut up shop; in. We must make [220 holiday. Exeunt GOLDING and MILDRED.

This match shall on, for I intend to prove Which thrives the best, the mean or lofty love:

Whether fit wedlock vow'd 'twixt like and like,

Or prouder hopes, which daringly o'erstrike Their place and means. 'Tis honest time's expense,<sup>76</sup>

When seeming lightness<sup>77</sup> bears a moral sense.

Work upon that now.

Exit.

ACT II — SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

TOUCHSTONE, GOLDING, and MILDRED [are discovered] sitting on either side of the stall.

TOUCH. Quicksilver! — Master Francis Quicksilver! — Master Quicksilver!

Enter QUICKSILVER.

QUICK. Here, sir; (ump!)

TOUCH. So, sir; nothing but flat "Master Quicksilver," without any familiar addition<sup>2</sup> will fetch you. Will you truss my points,<sup>3</sup> sir?

QUICK. Ay, forsooth; (ump!)

TOUCH. How now, sir! the drunken hiccup so soon this morning?

QUICK. 'Tis but the coldness of my [10 stomach, forsooth.

TOUCH. What! have you the cause natural for it? Y' are a very learned drunkard: I believe I shall miss some of my silver spoons with your learning. The nuptial night will not moisten your throat sufficiently, but the morning likewise must rain her dews into your glutinous weasand.

QUICK. An't please you, sir, we did but drink (ump!) to the coming off of the [20 knightly bridegroom.

TOUCH. To the coming off an' him?

QUICK. Ay, forsooth, we drunk to his coming on (ump!), when we went to bed; and, now we are up, we must drink to his coming off: for that's the chief honor of a soldier, sir; and therefore we must drink so much the more to it, forsooth (ump!)

TOUCH. A very capital reason! So that you go to bed late, and rise early to com- [30 mit drunkenness! You fulfil the scripture<sup>5</sup> very sufficient wickedly, forsooth.

QUICK. The knight's men, forsooth, be still a' their knees at it<sup>6</sup> (ump!) and because 'tis for your credit, sir, I would be loath to flinch.

TOUCH. I pray, sir, e'en to 'em again, then; y'are one of the separated crew,<sup>7</sup> one of my wife's faction, and my young lady's, with whom, and with their great match, I will have nothing to do. 40

QUICK. So, sir; now I will go keep my (ump!) credit with 'em, an't please you, sir.

TOUCH. In any case, sir, lay one cup of sack more a' your cold stomach, I beseech you.

QUICK. Yes, forsooth.

Exit QUICKSILVER.

TOUCH. This is for my credit! Servants ever maintain drunkenness in their master's house for their master's credit—a good idle serving man's reason. I thank Time the night is past; I ne'er wak'd to such cost; [50 I think we have stow'd more sorts of flesh in our bellies than ever Noah's ark received; and, for wine, why my house turns giddy with it, and more noise in it than at a conduit. Ay, me, even beasts condemn our gluttony. Well, 'tis our city's fault, which, because we commit seldom, we commit the more sinfully; we lose no time in our sensuality, but we make amends for it. Oh, that we would do so in virtue and religious negligences! But see, here are all [60 the sober parcels my house can show. I'll eavesdrop—hear what thoughts they utter this morning.

[GOLDING and MILDRED come forward.]

GOLD. But is it possible that you, seeing your sister prefer'd to the bed of a knight, should contain your affections in the arms of a prentice?

MIL. I had rather make up the garment of my affections in some of the same piece than, like a Fool, wear gowns of two colors, or mix [70 sackcloth with satin.

GOLD. And do the costly garments, the title and fame of a lady, the fashion, observation, and reverence proper to such preferment, no more inflame you than such convenience as my poor means and industry can offer to your virtues?

MIL. I have observ'd that the bridle given to those violent flatteries of fortune is seldom recover'd; they bear one headlong in desire [80 from one novelty to another; and where those ranging appetites reign, there is ever more passion than reason: no stay, and so no happiness. These hasty advancements are not natural. Nature hath given us legs to go<sup>8</sup> to our objects; not wings to fly to them.

GOLD. How dear an object you are to my desires I cannot express; whose fruition would my master's absolute consent and yours vouchsafe me, I should be absolutely happy. [90 And, though it were a grace so far beyond my merit that I should blush with unworthiness to receive it, yet thus far both my love and my means shall assure your requital: you shall want nothing fit for your birth and education; what increase of wealth and advancement the honest and orderly industry and skill of our trade will afford in any, I doubt not will be aspir'd by me; I will ever make your contentment the end of my endeavors; I will love [100 you above all; and only your grief shall be my misery, and your delight my felicity.

TOUCH. [aside] Work upon that now! By my hopes, he woos honestly and orderly; he shall be anchor of my hopes. Look, see the ill-yok'd monster, his fellow!

Re-enter QUICKSILVER, unlac'd, a towel about his neck, in his flat cap, drunk.

QUICK. Eastward Ho! "Holla, ye pampered jades of Asia!"<sup>9</sup>

TOUCH. [aside] Drunk now downright, a' my fidelity! 110

gust the caliver.<sup>12</sup>

GOLD. Fie, fellow Quicksilver, what a pickle are you in !

QUICK. Pickle ? Pickle in thy throat ; <sup>13</sup>
'zouns, pickle ! — Wa, ha, ho ! <sup>14</sup> — Good morrow, knight Petronel. — Morrow, lady Goldsmith. — Come off, knight, with a counterbuff,<sup>15</sup> for the honor of knighthood.

GOLD. Why, how now, sir ? Do ye [120 know where you are ?

QUICK. Where I am ? Why, 'sblood, you jolt-head,<sup>16</sup> — where I am !

GOLD. Go to, go to, for shame go to bed, and sleep out this immodesty ; thou sham'st
both my master and his house.

QUICK. Shame ? what shame ? I thought thou wouldst show thy bringing up ; an thou wert a gentleman as I am, thou wouldst think it no shame to be drunk. Lend me some [130 money ; save my credit ; I must dine with the serving men and their wives — and their wives, sirrah !

GOLD. E'en who you will ; I'll not lend thee threepence.

QUICK. 'Sfoot ; lend me some money ;
" hast thou not Hyren here ? " <sup>17</sup>

TOUCH. Why, how now, sirrah ? what vein's this, ha ?

QUICK. " Who cries on murther ? [140
Lady, was it you ? " <sup>18</sup> How does our master ?
Pray thee, cry " Eastward Ho ! "

TOUCH. Sirrah, sirrah, y' are past your hiccup now ; I see y' are drunk —

QUICK. 'Tis for your credit, Master.

TOUCH. And hear you keep a whore in town.

QUICK. 'Tis for your credit, Master.

TOUCH. And what you are out in cash I know. 150

QUICK. So do I. My father's a gentleman.
Work upon that now ! Eastward Ho !

TOUCH. Sir, " Eastward Ho " will make you go Westward Ho ! <sup>19</sup> I will no longer dishonest my house, nor endanger my stock with your license. There, sir : there's your indenture ; all your apparel (that I must know) is on your back ; and from this time my door is shut to you : from me be free ; but, for other freedom and the moneys you have wasted, [160

" Eastward Ho " shall not serve you.

QUICK. Am I free a' my fetters ? Rent, fly with a duck in thy mouth ; <sup>20</sup> and now I tell thee, Touchstone —

TOUCH. Good sir —

QUICK. " When this eternal substance of
my soul — "

TOUCH. Well said ; change your gold ends for your play ends.

QUICK. " Did live imprison'd in my wanton
flesh — "

TOUCH. What then, sir ? 170

QUICK. " I was a courtier in the Spanish
court,

And Don Andrea was my name." <sup>21</sup>

TOUCH. Good Master Don Andrea, will you march ?

QUICK. Sweet Touchstone, will you lend me two shillings ?

TOUCH. Not a penny.

QUICK. Not a penny ? I have friends, and I have acquaintance ; I will piss at thy shop posts, and throw rotten eggs at thy sign. [180
Work upon that now !

Exit, staggering.

TOUCH. Now, sirrah, you ! hear you ? You shall serve me no more neither — not an hour longer.

GOLD. What mean you, sir ?

TOUCH. I mean to give thee thy freedom, and with thy freedom my daughter, and with my daughter a father's love ; and, with all these, such a portion as shall make knight Pet-ronel himself envy thee ! Y' are both [190 agreed, are ye not ?

AMBO. With all submission, both of thanks and duty.

TOUCH. Well then, the great power of Heaven bless and confirm you. And, Golding, that my love to thee may not show less than my wife's love to my eldest daughter, thy marriage feast shall equal the knight's and
hers. 199

The grossest prodigality is superfluous cost of the belly; nor would I wish any invitement of states<sup>22</sup> or friends; only your reverend presence and witness shall sufficiently grace and confirm us.

TOUCH. Son to mine own bosom, take her and my blessing. The nice fondling,<sup>23</sup> my Lady Sir-reverence,<sup>24</sup> that I must not now presume to call daughter, is so ravish'd with [210] desire to hansel<sup>25</sup> her new coach and see her knight's Eastward Castle, that the next morning will sweat with her busy setting forth. Away will she and her mother; and, while their preparation is making, ourselves, with some two or three other friends, will consummate the humble match we have in God's name concluded.

'Tis to my wish; for I have often read,

'Tis to my wish; for tradesmen, well 'tis known,

Get with more ease than gentry keeps his own.

SCENE II<sup>26</sup>

[Enter] SECURITY, solus.

SEC. My privy guest, lusty Quicksilver, has drunk too deep of the bride-bowl; but, with a little sleep, he is much recovered; and, I think, is making himself ready to be drunk in a gallanter likeness. My house is as 't were the cave where the young outlaw hoards the stolen vails<sup>27</sup> of his occupation; and here, when he will revel it in his prodigal similitude, he retires to his trunks, and (I may say softly) his punks: he dares trust me with [10] the keeping of both; for I am security itself; my name is Security, the famous usurer.

Enter QUICKSILVER in his prentice's coat and cap, his gallant breeches and stockings, gartering himself.<sup>28</sup>

QUICK. Come, old Security, thou father of destruction! th' indented sheepskin<sup>29</sup> is burn'd wherein I was wrapp'd; and I am now loose, to get more children of perdition into [thy]<sup>30</sup> usurous bonds. Thou feed'st my lechery, and I thy covetousness; thou art pander to me for my wench, and I to thee for thy cozenages. K. me, K. thee<sup>31</sup> runs [20] through court and country.

SEC. Well said, my subtle Quicksilver! These K's ope the doors to all this world's felicity; the dullest forehead sees it. Let not Master Courtier think he carries all the knavery on his shoulders: I have known poor Hob in the country, that has worn hobnails on's shoes, have as much villainy in's head as he that wears gold buttons in's cap.

QUICK. Why, man, 't is the London [30] highway to thrift; if virtue be us'd, 't is but as a scrap to<sup>32</sup> the net of villainy. They that use it simply, thrive simply,<sup>33</sup> I warrant. Weight and fashion makes goldsmiths cuckolds.

Enter SINDEFFY, with QUICKSILVER's doublet, cloak, rapier, and dagger.

SIN. Here, sir, put off[f] the other half of your prenticeship.

QUICK. Well said, sweet Sin. Bring forth my bravery.

Now let my trunks<sup>34</sup> shoot forth their silks conceal'd;

I now am free, and now will justify 40
My trunks and punks. Avaunt, dull flat cap, then!

<sup>36</sup> Then. The first two lines are from an old ballad, which Quicksilver proceeds to parody.

But, dad, hast thou seen my running gelding dress'd to-day?

SEC. That I have, Frank. The ostler a' th' Cock dressed him for a breakfast.

QUICK. What, did he eat him?

SEC. No, but he ate his breakfast for [60] dressing him; and so dress'd him for breakfast.

QUICK. Q witty age! where age is young in wit,
And all youths' words have graybeards full
of it!

SIN. But alas, Frank! how will all this be maintain'd now? <sup>37</sup> Your place maintain'd it before.

QUICK. Why, and I maintain'd my place. I'll to the court: another manner of place for maintenance, I hope, than the silly city. I heard my father say, I heard my mother [70] sing an old song and a true: "Thou art a she fool, and know'st not what belongs to our male wisdom." I shall be a merchant, forsooth! trust my estate in a wooden trough as he does? What are these ships but tennis balls for the winds to play withal? — toss'd from one wave to another; now under-line,<sup>38</sup> now over the house; sometimes brick-wall'd against a rock, so that the guts fly out again; sometimes struck under the wide hazard,<sup>39</sup> [80 and farewell, Master Merchant.

SIN. Well, Frank, well: the seas, you say, are uncertain: but he that sails in your court seas shall find 'em ten times fuller of hazard; wherein to see what is to be seen is torment more than a free spirit can endure; but, when you come to suffer, how many injuries swallow you! What care and devotion must you use to humor an imperious lord, proportion your looks to his looks, smiles to [90 his smiles; fit your sails to the winds of his breath!

QUICK. Tush! he's no journeyman in his craft that cannot do that.

SIN. But he's worse then a prentice that does it, not only humoring the lord, but every trencher-bearer, every groom that by indulgence and intelligence crept into his favor, and by panderism into his chamber. He rules the roast; and, when my honorable [100 Lord says it shall be thus, my worshipful rascal, the groom of his close-stool, says it shall not be thus, claps the door after him, and who dares enter? A prentice, quoth you? <sup>40</sup>

'T is but to learn to live; and does that disgrace a man? He that rises hardly, stands firmly; but he that rises with ease, alas, falls as easily.

QUICK. A pox on you! who taught you this morality? 110

"SEC. 'T is 'long of this witty age, Master Francis. But, indeed, Mistress Sindery, all trades complain of inconvenience, and therefore 't is best to have none. The merchant, he complains and says, "Traffic is subject to much uncertainty and loss." Let 'em keep their goods on dry land, with a vengeance, and not expose other men's substances to the mercy of the winds, under protection of a wooden wall, as Master [120 Francis says; and all for greedy desire to enrich themselves with unconscionable gain, two for one, or so; where I, and such other honest men as live by lending money, are content with moderate profit, thirty or forty i' th' hundred, so we may have it with quietness, and out of peril of wind and weather, rather than run those dangerous courses of trading, as they do.

QUICK. Ay, dad, thou mayst well be [130 called Security, for thou takest the safest course.

SEC. Faith, the quieter, and the more contented, and, out of doubt, the more godly; for merchants, in their courses, are never pleas'd, but ever repining against Heaven: one prays for a westerly wind, to carry his ship forth; another for an easterly, to bring his ship home; and, at every shaking of a leaf, he falls into an agony, to think what danger his ship is in on such a coast, and so forth. The farmer, he is ever at odds with the weather: sometimes the clouds have been too barren; sometimes the heavens forget themselves.<sup>42</sup> Their harvests answer not their hopes: sometimes the season falls out too fruitful, oern will bear no price, and so forth. Th' artificer, he's all for a stirring world: if his trade be too [dull],<sup>43</sup> and fall short of his expectation, then falls he out of joint. free from all this; we are pleas'd with all weathers. Let it rain or hold up, be calm or windy, let the season be whatsoever, let trade go how it will, we take all in good part, e'en what please the Heavens to send us, so <sup>45</sup> the sun stand not still and the moon keep her usual returns, and make up days, months, and years.

QUICK. And you have good security! [160

SEC. Ay, marry, Frank, that's the special point.

QUICK. And yet, forsooth, we must have trades to live withal; for we cannot stand without legs, nor fly without wings, and a number of such scurvy phrases. No, I say still, he that has wit, let him live by his wit; he that has none, let him be a tradesman.

SEC. Witty Master Francis! 'Tis pity any trade should dull that quick brain of [170 yours. Do but bring knight Petronel into my parchment toils once, and you shall never need to toil in any trade, a' my credit. You know his wife's land?

QUICK. Even to a foot, sir; I have been often there: a pretty fine seat, good land, all entire within itself.

SEC. Well wooded?

QUICK. Two hundred pounds' worth of wood ready to fell. And a fine sweet [180 house, that stands just in the midst an't, like a prick <sup>46</sup> in the midst of a circle; would I were your farmer, for a hundred pound a year!

SEC. Excellent Master Francis! how I do long to do thee good! How I do hunger and thirst to have the honor to enrich thee! Ay, even to die, that thou mightest inherit my living: even hunger and thirst! For, a' my religion, Master Francis — and so [190 tell knight Petronel — I do it to do him a pleasure.

QUICK. Marry, dad, his horses are now coming up to bear down his lady; wilt thou lend him thy stable to set 'em in?

SEC. Faith, Master Francis, I would be loth to lend my stable out of doors; in a greater matter I will pleasure him, but not in this.

QUICK. A pox of your hunger and [200 thirst! Well, dad, let him have money; all he could anyway get is bestowed on a ship now bound for Virginia; the frame of which voyage is so closely convey'd <sup>47</sup> that his new lady nor any of her friends know it. Notwithstanding, as soon as his lady's hand is gotten to the sale of her inheritance, and you have furnish'd him with money, he will instantly hoist sail and away.

SEC. Now a frank gale of wind go with [210 him, Master Frank! we have too few such knight adventurers! Who would not sell away competent certainties to purchase, with any danger, excellent uncertainties? Your true knight venturer ever does it. Let his wife seal to-day; he shall have his money to-day.

QUICK. To-morrow she shall, dad, before she goes into the country; to work her to which action with the more engines, I pur- [220 pose presently to prefer my sweet Sin here to the place of her gentlewoman; whom you, for the more credit, shall present as your friend's daughter, a gentlewoman of the country, new come up with a will for awhile to learn fashions forsooth, and be toward some lady; and she shall buzz pretty devices into her lady's ear; feeding her humors so serviceably, as the manner of such as she is, you know — 230

SEC. True, good Master Francis.<sup>48</sup>

QUICK. That she shall keep her port open to anything she commends to her.

SEC. A' my religion, a most fashionable project; as good she spoil the lady, as the lady spoil her; for 't is three to one of one side. — Sweet Mistress Sin, how are you bound to Master Francis! I do not doubt to see you shortly wed one of the head men of our city. 240

SIN. But, sweet Frank, when shall my father Security present me?

QUICK. With all festination; I have broken the ice to it already; and will presently to the knight's house, whither, my good old dad, let me pray thee, with all formality to man her.

SEC. Command me, Master Francis; I do hunger and thirst to do thee service! — Come, sweet Mistress Sin, take leave of my Winifred, and we will instantly meet [250 Frank Master Francis at your lady's.

Enter WINIFRED above.

WIN. Where is my Cu there? Cu!

SEC. Ay, Winnie.

WIN. Wilt thou come in, sweet Cu?

SEC. Ay, Winnie, presently.

Exeunt [all but QUICKSILVER].

QUICK. "Ay, Winnie," quod he. That's all he can do, poor man; he may well cut off her name at "Winnie."<sup>49</sup> Oh, 't is an egregious pander! What will not an usurous knave be, so he may be rich? Oh, 't is a no- [260] table Jews' triumph! I hope to live to see dogs' meat made of the old usurer's flesh, dice of his bones, and indentures of his skin; and yet his skin is too thick to make parchment; 't would make good boots for a peterman<sup>50</sup> to catch salmon in. Your only smooth skin to make fine vellum is your Puritan's skin; they be the smoothest and slickest knaves in a country.

Enter SIR PETRONEL, in boots, with a riding-wan[d].

PET. I'll out of this wicked town as [270] fast as my horse can trot! Here's now no good action for a man to spend his time in. Taverns grow dead; ordinaries are blown up; plays are at a stand; houses of hospitality at a fall; not a feather waving, nor a spur jingling anywhere. I'll away instantly.

QUICK. Y' ad best take some crowns in your purse, knight, or else your Eastward Castle will smoke but miserably.

PET. Oh, Frank! my castle? Alas! [280] all the castles I have are built with air, thou know'st.

QUICK. I know it, knight, and therefore wonder whither your lady is going.

PET. Faith, to seek her fortune, I think. I said I had a castle and land eastward, and eastward she will, without contradiction; her coach and the coach of the sun must meet full butt. And, the sun being outshined with her Ladyship's glory, she fears he goes [290] westward to hang himself.<sup>51</sup>

QUICK. And I fear, when her enchanted castle becomes invisible, her Ladyship will return and follow his example.

PET. Oh, that she would have the grace! for I shall never be able to pacify her, when she sees herself deceived so.

QUICK. As easily as can be. Tell her she mistook your directions, and that shortly yourself will down with her to approve it; [300] and then clothe but her crupper in a new gown, and you may drive her any way you list. For these women, sir, are like Essex<sup>52</sup> calves: you must wriggle 'em on by the tail still, or they will never drive orderly.

PET. But, alas, sweet Frank! thou know'st my ability will not furnish her blood with those costly humors.

QUICK. Cast that cost on me, sir. I have spoken to my old pander, Security, for [310] money or commodity;<sup>53</sup> if you will, I know he will procure you.

PET. Commodity! Alas! what commodity?

QUICK. Why, sir, what say you to figs and raisins?

PET. A plague of figs and raisins, and all such frail<sup>54</sup> commodities! We shall make nothing of 'em.

QUICK. Why then, sir, what say you [320] to forty pound in roasted beef?

PET. Out upon't. I have less stomach to<sup>55</sup> that than to the figs and raisins. I'll out of town, though I sojourn with a friend of mine; for stay here I must not: my creditors have laid to arrest me, and I have no friend under heaven but my sword to bail me.

QUICK. God's me, knight, put 'em in sufficient sureties, rather than let your sword bail you! Let 'em take their choice, [330] either the King's Bench<sup>56</sup> or the Fleet,<sup>57</sup> or which of the two Counters<sup>58</sup> they like best, for, by the Lord, I like none of 'em.

PET. Well, Frank, there is no jesting with my earnest necessity; thou know'st if I make not present money to further my voyage begun, all's lost, and all I have laid out about it.

QUICK. Why, then, sir, in earnest; if you can get your wise lady to set her hand to [340] the sale of her inheritance, the bloodhound, Security, will smell out ready money for you instantly.

PET. There spake an angel: to bring her to which conformity, I must fain myself extremely amorous; and, alleging urgent excuses for my stay behind, part with her as passionately as she would from her foisting<sup>59</sup> hound.

QUICK. You have the sow by the right [350]

She would long for everything when she was a maid, and now she will run mad for 'em. I lay my life, she will have every year four children; and what charge and change of humor you must endure while she is with child, and how she will tie you to your tackling<sup>60</sup> till she be with child, a dog [360] would not endure. Nay, there is no turnspit dog bound to his wheel more servilely than you shall be to her wheel; for, as that dog can never climb the top of his wheel but when the top comes under him, so shall you never climb the top of her contentment but when she is under you.

PET. 'Slight, how thou terrifiest me!

QUICK. Nay, hark you, sir; what nurses, what midwives, what fools, what phys- [370] cians, what cunning women must be sought for (fearing sometimes she is bewitch'd, sometimes in a consumption), to tell her tales, to talk bawdy to her, to make her laugh, to give her glisters,<sup>61</sup> to let her blood under the tongue and betwixt the toes; how she will revile and kiss you, spit in your face, and lick it off again; how she will vaunt you are her creature; she made you of nothing; how she could have had thousand-mark<sup>62</sup> join- [380] tures; she could have been made a lady by a Scotch knight, and never ha' married him;<sup>63</sup> she could have had panadas<sup>64</sup> in her bed every morning; how she set you up, and how she will pull you down—you'll never be able to stand of your legs to endure it.

PET. Out of my fortune! what a death is my life bound face to face to! The best is, a large time-fitted<sup>65</sup> conscience is bound to nothing: marriage is but a form in the [390] school of policy, to which scholars sit fast need only with painted chains. Old Security's young wife is ne'er the further off [f] with me.

QUICK. Thereby lies a tale, sir. The old usurer will be here instantly, with my punk Sindefy, whom you know your lady has promis'd me to entertain for her gentlewoman; and he, with a purpose to feed on you, invites you most solemnly by me to supper.

See, Frank, here comes my lady. Lord, how she views thee! She knows thee not, I think, in this bravery.<sup>66</sup>

GER. How now? who be you, I pray?

QUICK. One Master Francis Quicksilver, an't please your Ladyship.

GER. [aside] God's my dignity! as I am a lady, if he did not make me blush so that mine eyes stood a-water. Would I were un- [410] married again!—

Enter SECURITY and SINDEFY.

Where's my woman, I pray?

QUICK. See, madam, she now comes to attend you.

SEC. God save my honorable knight and his worshipful lady!

GER. Y' are very welcome; you must not put on your hat yet.

SEC. No, madam; till I know your Ladyship's further pleasure, I will not presume. [420]

GER. And is this a gentleman's daughter new come out of the country?

SEC. She is, madam; and one that her father hath a special care to bestow in some honorable lady's service, to put her out of her honest humors,<sup>67</sup> forsooth; for she had a great desire to be a nun, an't please you.

GER. A nun? what nun? a nun substantive? or a nun adjective?

SEC. A nun substantive, madam, I [430] hope if a nun be a noun. But, I mean, lady, a vow'd maid of that order.

GER. I'll teach her to be a maid of the order, I warrant you. And can you do any work belongs to a lady's chamber?

SIN. What I cannot do, madam, I would be glad to learn.

GER. Well said! Hold up, then; hold up your head, I say; come h[i]ther a little.

SIN. I thank your Ladyship. 440

GER. And hark you—good man, you may put on your hat now; I do not look on you—I must have you of my faction now; not of my knight's, maid.

SEC. I warrant your Ladyship for that.

GER. Very well; you shall ride in my coach with me into the country, to-morrow morning. — Come, knight, pray thee let's make a short supper, and to bed presently.<sup>69</sup>

SEC. Nay, good madam, this night I [460 have a short supper at home waits on his Worship's acceptation.

GER. By my faith, but he shall not go, sir; I shall swoon an he sup from me.

PET. Pray thee, forbear; shall he lose his provision?

GER. Ay, by[r] Lady, sir, rather than I lose my longing. Come in, I say; as I am a lady, you shall not go.

QUICK. [aside] I told him what a burr [470 he had gotten.

SEC. If you will not sup from your knight, madam, let me entreat your Ladyship to sup at my house with him.

GER. No, by my faith, sir; then we cannot be abed soon enough after supper.

PET. [aside] What a med'cine is this! — Well, Master Security, you are new married as well as I; I hope you are bound as well. We must honor our young wives, you know.

QUICK. [aside to SECURITY] In policy, [481 dad, till to-morrow she has seal'd.

SEC. I hope in the morning yet your Knighthood will breakfast with me.

PET. As early as you will, sir.

GER. Come, sweet knight, come; I do hunger and thirst to be abed with thee!

PET. Thanks for our<sup>2</sup> feastlike breakfast, good Master Security; I am sorry, by reason of my instant haste to so long a voyage as Virginia, I am without means by any kind amends to show how affectionately I take your kindness, and to confirm by some worthy ceremony a perpetual league of friendship betwixt us.

SEC. Excellent knight! let this be a token betwixt us of inviolable friendship. I am [10 new married to this fair gentlewoman, you know; and, by my hope to make her fruitful, though I be something in years, I vow faithfully unto you to make you godfather, though in your absence, to the first child I am blest withal; and henceforth call me gossip,<sup>3</sup> I beseech you, if you please to accept it.

PET. In the highest degree of gratitude, my most worthy gossip; for confirmation of which friendly title, let me entreat my fair [20 gossip, your wife here, to accept this diamond, and keep it as my gift to her first child, where-soever my fortune, in event of my voyage, shall bestow me.

SEC. How now, my coy wedlock! <sup>4</sup> Make you strange of <sup>5</sup> so noble a favor? Take it, I charge you, with all affection, and, by way of taking your leave, present boldly your lips to our honorable gossip.

QUICK. [aside] How vent'rous he is to [30 him, and how jealous to others!

PET. Long may this kind touch of our lips print in our hearts all the forms of affection. — And now, my good gossip, if the writings be ready to which my wife should seal, let them be brought this morning before she takes coach into the country, and my kindness shall work her to dispatch it.

SEC. The writings are ready, sir. My learned counsel here, Master Bramble the [40 lawyer, hath perus'd them; and within this hour I will bring the scrivener with them to your worshipful lady.

PET. Good Master Bramble, I will here take my leave of you, then. God send you fortunate pleas, sir, and contentious clients!

BRAM. And you foreright<sup>6</sup> winds, sir, and a fortunate voyage. Exit.

Enter a Messenger.

MESS. Sir Petronel, here are three or four gentlemen desire to speak with you. 50

PET. What are they?

QUICK. They are your followers in this voyage, knight: Captain Seagull and his

associates; I met them this morning, and told them you would be here.

PET. Let them enter, I pray you; I know they long to be gone, for their stay is dangerous.

Enter SEAGULL, SCAPETHRIFT, and SPENDALL.

SEA. God save my honorable colonel!

PET. Welcome, good Captain Seagull [60 and worthy gentlemen. If you will meet my friend Frank here and me at the Blue Anchor Tavern by Billin[g]sgate this evening, we will there drink to our happy voyage, be merry, and take boat to our ship with all expedition.<sup>7</sup> [SPEND]. Defer it no longer, I beseech you, sir; but, as your voyage is h[er]eto carried closely,<sup>8</sup> and in another knight's name, so for your own safety and ours, let it be continued; our meeting and speedy purpose of depart- [70 ing known to as few as is possible, lest your ship and goods be attach'd.

QUICK. Well advis'd, captain; our colonel shall have money this morning, to dispatch all our departures. Bring those gentlemen at night to the place appointed, and, with our skins full of vintage, we'll take occasion by the vantage, and away.

SPEND. We will not fail but be there, sir.

PET. Good morrow, good Captain, and [80 my worthy associates. — Health and all sovereignty to my beautiful gossip! — For you, sir, we shall see you presently with the writings.

SEC. With writings and crowns to my honorable gossip. I do hunger and thirst to do you good, sir.

Exeunt.

SCENE II *

Enter a Coachman in haste, in's frock, feeding.

COACH. Here's a stir when citizens ride out of town, indeed, as if all the house were afire! 'Slight! they will not give a man leave to eat's breakfast afore he rises.

Enter HAMLET, a footman, in haste.

HAM. What, coachman! My Lady's coach, for shame! Her Ladyship's ready to come down.

<sup>7</sup> Haste.

<sup>9</sup> An innyard.

Enter POTKIN, a tankard-bearer.

POT. 'Sfoot, Hamlet, are you mad? Whither run you now? You should brush up my old mistress! 10

[Exit HAMLET.]

Enter SINDEFY.

SIN. What, Potkin! You must put off your tankard and put on your blue coat,<sup>10</sup> and wait upon Mistress Touchstone into the country. Exit.

POT. I will, forsooth, presently. Exit.

Enter MISTRESS FOND and MISTRESS GAZER.

FOND. Come, sweet Mistress Gazer, let's watch here, and see my Lady Flash take coach.

GAZ. A' my word, here's a most fine place to stand in; did you see the new ship [20 launch'd last day,<sup>11</sup> Mistress Fond?

FOND. O God! an we citizens should lose such a sight!

GAZ. I warrant here will be double as many people to see her take coach as there were to see it take water.

FOND. Oh, she's married to a most fine castle i' th' country, they say!

GAZ. But there are no giants in the castle, are there? 30

FOND. Oh, no; they say her knight kill'd 'em all; and therefore he was knighted.

GAZ. Would to God her Ladyship would come away!

Enter GERTRUDE, MISTRESS TOUCHSTONE, SINDEFY, HAMLET, [and] POTKIN.

FOND. She comes, she comes, she comes!

GAZ. [AND] FOND. Pray Heaven bless your Ladyship!

GER. Thank you, good people! — My coach, for the love of Heaven, my coach! In good truth I shall swoon else. 40

HAM. Coach, coach, my Lady's coach!

Exit.

GER. As I am a lady, I think I am with child already, I long for a coach so. May one be with child afore they are married, Mother?

MIST. T. Ay, by'r Lady, madam; a little thing does that: I have seen a little prick no bigger then a pin's head swell bigger and bigger, till it has come to an ancome;<sup>12</sup> and e'en so 't is in these cases.

Re-enter HAMLET.

HAM. Your coach is coming, madam. 50

GER. That's well said. — Now, Heaven! methinks I am e'en up to the knees in preferment.

[singing]

But a little higher, but a little higher, but a little higher,
There, there, there lies Cupid's fire!<sup>13</sup>

MIST. T. But must this young man, an't please you, madam, run by your coach all the way afoot?

GER. Ay, by my faith, I warrant him; he gives no other milk,<sup>14</sup> as I have another [60 servant does.

MIST. T. Alas! 't is e'en pity, methinks; for God's sake, madam, buy him but a hobby-horse; let the poor youth have something betwixt his legs to ease 'em. Alas! we must do as we would be done to.

GER. Go to, hold your peace, dame; you talk like an old fool, I tell you!

Enter PETRONEL and QUICKSILVER.

PET. Wilt thou be gone, sweet honey-suckle, before I can go with thee? 70

GER. I pray thee, sweet knight, let me; I do so long to dress up thy castle afore thou com'st. But I mar'l how my modest sister occupies herself this morning, that she cannot wait on me to my coach, as well as her mother.

QUICK. Marry, madam, she's married by this time to prentice Golding. Your father, and someone more, stole to church with 'em in all the haste, that the cold meat left at your wedding might serve to furnish their [80 nuptial table.

GER. There's no base fellow, my father, now; but he's e'en fit to father such a daughter. He must call me "daughter" no more now: but "madam," and "please you, madam"; and "please your Worship, madam," indeed. Out upon him! marry his daughter to a base prentice?

MIST. T. What should one do? Is there no law for one that marries a woman's [90 daughter against her will? How shall we punish him, madam?

GER. As I am a lady, an't would snow, we'd so pebble 'em with snowballs as they come from church; but, sirrah Frank Quicksilver —

QUICK. Ay, madam.

GER. Dost remember since thou and I clapp'd what-d'ye-call'ts in the garret?

QUICK. I know not what you mean, [100 madam.

GER. [singing]

His head as white as milk,
All flaxen was his hair;
But now he is dead,
And laid in his bed,
And never will come again.<sup>15</sup>

God be at your labor!

Enter TOUCHSTONE, GOLDING, [and] MILDRED with rosemary.<sup>16</sup>

PET. [aside] Was there ever such a lady?

QUICK. See, madam, the bride and bridegroom! 110

GER. God's my precious! God give you joy, Mistress What-lack-you! Now out upon thee, baggage! My sister married in a taffeta hat! Marry, hang you! Westward with a wanon<sup>17</sup> t' ye! Nay, I have done wi' ye, minion, then, i' faith; never look to have my countenance any more, nor anything I can do for thee. Thou ride in my coach, or come down to my castle? fie upon thee! I charge thee in my Ladyship's name, call me "sister" no more. 121

TOUCH. An't please your Worship, this is not your sister: this is my daughter, and she call[s] me "Father," and so does not your Ladyship, an't please your Worship, madam.

MIST. T. No, nor she must not call thee father by heraldry, because thou mak'st thy prentice thy son as well as she. Ah, thou misproud prentice! dar'st thou presume to marry a lady's sister? 130

GOLD. It pleas'd my master, forsooth, to embolden me with his favor; and, though I confess myself far unworthy so worthy a wife, being in part her servant, as I am your prentice, yet, since (I may say it without boasting) I am born a gentleman, and, by the trade I have learn'd of my master, which I trust taints not my blood, able, with mine own industry and portion, to maintain your daughter, my hope is Heaven will so bless our [140

humble beginning that in the end I shall be no disgrace to the grace with which my master hath bound me his double prentice.

TOUCH. Master me no more, son, if thou think'st me worthy to be thy father.

GER. "Sun"? Now, good Lord, how he shines, an you mark him! He's a gentleman!

GOLD. Ay, indeed, madam, a gentleman born. 149

PET. Never stand a' your gentry, Master Bridegroom; if your legs be no better than your arms, you'll be able to stand upon neither shortly.

TOUCH. An't please your good Worship, sir, there are two sorts of gentlemen.

PET. What mean you, sir?

TOUCH. Bold to put off my hat to your Worship—

PET. Nay, pray forbear, sir, and then forth with your two sorts of gentlemen. 160

TOUCH. If your Worship will have it so!—I say there are two sorts of gentlemen. There is a gentleman artificial, and a gentleman natural. Now, though your Worship be a gentleman natural<sup>18</sup>—work upon that now!

QUICK. Well said, old Touchstone; I am proud to hear thee enter a set speech, i' faith; forth, I beseech thee.

TOUCH. Cry you mercy, sir, your Worship's a gentleman I do not know. If you be [170 one of my acquaintance, y' are very much disguis'd, sir.

QUICK. Go to, old quipper; forth with thy speech, I say.

TOUCH. What, sir, my speeches were ever in vain to your gracious Worship; and therefore, till I speak to you gallantry<sup>19</sup> indeed I will save my breath for my broth anon. Come, my poor son and daughter, let us hide ourselves in our poor humility, and live [180 safe. Ambition consumes itself with the very show. Work upon that now!

[Exeunt TOUCHSTONE, GOLDING and MILDRED.]

GER. Let him go, let him go, for God's sake! let him make his prentice his son, for God's sake! give away his daughter, for God's sake! and when they come a-begging to us, for God's sake, let's laugh at their good husbandry for God's sake. Farewell, sweet knight, pray thee make haste after.

PET. What shall I say? I would not [190 have thee go.

QUICK. [singing]

Now, oh, now, I must depart;
Parting, though it absence move — <sup>20</sup>

This ditty, knight, do I see in thy looks in capital letters. —

[singing]

What a grief 'tis to depart, and leave the flower that has my heart!

My sweet lady, and, alack for woe, why should we part so?

Tell truth, knight, and shame all dissembling lovers; does not your pain lie on that side?

PET. If it do, canst thou tell me how I [200 may cure it?

QUICK. Excellent easily. Divide yourself in two halves, just by the girdlestead; <sup>21</sup> send one half with your lady, and keep the tother yourself; or else do as all true lovers do, part with your heart and leave your body behind. I have seen't done a hundred times: 't is as easy a matter for a lover to part without a heart from his sweetheart, and he ne'er the worse, as for a mouse to get from a trap [210 and leave her tail behind [her].<sup>22</sup> See, here comes the writings.

Enter SECURITY, with a Scrivener.

SEC. Good morrow to my worshipful Lady. I present your Ladyship with this writing, to which, if you please to set your hand with your knight's, a velvet gown shall attend your journey, a' my credit.

GER. What writing is it, knight?

PET. The sale, sweetheart, of the poor tene-ment I told thee of, only to make a little [220 money to send thee down furniture for my castle, to which my hand shall lead thee.

GER. Very well. Now give me your pen, I pray.

QUICK. [aside] It goes down without chewing, i' faith.

SCRIV. Your Worships deliver this as your deed?

AMBO. We do.

GER. So now, knight, farewell till I [230 see thee!

PET. All farewell to my sweetheart.

MIST. T. Good-bye,<sup>23</sup> son knight.

PET. Farewell, my good mother!

GER. Farewell, Frank! I would fain take thee down if I could.

<sup>20</sup> Misquoted from Dowland's First Book of Aires.

<sup>18</sup> Fool.

<sup>19</sup> I.e., speak in fashionable terms.

QUICK. I thank your good Ladyship. —
Farewell, Mistress Sindely!

Exeunt [GERTRUDE and her party.]

PET. O tedious voyage, whereof there is no end!

What will they think of me? 240

QUICK. Think what they list. They long'd for a vagary into the country; and now they are fitted. So a woman marry to ride in a coach, she cares not if she ride to her ruin.
'T is the great end of many of their marriages.
This is not first time a lady has rid a false journey in her coach, I hope.

PET. Nay, 't is no matter, I care little what they think; he that weighs men's [249 thoughts has his hands full of nothing. A man, in the course of this world, should be like a surgeon's instrument, work in the wounds of others, and feel nothing himself.
The sharper and subtler, the better.

QUICK. As it falls out now, knight, you shall not need to devise excuses, or endure her outcries, when she returns; we shall now be gone before, where they can not reach us.

PET. Well, my kind compere,<sup>24</sup> you have now th' assurance we both can make you; [260 let me now entreat you the money we agreed on may be brought to the Blue Anchor, near to Billingsgate, by six a'clock; where I and my chief friends, bound for this voyage, will with feasts attend you.

SEC. The money, my most honorable com-pere, shall without fail observe your appointed hour.

PET. Thanks, my dear gossip. I must now impart

To your approved love a loving secret, 270
As one on whom my life doth more rely
In friendly trust than any man alive.
Nor shall you be the chosen secretary
Of my affections for affection only;
For I protest, if God bless my return,
To make you partner in my action's gain
As deeply as if you had ventur'd with me 277
Half my expenses. Know then, honest gossip,
I have enjoyed with such divine contentment

A gentlewoman's bed whom you well know,
That I shall ne'er enjoy this tedious voyage,
Nor live the least part of the time it asketh, Without her presence; so "I thirst and hunger" <sup>25</sup>

To taste the dear feast of her company.

<sup>24</sup> Friend, "gossip."

<sup>25</sup> Words quoted are italicised in old eds.

And, if the "hunger" and "the thirst" you
vow

As my sworn gossip, to my wished good
Be, as I know it is, unfeign'd and firm,
Do me an easy favor in your power. 288

SEC. Be sure, brave gossip, all that I can do,
To my best nerve,<sup>26</sup> is wholly at your service.
Who is the woman, first, that is your friend?

PET. The woman is your learned counsel's
wife,

The lawyer, Master Bramble; whom would
you

Bring out this even in honest neighborhood,<sup>27</sup>

To take his leave, with you, of me your gossip,
I, in the mean time, will send this my friend
Home to his house, to bring his wife, dis-guis'd,

Before his face, into our company;
For love hath made her look for such a wife,
To free her from his tyrannous jealousy; [300
And I would take this course before another,
In stealing her away, to make us sport,
And gull his circumspection the more grossly;
And I am sure that no man like yourself
Hath credit with him to entice his jealousy
To so long stay abroad as may give time
To her enlargement in such safe disguise.

SEC. A pretty, pithy, and most pleasant project!

Who would not strain a point of neighborhood

For such a point-device? <sup>28</sup> — that, as the ship
Of famous Draco <sup>29</sup> went about the world, [311
Will wind about the lawyer, compassing
The world, himself; he hath it in his arms,
And that's enough for him, without his wife.
A lawyer is ambitious, and his head
Cannot be prais'd nor rais'd too high,
With any fork <sup>30</sup> of highest knavery.
I'll go fetch [him] <sup>31</sup> straight.

Exit SECURITY.

PET. So, so! Now, Frank, go thou home to his house, 319

'Stead of his lawyer's, and bring his wife hither,
Who, just like to the lawyer's wife, is prison'd
With his stern usurous jealousy, which could never

Be overreach'd thus but with overreaching.

<sup>28</sup> To the best of my powers.

<sup>30</sup> Sir Francis Drake's Golden Hind, laid up as a memorial at Deptford.

<sup>31</sup> Alluding to the horns of the cuckold.

<sup>32</sup> Conj. R. H. Case; old eds. her.

Re-enter SECURITY.

SEC. And, Master Francis, watch you th' instant time

To enter with his exit : 't will be rare,

Two fine<sup>32</sup> horn'd beasts, a camel<sup>33</sup> and a lawyer ! [Exit.]

QUICK. How the old villain joys in villainy !

Re-enter SECURITY.

SEC. And hark you, gossip, when you have her here,

Have your boat ready, ship her to your ship
With utmost haste, lest Master Bramble stay you. 330

To o'erreach that head that outreacheth all heads !

'T is a trick rampant ! — 't is a very quiblin !<sup>34</sup>

I hope this harvest to pitch cart with lawyers,

Their heads will be so forked. This sly
touch

Will get apes<sup>35</sup> to invent a number such.

Exit.

QUICK. Was ever rascal honeyed so with poison ?

"He that delights in slavish avarice,

Is apt to joy in every sort of vice."

Well, I'll go fetch his wife, whilst he the [lawyer].<sup>36</sup>

PET. But stay, Frank, let's think how we may disguise her. 340

Upon this sudden.

QUICK. God's me, there 's the mischief !
But hark you, here 's an excellent device —

'Fore God, a rare one ! I will carry her
A sailor's gown and cap, and cover her,
And a player's beard.

PET. And what upon her head ?

QUICK. I tell you, a sailor's cap ! 'Slight,
God forgive me !

What kind of figent<sup>37</sup> memory have you ?

PET. Nay, then, what kind of figent wit hast thou ?

A sailor's cap ? — how shall she put it off

When thou present'st her to our company ?

QUICK. Tush, man, for that, make her a saucy sailor ! 351

<sup>32</sup> So some copies of Q1; the rest, and Qq 1, 2, to finde.

<sup>33</sup> Chapman has many references to camels with horns. (Parrott.)

<sup>36</sup> Conj. Case; old eds. Lawyers.

<sup>37</sup> Fidgety.

PET. Tush, tush ! 't is no fit sauce for such sweet mutton.<sup>38</sup>

I know not what t' advise.

Enter SECURITY with his wife's gown.

SEC. Knight, knight, a rare device !

PET. Sownes,<sup>39</sup> yet again ?

QUICK. What stratagem have you now ?

SEC. The best that ever — you talk'd of disguising ?

PET. Ay, marry, gossip, that's our present care.

SEC. Cast care away then ; here's the best device

For plain Security (for I am no better),

I think, that ever liv'd ; here's my wife's
gown,

Which you may put upon the lawyer's wife,
And which I brought you, sir, for two great reasons : 361

One is, that Master Bramble may take hold
Of some suspicion that it is my wife,

And gird me so perhaps with his law wit ;

The other, which is policy indeed,

Is that my wife may now be tied at home,

Having no more but her old gown abroad,

And not show me a quirk,<sup>40</sup> while I fir<sup>k</sup> <sup>41</sup>
others.

Is not this rare ?

AMBO. The best that ever was. [369

SEC. Am I not born to furnish gentlemen ?

PET. O my dear gossip !

SEC. Well, hold, Master Francis ;
Watch, when the lawyer's out, and put it in.

And now — I will go fetch him. Exit.

QUICK. O my dad !

He goes as 't were the Devil to fetch the lawyer ;

And devil shall he be, if horns will make him.

Re-enter SECURITY.

PET. Why, how now, gossip ? why stay you there musing ?

SEC. A toy, a toy runs in my head, i' faith.

QUICK. A pox of that head ! is there more toys yet ?

PET. What is it, pray thee, gossip ?

SEC. Why, sir, what if you Should slip away now with my wife's best
gown,

I having no security for it ? 381

<sup>38</sup> A "mutton" was slang for a light woman.

<sup>41</sup> Cheat.

QUICK. For that, I hope, dad, you will take our words.

SEC. Ay, by th' mass, your word ; that's a proper staff

For wise Security to lean upon !

But 't is no matter ; once I'll trust my name On your crack'd credits ; let it take no shame. Fetch the wench, Frank. Exit.

QUICK. I'll wait upon you, sir. — And fetch you over, you were ne'er so fetch'd.<sup>42</sup> Go to the tavern, knight ; your followers Dare not be drunk, I think, before their captain. Exit. 300

PET. Would I might lead them to no hotter service Till our Virginian gold were in our purses ! Exit.

[SCENE III]<sup>43</sup>

Enter SEAGULL, SPENDALL, and SCAPETHRIFT, in the tavern, with a Drawer.

SEAGULL. Come, drawer, pierce your nearest<sup>44</sup> hogsheads, and let's have cheer, not fit for your Billingsgate tavern, but for our Virginian colonel ; he will be here instantly.

DRAW. You shall have all things fit, sir ; please you have any more wine ?

SPEND. More wine, slave ! Whether we drink it or no, spill it, and draw more.

SCAPE. Fill all the pots in your house with all sorts of liquor, and let 'em wait [10 on us here like soldiers in their pewter coats ; and, though we do not employ them now, yet we will maintain 'em till we do.

DRAW. Said like an honorable captain ; you shall have all you can command, sir. Exit Drawer.

SEA. Come, boys, Virginia longs till we share the rest of her maidenhead.

SPEND. Why, is she inhabited already with any English ?

SEA. A whole country of English is [20 there, man, bred of those that were left there in '79 ; <sup>45</sup> they have married with the Indians, and make 'em bring forth as beautiful faces as any we have in England ; and therefore the Indians are so in love with 'em that all the treasure they have they lay at their feet.

<sup>44</sup> Purest.

SCAPE. But is there such treasure there, Captain, as I have heard ?

SEA. I tell thee, gold is more plentiful there than copper is with us ; and for as [30 much red copper as I can bring, I'll have thrice the weight in gold. Why, man, all their dripping-pans and their chamber pots are pure gold ;<sup>46</sup> and all the chains with which they chain up their streets are massy gold ; all the prisoners they take are fetter'd in gold ; and, for<sup>47</sup> rubies and diamonds, they go forth on holidays and gather 'em by the seashore, to hang on their children's coats, and stick in their caps, as commonly as our [40 children wear saffron gilt<sup>48</sup> brooches and groats with holes in 'em.

SCAPE. And is it a pleasant country withal ?

SEA. As ever the sun shin'd on ; temperate, and full of all sorts of excellent viands : wild boar is as common there as our tamest bacon is here ; venison, as mutton. And then you shall live freely there, without sergeants,<sup>49</sup> or courtiers, or lawyers, or intelligencers,<sup>50</sup> <sup>51</sup> only a few industrious Scots, [50 perhaps, who indeed are dispers'd over the face of the whole earth. But, as for them, there are no greater friends to Englishmen and England, when they are out [o]n 't, in the world, than they are. And, for my part, I would a hundred thousand of 'em were there, for we are all one countrymen now, ye know ; and we should find ten times more comfort of them there than we do here.<sup>52</sup> Then, for your means to advancement there, it is [60 simple, and not preposterously mix'd. You may be an alderman there, and never be scavenger ; you may be [a nobleman],<sup>53</sup> and never be a slave. You may come to preferment enough, and never be a pander ; to riches and fortune enough, and have never the more villainy nor the less wit.<sup>54</sup>

<sup>53</sup> So only in the first issue of Q 1 ; second issue, and Qq 2, 1, any other officer.

<sup>54</sup> At this point the second issue of Q 1, followed by Qq 2, 1, adds the following, to fill out the page shortened in the original state: Besides, there we shall have no more Law then Conscience, and not too much of either ; serve God inough, eat and drinke inough ; and inough is as good as a Feast.

SPEND. Gods me! and how far is it thither?

SEA. Some six weeks' sail, no more, with [70 any indifferent good wind. And, if I get to any part of the coast of Africa, I'll sail thither with any wind; or, when I come to Cape Finisterre, there's a foreright wind continually wafts us till we come at Virginia. — See, our colonel's come.

Enter SIR PETRONEL.

PET. Well met, good Captain Seagull and my noble gentlemen! Now the sweet hour of our freedom is at hand. — Come, drawer! Fill us some carouses, and prepare [80 us for the mirth that will be occasioned presently. Here will be a pretty wench, gentlemen, that will bear us company all our voyage.

SEA. Whatsoever she be, here's to her health, noble colonel, both with cap and knee.

PET. Thanks, kind Captain Seagull; she's one I love dearly and must not be known, till we be free from all that know us. And so, gentlemen, here's to her health.

AMBO.<sup>55</sup> Let it come, worthy Colonel, we do hunger and thirst for it!

PET. Afore Heaven, you have hit the phrase of one that her presence will touch from the foot to the forehead,<sup>56</sup> if ye knew it.

SPEND. Why, then, we will join his forehead with her health, sir; and, Captain Scape-thrift, here's to 'em both.

Enter SECURITY and BRAMBLE.

SEC. See, see, Master Bramble, 'fore Heaven, their voyage cannot but prosper! [100 they are o' their knees for success to it!

BRAM. And they pray to god Bacchus.

SEC. God save my brave colonel, with all his tall captains and corporals.<sup>57</sup> See, sir, my worshipful learned counsel, Master Bramble, is come to take his leave of you.

PET. Worshipful Master Bramble, how far do you draw us into the sweet briar of your kindness! — Come, Captain Seagull, another health to this rare Bramble, that [110 hath never a prick about him.

SEA. I pledge his most smooth disposition, sir. — Come, Master Security, bend your supporters,<sup>58</sup> and pledge this notorious<sup>59</sup> health here.

SEC. Bend you yours likewise, Master Bramble; for it is you shall pledge me.

SEA. Not so, Master Security; he must not pledge his own health.

SEC. No, Master Captain? 120

Enter QUICKSILVER, with WINNIE, disguis'd.

Why, then, here's one is fitly come to do him that honor.

QUICK. Here's the gentlewoman your cousin, sir, whom, with much entreaty, I have brought to take her leave of you in a tavern; asham'd whereof, you must pardon her if she put not off her mask.

PET. Pardon me, sweet Cousin; my kind desire to see you before I went made me so importunate to entreat your presence [130 here.

SEC. How now, Master Francis, have you honor'd this presence with a fair gentlewoman?

QUICK. Pray, sir, take you no notice of her, for she will not be known to you.

SEC. But my learned counsel, Master Bramble here, I hope may know her.

QUICK. No more than you, sir, at this time; his learning must pardon her. 140

SEC. Well, God pardon her, for my part; and I do, I'll be sworn. And so, Master Francis, here's to all that are going eastward to-night towards Cuckold's Haven; <sup>60</sup> and so to the health of Master Bramble.

QUICK. I pledge it, sir. [kneeling] Hath it gone round, captains?

SEA. It has, sweet Frank; and the round closes with thee.

QUICK. Well, sir, here's to all eastward [150 and toward <sup>61</sup> cuckolds, and so to famous Cuckold's Haven, so fatally rememb'ed.

Surgit.

PET. [to WINIFRED] Nay, pray thee, coz, weep not. — Gossip Security.

SEC. Ay, my brave gossip.

PET. A word, I beseech you, sir. — [aside] Our friend, Mistress Bramble here, is so dissolv'd in tears, that she drowns the whole mirth of our meeting. Sweet gossip, take her aside and comfort her. 160

SEC. [aside to WINIFRED] Pity of all true love, Mistress Bramble; what, weep you to enjoy your love? What's the cause, lady? Is't because your husband is so near, and your heart earns <sup>62</sup> to have a little abus'd <sup>63</sup> him? Alas, alas! the offence is too common to be respected.<sup>64</sup> So great a grace hath seldom chanc'd to so unthankful a woman; to be rid of an old jealous dotard, to enjoy the arms of a loving young knight, that, [170] when your prickless Bramble is withered with grief of your loss, will make you flourish afresh in the bed of a lady.

Re-enter Drawer.

DRAW. Sir Petronel, here's one of your watermen come to tell you it will be flood these three hours; and that 't will be dangerous going against the tide; for the sky is overcast, and there was a porpoise even now seen at London Bridge, which is always the messenger of tempests, he says. 180

PET. A porpoise!—what's that to th' purpose? <sup>65</sup> Charge him, if he love his life, to attend <sup>66</sup> us. Can we not reach Blackwall, where my ship lies, against the tide, and in spite of tempests? Captains and gentlemen, we'll begin a new ceremony at the beginning of our voyage, which I believe will be follow'd of all future adventurers.

SEA. What's that, good Colonel?

PET. This, Captain Seagull. We'll [190] have our provided supper brought aboard Sir Francis Drake's ship,<sup>67</sup> that hath compass'd the world; where, with full cups and banquets, we will do sacrifice for a prosperous voyage. My mind gives me that some good spirits of the waters should haunt the desert ribs of her, and be auspicious to all that honor her memory, and will with like orgies enter their voyages.

SEA. Rarely conceited! <sup>68</sup> One health [200] more to this motion, and aboard to perform it. He that will not this night be drunk, may he never be sober.

They compass in WINIFRED, dance the drunken round, and drink carouses.

BRAM. Sir Petronel and his honorable captains, in these young services we old servitors may be spar'd. We only came to take our leaves, and, with one health to you all, I'll be bold to do so. Here, neighbor Security, to the health of Sir Petronel and all his captains. 210

SEC. You must bend, then, Master Bramble. [They kneel.] So, now I am for you. I have one corner of my brain, I hope, fit to bear one carouse more. Here, lady, to you that are encompass'd there, and are asham'd of our company. [They drink, and rise.] Ha, ha, ha! by my troth, my learn'd counsel, Master Bramble, my mind runs so of Cuckold's Haven to-night that my head runs over with admiration.<sup>69</sup> 220

BRAM. [aside to SECURITY] But is not that your wife, neighbor?

SEC. [aside to BRAMBLE.] No, by my troth, Master Bramble. Ha, ha, ha! A pox of all Cuckold's Havens, I say!

BRAM. [aside to SECURITY] A' my faith, her garments are exceeding like your wife's.

SEC. Cucullus non facit monachum,<sup>70</sup> my learned counsel; all are not cuckolds that seem so; nor all seem not that are so. [230] Give me your hand, my learn'd counsel; you and I will sup somewhere else than at Sir Francis Drake's ship to-night. — Adieu, my noble gossip!

BRAM. Good fortune, brave captains; fair skies God send ye!

OMNES. Farewell, my hearts, farewell!

PET. Gossip, laugh no more at Cuckold's Haven, gossip.

SEC. I have done, I have done, sir. — [240] Will you lead, Master Bramble? Ha, ha, ha!

PET. Captain Seagull, charge a boat.

OMNES. A boat, a boat, a boat!

Exeunt [all except Drawer.]

DRAW. Y' are in a proper taking indeed, to take a boat, especially at this time of night, and against tide and tempest. They say yet, "Drunken men never take harm." This night will try the truth of that proverb. Exit.

[SCENE IV] <sup>71</sup>

Enter SECURITY.

SEC. What, Winnie! — Wife, I say! — Outdoors at this time! Where should I seek the gadfly? — Billingsgate, Billingsgate, Billingsgate! She's gone with the knight, she's gone with the knight! woe be to thee,

Billingsgate! — A boat! a boat! a boat! a full hundred marks for a boat! Exit.

SLIT. All hail, fair haven of married men only! for there are none but married men cuckolds. For my part, I presume not to arrive here but in my master's behalf, a poor butcher<sup>3</sup> of Eastcheap, who sends me to set up, in honor of Saint Luke,<sup>4</sup> these necessary ensigns of his homage. And up I got this morning, thus early, to get up to the top of this famous tree, that is all fruit and no leaves, to advance this crest of my master's occupation. Up then! — Heaven and Saint Luke bless me, that I be not blown into the Thames as I climb, with this furious tempest. 'Slight! I think the Devil be abroad, in likeness of a storm, to rob me of my horns! Hark how he roars! Lord! what a coil the Thames keeps! She bears some unjust burthen, I believe, that she kicks and curvets thus to cast it. Heaven bless all honest passengers that are upon her back now; for the bit is out of her mouth, [20 I see, and she will run away with 'em! — So, so! I think I have made it look the right way. — It runs against London Bridge, as it were, even full butt. And now let me discover from this lofty prospect, what pranks the rude Thames plays in her desperate lunacy. O me! here's a boat has been cast away hard by. Alas, alas, see one of her passengers laboring for his life to land at this haven here! Pray Heaven he may recover it! His [30 next land is even just under me. — Hold out yet a little; whatsoever thou art, pray, and take a good heart to thee. — 'Tis a man;

— take a man's heart to thee; yet a little further, get up a' thy legs, man; now 'tis shallow enough. So, so, so! Alas! he's down again. Hold thy wind, father. — 'Tis a man in a nightcap. So! now he's got up again; now he's past the worst: yet, thanks be to Heaven, he comes toward me pretty and [40 strongly.

Enter SECURITY, without his hat, in a night-cap, wet band, etc.

SEC. Heaven, I beseech thee, how have I offended thee! where am I cast ashore now, that I may go a righter way home by land? Let me see; Oh, I am scarce able to look about me. Where is there any sea-mark that I am acquainted withal?

SLIT. Look up, father; are you acquainted with this mark?

SEC. What! landed at Cuckold's [50 Haven? Hell and damnation! I will run back and drown myself. He falls down.

SLIT. Poor man, how weak he is! the weak water has wash'd away his strength.

SEC. Landed at Cuckold's Haven! If it had not been to die twenty times alive, I should never have 'scap'd death! I will never arise more; I will grovel here and eat dirt till I be chok'd; I will make the gentle earth do that which the cruel water has denied me. 60

SLIT. Alas, good father, be not so desperate! Rise man; if you will, I'll come presently and lead you home.

SEC. Home! shall I make any know my home that has known me thus abroad? How low shall I crouch away, that no eye may see me? I will creep on the earth while I live, and never look heaven in the face more.

Exit, creep[ing].

SLIT. What young planet reigns now, trow, that old men are so foolish? What desperate young swaggerer would have been abroad such a weather as this, upon the water? — Ay me, see another remnant of this unfortunate shipwreck! — or some other. A woman, i' faith, a woman; though it be almost at Saint Kath'rine's,<sup>5</sup> I discern it to be a woman, for all her body is above the water, and her clothes swim about her most handsomely. Oh, they bear her up most bravely! Has not a woman reason to love the tak- [80 ing up of her clothes the better while she lives, for this? Alas, how busy the rude Thames

<sup>4</sup> A fair, called "Horn Fair", was held annually on St. Luke's Day (October 18) at Charlton, near Greenwich. Both Cuckold's Haven and the Fair were supposed to be connected with an amour of King John's; caught by the husband, the King gave him an estate, with the stipulation that on every St. Luke's Day he must perambulate it with a pair of horns on his head.

is about her! A pox a' that wave! It will drown her, i' faith, 't will drown her! Cry God mercy, she has scap'd it! I thank Heaven she has scap'd it! Oh, how she swims, like a mermaid! Some vigilant body look out and save her. That's well said; <sup>6</sup> just where the priest fell in, <sup>7</sup> there's one sets down a ladder, and goes to take her up. God's blessing [90 a' thy heart, boy! Now take her up in thy arms and to bed with her. She's up, she's up! She's a beautiful woman, I warrant her; the billows durst not devour her.

Enter the Drawer in the tavern before, with WINIFRED.<sup>8</sup>

DRAW. How fare you now, lady?

WIN. Much better, my good friend, than I wish: as one desperate of her fame, now my life is preserv'd.

DRAW. Comfort yourself. That Power that preserved you from death can like- [100 wise defend you from infamy, howsoever you deserve it. Were not you one that took boat late this night, with a knight and other gentlemen at Billingsgate?

WIN. Unhappy that I am, I was.

DRAW. I am glad it was my good hap to come down thus far after you, to a house of my friends here in Saint Kath'rine's, since I am now happily made a mean to your rescue from the ruthless tempest, which, when [110 you took boat, was so extreme, and the gentleman that brought you forth so desperate and unsober, that I fear'd long ere this I should hear of your shipwrack, and therefore, with little other reason, made thus far this way. And this I must tell you, since perhaps you may make use of it, there was left behind you at our tavern, brought by a porter hir'd by the young gentleman that brought you, a gentlewoman's gown, hat, stockings, and [120 shoes; which, if they be yours, and you please to shift you, taking a hard bed here in this house of my friend, I will presently go fetch you.

WIN. Thanks, my good friend, for your more than good news. The gown with all things bound with it are mine; which if you please to fetch as you have promis'd, I will boldly receive the kind favor you have offered till your return; entreating you, [130 by all the good you have done in preserving me hitherto, to let none take knowledge of what favor you do me, or where such a one as I am bestowed, lest you incur me much more damage in my fame than you have done me pleasure in preserving my life.

<sup>7</sup> No more is known of this event, though it is also mentioned by Taylor, the Water Poet. (Harris.)

<sup>8</sup> The scene is now near St. Katherine's, though Slitgut, whose presence we are supposed to ignore, remains on his perch. Perhaps the curtains of the upper stage were closed at this point.

DRAW. Come in, lady, and shift yourself; resolve that nothing but your own pleasure shall be us'd in your discovery.

WIN. Thank you, good friend; the [140 time may come, I shall requite you.

Exeunt [Drawer and WINIFRED].

SLIT.<sup>9</sup> See, see, see! I hold my life, there's some other a-taking up at Wapping <sup>10</sup> now! Look, what a sort <sup>11</sup> of people cluster about the gallows there! in good troth, it is so. O me! a fine young gentleman! What, and taken up at the gallows? Heaven grant he be not one day taken down there! A' my life, it is ominous. Well, he is delivered for the time. I see the people have all left [150 him; yet will I keep my prospect awhile, to see if any more have been shipwrack'd.

Enter QUICKSILVER, bareheaded.<sup>12</sup>

QUICK. Accurs'd that ever I was sav'd or born!

How fatal is my sad arrival here!
As if the stars and Providence spake to me,
And said, "The drift of all unlawful courses,
Whatever end they dare propose themselves,
In frame of their licentious policies,
In the firm order of just destiny,
They are the ready highways to our ruins." [160
I know not what to do; my wicked hopes
Are, with this tempest, torn up by the roots.
Oh, which way shall I bend my desperate
steps,

In which unsufferable shame and misery
Will not attend them? I will walk this bank,
And see if I can meet the other relics
Of our poor shipwrack'd crew, or hear of them.
The knight, alas, was so far gone with wine,
And th' other three, that I refus'd their boat,
And took the hapless woman in another, 170
Who cannot but be sunk, whatever Fortune Hath wrought upon the others' desperate lives. [Exit.]

<sup>9</sup> The scene is again Cuckold's Haven.

<sup>10</sup> On the north bank, a little below the city. Pirates were hanged there, at the water's edge.

Enter PETRONEL and SEAGULL, bareheaded.<sup>13</sup>

PET. Zounds, Captain, I tell thee we are cast up o' the coast of France. 'Sfoot! I am not drunk still, I hope! Dost remember where we were last night?

SEA. No, by my troth, knight, not I; but methinks we have been a horrible while upon the water and in the water.

PET. Ay me, we are undone forever. [180] Hast any money about thee?

SEA. Not a penny, by Heaven!

PET. Not a penny betwixt us, and cast ashore in France!

SEA. Faith, I cannot tell that; my brains nor mine eyes are not mine own yet.

Enter two Gentlemen.

PET. 'Sfoot! wilt not believe me? I know 't by th' elevation of the pole, and by the altitude and latitude of the climate. See! Here comes a couple of French gentlemen; [190] I knew we were in France; dost thou think our Englishmen are so Frenchified that a man knows not whether he be in France or in England, when he sees 'em? What shall we do? We must e'en to 'em, and entreat some relief of 'em. Life is sweet, and we have no other means to relieve our lives now but their charities.

SEA. Pray you, do you beg on 'em then; you can speak French. 200

PET. Monsieur, plaist il d'avoir pitié de nostre grande infortunes? Je suis un povre chevalier d'Angleterre qui a souffri l'infortune de naufrage.

1 GENT. Un povre chevalier d'Angleterre?

PET. Où, monsieur, il est trop vraye; mais vous scavez bien nous sommes toutes subject a fortune.

2 GENT. A poor knight of England?—a poor knight of Windsor,<sup>14</sup> are you not? [210] Why speak you this broken French, when y' are a whole Englishman? On what coast are you, think you?

PET. On the coast of France, sir.

1 GENT. On the coast of Dogs, sir; y' are i' th' Isle a' Dogs, I tell you. I see y' ave been wash'd in the Thames here, and I believe ye were drown'd in a tavern before, or else you would never have took boat in such a dawning as this was. Farewell, farewell; [220]

we will not know you, for shaming of you.—I ken the man weel; he's one of my thirty pound knights.<sup>15</sup>

2 GENT. No, no, this is he that stole his knighthood o' the grand day for four pound, giving to a page all the money in's purse, I wot well. Exeunt [Gentlemen].

SEA. Death! Colonel, I knew you were overshot.

PET. Sure I think now, indeed, Captain Seagull, we were something overshot. 231

Enter QUICKSILVER.

What! my sweet Frank Quicksilver! dost thou survive, to rejoice me? But what! nobody at thy heels, Frank? Ay me! what is become of poor Mistress Security?

QUICK. Faith, gone quite from her name, as she is from her fame, I think; I left her to the mercy of the water.

SEA. Let her go, let her go! Let us go to our ship at Blackwall, and shift us. 240

PET. Nay, by my troth, let our clothes rot upon us, and let us rot in them; twenty to one our ship is attach'd by this time! If we set her not under sail this last tide, I never look'd for any other. Woe, woe is me! what shall become of us? The last money we could make<sup>16</sup> the greedy Thames has devour'd; and, if our ship be attach'd, there is no hope can relieve us.

QUICK. 'Sfoot, knight! what an un- [250] knightly faintness transports thee! Let our ship sink, and all the world that's without us be taken from us, I hope I have some tricks in this brain of mine shall not let us perish.

SEA. Well said, Frank, i' faith. O my nimble-spirited Quicksilver! 'Fore God, would thou hadst been our colonel!

PET. I like his spirit rarely; but I see no means he has to support that spirit.

QUICK. Go to, knight! I have more [260] means than thou art aware of. I have not liv'd amongst goldsmiths and goldmakers all this while but I have learned something worthy of my time with 'em. And, not to let thee stink where thou stand'st, knight, I'll let thee know some of my skill presently.

SEA. Do, good Frank, I beseech thee.

QUICK. I will blanch copper so cunningly that it shall endure all proofs but the test:

it shall endure malleation,<sup>17</sup> it shall have [270 the ponderosity of Luna,<sup>18</sup> and the tenacity of Luna, by no means friable.

PET. 'Slight! where learn'st thou these terms, trow?

QUICK. Tush, knight! the terms of this art every ignorant quacksalver is perfect in; but I'll tell you how yourself shall blanch copper thus cunningly. Take ars'nic, otherwise called realga (which indeed is plain ratsbane); sublime [him]<sup>19</sup> three or [280 four times; then take the sublimate of this realga and put [him]<sup>19</sup> into a glass, into chymia,<sup>20</sup> and let [him]<sup>19</sup> have a convenient decoction natural, four-and-twenty hours, and he will become perfectly fix'd; then take this fixed powder, and project him upon well-purg'd copper, et habebis magisterium.<sup>21</sup>

AMBO. Excellent Frank, let us hug thee!

QUICK. Nay, this I will do besides: [290 I'll take you off twelvence from every angel, with a kind of aqua fortis, and never deface any part of the image.

PET. But then it will want weight!

QUICK. You shall restore that thus: take your sal achyme<sup>22</sup> prepar'd, and your distill'd urine, and let your angels lie in it but four-and-twenty hours, and they shall have their perfect weight again. Come on, now; I hope this is enough to put some spirit [300 into the livers of you; I'll infuse more another time. We have saluted the proud air long enough with our bare sconces. Now will I have you to a wench's house of mine at London, there make shift to shift us,<sup>23</sup> and, after, take such fortunes as the stars shall assign us.

AMBO. Notable Frank, we will ever adore thee!

Exeunt [all but SLITGUT].

Enter Drawer with WINIFRED new attir'd.<sup>24</sup>

WIN. Now, sweet friend, you have brought me near enough your tavern, which I [310 desired that I might with some color be seen near, inquiring for my husband, who, I must tell you, stale<sup>25</sup> thither last night with my wet gown we have left at your friend's, which, to continue your former honest kindness, let me pray you to keep close<sup>26</sup> from the knowledge of any; and so, with all vow of your requital, let me now entreat you to leave me to my woman's wit, and fortune.

DRAW. All shall be done you desire; [320 and so all the fortune you can wish for attend you.

Exit Drawer.

Enter SECURITY.

SEC. I will once more to this unhappy tavern before I shift one rag of me more; that I may there know what is left behind, and what news of their passengers. I have bought me a hat and band with the little money I had about me, and made the streets a little leave staring at my nightcap.

WIN. Oh, my dear husband! where [330 have you been to-night? <sup>27</sup> All night abroad at taverns? Rob me of my garments, and fare as one run away from me? Alas! is this seemly for a man of your credit, of your age, and affection to your wife?

SEC. What should I say? how miraculously sorts this! Was not I at home, and call'd thee last night?

WIN. Yes, sir, the harmless sleep you broke; and my answer to you would [340 have witness'd it, if you had had the patience to have stay'd and answered me; but your so sudden retreat made me imagine you were gone to Master Bramble's, and so rested patient and hopeful of your coming again, till this your unbeliev'd<sup>28</sup> absence brought me abroad with no less than wonder, to seek you where the false knight had carried you.

SEC. Villain and monster that I was! How have I abus'd thee! I was suddenly [350 gone indeed, for my sudden jealousy transferred me! I will say no more but this, dear wife: I suspected thee.

WIN. Did you suspect me?

SEC. Talk not of it, I beseech thee; I am ashamed to imagine it. I will home, I will home; and every morning on my knees ask thee heartily forgiveness.

Exeunt [SECURITY and WINIFRED].

SLIT.<sup>29</sup> Now will I descend my honorable prospect, the farthest-seeing sea-mark of [360 the world: no marvel, then, if I could see two miles about me. I hope the red tempest's anger be now overblown, which sure I think Heaven sent as a punishment for profaning

Farewell to honest married men! farewell to all sorts and degrees of thee!<sup>30</sup> Farewell, thou horn of hunger,<sup>31</sup> that call'st th' inns a' court<sup>32</sup> to their manger! Farewell, thou horn [370 of abundance,<sup>33</sup> that adornest<sup>34</sup> the heads-men of the commonwealth! Farewell, thou -horn of direction, that is the city lanthorn!<sup>35</sup> Farewell, thou horn of pleasure, the ensign of the huntsman! Farewell, thou horn of destiny, th' ensign of the married man! Farewell, thou horn tree, that bearest nothing but stone<sup>36</sup> fruit! Exit.

[SCENE II]<sup>37</sup>

TOUCH. Ha, sirrah! thinks my knight adventurer we can<sup>38</sup> no point of our compass? Do we not know north-north-east, north-east and by east, east and by north, nor plain eastward? Ha! have we never heard of Virginia, nor the Cavallaria, nor the Colonoria?<sup>39</sup> Can we discover no discoveries? Well, mine errant Sir Flash, and my runagate Quicksilver, you may drink drunk, crack cans, hurl away a brown<sup>40</sup> dozen of [10 Monmouth caps<sup>41</sup> or so, in sea-ceremony to your bon voyage; but, for reaching any coast, save the coast of Kent or Essex, with this tide, or with this fleet, I'll be your warrant for a Gravesend<sup>42</sup> toast. There's that gone afore will stay your admiral<sup>43</sup> and vice-admiral and rear-admiral, were they all (as they are) but one pinnace, and under sail, as well as a remora,<sup>44</sup> doubt it not; and from this sconce,<sup>45</sup>

<sup>30</sup> I.e., O thou unchaste satire! I will now say farewell to chaste married men, and (what is the same thing, since cuckoldom is universal), farewell to all the varieties of thee, O satirical horned pole; for all cuckolds, since like thee they bear horns, may be termed varieties of thee.

My daughter, his lady, was sent eastward by land to a castle of his i' the air, in what region<sup>46</sup> I know not, and, as I hear, was glad to take up her lodging in her coach, she and her two waiting women (her maid, and her mother), like three snails in a shell, and the coachman a-top on<sup>47</sup> 'em, I think. Since, they have all found the way back again by Weeping Cross;<sup>48</sup> but I'll [30 not see 'em. And, for two on 'em, madam and her malkin,<sup>49</sup> they are like to bite o' the bridle for William,<sup>50</sup> as the poor horses have done all this while that hurried 'em, or else go graze o' the common. So should my Dame Touchstone too; but she has been my cross these thirty years, and I'll now keep her to fright away sprites, i' faith. I wonder I hear no news of my son Golding! He was sent for to the Guildhall this morning [40 betimes,<sup>51</sup> and I marvel at the matter; if I had not laid up comfort and hope in him, I should grow desperate of all. See, he is come i' my thought!—

Enter GOLDING.

How now, son? What news at the Court of Aldermen?

GOLD. Troth, sir, an accident somewhat strange; else, it hath little in it worth the reporting.

TOUCH. What? It is not borrowing [50 of money, then?

GOLD. No, sir; it hath pleas'd the worshipful Commoners<sup>52</sup> of the city to take me one i' their number at presentation of the inquest<sup>53</sup> —

TOUCH. Ha!

GOLD. And the alderman of the ward wherein I dwell to appoint me his deputy —

TOUCH. How?

GOLD. In which place I have had an [60 oath minist'ed me, since I went.

TOUCH. Now, my dear and happy son, let me kiss thy new Worship, and a little boast mine own happiness in thee. — What a fortune was it (or rather my judgment, indeed) for me first to see that in his disposition which a whole city so conspires to second ! Ta'en into the livery of his company <sup>54</sup> the first day of his freedom ! Now, not a week married, chosen Commoner and alderman's [70 deputy in a day ! Note but the reward of a thrifty course. The wonder of his time ! Well, I will honor Master Alderman for this act, as becomes me, and shall think the better of the Common Council's wisdom and worship, while I live, for thus meeting, or but coming after me, in the opinion of his desert. Forward, my sufficient <sup>55</sup> son ! and, as this is the first, so esteem it the least step to that high and prime honor that expects thee. 80

GOLD. Sir, as I was not ambitious of this, so I covet no higher place ; it hath dignity enough, if it will but save me from contempt ; and I had rather my bearing in this or any other office should add worth to it than the place give the least opinion to me.

TOUCH. Excellently spoken ! This modest answer of thine blushes, as if it said, " I will wear scarlet <sup>56</sup> shortly." Worshipful son ! I cannot contain myself ; I must tell thee, [90 I hope to see thee one o' the monuments of our city, and reckon'd among her worthies, to be rememb'rd the same day with the Lady Ramsey <sup>57</sup> and grave Gresham, <sup>58</sup> when the famous fable of Whittington and his puss shall be forgotten, and thou and thy acts become the posies <sup>59</sup> for hospitals ; when thy name shall be written upon conduits, and thy deeds play'd i' thy lifetime by the best companies of actors, and be call'd their get-penny. This I divine ; this I prophesy. 101

GOLD. Sir, engage not your expectation farder than my abilities will answer ; I, that know mine own strengths, fear 'em ; and there is so seldom a loss in promising the least that commonly it brings with it a welcome deceit. I have other news for you, sir.

TOUCH. None more welcome, I am sure.

GOLD. They have their degree of welcome, I dare affirm. The colonel and all his [110 company, this morning putting forth drunk from Billingsgate, had like to have been cast away o' this side Greenwich ; and, as I have intelligence by a false brother, <sup>60</sup> are come dropping to town like so many masterless men, i' their doublets and hose, without hat or cloak or any other —

TOUCH. A miracle ! the justice of Heaven ! Where are they ? Let 's go presently and lay for 'em. 120

GOLD. I have done that already, sir, both by constables and other officers, who shall take 'em at their old Anchor, and with less tumult or suspicion than if yourself were seen in 't, under color of a great press <sup>61</sup> that is now abroad ; and they shall here be brought afore me.

TOUCH. Prudent and politic son ! Disgrace 'em all that ever thou canst ; their ship I have already arrested. How to my wish [130 it falls out that thou hast the place of a justice upon 'em ! I am partly glad of the injury done to me, that thou mayst punish it. Be severe i' thy place, like a new officer o' the first quarter, unreflected. <sup>62</sup> You hear how our lady is come back with her train from the invisible castle ?

GOLD. No ; where is she ?

TOUCH. Within ; but I ha' not seen her yet, nor her mother, who now begins to [140 wish her daughter undubb'd, they say, and that she had walk'd a foot-pace with her sister. Here they come ; stand back.

[Enter] MISTRESS TOUCHSTONE, GERTRUDE, MILDRED, [and] SINDEFY.

God save your Ladyship ; 'save your good Ladyship ! Your Ladyship is welcome from your enchanted castle ; so are your beauteous retinue. I hear your knight errant is travell'd on strange adventures. Surely, in my mind, your Ladyship hath " fish'd fair, and caught a frog," <sup>63</sup> as the saying is. 150

MIST. TOUCH. Speak to your father, madam, and kneel down.

GER. Kneel ? I hope I am not brought so low yet ; though my knight be run away, and has sold my land, I am a lady still.

TOUCH. Your Ladyship says true, madam ; and it is fitter and a greater decorum that I should curtsy to you that are a knight's wife and a lady than you be brought a' your knees to me, who am a poor cullion <sup>64</sup> and your [160 father.

<sup>58</sup> The great Elizabethan financier and philanthropist.

GER. Law! my father knows his duty.

MIST. T. Oh, child!

TOUCH. And therefore I do desire your Ladyship, my good Lady Flash, in all humility, to depart my obscure cottage, and return in quest of your bright and most transparent castle, "how ever presently conceal'd to mortal eyes." And, as for one poor woman of your train here, I will take that order [170] she shall no longer be a charge unto you, nor help to spend your Ladyship; she shall stay at home with me, and not go abroad, not put you to the pawning of an odd coach horse or three wheels, but take part with the Touchstone. If we lack, we will not complain to your Ladyship. And so, good madam, with your damsel here, please you to let us see your straight backs in equipage; <sup>66</sup> for truly here is no roost for such chickens as you are, or birds o' [180] your feather, if it like your Ladyship.

GER. Marry, fyste <sup>66</sup> o' <sup>67</sup> your kindness! I thought as much. Come away, Sin; we shall "as soon get a fart from a dead man as a farthing" of court'sy here.

MIL. Oh, good Sister!

GER. Sister, Sir Reverence! Come away, I say; hunger drops out at his nose.

GOLD. Oh, madam, "Fair words never hurt the tongue." 190

GER. How say you by that? You come out with your gold-ends now!

MIST. T. Stay, Lady-daughter. Good husband —

TOUCH. Wife, "no man loves his fetters, be they made of gold." I list not "ha' my head fast'ned under my child's girdle;" "as she has brew'd, so let her drink," a' God's name. She "went witless to wedding," now she may "go wisely a-begging." It's [200] but honeymoon yet with her Ladyship; she has coach horses, apparel, jewels yet left; she needs care for no friends, nor take knowledge of father, mother, brother, sister, or anybody. When those are pawn'd or spent, perhaps we shall return into the list of her acquaintance.

GER. I scorn it, i' faith. — Come, Sin.

MIST. T. Oh, madam, why do you provoke your father thus?

Exit GERTRUDE [with SINDEFFY].

TOUCH. Nay, nay, e'en "let pride go [210] afore; shame will follow after," I warrant you. Come, why dost thou weep now?

<sup>66</sup> In marching order.

<sup>67</sup> On.

Thou art not "the first good cow" hast "had an ill calf," I trust. — [Exit MISTRESS TOUCHSTONE.] What's the news with that fellow?

Enter Constable.

GOLD. Sir, the knight and your man Quicksilver are without; will you ha' 'em brought in?

TOUCH. Oh, by any means. <sup>68</sup> [Exit Constable.] And, son, here's a chair; ap- [220] pear terrible unto 'em on the first interview. Let them behold the melancholy <sup>69</sup> of a magistrate, and taste the fury of a citizen in office.

GOLD. Why, sir, I can do nothing to 'em, except you charge 'em with somewhat.

TOUCH. I will charge 'em and recharge 'em, rather than authority should want foil to set it off. [Offers GOLDING a chair.]

GOLD. No, good sir, I will not.

TOUCH. Son, it is your place; by any [230] means —

GOLD. Believe it, I will not, sir.

Enter KNIGHT PETRONEL, QUICKSILVER, Constable, [and] Officers.

PET. How misfortune pursues us still in our misery!

QUICK. Would it had been my fortune to have been truss'd up <sup>70</sup> at Wapping rather than ever ha' come here!

PET. Or mine to have famish'd in the Island!

QUICK. Must Golding sit upon us? 240

CON. You might carry [a Master] <sup>71</sup> under your girdle to Master Deputy's Worship.

GOLD. What are those, Master Constable?

CON. An't please your Worship, a couple of masterless men I press'd for the Low Countries, sir.

GOLD. Why do you not carry 'em to Bridewell, <sup>72</sup> according to your order, they may be shipp'd away?

CON. An't please your Worship, one [250] of 'em says he is a knight; and we thought good to show him to your Worship, for our discharge. <sup>73</sup>

GOLD. Which is he?

CON. This, sir.

<sup>68</sup> Certainly, by all means.

GOLD. And what's the other?

CON. A knight's fellow, sir, an't please you.

GOLD. What! a knight and his fellow thus account'ed? Where are their hats and [260] feathers, their rapiers and their cloaks?

QUICK. [aside] Oh, they mock us.

CON. Nay, truly, sir, they had cast both their feathers and hats, too, before we see 'em. Here's all their furniture,<sup>74</sup> an't please you, that we found. They say knights are now to be known without feathers, like cock'rels by their spurs, sir.

GOLD. What are their names, say they?

TOUCH. [aside] Very well, this. He [270] should not take knowledge of 'em in his place, indeed.

CON. This is Sir Petronel Flash.

TOUCH. How!

CON. And this, Francis Quicksilver.

TOUCH. Is't possible? I thought your Worship had been gone for Virginia, sir; you are welcome home, sir. Your Worship has made a quick return, it seems, and no doubt a good voyage. Nay, pray you be cov- [280] er'd, sir. How did your biscuit hold out, sir? — Methought I had seen this gentleman afore. Good Master Quicksilver, how a degree to the southward has chang'd you!

GOLD. Do you know 'em, Father? — Forbear your offers<sup>75</sup> a little, you shall be heard anon.

TOUCH. Yes, Master Deputy; I had a small venture with them in the voyage — a thing call'd a son-in-law, or so. — Offi- [290] cers, you may let 'em stand alone: they will not run away; I'll give my word for them, a couple of very honest gentlemen. One of 'em was my prentice, Master Quicksilver here; and when he had two year to serve, kept his whore and his hunting nag, would play his hundred pound at gresco or primero<sup>76</sup> as familiarly (and all a' my purse) as any bright piece of crimson on 'em all; had his changeable trunks of apparel standing at livery, [300] with his mare, his chest of perfum'd linen, and his bathing-tubs, which, when I told him of, why he — he was a gentleman, and I a poor Cheapside groom! The remedy was, we must part. Since when he hath had the gift of gathering up some small parcels of mine, to the value of five hundred pound, dispers'd among my customers, to furnish this his Virginian venture; wherein this knight was the chief, Sir Flash — one that married a [310] daughter of mine, laded her, turned two thousand pounds' worth of good land of hers into cash within the first week, bought her a new gown and a coach; sent her to seek her fortune by land, whilst himself prepared for his fortune by sea; took in fresh flesh at Billingsgate, for his own diet, to serve him the whole voyage — the wife of a certain usurer call'd Security, who hath been the broker for 'em in all this business. Please, [320] Master Deputy, work upon that now!

GOLD. If my worshipful father have ended —

TOUCH. I have, it shall please Master Deputy.

GOLD. Well then, under correction —

TOUCH. [aside] Now, son, come over 'em with some fine gird, as thus, "Knight, you shall be encount'ed," that is, had to the Counter; or, "Quicksilver, I will put [330] you in a crucible," or so.

GOLD. Sir Petronel Flash, I am sorry to see such flashes as these proceed from a gentleman of your quality and rank; for mine own part, I could wish I could say I could not see them; but such is the misery of magistrates and men in place, that they must not wink<sup>77</sup> at offenders. — Take him aside. — I will hear you anon, sir.

TOUCH. [aside] I like this well, yet; [340] there's some grace i' the knight left: he cries.

GOLD. Francis Quicksilver, would God thou hadst turn'd quacksalver, rather than run into these dissolute and lewd courses! It is great pity; thou art a proper<sup>78</sup> young man, of an honest and clean face, somewhat near a good one; God hath done his part in thee; but thou hast made too much, and been too proud, of that face, with the rest of thy body; for maintenance of which in [350] neat and garish attire, only to be look'd upon by some light housewives,<sup>79</sup> thou hast prodigally consumed much of thy master's estate; and, being by him gently admonish'd at several times, hast return'd thyself haughty and rebellious in thine answers, thund'ring out uncivil comparisons, requiting all his kindness with a coarse and harsh behavior; never returning thanks for any one benefit, but receiving all as if they had been debts to [360 thee, and no courtesies. I must tell thee, Francis, these are manifest signs of an ill nature; and God doth often punish such pride and outrecuidance<sup>80</sup> with scorn and infamy, which is the worst of misfortune.— My worshipful father, what do you please to charge them withal?— From the press I will free 'em, Master Constable.

CON. Then I'll leave your Worship, sir.

GOLD. No, you may stay; there will [370 be other matters against 'em.

TOUCH. Sir, I do charge this gallant, Master Quicksilver, on suspicion of felony; and the knight, as being accessory in the receipt of my goods.

QUICK. O God, sir!

TOUCH. Hold thy peace, impudent varlet, hold thy peace! With what forehead or face dost thou offer to chop logic with me, having run such a race of riot as thou hast done? [380 Does not the sight of this worshipful man's fortune and temper confound thee, that was thy younger fellow in household, and now come to have the place of a judge upon thee? Dost not observe this? Which of all thy gallants and gamesters, thy swearers and thy swaggerers, will come now to moan thy misfortune, or pity thy penury? They'll look out at a window, as thou rid'st in triumph to Tyburn, and cry, "Yonder goes honest [390 Frank, mad Quicksilver!" "He was a free boon companion, when he had money," says one. "Hang him, fool;" says another; "he could not keep it when he had it!" "A pox o' the cullion, his master," says a third; "he has brought him to this;" when their pox of pleasure, and their piles of perdition, would have been better bestowed upon thee, that hast vent'red for 'em with the best, and by the clue of thy knavery brought thyself [400 weeping to the cart of calamity.

QUICK. Worshipful Master!

TOUCH. Offer not to speak, crocodile; I will not hear a sound come from thee. Thou hast learn'd to whine at the play yonder.— Master Deputy, pray you commit 'em both to safe custody, till I be able farther to charge 'em.

QUICK. O me! what an unfortunate thing am I! [410

PET. Will you not take security,<sup>81</sup> sir?

TOUCH. Yes, marry, will I, Sir Flash, if

I can find him, and charge him as deep as the best on you. He has been the plotter of all this; he is your engineer,<sup>82</sup> I hear. Master Deputy, you'll dispose of these? In the mean time, I'll to my Lord Mayor, and get his warrant to seize that serpent, Security, into my hands, and seal up both house and goods to the King's use or my satisfaction. [420

GOLD. Officers, take 'em to the Counter.

QUICK. [AND] PET. O God!

TOUCH. Nay, on, on; you see the issue of your sloth. Of sloth cometh pleasure, of pleasure cometh riot, of riot comes whoring, of whoring comes spending, of spending comes want, of want comes theft, of theft comes hanging; and there is my Quicksilver fix'd.

Exeunt.

ACT V—SCENE I<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] GERTRUDE [and] SINDEFY.

GER. Ah, Sin! hast thou ever read i' the chronicle of any lady and her waiting woman driven to that extremity that we are, Sin?

SIN. Not I, truly, madam; and, if I had, it were but cold comfort should come out of books, now.

GER. Why, good faith, Sin, I could dine with a lamentable story, now. O hone, hone, o no nera! etc. Canst thou tell ne'er a one, Sin? [10

SIN. None but mine own, madam, which is lamentable enough: first to be stol'n from my friends, which were worshipful and of good account, by a prentice in the habit and disguise of a gentleman, and here brought up to London, and promis'd marriage, and now likely to be forsaken, for he is in possibility to be hang'd!

GER. Nay, weep not, good Sin; my Petronel is in as good possibility as he. [20 Thy miseries are nothing to mine, Sin; I was more than promis'd marriage, Sin; I had it, Sin; and was made a lady; and by a knight, Sin; which is now as good as no knight, Sin. And I was born in London, which is more then brought up, Sin; and already forsaken, which is past likelihood, Sin; and, instead of land i' the country, all my knight's living lies i' the Counter, Sin; there's his castle, now! [30

SIN. Which he cannot be forc'd out of, madam.

GER. Yes, if he would live hungry a week or two. "Hunger," they say, "breaks stone walls." But he is e'en well enough serv'd, Sin, that, so soon as ever he had got my hand to the sale of my inheritance, run away from me, [as]<sup>2</sup> I had been his punk, God bless us! Would the Knight o' the Sun or Palmerin of England,<sup>3</sup> have us'd their ladies so, Sin? [40 or Sir Lancelot or Sir Tristram?

SIN. I do not know, madam.

GER. Then thou know'st nothing, Sin. Thou art a fool, Sin. The knighthood nowadays are nothing like the knighthood of old time. They rid a-horseback; ours go afoot. They were attended by their squires, ours by their lackeys. They went buckled in their armor, ours muffled in their cloaks. They travell'd wildernesses and deserts; ours [50 dare scarce walk the streets. They were still press'd<sup>4</sup> to engage their honor, ours still ready to pawn their clothes. They would gallop on at sight of a monster; ours run away at sight of a sergeant. They would help poor ladies; ours make poor ladies.

SIN. Ay, madam, they were knights of the Round Table at Winchester, that sought adventures; but these, of the Square Table at ordinaries, that sit at hazard.<sup>5</sup> 60

GER. True, Sin; let him vanish. And tell me, what shall we pawn next?

SIN. Ay, marry, madam, a timely consideration; for our hostess, profane woman, has sworn by bread and salt she will not trust us another meal.

GER. Let it stink in her hand then. I'll not be beholding to her. Let me see; my jewels be gone, and my gowns, and my red velvet petticoat that I was married in, [70 and my wedding silk stockings, and all thy best apparel, poor Sin! Good faith, rather than thou shouldst pawn a rag more I'd lay my ladyship in lavender<sup>6</sup>—if I knew where.

SIN. Alas, madam, your ladyship?

GER. Ay. Why? You do not scorn my ladyship, though it is in a waistcoat? God's my life! you are a peat<sup>7</sup> indeed! Do I offer to mortgage my ladyship for you and for your avail, and do you turn the [80 lip and the "alas!" to my ladyship?

SIN. No, madam; but I make question who will lend anything upon it.

GER. Who? marry, enow, I warrant you, if you'll seek 'em out. I'm sure I remember the time when I would ha' given a thousand pound, if I had it, to have been a lady; and I hope I was not bred and born with that appetite alone; some other gentle-born o' the city have the same longing, [90 I trust. And, for my part, I would afford 'em a penny'rth;<sup>8</sup> my ladyship is little the worse for the wearing, and yet I would bate a good deal of the sum. I would lend it, let me see, for forty pounds in hand, Sin; that would apparel us; and ten pound a year: that would keep me and you, Sin, with our needles; and we should never need to be beholding to our scurvy parents! Good Lord! that there are no fairies [100 nowadays, Sin.

SIN. Why, madam?

GER. To do miracles, and bring ladies money. Sure, if we lay in a cleanly house, they would haunt it, Sin! I'll try. I'll sweep the chamber soon at night, and set a dish of water o' the hearth. A fairy may come and bring a pearl, or a diamond. We do not know, Sin. Or there may be a pot of gold hid o' the back-side, if we had tools [110 to dig for't! Why may not we two rise early i' the morning, Sin, afore anybody is up, and find a jewel i' the streets worth a hundred pound? May not some great court-lady, as she comes from revels at midnight, look out of her coach as 't is running, and lose such a jewel, and we find it? Ha?

SIN. They are pretty waking dreams, these.

GER. Or may not some old usurer be [120 drunk overnight, with a bag of money, and leave it behind him on a stall? For God-sake, Sin, let's rise to-morrow by break of day and see. I protest, law, if I had as much money as an alderman, I would scatter some on 't i' th' streets for poor ladies to find, when their knights were laid up. And, now I remember my song o' the "Golden Show'r": why may not I have such fortune? I'll sing it, and try what luck I shall have after it. 130

Oh, here's my mother! Good luck, I [140] hope. — Ha' you brought any money, Mother? Pray you, Mother, your blessing. Nay, sweet Mother, do not weep.

MIST. TOUCH. God bless you! I would I were in my grave!

GER. Nay, dear Mother, can you steal no more money from my father? Dry your eyes, and comfort me. Alas! it is my knight's fault, and not mine, that I am in a waistcoat, and attired thus simply. 150

MIST. T. Simply? 'Tis better than thou deserv'st. Never whimper for the matter. "Thou should'st have look'd before thou hadst leap'd." Thou wert afire to be a lady, and now your ladyship and you may both "blow at the coal,"<sup>9</sup> for aught I know. "Self do, self have." "The hasty person never wants woe," they say.

GER. Nay then, Mother, you should ha' look'd to it. A body would think you [160] were<sup>10</sup> the older! I did but my kind,<sup>11</sup> I. He was a knight, and I was fit to be a lady. 'Tis not lack of liking, but lack of living, that severs us. And you talk like yourself and a citiner<sup>12</sup> in this, i' faith. You show what husband you come on, iwis. You smell the Touchstone — he that will do more for his daughter that he has married [to]<sup>13</sup> a scurvy gold-end man and his prentice, than he will for his tother daughter, that has [170] wedded a knight and his customer. By this light, I think he is not my legitimate father.

SIN. Oh, good madam, do not take up your mother so!

MIST. T. Nay, nay, let her e'en alone. Let her Ladyship grieve me still, with her bitter taunts and terms. I have not dole enough to see her in this miserable case, ay, without her velvet gowns, without ribands, without jewels, without French wires,<sup>14</sup> [180] or cheat bread,<sup>15</sup> or quails, or a little dog, or MIST. T. And I not able to relieve her, neither, being kept so short by my husband. Well, God knows my heart. I did little think that ever she should have need of her sister Golding!

GER. Why Mother, I ha' not yet. [190] Alas! good Mother, be not intoxicate<sup>16</sup> for me; I am well enough; I would not change husbands with my sister, I. "The leg of a lark is better than the body of a kite."

MIST. T. I know that; but —

GER. What, sweet Mother, what?

MIST. T. It's but ill food, when nothing's left but the claw.

GER. That's true, Mother. Ay me!

MIST. T. Nay, sweet ladybird, sigh [200] not. Child, madam; why do you weep thus? Be of good cheer; I shall die if you cry, and mar your complexion thus.

GER. Alas, Mother, what should I do?

MIST. T. Go to thy sister's, child; she'll be proud thy Ladyship will come under her roof. She'll win thy father to release thy knight, and redeem thy gowns and thy coach and thy horses, and set thee up again.

GER. But will she get him to set my [210] knight up too?

MIST. T. That she will, or anything else thou 'lt ask her.

GER. I will begin to love her, if I thought she would do this.

MIST. T. Try her, good chuck<sup>17</sup>; I warrant thee.

GER. Dost thou think she'll do't?

SIN. Ay, madam, and be glad you will receive it. 220

MIST. T. That's a good maiden; she tells you true. Come, I'll take order<sup>18</sup> for your debts i' the alehouse.

GER. Go, Sin, and pray for thy Frank, as I will for my Pet. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II<sup>19</sup>

Enter TOUCHSTONE, GOLDING, [and] WOLF.

TOUCH. I will receive no letters, Master Wolf; you shall pardon me.

GOLD. Good Father, let me entreat you.

<sup>18</sup> Make arrangements.

<sup>19</sup> Unlocated; presumably Goldsmith's Row.

GOLD. You see, Master Wolf, how in- [101
exorable he is. There is no hope to recover him. Pray you commend me to my brother knight, and to my fellow Francis [giving money]; present 'em with this small token of my love; tell 'em, I wish I could do 'em any worthier office; but, in this, 't is desperate:
yet I will not fail to try the uttermost of my power for 'em. And, sir, as far as I have any credit with you, pray you let 'em want [110 nothing; though I am not ambitious they should know so much.

WOLF. Sir, both your actions and words speak you to be a true gentleman. They shall know only what is fit, and no more.

Exeunt.

SCENE III <sup>36</sup>

[Enter] HOLDFAST [and] BRAMBLE.

HOLD. Who would you speak with, sir?

BRAM. I would speak with one Security, that is prisoner here.

HOLD. You are welcome, sir. Stay there,
I'll call him to you. — Master Security!

[SECURITY appears at a grating.]

SEC. Who calls?

HOLD. Here's a gentleman would speak
with you.

SEC. What is he? Is't one that grafts my forehead now I am in prison, and comes [10 to see how the horns shoot up and prosper?

HOLD. You must pardon him, sir; the old man is a little craz'd with his imprisonment. [Exit.]

SEC. What say you to me, sir? Look you here, my learned counsel, Master Bram-ble! Cry you mercy, sir! When saw you my wife?

BRAM. She is now at my house, sir; and desir'd me that I would come to visit you, [20 and inquire of you your case, that we might work some means to get you forth.

SEC. My case, Master Bramble, is stone walls and iron grates; you see it; this is the weakest part on't. And, for getting me forth, no means but hang myself, and so to be carried forth, from which they have here bound me in intolerable bands.

BRAM. Why, but what is't you are in for, sir? 30

SEC. For my sins, for my sins, sir, whereof marriage is the greatest. Oh, had I never married, I had never known this purgatory,

<sup>36</sup> A room in the Counter.

to which hell is a kind of cool bath in respect <sup>37</sup>;
my wife's confederacy, sir, with old Touchstone, that she might keep her jubilee and the feast of her new moon.<sup>38</sup> Do you understand me, sir?

Enter QUICKSILVER.

QUICK. Good sir, go in and talk with him.
The light does him harm, and his ex- [40
ample will be hurtful to the weak prisoners. — Fie, Father Security, that you'll be still so profane! Will nothing humble you?

[Exeunt SECURITY, BRAMBLE, and QUICKSILVER.]

Enter two Prisoners, with a Friend.

FRIEND. What's he?

1 PRIS. Oh, he is a rare young man! Do you not know him?

FRIEND. Not I. I never saw him I can remember.

2 PRIS. Why, it is he that was the gallant prentice of London — Master Touch- [50 stone's man.

FRIEND. Who? Quicksilver?

1 PRIS. Ay, this is he.

FRIEND. Is this he? They say he has been a gallant indeed.

[2] PRIS. Oh, the royallest fellow that ever was bred up i' the city. He would play you his thousand pound a night at dice;
keep knights and lords company; go with them to bawdyhouses; had his six men in [60 a livery; kept a stable of hunting horses, and his wench in her velvet gown and her cloth of silver. Here's one knight with him here in prison.

FRIEND. And how miserably he is chang'd!

1 PRIS. Oh, that's voluntary in him;
he gave away all his rich clothes, as soon as ever he came in here, among the prisoners;
and will eat o' the basket,<sup>39</sup> for humility.

FRIEND. Why will he do so? 70

1 PRIS. Alas, he has no hope of life! He mortifies himself. He does but linger on till the sessions.

2 PRIS. O, he has penn'd the best thing, that he calls his "Repentance" or his "Last Farewell," that ever you heard. He is a pretty poet; and, for prose — you would wonder how many prisoners he has help'd out,

<sup>37</sup> Comparison.

<sup>38</sup> Alluding to its horns, another reminder of cuckoldom.

<sup>39</sup> Of broken victuals upon which the poorest prisoners lived.

with penning petitions for 'em, and not take a penny. Look! this is the knight, in the [80 rug-gown.<sup>40</sup> Stand by.

Enter PETRONEL, BRAMBLE, [and] QUICK-SILVER.

BRAM. Sir, for Security's case, I have told him: say he should be condemned to be carted or whipp'd for a bawd, or so, why, I'll lay an execution on him o' two hundred pound; let him acknowledge a judgment, he shall do it in half an hour; they shall not all fetch him out without paying the execution, o' my word.

PET. But can we not be bail'd, Master [90 Bramble?

BRAM. Hardly; there are none of the judges in town, else you should remove yourself, in spite of him, with a habeas corpus. But, if you have a friend to deliver your tale sensibly to some justice o' the town, that he may have feeling of it, do you see, you may be bail'd; for, as I understand the case, 't is only done in terrorem; <sup>41</sup> and you shall have an action of false imprisonment against him [100 when you come out, and perhaps a thousand pound costs.

Enter MASTER WOLF.

QUICK. How now, Master Wolf? what news? what return?

WOLF. Faith, bad all: yonder will be no letters received. He says the sessions shall determine it. Only Master Deputy Golding commends him to you, and, with this token, wishes he could do you other good.

[Gives money.]

QUICK. I thank him. — Good Master [110 Bramble, trouble our quiet no more; do not molest us in prison thus with your winding devices; pray you depart. [Exit BRAMBLE.] — For my part, I commit my cause to Him that can succor me; let God work his will. Master Wolf, I pray you let this be distributed among the prisoners, and desire 'em to pray for us.

WOLF. It shall be done, Master Francis.

[Exit QUICKSILVER.]

1 PRIS. An excellent temper! 120

2 PRIS. Now God send him good luck.

Exeunt [two Prisoners and Friend].

PET. But what said my father-in-law, Master Wolf?

Re-enter HOLDFAST.

HOLD. Here's one would speak with you, sir.

WOLF. I'll tell you anon, Sir Petronel. [Exit PETRONEL.] — Who is 't?

HOLD. A gentleman, sir, that will not be seen.

WOLF. Where is he? 130

Enter GOLDING.

Master Deputy! your Worship is welcome —

GOLD. Peace!

WOLF. Away, sirrah! <sup>42</sup> [Exit HOLDFAST.]

GOLD. Good faith, Master Wolf, the estate of these gentlemen, for whom you were so late and willing a suitor, doth much affect me; and, because I am desirous to do them some fair office, and find there is no means to make my father relent so likely as to bring him to be a spectator of their miseries, I have ventur'd on a device; which is to make myself your prisoner, entreating you will presently go report it to my father, and feigning an action, at suit of some third person, pray him, by this token, [giving a ring] that he will presently, and with all secrecy, come hither for my bail; which train, if any, I know will bring him abroad; and then, having him here, I doubt not but we shall be all fortunate in the event. 150

WOLF. Sir, I will put on my best speed to effect it. Please you come in.

GOLD. Yes; and let me rest conceal'd, I pray you.

WOLF. See here a benefit truly done, when it is done timely, freely, and to no ambition. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV <sup>43</sup>

Enter TOUCHSTONE, Wife, Daughters, SINDIFY, [and] WINIFRED.

TOUCH. I will sail by you, and not hear you, like the wise Ulysses.

MIL. Dear Father!

MIST. T. Husband!

GER. Father!

WIN. AND SIN. Master Touchstone!

TOUCH. Away, sirens, I will inmure myself against your cries, and lock myself up to your lamentations.

MIST. T. Gentle husband, hear me! 10

<sup>40</sup> A gown of coarse frieze.

<sup>41</sup> By way of a threat.

<sup>43</sup> A room in Touchstone's house.

GER. Father, it is I, Father, my Lady Flash. My sister and I am friends.

MIL. Good Father!

WIN. Be not hard'ned, good Master Touchstone!

SIN. I pray you, sir, be merciful!

TOUCH. I am deaf; I do not hear you; I have stopp'd mine ears with shoemakers' wax, and drunk Lethe and mandragora, to forget you. All you speak to me I commit [20 to the air. [He retires.] 44

Enter WOLF.

MIL. How now, Master Wolf?

WOLF. Where's Master Touchstone? I must speak with him presently; I have lost my breath for haste.

MIL. What's the matter, sir? Pray all be well.

WOLF. Master Deputy Golding is arrested upon an execution, and desires him presently to come to him forthwith. 30

MIL. Ay me! do you hear, Father?

TOUCH. [within] Tricks, tricks, confederacy, tricks! I have 'em in my nose — I scent 'em!

WOLF. Who's that? Master Touchstone?

MIL. T. Why, it is Master Wolf himself, husband.

MIL. Father!

TOUCH. [within] I am deaf still, I say. I will neither yield to the song of the siren [40 nor the voice of the hyena,<sup>45</sup> the tears of the crocodile nor the howling o' the Wolf: avoid my habitation, monsters!

WOLF. Why, you are not mad, sir? I pray you look forth and see the token I have brought you, sir.

TOUCH. [coming forward] Ha! what token is it?

WOLF. [aside to TOUCHSTONE] Do you know it, sir? 50

TOUCH. [aside] My son Golding's ring! Are you in earnest, Master Wolf?

WOLF. [aside] Ay, by my faith, sir. He is in prison, and requir'd me to use all speed and secrecy to you.

TOUCH. My cloak there (pray you be patient). — I am plagu'd for my austerity. — My cloak! — At whose suit, Master Wolf?

WOLF. I'll tell you as we go, sir.

Exeunt.

[SCENE V] 46

Enter Friend [and the two] Prisoners.

FRIEND. Why, but is his offence such as he cannot hope of life?

1 PRIS. Troth, it should seem so; and 't is a great pity, for he is exceeding penitent.

FRIEND. They say he is charg'd but on suspicion of felony yet.

2 PRIS. Ay, but his master is a shrewd 47 fellow; he'll prove great matter against him.

FRIEND. I'd as lief as anything I could see his "Farewell." 10

1 PRIS. Oh, 't is rarely written; why, Toby may get him to sing it to you; he's not curious 48 to anybody.

2 PRIS. Oh, no! He would that all the world should take knowledge of his repentance, and thinks he merits in't, the more shame he suffers.

1 PRIS. Pray thee, try what thou canst do.

2 PRIS. I warrant you he will not deny it, if he be not hoarse with the often repeating [20 of it. Exit.

1 PRIS. You never saw a more courteous creature than he is; and the knight too: the poorest prisoner of the house may command 'em. You shall hear a thing admirably penn'd.

FRIEND. Is the knight any scholar too?

1 PRIS. No, but he will speak very well, and discourse admirably of running horses and Whitefriars,<sup>49</sup> and against bawds, and [30 of cocks; and talk as loud as a hunter, but is none.

Enter WOLF and TOUCHSTONE.

WOLF. Please you stay here, sir; I'll call his Worship down to you.

[Exit WOLF; TOUCHSTONE stands aside.]

1 PRIS. See, he has brought him, and the knight too. Salute him.

Re-enter [Second Prisoner with] QUICK-SILVER [and] PETRONEL; [re-enter WOLF with GOLDING, and they stand aside.]

1 PRIS. I pray, sir, this gentleman, upon our report, is very desirous to hear some piece of your "Repentance."

<sup>49</sup> A notoriously tough district, in which debtors, as well as criminals, often hid from the law.

QUICK. Sir, with all my heart; and, [40 as I told Master Toby, I shall be glad to have any man a witness of it; and, the more openly I profess it, I hope it will appear the heartier, and the more unfeigned.

TOUCH. [aside] Who is this? my man Francis and my son-in-law?

QUICK. Sir, it is all the testimony I shall leave behind me to the world and my master that I have so offended.

FRIEND. Good sir! 50

QUICK. I writ it when my spirits were oppress'd.

PET. Ay, I'll be sworn for you, Francis.

QUICK. It is in imitation of Mannington's, he that was hang'd at Cambridge,<sup>50</sup> that cut off the horse's head at a blow.

FRIEND. So, sir!

QUICK. To the tune of "I wail in woe, I plunge in pain."<sup>51</sup>

PET. An excellent ditty it is, and worthy [60 of a new tune.

QUICK.

In Cheapside, famous for gold and plate,
Quicksilver, I did dwell of late;
I had a master good and kind,
That would have wrought me to his mind.
He bade me still, "Work upon that";
But, alas! I wrought I knew not what.
He was a Touchstone, black, but true,
And told me still what would ensue;
Yet woe is me! I would not learn; 70
I saw, alas! but could not discern!

FRIEND. Excellent, excellent well!

GOLD. [aside] O, let him alone.<sup>52</sup> He<sup>53</sup> is taken already.

QUICK.

I cast my coat and cap away;
I went in silks and satins gay;
False metal of good manners I
Did daily coin unlawfully;
I scorn'd my master, being drunk;
I kept my gelding and my punk; 80
And with a knight, Sir Flash by name,
Who now is sorry for the same —

PET. I thank you, Francis.

QUICK.

I thought by sea to run away,
But Thames and tempest did me stay.

TOUCH. [aside] This cannot be feigned sure, Heaven pardon my severity! "The ragged colt may prove a good horse."

<sup>53</sup> Touchstone.

GOLD. [aside] How he listens! and is transported! He has forgot me. 90

QUICK.

Still "Eastward Ho" was all my word;
But westward I had no regard,
Nor never thought what would come after,
As did, alas! his youngest daughter.
At last the black ox trod o' my foot,<sup>54</sup>
And I saw then what 'long'd unto 't;
Now cry I, "Touchstone, touch me still,
And make me current by thy skill."

TOUCH. [aside] And I will do it, Francis.

WOLF. [aside to GOLDING] Stay him, [100 Master Deputy; now is the time: we shall lose the song else.

FRIEND. I protest it is the best that ever I heard.

QUICK. How like you it, gentlemen?

ALL. Oh, admirable, sir!

QUICK. This stanza now following alludes to the story of Mannington, from whence I took my project for my invention.

FRIEND. Pray you go on, sir. 110

QUICK.

O Mannington, thy stories show,
Thou cutt'st a horse-head off at a blow.
But I confess I have not the force
For to cut off the head of a horse;
Yet I desire this grace to win,
That I may cut off the horse-head of Sin,
And leave his body in the dust
Of sin's highway and bogs of lust,
Whereby I may take Virtue's purse,
And live with her for better, for worse. 120

FRIEND. Admirable, sir, and excellently conceited!

QUICK. Alas, sir!

TOUCH. [aside] Son Golding and Master Wolf, I thank you: the deceit is welcome, especially from thee, whose charitable soul in this hath shown a high point of wisdom and honesty. Listen, I am ravished with his repentance, and could stand here a whole apprenticeship to hear him. 130

FRIEND. Forth, good sir.

QUICK. This is the last, and the "Farewell."

Farewell, Cheapside; farewell, sweet trade
Of goldsmiths all, that never shall fade;
Farewell, dear fellow prentices all,
And be you warned by my fall:
Shun usurers, bawds, and dice, and drabs;
Avoid them as you would French scabs.<sup>55</sup>
Seek not to go beyond your tether, 140
But cut your thongs unto your leather;
So shall you thrive by little and little,
Scape Tyburn, Counters, and the Spital.<sup>56</sup>

TOUCH. [coming forward] And scape them shalt thou, my penitent and dear Francis!

<sup>54</sup> Proverbial for "trouble came upon me."

<sup>56</sup> Hospital (for the treatment of venereal disease).

QUICK. Master!

PET. Father!

TOUCH. I can no longer forbear to do your humility right. Arise, and let me honor your repentance with the hearty and [150] joyful embraces of a father and friend's love. Quicksilver, thou hast ate into my breast, Quicksilver, with the drops of thy sorrow, and kill'd the desperate opinion I had of thy reclaim.

QUICK. Oh, sir, I am not worthy to see your worshipful face!

PET. Forgive me, Father.

TOUCH. Speak no more; all former passages are forgotten; and here my word [160] shall release you. — Thank this worthy brother, and kind friend, Francis. — Master Wolf, I am their bail.

A shout in the prison, [and SECURITY appears at the grating].

SEC. Master Touchstone! Master Touchstone!

TOUCH. Who's that?

WOLF. Security, sir.

SEC. Pray you, sir, if you'll be won with a song, hear my lamentable tune too:

SONG

O Master Touchstone, 170
My heart is full of woe;
Alas, I am a cuckold!
And why should it be so?
Because I was a usurer
And bawd, as all you know;
For which, again I tell you,
My heart is full of woe.

TOUCH. Bring him forth, Master Wolf, and release his bands. This day shall be sacred to mercy, and the mirth of this [180] encounter in the Counter. — See, we are encount'ed with more suitors.

Enter MISTRESS TOUCHSTONE, GERTRUDE, MILDRED, SINDEFY, [and] WINIFRED; [and WOLF with SECURITY].

Save your breath, save your breath! All things have succeeded to your wishes; and we are heartily satisfied in their events.

GER. Ah, runaway, runaway! have I caught you? And how has my poor knight done all this while?

PET. Dear Lady-wife, forgive me!

GER. As heartily as I would be for- [190] given, knight. Dear Father, give me your blessing, and forgive me too; I ha' been proud and lascivious, Father; and a fool,

Father; and, being rais'd to the state of a wanton coy thing, call'd a lady, Father, have scorn'd you, Father, and my sister, and my sister's velvet cap, too, and would make a mouth at the city as I rid through it, and stop mine ears at Bow-bell. I have said your beard was a base one, Father; and that [200] you looked like Twierpipe, the taborer; <sup>57</sup> and that my mother was but my midwife.

MIST. T. Now, God forgi' you, child madam!

TOUCH. No more repetitions. What is else wanting to make our harmony full?

GOLD. Only this, sir, that my fellow Francis make amends to Mistress Sindefy with marriage.

QUICK. With all my heart. 210

GOLD. And Security give her a dower, which shall be all the restitution he shall make of that huge mass he hath so unlawfully gotten.

TOUCH. Excellently devis'd! a good motion! What says Master Security?

SEC. I say anything, sir, what you'll ha' me say. Would I were no cuckold!

WIN. Cuckold, husband? Why, I think this wearing of yellow <sup>58</sup> has infected you.

TOUCH. Why, Master Security, that [220] should rather be a comfort to you than a corrosive. If you be a cuckold, it's an argument you have a beautiful woman to your wife; then you shall be much made of; you shall have store of friends, never want money; you shall be eas'd of much o' your wedlock pain; others will take it for you. Besides, you being a usurer, and likely to go to hell, the devils will never torment you: they'll take you for one o' their own race. <sup>59</sup> Again, if you [230] be a cuckold, and know it not, you are an innocent; <sup>60</sup> if you know it and endure it, a true martyr.

SEC. I am resolv'd, sir. Come hither, Winny.

TOUCH. Well, then, all are pleas'd; or shall be anon. Master Wolf, you look hungry, methinks. Have you no apparel to lend Francis, to shift him?

QUICK. No, sir, nor I desire none; but [240] here make it my suit that I may go home, through the streets in these, as a spectacle, or rather an example, to the children of Cheap-side.

<sup>59</sup> Because of your horns.

<sup>60</sup> With a pun on the meaning, "idiot."

TOUCH. Thou hast thy wish. Now, London, look about,
 And in this moral see thy glass run out :
 Behold the careful father, thrifty son,
 The solemn deeds, which each of us have
     done ;
 The usurer punish'd, and from fall so steep
 The prodigal child reclaim'd, and the lost
     sheep. 250

EPILOGUS

[QUICK.] Stay, sir, I perceive the multitude are gather'd together to view our coming out at the Counter. See, if the streets and the fronts of the houses be not stuck with people, and the windows fill'd with ladies, as on the solemn day of the pageant ! <sup>61</sup> —

 Oh, may you find in this our pageant here,
 The same contentment which you came to seek ;
 And, as that show but draws you once a year,
 May this attract you hither once a week. 10
 [Exeunt.]

A TRAGEDIE:

As it hath been often Acted with great Applause.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

CHAPMAN's most famous play was acted, according to the title page of the first edition, by the Boys of St. Paul's. Since that company disappears in 1606, since a leap year is indicated by I, ii, 85, and since allusions to Elizabeth and to the new knights are evidently subsequent to the accession of James, 1604 seems probable for the date of composition. The play is one of a group which Chapman founded on recent French history. Here, as elsewhere, the inspiration of Marlowe is apparent, for some of the same characters appear in The Massacre at Paris. Nor is Bussy, with his reckless individualism and romantic extravagance, far removed from Marlowe's aspiring heroes.

Extant accounts of this intrepid chevalier and his spectacular end appeared only after the play had been published; the precise sources of Chapman's information remain unknown. Louis de Clermont d'Amboise, Seigneur de Bussy, was born in 1549 of a noble house. At a tender age he won military distinction, during the massacre of St. Bartholomew murdered a Huguenot cousin with whom he had a lawsuit, in the civil wars was repeatedly wounded, and became withal a brilliant figure at court, the lover of Marguerite de Valois, and a colonel in the service of the Duc d'Anjou, who stood next to Henry III in the succession. This prince, the Machiavellian Monsieur of our play, finally broke with Bussy, whom he had made governor of Anjou, and told the King of his intrigue with Françoise de Maridort. Henry at once betrayed him to her husband, Charles de Chambes, Comte de Montsoreau, who forced her to make an assignation with Bussy on the night of August 15, 1579, when with an overwhelming party the Count attacked and killed him. Though their agreement may be fortuitous, it is possible that Chapman and Dumas Père (in his La Dame de Montsoreau) derived from some common source their departure from the historical facts as we know them. Both make Monsieur the direct informant of the Count, and motivate the former's treachery by ascribing to him an unsuccessful passion for the Countess.

Though this is his earliest surviving tragedy, Chapman surpasses in his structural treatment of these materials the epic method of all save the last of Marlowe's important plays. Characterization, except for the hero, is inadequate; but the plot is dramatically conceived, and the play abounds in effective situations. Chapman had not observed in vain the technical advances made by Shakespeare. He was also influenced, like all the Elizabethan tragic writers, by the plays of Seneca, most notably in the employment of the Messenger and the Ghost, and (by his Hercules Oetaeus) in the handling of Bussy's death. It is, of course, Bussy as an acting rôle that makes the play. His Titanic energy, though not expressed in poetry equal to Marlowe's, is reminiscent of the heroes of the earlier dramatist, but is more thoroughly worked up in terms of action. And his end is genuinely moving, because he is more than a mere swordsman. The sceptical and stoical temper of Chapman gives Bussy a philosophy of self-reliance: once again we look on while Fate grinds the individual into less than dust.

The play may well have been written, as Professor Parrott thinks, for the Children at the Blackfriars, and been carried to the Paul's Boys when Kirkham went over to them in 1605. From the prologue in the Quarto of 1641 we learn that the famous Nat Field had played the title rôle, very likely for the Queen's Revels at Whitefriars in 1609-1612. It was afterwards revived by the King's Men, evidently in competition with a rival company; it was acted by them at least as late as 1634, when there was a performance at court. The surviving prologue was presumably written for it. The eminent Restoration tragedian, Charles Hart, had much success as Bussy; and in 1691 the play was again revived in an adaptation by Tom Dufey.

The standard edition of Chapman's plays is that of T. M. Parrott, (1910). This tragedy has also been edited, along with its inferior sequel, The Revenge of Bussy d'Ambois, by F. S. Boas (1905). With a number of additions and corrections from the first edition, the Quarto of 1607 (reissued 1608), the present text is based on that of the Quarto of 1641 (reissued 1646 and 1657), which was "much corrected and amended by the author before his death."

PROLOGUE<sup>3</sup>

NOR out of confidence that none but we<sup>4</sup>

Are able to present this tragedy,

Not out of envy at the grace of late

It did receive, nor yet to derogate

From their deserts who<sup>5</sup> give out boldly
that

They move with equal feet on the same flat ;

Neither for all nor any of such ends

We offer it, gracious and noble friends,

To your review ; we, far from emulation

And (charitably judge) from imitation, 10

With this work entertain you, a piece known

And still believ'd in Court to be our own.

To quit our claim, doubting our right or merit,

<sup>5</sup> Some rival company.

Would argue in us poverty of spirit

Which we must not subscribe to. Field<sup>6</sup> is gone,

Whose action first did give it name, and one<sup>7</sup>

Who came the nearest to him is deni'd

By his gray beard to show the height and pride

Of D'Ambois' youth and bravery ; yet to hold

Our title still afoot, and not grow cold 20

By giving it o'er, a third man<sup>8</sup> with his best

Of care and pains defends our interest ;

As Richard<sup>9</sup> he was lik'd, nor do we fear

In personating D'Ambois he 'll appear

To faint, or go less, so<sup>10</sup> your free consent,

As heretofore, give him encouragement.

<sup>10</sup> Provided that.

ACT I — SCENE I<sup>11</sup>Enter BUSSY D'AMBOIS, poor.

BUS. Fortune, not Reason, rules the state of things;
 Reward goes backwards, Honor on his head;
 Who is not poor, is monstrous; only need
 Gives form and worth to every human seed.
 As cedars beaten with continual storms,
 So great men flourish; and do imitate
 Unskilful statuary, who suppose,
 In forming a Colossus, if they make him
 Straddle enough, strut, and look big, and gape,
 Their work is goodly: so men merely great<sup>12</sup>
 In their affected gravity of voice,<sup>11</sup>
 Sourness of countenance, manners' cruelty,
 Authority, wealth, and all the spawn of fortune,
 Think they bear all the kingdom's worth before them;
 Yet differ not from those colossic statues,
 Which, with heroic forms without o'erspread,
 Within are nought but mortar, flint, and lead.
 Man is a torch borne in the wind; a dream
 But of a shadow, summ'd with all his substance;<sup>19</sup>
 And as great seamen, using all their wealth<sup>13</sup>
 And skills in Neptune's deep invisible paths,
 In tall ships richly built and ribb'd with brass,
 To put a girdle round about the world,
 When they have done it (coming near their haven)
 Are glad to give a warning-piece,<sup>14</sup> and call
 A poor, staid fisherman, that never pass'd
 His country's sight, to waft and guide them in:
 So when we wander furthest through the waves
 Of glassy glory, and the gulfs of state,<sup>29</sup>
 Topp'd with all titles, spreading all our reaches,
 As if each private arm would sphere the earth,
 We must to Virtue for her guide resort,
 Or we shall shipwreck in our safest port.

Procumbit.[Enter] MONSIEUR, with two Pages.

MONS. [aside] There is no second place in numerous state<sup>15</sup>
 That holds more than a cipher; in a king
 All places are contain'd. His word and looks
 Are like the flashes and the bolts of Jove;

<sup>11</sup> Unlocated; but evidently near the court, and out of doors.

<sup>15</sup> Punning on (1) the series of numbers, (2) a populous kingdom. (Boas.)

His deeds inimitable, like the sea
 That shuts still as it opes, and leaves no tracts<sup>16</sup>
 Nor prints of precedent for mean men's facts.<sup>17</sup><sup>40</sup>

There's but a thread betwixt me and a crown;
 I would not wish it cut, unless by nature.

Yet, to prepare me for that possible fortune,
 'T is good to get resolved<sup>18</sup> spirits about me.
 I follow'd D'Ambois to this green retreat —

A man of spirit beyond the reach of fear,
 Who, discontent with his neglected worth,
 Neglects the light and loves obscure abodes;
 But he is young and haughty, apt to take
 Fire at advancement, to bear state,<sup>19</sup> and flourish;<sup>50</sup>

In his rise therefore shall my bounties shine.
 None loathes the world so much, nor loves to scoff it,

But gold and grace will make him surfeit of it.
 What, D'Ambois?

BUS. He, sir.

MONS. Turn'd to earth, alive?
 Up, man; the sun shines on thee.

BUS. Let it shine;
 I am no mote to play in 't, as great men are.

MONS. Callest thou men great in state, motes in the sun?<sup>20</sup>

They say so that would have thee freeze in shades,

That, like the gross Sicilian gourmandist,
 Empty their noses in the cates<sup>21</sup> they love, 60
 That none may eat but they. Do thou but bring

Light to the banquet Fortune sets before thee,
 And thou wilt loathe lean darkness like thy death.

Who would believe thy mettle could let sloth
 Rust and consume it? If Themistocles
 Had liv'd obscur'd thus in th' Athenian state,
 Xerxes had made both him and it his slaves.
 If brave Camillus had lurk'd so in Rome,
 He had not five times been Dictator there, 69
 Nor four times triumph'd. If Epaminondas,
 Who liv'd 'twice twenty years obscur'd in Thebes,

Had liv'd so still, he had been still unnam'd,
 And paid his country nor himself their right;
 But, putting forth his strength, he rescu'd both
 From imminent ruin, and, like burnish'd steel,
 After long use he shin'd; for, as the light
 Not only serves to show, but render us

<sup>21</sup> Delicacies.

Mutually profitable, so our lives
In acts exemplary, not only win
Ourselves good names, but do to others give 80
Matter for virtuous deeds, by which we live.

BUS. What would you wish me?

MONS. Leave the troubled streams,
And live, where thrivers do, at the well-head.

BUS. At the well-head? Alas, what should
I do

With that enchanted glass? See devils there?
Or, like a strumpet, learn to set my looks
In an eternal brake,<sup>22</sup> or practise juggling,
To keep my face still fast, my heart still loose;
Or bear, like dame's schoolmistresses their riddles, 89

Two tongues, and be good only for a shift;<sup>23</sup>
Flatter great lords, to put them still in mind
Why they were made lords; or please humorous<sup>24</sup> ladies

With a good carriage, tell them idle tales
To make their physic work; spend a man's life
In sights and visitations, that will make
His eyes as hollow as his mistress' heart;
To do none good, but those that have no need;
To gain being forward, though you break for haste

All the commandments ere you break your fast;

But believe backwards, make your period 100
And creed's last article, "I believe in God";
And, hearing villainies preach'd, t' unfold their
art

Learn to commit them? <sup>25</sup> 'T is a great man's part.

Shall I learn this there?

MONS. No, thou need'st not learn,
Thou hast the theory; now go there and
practise.

BUS. Ay, in a threadbare suit; when men come there,
They must have high naps,<sup>26</sup> and go from thence bare.

A man may drown the parts<sup>27</sup> of ten rich
men

In one poor suit; brave barks<sup>28</sup> and outward gloss 109

Attract Court loves, be in parts ne'er so gross.

MONS. Thou shalt have gloss enough, and all things fit

<sup>23</sup> Piece of trickery.

<sup>25</sup> Hearing villainies preached against, study to commit them, in order to exemplify their ingenuity.

<sup>26</sup> I.e., good clothes.

<sup>27</sup> Accomplishments, abilities.

<sup>28</sup> Fine coverings.

T' enchase in all show thy long-smothered spirit.

Be rul'd by me, then. The old Scythians Painted blind Fortune's powerful hands with wings,

To show her gifts come swift and suddenly,
Which, if her favorite be not swift to take,
He loses them for ever. Then be wise:
Stay but awhile here, and I'll send to thee.

Exit MONSIEUR [with Pages].

BUS. What will he send? some crowns?

It is to sow them 119

Upon my spirit, and make them spring a crown
Worth millions of the seed-crowns he will send.
Like to disparting<sup>29</sup> noble husbandmen,
He'll put his plow into me, plow me up.
But his unsweating thrift is policy,
And learning-hating policy is ignorant
To fit his seed-land soil<sup>30</sup>; a smooth, plain ground

Will never nourish any politic seed.

I am for honest actions, not for great;

If I may bring up a new fashion, 129

And rise in court for virtue, speed his plow!

The King hath known me long as well as he,

Yet could my fortune never fit the length

Of both their understandings till this hour.

There is a deep nick in Time's restless wheel

For each man's good, when which nick comes,
it strikes;

As rhetoric yet works not persuasion,

But only is a mean to make it work,

So no man riseth by his real merit,

But when it cries "clink" in his raiser's spirit.

Many will say, that cannot rise at all, 140

Man's first hour's rise is first step to his fall.

I'll venture that; men that fall low must die,

As well as men cast headlong from the sky.

Enter MAFFÉ.

MAF. Humor of princes! Is this wretch endu'd

With any merit worth a thousand crowns?

Will my Lord have me be so ill a steward

Of his revenue,<sup>31</sup> to dispose a sum

So great with so small cause as shows in him?

I must examine this. Is your name D'Ambois?

BUS. Sir?

MAF. Is your name D'Ambois?

BUS. Who have we here? 150

Serve you the Monsieur?

<sup>29</sup> Putting parks into cultivation.

<sup>30</sup> Q, reads (for To . . . soil). But he's no husband here, and omits ll. 122-125.

<sup>31</sup> Accented on second syllable.

MAF. How?

BUS. Serve you the Monsieur?

MAF. Sir, y'are very hot. I do serve the Monsieur;

But in such place as gives me the command
Of all his other servants. And because
His Grace's pleasure is to give your good
His pass<sup>32</sup> through my command, methinks you might

Use me with more respect.

BUS. Cry you mercy!<sup>33</sup>

Now you have opened my dull eyes, I see you,
And would be glad to see the good you speak of.

What might I call your name?

MAF. Monsieur Maffé.

BUS. Monsieur Maffé? Then, good Monsieur Maffé, 161

Pray let me know you better.

MAF. Pray do so,

That you may use me better. For yourself,
By your no better outside, I would judge you
To be some poet; have you given my Lord
Some pamphlet?

BUS. Pamphlet?

MAF. Pamphlet, sir, I say.

BUS. Did your great master's goodness leave the good

That is to pass your charge to my poor use,
To your discretion?

MAF. Though he did not, sir,
I hope 't is no rude office to ask reason 170
How that his Grace gives me in charge, goes from me?

BUS. That's very perfect, sir.

MAF. Why, very good, sir.

I pray then give me leave; if for no pamphlet,
May I not know what other merit in you Makes his compunction willing to relieve
you?

BUS. No merit in the world, sir.

MAF. That is strange.

Y'are a poor soldier, are you?

BUS. That I am, sir.

MAF. And have commanded?

BUS. Ay, and gone without, sir.

MAF. [aside] I see the man; a hundred crowns will make him

Swagger and drink healths to his Grace's bounty, 180

And swear he could not be more bountiful;
So there's nine hundred crowns sav'd.— Here,
tall<sup>34</sup> soldier.

His Grace hath sent you a whole hundred crowns.

BUS. A hundred, sir! Nay, do his Highness right;

I know his hand is larger, and perhaps
I may deserve more than my outside shows.
I am a scholar, as I am a soldier,
And I can poetize<sup>35</sup> and, being well encourag'd,
May sing his fame for giving, yours for delivering, 189

Like a most faithful steward, what he gives.

MAF. What shall your subject be?

BUS. I care not much

If to his bounteous Grace I sing the praise
Of fair great noses,<sup>36</sup> and to you of long ones.
What qualities have you, sir, beside your chain

And velvet jacket?<sup>37</sup> Can your Worship dance?

MAF. [aside] A pleasant fellow, faith;
it seems my Lord

Will have him for his jester; and, by'r lady,
Such men are now no fools; 't is a knight's
place.

If I, to save his Grace some crowns, should urge him 199

T'abate his bounty, I should not be heard;
I would to Heaven I were an errant ass,
For then I should be sure to have the ears
Of these great men, where now their jesters have them.

'T is good to please him, yet I'll take no notice
Of his preferment,<sup>38</sup> but in policy
Will still be grave and serious, lest he think
I fear his wooden dagger.<sup>39</sup> Here, Sir Ambo!

BUS. How, Ambo, sir?

MAF. Ay, is not your name Ambo?

BUS. You call'd me lately D'Ambois; has your Worship

So short a head?

MAF. I cry thee mercy, D'Ambois.
A thousand crowns I bring you from my Lord.
[Serve God:]<sup>40</sup> play the good husband, you may make 212

This a good standing living: 't is a bounty
His Highness might perhaps have bestow'd better.

BUS. Go, y'are a rascal; hence, away, you rogue!

<sup>32</sup> The historical Bussy could, and did.

<sup>33</sup> Monsieur's nose was a mark for the satirists of the time. (Parrott.)

<sup>40</sup> Bold.

MAF. What mean you, sir?

BUS. Hence ! prate no more !
Or, by thy villain's blood, thou prat'st thy
last !

A barbarous groom grudge at his master's bounty !

But since I know he would as much abhor 219
His hind should argue what he gives his
friend,

Take that, sir, for your aptness to dispute.

[Strikes him.] Exit.

MAF. These crowns are set in blood ; blood be their fruit. Exit.

[SCENE II] <sup>41</sup>

HENRY [and] GUISE [are discovered at chess ;
also enter] MONTSURRY, ELENOR, TAMYRA,
BEAUPRÉ, PERO, CHARLOTTE, PYRA,<sup>42</sup>
[and] ANNABELLE.<sup>43</sup>

HEN. Duchess of Guise, your Grace is much enrich'd

In the attendance of that English virgin,<sup>44</sup>
That will initiate her prime of youth,
Dispos'd to court conditions, under the hand
Of your preferr'd instructions and command,
Rather than any in the English court,
Whose ladies are not match'd in Christendom
For graceful and confirm'd behaviors,
More than the court where they are bred is equall'd.

GUISE. I like not their court fashion ; it is too crestfall'n 10

In all observance, making demigods
Of their great nobles, and of their old queen
An ever-young and most immortal goddess.

MONS. No question she's the rarest queen in Europe.

GUISE. But what's that to <sup>45</sup> her immortality ? <sup>46</sup>

HEN. Assure you, cousin Guise, so great a courtier,

So full of majesty and royal parts,
No queen in Christendom may vaunt herself.
Her court approves it, that's a court indeed,

<sup>41</sup> A room in the royal palace. That the source of Q 1641 was the prompt-copy (or a transcription of it) is indicated by the following notation, which it prints after I, i, 153: Table, Chesbord & Tapers behind the Arras. "Arras" = the curtains of the inner stage.

<sup>42</sup> No speeches are assigned to this character, which suggests that the original version of the play may have been longer.

<sup>44</sup> Annabelle.

<sup>45</sup> What has that to do with.

<sup>46</sup> Ll. 14, 15, om. Q1.

Not mix'd with clowneries us'd in common houses, 20

But, as courts should be, th' abstracts of their kingdoms,

In all the beauty, state, and worth they hold ;
So is hers, amply, and by her inform'd.

The world is not contracted in a man
With more proportion and expression,
Than in her court, her kingdom. Our French
court

Is a mere mirror of confusion to it :

The king and subject, lord and every slave,
Dance a continual hay ; <sup>47</sup> our rooms of state
Kept like our stables ; no place more observ'd Than a rude market-place : and though our custom 31

Keep this assur'd confusion from our eyes,
'T is ne'er the less essentially unsightly,
Which they would soon see, would they change their form

To this of ours, and then compare them both :
Which we must not affect,<sup>48</sup> because in kingdoms

Where the king's change doth breed the subject's terror,

Pure innovation is more gross than error.

MONS. No question we shall see them imitate,

Though afar off, the fashions of our courts, 40
As they have ever ap'd us in attire.

Never were men so weary of their skins,
And apt to leap out of themselves as they ;
Who, when they travail <sup>49</sup> to bring forth rare
men,

Come home, delivered of a fine French suit.
Their brains lie with their tailors, and get babies

For their most complete issue ; he's sole heir
To all the moral virtues that first greets
The light with a new fashion, which becomes
them 49

Like apes, disfigur'd with the attires of men.

HEN. No question they much wrong their real worth

In affectation of outlandish scum ;
But they have faults, and we more ; they foolish-proud

To jet <sup>50</sup> in others' plumes so haughtily ;
We proud, they that are proud of foolery, Holding our worths more complete for their vaunts.

<sup>47</sup> A winding rustic dance.

<sup>48</sup> Desire.

Enter MONSIEUR [and] D'AMBOIS.

MONS. Come, mine own sweetheart, I will enter thee. —

Sir, I have brought a gentleman to court, And pray you would vouchsafe to do him grace.

HEN. D'Ambois, I think?

BUS. That's still my name, my Lord, 60 Though I be something altered in attire.

HEN. We like your alteration, and must tell you

We have expected <sup>51</sup> th' offer of your service ; For we, in fear to make mild virtue proud, Use not to seek her out in any man.

BUS. Nor doth she use to seek out any man : He that will win must woo her ; [she's not shameless.] <sup>52</sup>

MONS. I urg'd her modesty in him, my Lord, And gave her those rites that he says she merits.

HEN. If you have woo'd and won, then, Brother, wear him. 70

MONS. Th' art mine, sweetheart. See, here 's the Guise's Duchess, The Countess of Montsurreau, Beaupré. Come, I'll enseat <sup>53</sup> thee. Ladies, y' are too many

To be in council ; I have here a friend That I would gladly enter in your graces.

BUS. Save you, ladies.

DUCH. If you enter him in our graces, my Lord, methinks by his blunt behavior he should come out of himself.

TAM. Has he never been courtier, my [80 Lord?

MONS. Never, my Lady.

BEAU. And why did the toy <sup>54</sup> take him in th' head now?

BUS. 'Tis leap year, lady, and therefore very good to enter a courtier.

HEN. Mark, Duchess of Guise, there is one is not bashful.

DUCH. No, my Lord, he is much guilty of the bold extremity. 90

TAM. The man's a courtier at first sight.

BUS. I can sing pricksong, <sup>55</sup> lady, at first sight ; and why not be a courtier as suddenly?

BEAU. Here's a courtier rotten before he be ripe.

BUS. Think me not impudent, lady ; I am yet no courtier ; I desire to be one, and would gladly take entrance, madam, under your princely colors.

<sup>51</sup> Been waiting for.

<sup>55</sup> Vocal music written down with points.

Enter BARRISOR, L'ANOU, [and] PYRHOT.

DUCH. Soft, sir, you must rise by de- 100 grees, first being the servant <sup>56</sup> of some common lady, or knight's wife ; then a little higher to a lord's wife ; next a little higher to a countess ; yet a little higher to a duchess, and then turn the ladder. <sup>57</sup>

BUS. Do you allow a man, then, four mistresses when the greatest mistress is allowed but three servants?

DUCH. Where find you that statute, sir?

BUS. Why, be judged by the groom- [110 porters. <sup>58</sup>

DUCH. The groom-porters?

BUS. Ay, madam ; must not they judge of all gamings i' th' court?

DUCH. You talk like a gamester.

GUISE. Sir, know you me?

BUS. My Lord?

GUISE. I know not you. Whom do you serve?

BUS. Serve, my Lord? 120

GUISE. Go to, companion, <sup>59</sup> your courtship's too saucy.

BUS. [aside] Saucy ! Companion ! 'Tis the Guise, but yet those terms might have been spared of the Guisard. <sup>60</sup> Companion ! He's jealous, by this light. Are you blind <sup>61</sup> of that side, Duke ? I'll to her again for that. — Forth, princely mistress, for the honor of courtship. Another riddle !

GUISE. Cease your courtship, or by [130 Heaven I'll cut your throat.

BUS. Cut my throat ? Cut a whetstone, young Accius Naeuius. <sup>62</sup> Do as much with your tongue, as he did with a razor. Cut my throat !

BAR. What new-come gallant have we here, that dares mate <sup>63</sup> the Guise thus ?

L'AN. 'Sfoot, 'tis D'Ambois. The Duke mistakes him, on my life, for some knight of the new edition. <sup>64</sup> 140

BUS. Cut my throat ! I would the King fear'd thy cutting of his throat no more than I fear thy cutting of mine.

<sup>56</sup> Cavalier, professed admirer.

<sup>59</sup> Fellow. <sup>60</sup> Adherent of the Guise ; probably with a pun on "gizzard", i.e., throat.

<sup>64</sup> Alluding to the cheapening of the order by James's numerous creations.

GUISE. I'll do 't, by this hand.

BUS. That hand dares not do 't. Y' ave cut too many throats already, Guise; and robb'd the realm of many thousand souls, more precious than thine own.<sup>65</sup>—Come madam, talk on. 'Sfoot, can you not talk? Talk on, I say; another riddle. 150

PYR. Here's some strange distemper.

BAR. Here's a sudden transmigration with D'Ambois—out of the knight's ward<sup>66</sup> into the Duchess' bed.

L'AN. See what a metamorphosis a brave suit can work.

PYR. 'Slight, step to the Guise and discover him.

BAR. By no means; let the new suit work; we'll see the issue. 160

GUISE. Leave your courting.

BUS. I will not.—I say, mistress, and I will stand unto it, that if a woman may have three servants, a man may have threescore mistresses.

GUISE. Sirrah, I'll have you whipp'd out of the court for this insolence.

BUS. Whipp'd? Such another syllable out a' th' presence, if thou dar'st, for thy dukedom. 170

GUISE. Remember, poltroon.

MONS. Pray thee, forbear.

BUS. Passion of death! Were not the king here, he should strow<sup>67</sup> the chamber like a rush.

MONS. But leave courting his wife, then.

BUS. I will not. I'll court her in despite of him. Not court her!—Come, madam, talk on; fear me nothing.—[to GUISE] Well mayst thou drive thy master from the court, but never D'Ambois. 181

MONS. His great heart will not down; 't is like the sea,

That partly by his own internal heat,
Partly the stars' daily and nightly motion,
Their heat and light, and partly of the place
The divers frames,<sup>68</sup> but chiefly by the moon,
Bristled with surges, never will be won (No, not when th' hearts of all those powers are burst)

To make retreat into his settled home, 189
Till he be crown'd with his own quiet foam.

HEN. You have the mate.<sup>69</sup> Another.

GUISE. No more.

Flourish short.

Exit GUISE, after him the KING,

MONSIEUR whispering.

BAR. Why, here's the lion, scar'd with the throat of a dunghill cock, a fellow that has new shak'd off his shackles; now does he crow for that victory.

L'AN. 'T is one of the best jigs<sup>70</sup> that ever was acted.

PYR. Whom does the Guise suppose him to be, trow? <sup>71</sup> 200

L'AN. Out of doubt, some new denizen'd lord,<sup>72</sup> and thinks that suit newly drawn out a' th' mercer's books.

BAR. I have heard of a fellow, that by a fix'd imagination looking upon a bull-baiting, had a visible pair of horns grew out of his forehead; and I believe this gallant, overjoyed with the conceit of Monsieur's cast<sup>73</sup> suit, imagines himself to be the Monsieur.

L'AN. And why not; as well as the ass, [210 stalking in the lion's case,<sup>74</sup> bare himself like a lion, braying all the huger beasts out of the forest?

PYR. Peace, he looks this way.

BAR. Marry, let him look, sir. What will you say now if the Guise be gone to fetch a blanket<sup>75</sup> for him?

L'AN. Faith, I believe it for his honor sake. 219

PYR. But, if D'Ambois carry it clean? <sup>76</sup>

Exeunt Ladies.

BAR. True, when he curvets in the blanket.

PYR. Ay, marry, sir.

L'AN. 'Sfoot, see how he stares on 's.

BAR. Lord bless us, let 's away.

BUS. Now, sir, take your full view; how does the object please ye?

BAR. If you ask my opinion, sir, I think your suit sits as well as if 't had been made for you.

BUS. So, sir; and was that the subject [230 of your ridiculous jollity?

L'AN. What's that to you, sir?

BUS. Sir, I have observ'd all your fleerings; <sup>77</sup> and resolve yourselves ye shall give a strict account for 't.

Enter BRISAC [and] MELYNELL.

BAR. Oh, miraculous jealousy! <sup>78</sup> Do you think yourself such a singular subject for laughter that none can fall into the matter of our merriment but you?

L'AN. This jealousy of yours, sir, confesses some close defect in yourself, that we never dream'd of.

PYR. We held discourse of a perfum'd ass that, being disguis'd in a lion's case, imagin'd himself a lion. I hope that touch'd not you.

BUS. So, sir; your descants<sup>79</sup> do marvelous well fit this ground.<sup>80</sup> We shall meet where your buffoonly laughs will cost ye the best blood in your bodies.

BAR. For life's sake let's be gone; he'll [250 kill's outright else.

BUS. Go, at your pleasures; I'll be your ghost to haunt you; an ye sleep on't, hang me.

L'AN. Go, go, sir; court your mistress.

PYR. And be advis'd; we shall have odds against you.

BUS. Tush! valor stands not in number; I'll maintain it, that one man may beat three boys. 260

BRIS. Nay, you shall have no odds of him in number, sir; he's a gentleman as good as the proudest of you, and ye shall not wrong him.

BAR. Not, sir?

MEL. Not, sir; though he be not so rich, he's a better man than the best of you; and I will not endure it.

L'AN. Not you, sir?

BRIS. No, sir, nor I. 270

BUS. I should thank you for this kindness, if I thought these perfum'd musk cats, being out of this privilege,<sup>81</sup> durst but once mew at us.
